As we may certainly expect to hear from the coaſt in a very few days, whether Colonel Braithwaite means to join General Goddard's army, it is reſolved to defer any further conſideration till that time, as the only queſtion now ſeems to be, whether immediately to commence hoſtile meaſures, or to purſue a temporizing conduct till matters are more advanced; and our determination on this queſtion, as well as the quota of troops to be furniſhed by us, will in a great meaſure be guided by our advices from Colonel Braithwaite.

Gentlemen,

Goddard, General, letter from.

The Miniſter of the Maratta nation having refuſed to liſten to the moderate and equitable terms of accommodation propoſed to him by me on the part of the Honourable Governor General and Supreme Council, except upon conditions diſhonourable and deſtructive to the intereſts of the Company, and thereby diſappointed and rendered ineffectual their pacific intentions, and my endeavours to promote the ſucceſs of the commiſſion with which they had been pleaſed to honour me, I think it neceſſary to loſe no time in communicating this important circumſtance to you, in order that proper and effectual meaſures may be concerted for carrying on the war into which we are thus neceſſarily and involuntarily compelled.

You are already fully informed of the nature of the propoſals I was inſtructed to make, and the immediate alternative of peace or war that was to be the conſequence of their being refuſed or accepted: I ſhall therefore only mention to you in a few words, the anſwer I have received to them, which is perfectly pointed and conciſe, and from the complete diſgrace with which a ſubmiſſion on our part to the conditions it preſcribes (eſpecially as I had previouſly explained to the Miniſter the impracticability of acceding to them) would overwhelm us, carries a convincing proof that his inclinations are altogether hoſtile; and even juſtifies the apprehenſion, that were we to give our preſent conſent to them, ſuch acquieſcence would only ſubject us to more inſolent and diſhonourable demands. The terms which he inſtructed Neal Chund, the emiſſary I before informed you had been diſpatched to Poonah, to ſtipulate as the only conditions on which peace would be concluded betwixt the Engliſh and Maratta nations, were, "to relinquiſh Salſette, and deliver Ragonath Row into our hands." It is unneceſſary to make any remarks upon theſe propoſals, neither of which could admit of a moment's thought or deliberation. I therefore acquainted the Vackeel that I was not authorized to recede from my firſt demands; that I ſincerely regretted my efforts to ſettle all paſt differences had proved ineffectual; but that I muſt, according to the inſtructions I had received from my Government, break off the preſent negociation.

You ſee, gentlemen, by the above relation, that this buſineſs is now brought to a criſis; the meaſure of war was neceſſarily involved in the Miniſter's refuſal, and in propoſing to him the alternative, the choice he would make muſt of courſe become our own. The queſtion therefore now, is not, whether we ſhould conclude a peace, or enter into a war with the Maratta State? but we are to determine in what manner, and by what means, this war into which we are thus involuntarily compelled, can be carried on with the greateſt advantage to ourſelves, and moſt effectually to diſtreſs the enemy. To depart from the terms at firſt poſitively and ſolemnly propoſed, or to attempt to delay and temporize at this juncture, would, I am perſuaded, be a meaſure equally as inglorious: they would conſtrue every advance into timidity, or a conſciouſneſs of weakneſs; and inſtead of being lulled by it into ſecurity or forbearance, would become more preſumptuous and ſpeedy in their operations.

Appendix No. 253. A.

The neceſſity of the war being thus eſtabliſhed, it is perhaps ſuperfluous to point out ſuch conſiderations as might be judged ſufficient to deter us from entering into it, was it a matter where our own free choice was left to decide; but I will briefly mention one objection, and that indeed the only one that appears to me to preſent any difficulty or to deſerve our preſent attention, which is the apprehenſion that we ſhall not be able to furniſh the neceſſary ſupplies of money for defraying the expences of a war. This is a circumſtance deſerving of our moſt particular care and deliberation. The heavy loſſes which the Company have already ſuſtained in the unſucceſsful attempts to ſupport Ragonath Row, ought, it is certain, to make us careful of involving them in new troubles and new expences; but here I muſt repeat that the preſent war is not a matter of choice but of neceſſity. The Government of Bengal have been ſincere and urgent in their deſires and propoſals for a peace, which I have zealouſly exerted myſelf to promote; but the Maratta Miniſter, deaf to every reaſonable term of accommodation, aims at the annihilation of all our power and ſovereignty on this ſide of India, and compels us to take up arms, not only in defence of our rights and of juſtice, but to ſecure our very exiſtence as an independent nation on this coaſt, and it may be added in its ultimate conſequences throughout India.

This leſſon which we are taught by the incumbrances entailed upon us by paſt failures, ſeems alſo to inſtruct us, that we ſhould not neglect the firſt opportunity that preſents itſelf of relieving ourſelves from them; and this I am of opinion the Marattas have of their own accord offered, I may ſay forced upon us. The trifling and unequal force the French at preſent have in India, and the certain accounts we have from Europe to make us believe they cannot now be reinforced, ſecure us from any apprehenſions of being interrupted in our operations by them this ſeaſon, and ſeems indeed to furniſh one very principal reaſon why we ought to loſe no time in ſtrengthening and firmly eſtabliſhing ourſelves during the courſe of it. The troops which will ſoon be collected at Surat, muſt be ſuperior to any ſervice that can poſſibly be required of them, and equal to the moſt complete and abſolute ſucceſs. But the Bengal army, together with the detachment under Colonel Braithwaite at Mahé, and ſuch proportion of troops from this ſettlement, as you may judge it expedient and conſiſtent with the mere ſafety of the iſland to detach, will be found able to execute any plan of operations that may be immediately reſolved upon, and againſt the whole force of the Maratta empire. Theſe, it is to be hoped, may reach Surat before the latter end of November; and as I have taken every proper precaution, and given the neceſſary inſtructions for ſupplying a magazine of all ſorts of proviſions, there will be nothing to prevent the army from taking the field at the expiration of that month. The only material difficulty therefore which ſeems to occur, is the article of money before mentioned; and this I am led to believe is not without remedy. You muſt know, that except four lacks of rupees which I received from your treaſury at Surat, I have ſubſiſted the troops under my command, by money received from the merchants at Surat; and in my own camp, for bills drawn upon the Government of Bengal. This, it is true, has been obtained upon terms not the moſt moderate, and it is probable may become ſtill higher hereafter; but the loſs ſuſtained thereby is ſurely a trifling conſideration, when put in competition with the important intereſts of the Company now at ſtake; and I do not doubt, ſhould the exigency of affairs require it, being able to ſupport my troops from the ſame ſource three months longer, eſpecially as I can adopt the expedient of paying a conſiderable part of the officers allowance by bills upon the Bengal treaſury.

I am not however without hope of the arrival of a large ſum of money in ſpecie very ſoon; as the Governor General and Supreme Council informed me, in a letter dated the 2d of Auguſt, they intended to ſend round 15 lacks; and there is no doubt, when they underſtand we have been compelled to enter into hoſtilities, and a repreſentation made them of the neceſſitous ſtate of affairs, they will exert every means to aſſiſt us in the proſecution of a war, the ſucceſs of which will ſo amply indemnify and compenſate for preſent inconveniences.

Theſe, with the money you can at preſent ſpare from your own treaſury, and the loans which may be made from individuals who at preſent enjoy the protection of your Government, are the obvious reſources that may conveniently and juſtly be uſed till the operations of a war, in purſuance of the plan that may be adopted for ſecuring a country and revenue, ſhall have opened a ſurer and more extenſive field of ſupply; and to accompliſh this moſt effectually and as early as poſſible, ſeems, as affairs are now ſituated, to be the grand and primary object.

Having thus made ſome general obſervations upon the preſent poſture of affairs, which I hope will appear to you juſt and proper, I ſhall venture to lay before you ſuch propoſals as appear to me moſt ſuitable and conſiſtent to be purſued: premiſing only, that as my views on this occaſion will be directed to what I conceive to be the true intereſts of the Company, and the object of the Bengal Government, as contained in the inſtructions they have given me for my government, I ſhall moſt cheerfully and zealouſly concur with, and aſſiſt in executing, any plan you may ultimately determine upon, provided it comes within the limits preſcribed in their letter to your Committee and to myſelf of the 14th of June.

I have before me four letters from the Hon. Governor General and Supreme Council under the following dates, April 5th, June 14th, July 8th, and Auguſt 2d. The firſt only conveys their original inſtructions for concluding a peace, and does not at preſent demand our conſideration; the ſecond contains proviſional inſtructions in the event of a failure in my negociations, which, circumſtanced as affairs now are, require our ſerious and deliberate attention.

They have been pleaſed in it, ſhould the Miniſter by rejecting their propoſals render a war indiſpenſably neceſſary, to leave me a latitude of action, under the inſtructions of your Government, to avail myſelf of the ſituation which fortune may preſent, and have further authorized me to adopt any part or the whole of Mr. Hornby's plan laid down in his minute of the 30th March, as I may think moſt adviſable for promoting the diſtreſs of the enemy.

The reſponſibility with which they have charged me on this occaſion, is motive of ſingular ſatisfaction; becauſe convinced within my own breaſt of the knowledge and experience of the Honourable the Preſident, which dictated the plan he propoſed, I have from the firſt inſtant of its being communicated to me, conſidered it as the moſt wiſe and effectual meaſure that could be adopted, without remarking on it more particularly, the advantageous ſituation of Guzerat to the Company's ſettlements on this ſide of India; the facility with which it might be conquered and retained; the reſources of men and money we ſhould derive from its poſſeſſion, and from which the enemy would by theſe means be cut off, are ſufficient arguments to eſtabliſh its wiſdom and propriety. It is not however enough to expreſs any ſimple aſſent to it at this time; circumſtances have ſo varied ſince its firſt formation, that I doubt not the Honourable Preſident will himſelf find many points that could not be foreſeen at that period now meriting his attentive conſideration.

In the firſt place, let it be obſerved, that Mr. Hornby's propoſals were made in a ſituation widely different from the preſent one; a few months only remained of the dry ſeaſon, and the approaching monſoon, when it might be ſuppoſed all military operations muſt be at a ſtand, would effectually prevent the Maratta Government from giving any vigorous oppoſition to our meaſures, and leave us full leiſure to eſtabliſh ourſelves in the poſſeſſion of the Guzerat without interruption. The caſe is now entirely altered in this reſpect, and ſhould we extend our arms into that province, we may be aſſured of having the whole, or a very conſiderable part of the Maratta force to cope with. My motive in making this obſervation at preſent, is merely to point out the neceſſity there now appears, ſhould it be judged expedient to make Guzerat the ſcene of action, of employing all the troops which can poſſibly be ſpared on that ſervice, and leaving to ſome future opportunity the reduction of Baſſein, which, though a certain, might prove at preſent a tedious conqueſt, and muſt, in the event of more important ſucceſs, become an eaſy acquiſition hereafter.

The moſt material change, however, which has occurred, and which calls for our principal conſideration, is the eſcape of Ragonath Row from the miniſterial party, and his having again demanded and received the protection of the Engliſh. I ſhall begin my remarks on this ſubject with communicating to the Committee ſuch parts of the inſtructions I have received from the Government of Bengal relating to this circumſtance, as may lead to diſcover the meaſures which would be moſt acceptable to them on this occaſion.

Their firſt letter, dated 8th July, in reply to mine, informing them of my having complied with his ſolicitation to take the aſylum of my camp, has been already explained to you: in it they approved entirely of the offer I had made him; and directed me to continue to afford him protection as long as he ſhould continue to demand it; provided he did not forfeit his right to it by any act of infidelity, or attempt to defeat the negociation, to which they enjoined me to give my entire attention, without regard to any other conſideration.

In the laſt letter of ſo late a date as the 2d of Auguſt, they expreſs the ſame fixed determination and wiſh for peace; and in anſwer to ſome conceſſions I had ſuggeſted as likely to be obtained from the favourable opportunity afforded us by the poſſeſſion of Ragoba, they write as follows:

"We do not diſapprove of your endeavours to obtain the additional conceſſions propoſed in your letter of the 12th June; nor do our inſtructions of the 5th of April, though reſtricted to certain points, preclude you from availing yourſelf of any occaſion which might be preſented to you to exact other conditions, by which the intereſt or the influence of the Company might be certaintly promoted; provided they do not impede or retard the accompliſhment of your original commiſſion. In this ſenſe, and with theſe proviſions, we repeat that we ſhall approve of the addition of the demands recommended in your letter of the 12th June to thoſe which we have already preſcribed in our original inſtructions, if you ſhall not have concluded a treaty with the Maratta Government before the receipt of this letter."

It is now neceſſary to obſerve to you what theſe conceſſions were which I was in this limited degree authorized to obtain: they were the ceſſion of Baſſein as agreed to be given to the Company in the treaty with Ragonath Row, and the payment of a ſum of money to defray the expence of our armies. I have been however precluded from every opportunity of endeavouring to ſucceed in theſe demands, by the preſent refuſal of the Miniſter to accede to the propoſals originally tranſmitted him; and as theſe were intended in the event of my negociation for peace proving effectual, ſince that has failed, another field for political advantage may perhaps preſent itſelf.

I beg to obſerve, that the Honorable Governor General and Supreme Council in their inſtructions to me, have made no proviſion, or drawn any line reſpecting Ragoba, they wiſhed to be followed, ſhould a war become neceſſary. There is however no doubt but any plan now fixed on which may tend to diſtreſs the enemy and promote the intereſt of the Company, will meet with their approbation and ſupport; and with this conviction, and with this object in view, I ſhall venture to hazard the following conjectures and opinion, both with regard to the general meaſures to be purſued, and the particular attention that ought to be paid to Ragonath Row's pretenſions.

The Honourable the Secret Committee of the Court of Directors have in their letter, dated 31ſt Auguſt 1778, of which you encloſed a copy for my peruſal, ſignified in the ſtrongeſt terms their predilection in favour of the cauſe of Ragoba, and their pleaſure that it ſhould be effectually ſupported by their ſervants in India, the principles upon which they adopted theſe ſentiments are in the higheſt degree juſt and political; as by placing the Adminiſtration of Poonah in the hands of Ragoba, a perſon indebted to us for his elevation, and depending upon our aſſiſtance in a great meaſure for being preſerved in his authority, we ſhould be ſure of a party in that Durbar friendly to the intereſt of the Engliſh; and beſides particular advantages to which we ſhould be at preſent intitled, our poſſeſſions on this ſide of India would attain an undiſturbed conſequence and ſtability in future; added to this, the countenance and protection continually afforded by this Government to Ragonath Row, furniſhes another argument from its propriety and conſiſtency, why the ſame meaſures ſhould if poſſible be now adopted. It remains therefore to be conſidered, whether the means that offer themſelves for accompliſhing this end are ſuch as to give us reaſonable hopes of ſucceſs.

The grand point in which we ought to be well informed, is the degree of conſideration Ragoba's cauſe is held in by the Chiefs of the Maratta State, and the real grounds he has to expect being joined or abetted by them, ſhould we again declare in his favour. The experience of the late campaign, if it does not eſtabliſh an abſolute proof, evinces beyond a doubt that they are by no means ſanguinely attached to his intereſt; and from my own obſervation ſince the arrival of the Bengal army at Surat, and even ſince his eſcape to, and reception with it, when it might be ſuppoſed thoſe who ſecretly wiſhed well to his affairs might have been encouraged to hint their favourable inclinations, I am led to believe no change has been ſince wrought in their ſentiments.

But what ought to carry the greateſt weight is, the candid declaration made by Ragoba himſelf, who acknowledges that he has no hopes of being joined by any of the Maratta leaders till they ſhall ſee his affairs in ſuch a train through our means, as to be aſſured of ſucceſs without them. This is in fact promiſing expectations of a moſt vague and indeterminate nature, and amounts to little more than that, when we ſhall effectually overcome every difficulty, neceſſity will compel them to acquieſce. Reſpecting Holcar, whoſe inclination he affirms to be ſecretly favourable, his diſpoſition is naturally ſo timid, and he is ſo much under the direction and influence of Scindia, that no dependance is to be placed on him. In ſhort, the general ſtate of parties ſeems to be this, that however much they may diſpute and differ among themſelves, they would be found to unite in oppoſition to any attempts of Ragoba to recover a ſhare in the adminiſtration of affairs.

From this general view, it would appear that in our endeavours to reinſtate him, we muſt truſt entirely to our own force for effecting it. It is probable a number of needy adventurers would flock to our ſtandard, and mercenaries might be collected from all quarters and with the aſſiſtance of theſe, or indeed without it, we might be aſſured of victory; but it is eaſy to ſee what little progreſs muſt be made in eſtabliſhing Ragoba firmly in the Government under ſuch circumſtances, without a Chief of any name or conſequence in the State to give weight to the confederacy.

Appendix. No. 253. A.

I am far from meaning by theſe remarks to exclude Ragoba's intereſts from a ſhare in our political ſyſtem, but I cannot help being of opinion it will be more for our advantage at preſent to look forward to the reſtoration of Ragoba at ſome future period when circumſtances may render it more favourable, than by immediately ſetting out with that project riſk another failure, which could not but be productive of the moſt ruinous conſequences to the Company's affairs.

The plan therefore I would propoſe to be purſued reſpecting Ragoba, is to hold out to him the hopes of firmly eſtabliſhing him in the Government of the Maratta State, as our grand and ultimate object; that in the mean time it is neceſſary for us to ſecure to ourſelves ſome firm and ſolid eſtabliſhment of territorial poſſeſſion on the Continent, from which we may derive reſources for the more important ſervices to be effected hereafter, when it ſhall be found that matters are ripe for their execution. The immediate advantages we muſt derive from purſuing a ſyſtem of this nature are obvious: a reimburſement of the expences we have already incurred, and a fund for future exigencies will be at once provided; and from not having our hands tied down by any poſitive engagement with Ragoba, we ſhall be at liberty to adopt ſuch meaſures hereafter as circumſtances may render wiſe and expedient: either to make an honourable and advantageous peace with the Miniſter, and upon conditions favourable to Ragoba; or ſhould it be found that our ſucceſſes have encouraged the partizans of the latter to declare themſelves, and win over any of the Maratta leaders to his party, which it is by no means improbable may be the caſe, to aſſert at once his claim to the ſovereignty, and eſtabliſh him in it.

The principal difficulty which ſeems to preſent itſelf, is to reconcile the ſyſtem I have propoſed to Ragoba.—He has been long accuſtomed to conſider himſelf as the principal in all the wars entered into by the Engliſh with the Maratta nation; and there is no doubt would expect to be put in poſſeſſion of whatever countries we might conquer from them. Many arguments however might be uſed with him, among which the following, in addition to thoſe above-mentioned, could not, I ſhould imagine, fail to have conſiderable weight: the heavy debts he has contracted to the Company, by which they have embarraſſed their own affairs in endeavours to ſerve him, that have hitherto proved ineffectual, render it neceſſary for their own ſafety, and to ſupport the war they are now about to be involved in entirely upon his account, to poſſeſs themſelves of a reſource of revenue not only to relieve them from the weight of former expence, but to furniſh a ſupply for future exigencies.—On this juſt pretext we may urge the abſolute neceſſity of retaining in our hands the collections of the diſtricts acquired by our arms till the concluſion of the war; the more ſo, as the Marattas have made themſelves the aggreſſors, by refuſing the moderate and reaſonable terms we offered them, and will of courſe conſider us as principals on the occaſion. A ſufficient and ample allowance may at the ſame time be made to Ragoba, for the ſupport of himſelf and family; and he may be permitted to invite ſuch Chiefs as are well inclined towards him, and collect his ſeveral adherents and followers diſperſed through the country; a work which muſt neceſſarily require a delay on his part of a few months.

From all theſe conſiderations I am clearly of opinion, that no new poſitive engagement ſhould be at preſent entered into with Ragonath Row; that the cauſe aſſigned for our hoſtilities with the Maratta Miniſter, ſhould be the encouragement they have given and ſtill give to the French, with whom we are at variance, and their rejecting the friendſhip we had proffered them upon conditions equally honourable and advantageous to both nations, which have compelled us involuntarily into a war; war; that our inclinations are perfectly friendly to the Maratta State, and that our intentions are to remove from the Adminiſtration thoſe who by their evil counſels and conduct have promoted its ruin, and aſſiſt in eſtabliſhing it upon a ſolid, firm, and regular baſis.

The line to be purſued reſpecting Ragoba, and the principles of our difference with the Maratta State being once determined, the point next to be conſidered is the particular plan of operations proper to be immediately entered upon; and here I beg to repeat my entire approbation of and aſſent to that contained in the Honourable Preſident's minute of the 30th March, as far as it relates to the active employment of our forces to the northward. With this view I would propoſe, that authority ſhould be given me to conclude a treaty with Futty Sing Guicawar, in the name of your Government, upon the principles and with a due regard to the reſervation contained in the inſtructions of the Honourable Governor General and Supreme Council of the 14th of June.

The immediate object of our operations in the Guzerat ought to be the poſſeſſing ourſelves of the ſhare of that province now ſubject to the Peiſhwa, and which Damulgie, the anceſtor of the preſent Brodera Prince, was compelled formerly to relinquiſh. This point might eaſily be reconciled to Futty Sing; and it would be even proper to make its attainment ſubſervient to his intereſt, which would be the caſe if we relieved him entirely from all dependance on or fear of the Poonah Government, and admitted him to a participation of the ſpoils we might take from them in the Guzerat. The moſt eligible mode of making the partition of the province betwixt the Engliſh and Futty Sing, ſo as to connect our poſſeſſions and place them in the moſt ſecure and defenſible ſtate, might be hereafter adjuſted.

Should Futty Sing heartily concur in this meaſure, the taſk of politics as well as war will then become very eaſy; and ſhould he, which from his ſituation and character I do not however think at all probable, refuſe to enter into any engagements with us, the army ought to march towards Brodera, and compel him to take a deciſive part immediately; for it appears abſolutely neceſſary, that he prove himſelf on this occaſion a firm and active ally, or experience from us the ſeverity of puniſhment due to a determined foe.

The Nawab of Cambait and ſeveral neighbouring Rajahs, as mentioned in the Honourable Preſident's minutes, will be of courſe aſſiſting according to their abilities, and be conſidered accordingly; the former as the natural and inveterate enemy of the Maratta State, will heartily exert his ſlender means to promote the common cauſe: I call them ſlender, from the reduced and ruinous condition into which his country is at preſent fallen: I do not however doubt they might be made of uſe, from the influence he muſt poſſeſs in that part of Guzerat, were we to countenance and ſupport him, and deliver him from the inroads and ravages of the freebooters, who overrun and deſtroy his territory; but of this, future circumſtances muſt be the rule to judge by and direct. Should it, gentlemen, be objected, that in the above propoſals I have laid down no fixed and determinate object as the ultimate point to which our endeavours ſhould be directed, I acknowledge the remark to be juſt; and it is upon theſe very principles I have grounded the expediency of ſuch ſyſtem, becauſe our hands will be left free from all embarraſſing ties, and we ſhall be at full liberty hereafter to reſolve and act as occaſion may ſuggeſt. In the mean time the advantage immediately reſulting is obvious and certain; and while we are eſſentially ſerving our own intereſts, we ſhall proportionably diſtreſs and injure the enemy: one argument in favour of the political plan I have laid down, ſeems alſo to ariſe from the attention which ought to be paid to the original views of the Government of Bengal at the Court of Berar. Though in the preſent ſuſpended ſtate of my negociation with Moodajee Bouncello, it can only be eſteemed a ſecondary conſideration; yet ſhould no other poſitive engagement obtain a decided preference at preſent, ſome future period may render the renewal of it expedient and politick. I well know the intimate and cloſe connection of the Naigpore prince with the miniſterial party: and I am alſo aware of the abhorrence and enmity he is actuated with againſt the cauſe of Ragoba. I cannot believe he would chuſe to riſk a rupture with the Engliſh, by openly aſſiſting Nana, nor would we perhaps have much to fear from the efforts of his power if he did; but of this I am perſuaded, that by a direct declaration in favour of Ragoba, we at once deſtroy all hopes in future of Moodajee, and render him irreconcileably inimical to our intereſts; whilſt there is every reaſon to believe, if we enter into a war upon the principles I have adviſed, he will not only continue to act an entire neutral part, but in the event of our ſucceſs, be once more ſolicitous to treat, and enter into an alliance with us.

Another argument which ſuggeſts itſelf in favour of my propoſal, and which indeed might be urged with great propriety to Ragonath Row, as one cauſe of our not chuſing to march immediately to place him in the Adminiſtration of Poonah, is the proſpect we have of being called upon to defend our own ſettlements againſt an invaſion of the French. This proſpect, we have reaſon to believe, is very diſtant and indeed ſcarcely to be apprehended at all; but as it is however a poſſible caſe, we cannot too much guard againſt a circumſtance which might, by claiming our attention, interfere with any operations in which we might be employed, and occaſion a failure in our poſitive engagements with Ragoba, ſhould any ſuch exiſt.

A third, and which is the laſt reaſon I ſhall now mention, may be drawn from a conſideration of the ſtate of parties within the Maratta State. An account of the riſe and eſtabliſhment of the Peiſhwa authority under the race of Bramins; the ſyſtem of their government, and its preſent diſtraction; a deſcription of the ſeveral officers of ſtate, and of the principal diſunion now exiſting in it, from the jarring intereſts of the principal of them and the Bramin leaders, are ſubjects that have ſo often come under your attentive deliberation, as to render it entirely ſuperfluous for me to make any remarks upon them at preſent; I ſhall, therefore, ſuppoſing theſe circumſtances to be eſtabliſhed facts, of which no further proof is neceſſary, proceed to delineate as preciſely as poſſible, what I conceive the preſent ſentiments of the parties, and trace from conſiderations of their reſpective intereſts, the manner in which they may be differently affected by our preſent reſolves.

I have not the ſmalleſt doubt, indeed I have it from very good authority, that the principal difficulty in adjuſting the late differences with the Maratta Court has originated with Scindia. The wiſh of Nana Furneſe to have concluded a peace with the Engliſh, is not by any means to be attributed to his friendly ſentiments for us, but to intereſted conſiderations of his own, as it would have left him at leiſure to purſue the ſchemes I am convinced he has in agitation, of deſtroying the influence of Scindia, and rendering himſelf ſupreme and independent. From the ſame motives, for he is no ſtranger to the deſigns of the other, Scindia would exert all his endeavours to deſtroy the effects of my negociation, as the means not only of ſecuring his own perſonal ſafety, but of preſerving to him that unbounded ſway he has acquired by his late ſervices, and which he will be aſſured of retaining, while his aſſiſtance is wanted to carry on the war with the Engliſh; I cannot help therefore being of opinion, that Scindia, as long as he can maintain his preſent influence in the State, where he poſſeſſes all the power, without the invidious name of authority (which latter indeed he could never hope to obtain) will not be induced by any offers we could make him, or any bribe or proſpect we could hold out to his acceptance, far inferior as it muſt be to the ſolid greatneſs he now enjoys, to come over to, or make any ſeparate treaty with us.

Should the labour of a peace be improved by the Miniſter to the firm eſtabliſhment of his own independence; or ſhould circumſtances ſo turn out, as to give a dangerous ſuperiority over Scindia, the latter might perhaps find it his intereſt to court our friendſhip and aſſiſtance; but of this the war affords no proſpect; and it appears to me at preſent a more probable expectation, that the Miniſter ſhould wiſh to unite himſelf with us to cruſh Scindia, than that the latter ſhould chuſe to connect himſelf with ſo powerful, and of courſe in his eſtimation, dangerous an ally as the Engliſh, while he is able effectually to maintain himſelf without their aſſiſtance. From theſe few remarks it is plain, that the Miniſter and Scindia, however much united in the ſame common cauſe, have mutual ſources of diſcontent, which may break forth on ſome future occaſion; and it will then prove a fortunate policy, if we are not prevented by pre-exiſting engagements, from chuſing to ſide with that party, whoſe connection will be productive of the moſt eſſential and important benefits.

I begin in this place to obſerve, that as the orders from the Honourable Governor General and Supreme Council did not reach me till after the diſpatch of the propoſals to Poonah, and when I might expect every day to receive an anſwer, I did not think it expedient to make known to him their favourable ſentiments till its arrival; and from the obſervations above mentioned, and the knowledge I have of his diſpoſition, I do not think it conſiſtent with policy, or the dignity of the Engliſh name, to make any overtures to him at preſent, as I am perſuaded they would be received with indifference and contempt. I ſhall therefore be guided in my conduct towards him, by circumſtances, which fortune may hereafter preſent in the courſe of our operations.

It remains now, that I ſay ſomething reſpecting the foreign States who may be moſt affected by, or affect our operations. Moodajee has been already mentioned. The only two beſides of conſiderable conſequence enough to deſerve attention are Nizam Ally and Hyder Ally. Both theſe princes have availed themſelves of the opportunities preſented by our diſputes with the Marattas, and the diſturbed ſtate of their Government, to diſmember from thoſe parts of the Peiſhwa's dominions that lie neareſt their own, conſiderable towns and provinces, the revenues of which they now collect themſelves. The former has ſucceeded by negociation, and the latter by force of arms; ſo that it may be ſuppoſed, the one from the ſacrifices peaceably yielded to him, has entered into terms of the ſtricteſt alliance with the Miniſter; and the other, it is well known, is now actually at war with him, although reports have been induſtriouſly ſpread by the latter and his creatures, that the terms of a peace have been mutually ſettled betwixt them.

The ſituation of Hyder therefore appears entirely favourable to our views; for it is not to be doubted, however much he may avoid forming any particular connections with us, but he will immediately liſten to the dictates of enmity and his own intereſt, and embrace the opportunity given him, by our engaging the attention of the Maratta Government in this quarter, of proſecuting his ſchemes againſt them to the ſouthward. I am not ſufficiently informed of the ſentiments of this prince, to judge how far it would be practicable for us to form any engagements with him on this occaſion for our mutual intereſts and the diſtreſs of the common enemy; but could it be effected, I am of opinion it would be attended with ſtriking advantages. You, gentlemen, whoſe affairs have frequently called upon you to negociate with him, and who, from your immediate connection and interference of intereſt with each other, muſt have derived many opportunities of informing yourſelves minutely of his ſentiments, will be beſt able to decide on this point.

Reſpecting Nizam Ally, I have only further to remark, that notwithſtanding the little reaſon there is to ſuppoſe he will chuſe to unite himſelf with us, I alſo believe he will not take an active part againſt us, or join his troops with the miniſterial forces, but obſerve the ſame wiſe, prudent, and temporizing conduct he has done on former occaſions, and avoid becoming an acceſſary to the war to either party. Appendix. No. 253. A.

I have thus, gentlemen, ventured to give you my ideas of the ſtate of affairs, and to ſuggeſt the line of the political conduct which appears to me moſt expedient for the honour and intereſt of the Company, and beſt ſuited to improve preſent circumſtances to future advantage. I have not entered into a diſcuſſion of the particular plan of operations to be purſued, any further than expreſſing my opinion, that it ought to be immediately confined to the Guzerat, as it is ſo clearly explained and provided from the Honourable Preſident's minute of the 30th of March. There is one obvious advantage which preſents itſelf from thus drawing the attention of the Marattas to this diſtant quarter, an opportunity may hereafter be found with a part of the force left at Bombay, when all poſſibility of the arrival of the French is removed, of ſeizing and maintaining the paſs of Condola, and by that means preſerving a communication betwixt Bombay and the entrance into the Decan, which, from its vicinity to Poonah, will fill the mind of the Miniſter with the moſt alarming fears; and from the eaſe with which an army can at any convenient time fall upon the capital, be attended with moſt conſiderable benefit in the courſe of the war.

I have only to add, that as I have thus freely expreſſed my own ſentiments, it would give me ſingular ſatisfaction if they meet with your concurrence and approbation; at the ſame time permit me to repeat the declaration I have made in the former part of this addreſs, that whatever plan may be ultimately formed, upon principles eſteemed more uſeful and beneficial, I ſhall heartily and zealouſly concur in promoting it, according to the inſtructions given me by the Honourable Governor General and Supreme Council for my rule and guidance.

I have the honour to be,
Gentlemen,
Your moſt obedient ſervant,
Bombay, Thomas Goddard.
3d November 1779.

At a Select Committee; preſent, the Honourable William Hornby, Eſquire, Preſident and Governor; John Carnac, Eſquire, Daniel Draper, Eſquire. Wedneſ. 10th

The Preſident lays before us the following minute, containing his ſentiments of the conduct proper to be obſerved by the Committee at this juncture:

Preſident, his minute.

The Preſident having reflected with the moſt ſerious attention on the preſent critical poſture of affairs with the Marattas, and our preſent circumſtances, together with the very limited powers now held by the Select Committee, thinks it neceſſary to offer to their conſideration ſuch remarks as in his opinion are pertinent, and proper for forming the conduct to be purſued at this juncture.

In the firſt place, he would wiſh to have it clearly recorded on the proceedings, and deſires a vote may be accordingly paſſed, that the war now impending, without entering into the neceſſity or good policy of it, is not a meaſure of the Select Committee of Bombay, but the iſſue of a negociation carried on under the diſtinct and ſeparate orders and inſtructions of the Governor General and Council, through an agent of their own appointment, and is not to be prevented or avoided by any efforts the Select Committee can make; all powers relative to negociation, peace, or war, having been removed from and taken out of their hands. The war, therefore, whether approved or condemned, is not to be imputed to this Committee; neither will they be in any manner reſponſible for the ſucceſs of it; the Governor General and Council having expreſsly acquainted the Select Committee, that Brigadier General Goddard is reſponſible to them for his conduct.

After thus diſclaiming all reſponſibility, both as to the meaſure of war and the ſucceſs of it, our undoubted duty to the Company, and a juſt and honourable conduct with reſpect to the gentlemen of the Supreme Council, call upon us to contribute our aſſiſtance moſt zealouſly and cordially, to bring it to as ſpeedy and advantageous a concluſion, both with the forces of this Preſidency, and with ſuch advice and recommendation to Brigadier General Goddard, as our experience and knowledge may at any time ſuggeſt. According to the relation we now ſtand in to Brigadier General Goddard, whatever we have to offer to him can only amount to advice or recommendation; and the Preſident imagines the Select Committee will admit the propriety of acting conformably to that relation, more eſpecially as it will be ſtrictly conſiſtent with and diſclaiming all reſponſibility. It muſt too be conſidered, we are not warranted by the Governor General and Council to give him expreſs orders for his conduct; ſince, according to the reſpective powers now held by the Select Committee and Brigadier General Goddard, any orders we might give are no further binding than according to his own conſtruction of them; and it would be therefore ineffectual and needleſsly hazarding the dignity of this Government, to aſſume any ſuch power.

The ſteps now immediately neceſſary to be purſued, appear to be to determine the quota of troops we can afford to reinforce Brigadier General Goddard's army, and to tranſport them to Surat without delay.

In ſettling this point, the Preſident recommends, that our garriſon ſhould not be ſo much weakened as to encourage the enemy to inſult us in our home poſſeſſions, or even to place them above the fear of offenſive meaſures from hence; the apprehenſion of which may be eaſily encouraged and kept up, and will favour the operations of the army to the northward.

To furniſh Brigadier General Goddard with the neceſſary powers for treating with the Guicawars, and effecting a ſettlement with the Guzerat province, according to my plan laid before the Select Committee, dated 30th March laſt, and the inſtructions from the Governor General and Council of the 14th June: it ſhould be recommended in the ſtrongeſt terms to uſe his utmoſt endeavours to effect this in an amicable manner, which Futty Sing's character, and his true intereſt, give hopes may be accompliſhed without recourſe to hoſtile meaſures.

The Preſident would be happy if it was in the power of the Committee to contribute equal aſſiſtance of money as of forces. He is concerned to obſerve, that ſo far as our expectations carry us, we ſhall ſcarcely receive ſufficient for the unavoidable monthly expences; the uſual annual ſupply from Bengal we have not received any aſſurances of: but the Preſident muſt believe the Governor General and Council will make a point of furniſhing money adequate to carrying into effectual execution, meaſures reſolved with their concurrence, and warranted by their authority; more particularly too, from conviction of our inability to contribute any aſſiſtance whatever in this reſpect.

The Preſident thinks it not improper, here to urge the advice and recommendation conveyed from the Select Committee to Brigadier General Goddard the 29th ultimo, to defer as long as poſſible commencing hoſtilities, and this among other conſiderations, as bearing a particular relation to the ſecurity of the reinforcement under Captain Popham. Brigadier General Goddard, on conferring on this point, delivered a very different opinion, and expects by immediate action to facilitate the junction of Captain Popham.

The Preſident however remains in his former ſentiments, and propoſes to continue to recommend to Brigadier General Goddard to delay the commencement of operations ſo long as the conduct of the Marattas admit or countenance this meaſure. The importance of the ſecurity of the detachment under Captain Popham is great indeed; and its junction of ſuch moment, as to promiſe abſolute ſucceſs in the operations propoſed, which might be doubted, at leaſt as to extent and immediate benefit, ſhould a junction not in due time be accompliſhed.

The object of ſafety to the march of Captain Popham is alone ſufficiently important to recommend the obſervance of meaſures productive of that deſirable end; but there is ſtill another very powerful conſideration claiming the like meaſure of delay, and that is the harveſt in the Guzerat province, which will be better ſecured the longer hoſtilities are avoided. Duly attending to the preſent great ſcarcity of grain, together with our pecuniary wants, and the port of Mangalore being ſhut againſt the exportation of rice, it muſt be allowed to be a momentous object, and highly meriting the moſt deliberate conſideration of Brigadier General Goddard, together with the ſmall proſpect there is of receiving the troops that are under the command of Colonel Braithwaite at Mahé, excluſive of thoſe ordered to be ſent from Madras by the Governor General and Council. It is probable that General Goddard may be able to face any force the Marattas may bring againſt him in the field with the force he has, and what we ſhall furniſh him with from hence; but that is not all that is to be looked for, it is the protection of ſuch countries as he may take poſſeſſion of, which I apprehend his army will be unequal to, as it will conſiſt of little more than half what the Governor General and Council intended it ſhould, for want of the arrival of the abovementioned troops.

General Goddard now coming in, the Preſident's minute was again read, and alſo the letters received ſince our laſt meeting from Tellicherry and Colonel Braithwaite.

Draper, Daniel, Eſq. his opinion.

Mr. Draper concurs in the Preſident's minute; except that he thinks it would be more conformable to the recommendation he propoſes ſhould be given General Goddard for deferring and delaying the bringing matters to a criſis, that no further force ſhould be immediately ſent off the iſlands with the General, but only that the number of troops ſhould be ſettled and kept in readineſs here, to be ſent up whenever he may acquaint us it is abſolutely neceſſary; as Mr. Draper concludes, that the ſending any forces from hence will be immediately known at Poonah, and conſtrued into an actual preparation for commencing hoſtilities: that ſuch a conduct would, in his opinion, be likewiſe more conformable to the advices tranſmitted to the Governor General and Council under the 31ſt ultimo, and were drawn up exactly agreeable to our minutes of the 29th, and which he now again approves and confirms, as being a true ſtate of affairs at the time. He likewiſe is of opinion, that what ought ſtill further moſt ſtrongly to weigh with us for deferring bringing matters to a criſis for ſome time longer, is the great probability, from the advices now before us, of the Company's being involved in a war with Hyder Ally as well as the Marattas, which Mr. Draper conceives the Governor General and Council had no idea of when they gave their laſt orders to General Goddard for demanding the alternative of war or peace.

Carnac, John, Eſq. his opinion.

Mr. Carnac is of opinion, that the ſtate of affairs is totally altered ſince our reſolution of the 29th ultimo, as we were then only under the apprehenſion of a war, whereas we are now to eſteem ourſelves as abſolutely engaged in one with the Maratta State, from the anſwer given to General Goddard by their Vackeel, who in conſequence received his diſmiſſion. Mr. Carnac therefore thinks it our indiſpenſable duty to do every thing in our power to procure to General Goddard as reſpectable a force as our circumſtances will admit of, to meet the enemy, and to proſecute the war with vigour, ſhould they enter our territories, which it is probable they will in a few weeks: that we have already experienced the bad effects of dilatory and procraſtinating meaſures, to which, in Mr. Carnac's opinion, the unfortunate iſſue of the late expedition to Poonah is principally to be attributed. Mr. Carnac is perfectly ſenſible that we are very ill in condition to meet a war, but that we have no option, and are forced into it; and that he has no idea, but the gentlemen who have thus forced us into it, will take care that we are furniſhed with proper means to carry it on. Mr. Carnac, though he allows we are deficient in reſources, does not think we are wholly deſtitute of means at leaſt for a preſent ſupply. That the Nabob and ſome of the Government officers at Surat muſt be poſſeſſed of large ſums of money; and that they ought to be plainly told, that as they enjoy the protection and countenance of the Company, it is their duty to aſſiſt them in time of neceſſity. Mr. Carnac therefore propoſes, that the Chief ſhould endeavour to prevail on them to advance ſuch ſums as they may be able, at the Company's intereſt and on their ſecurity, which are terms that cannot in reaſon be conſidered as any hardſhip, or attended with any riſk to the lender.

Vote, diſclaiming all reſponſibility in the preſent war, and its conſequences.

The reſolution of diſclaiming all reſponſibility both as to the meaſure of the war itſelf, and the ſucceſs of it, unanimouſly paſſed by the Committee.

Quota of force to be ſent with General Goddard conſidered.

The quota of force to be ſent with General Goddard being next conſidered, the ſtate of our garriſon is examined; when all circumſtances being attended to, we are of opinion, that excluſive of the artillery already ſent, we cannot with prudence ſpare a larger number than 200 European infantry, and a force in Sepoys, equal to two battalions, which muſt be ordered to be held in immediate readineſs.

200 infantry and 2 battalions of Sepoys to be ſpared.

Goddard, General, powers authorizing him to treat with Futty Sing, to be prepared.

Powers and inſtructions for General Goddard, agreeable to the Preſident's plan of the 30th of March, and the letter from Bengal of the 14th of June, muſt alſo be prepared: And,

Chief of Surat, inſtructions reſpecting borrowing money to be drawn out.

Inſtructions to the Chief of Surat, reſpecting borrowing money from the Nabob and Government officers.

Information regarding the French.

Some information collected from the gunner of the Warren reſpecting the ſtate of the French at Mauritius, is now laid before us by the Preſident, as entered hereafter, and muſt be tranſmitted to the other Preſidencies, and to Admiral Sir Edward Vernon.

At a Select Committee; preſent, the Honourable William Hornby, Eſquire, Preſident and Governor; John Carnac, Eſquire, Daniel Draper, Eſquire. General Goddard preſent.

Carnac, John, Eſq. lays ſome hint before us reſpecting the Guicawars.

Mr. Carnac lays before us, ſome hints of the plan of conduct, in his opinion proper to be obſerved with the Guicawars, with reſpect to the province of Guzerat, as entered hereafter.

Letter from General Goddard laid before the Committee.

General Goddard likewiſe lays before us, a letter, requeſting the line of conduct to be obſerved, may be determined as entered hereafter.

Further reaſons for wiſhing General Goddard to defer hoſtilities.

The conſideration of this ſubject being accordingly reſumed, it is agreed that our reaſons for wiſhing General Goddard to defer hoſtilities, muſt be ſtated to him when he proceeds to join the army; and the Preſident now reads to us an extract of a letter from the Chief of Surat, dated the 13th inſtant, acquainting him, that the crops will be gathered about a month and an half, or two months hence; and that if hoſtilities are commenced before that time, it will occaſion ſuch deſtation and deſtruction of the country, as greatly to diſtreſs the inhabitants of that city and adjacent country. If, when theſe points are ſtated to General Goddard, he ſhould ſtill judge it eligible, or find it neceſſary to enter upon immediate action, the determination muſt reſt with him; as we by no means intend to lay any reſtraint upon him in this point, but only according to the principle we have laid down, to give him our ſentiments of the conduct in our opinion moſt expedient to be obſerved.

Appendix. No. 253. A.

The line of conduct propoſed by General Goddard reſpecting Ragoba, approved.

The line of conduct with reſpect to Ragoba, as laid down in the General's letter of the 3d inſtant, is approved; and we entirely concur with him, that it will be better for the preſent to avoid entering into any engagements with him, or to appear as avowed ſupporters of his pretenſions, hoping the General will be able to ſatisfy Ragoba, and convince him of the neceſſity of our acting upon the plan we have adopted.

No time to be loſt in opening a treaty with Futty Sing.

We do not however mean that any time ſhould be loſt in opening the negociation with Futty Sing, which the General muſt be deſired to commence as ſoon as poſſible, upon the plan mentioned in the Preſident's minute of the 30th of March. For this purpoſe he muſt be furniſhed with proper credentials and copies of the treaty entered into at Brodera with Futty Sing, and of the propoſals made by his agent to Mr. Price, for an alliance with the Company, in the year 1772; and it muſt be very ſtrongly recommended to him, to effect the ſettlement of the Guzerat province in an amicable manner.

The footing upon which to put our forces in the field being conſidered, the queſtion is put to General Goddard, whether he can take upon him to reduce the Bengal troops to the footing of the Bombay troops, with reſpect to field allowances? when he abſolutely declared, that he cannot venture upon ſuch a ſtep juſt at the point of entering upon ſervice; and ſtrongly recommends to us to put the Bombay detachment upon the ſame footing as his troops, as ſo very ſtriking a diſparity muſt occaſion great jealouſies and heart-burnings, which will be very detrimental to the ſervice: the Committee, upon conſideration thereof, are fully convinced of the force of the General's reaſoning, and the juſtice of making no diſtinction in the forces of the ſame maſter, employed in conjunction upon the ſame ſervice; and it is therefore unanimouſly agreed, to allow Bengal batta to the Bombay detachment ordered to join General Goddard's army; but it muſt be clearly explained to the army, that this indulgence is not to be conſidered as a precedent, and will not be allowed except when acting with the Bengal troops.

George Green appointed Commiſſary. Lewis, Wm, Paymaſter. Warden, F. and Hull, J. W. permitted to accompany General Goddard.

Mr. George Green is appointed Commiſſary of ſtores and proviſions to the Bombay detachment, and Mr. William Lewis, Paymaſter; and General Goddard being deſirous of taking with him Meſſrs. Francis Warden and James Watſon Hull, the Committee conſent thereto.

A commiſſion for holding courts martial on the Bombay detachment to be prepared.

A commiſſion muſt be given to General Goddard for holding courts martial on the Bombay troops.

The Paymaſter and Commiſſary muſt make their drafts on General Goddard, for the expence of the Bombay detachment.

It being judged neceſſary to ſend Major Hopkins into the field with the European infantry, and his battalion of Sepoys being in conſequence taken from him; it is reſolved, to grant him the full appointment of that rank, and to give him a commiſſion to take rank from the 21ſt of July 1775, when he was firſt appointed to act as a Major.

Read the letters from Tannah and Fort Victoria, when the Preſident acquaints us, he will order the Prahm up Tannah river the enſuing ſpring, and that immediately upon receipt of the letter from Tannah, two companies of Sepoys had been ſent to Gorabunder; a Gallivat muſt alſo be ſent immediately to Fort Victoria.

Appendix. No. 253. A.

As many troops muſt be ſent up by the Revenge as we can find embarkation for, and General Goddard will proceed himſelf with the laſt diviſion, which will be ſent up as ſoon as poſſible.

There being a balance due to the agent for the cloathing made for the Bengal detachment, amounting to rupees 7,292. 1. 15. Ordered, that the ſame be diſcharged; and that Preſidency debited accordingly.

Mr. Carnac's minute.

As the province of Guzerat is now likely to become ſoon the ſcene of action of the forces under the command of General Goddard, the moſt feaſible mode of its reduction becomes a natural conſideration.

Our entering into hoſtilities againſt the Guicawars would, it is to be feared, rouſe the jealouſy of the great Jaghiredars, and be the means of cementing a ſtrong bond of union amongſt them; and although we ſhould ſucceed in the conqueſt of the whole province of Guzerat, which I have no doubt would in time be effected, yet the ſecuring its frontier only towards Mahé and the Decan, would ſubject us to the neceſſity of having always there a conſiderable detachment, not to mention the force that is conſtantly required to make good the collections in a country where no attention is paid to any claims but thoſe ſupported by the ſword. A junction with Futty Sing, the preſent leader of the Guicawar, ſeems therefore to be the moſt adviſable plan; and could this be brought about we ſhould have only to eject the Poonah garriſons from Amidavad, and a few other places ſcattered thinly over the country, little capable of reſiſtance. To Futty Sing might be ceded in principality the eaſtern provinces, forming a frontier towards the Decan and Malva, which would become a barrier on that ſide to the part of Guzerat, which might be taken as the Company's portion, and which would have for its other boundaries, the Myhie to the ſouth eaſt, and the rugged countries towards Merwar and Cutch, and the ſea, to the weſt.

As the whole weight of the Decan arms could not be reſiſted by Futty Sing alone, he would neceſſarily have occaſion for the aſſiſtance of a part of our forces, which while employed for his ſecurity, would be effectually promoting our own, both as acting againſt the common enemy, and being a powerful check on his conduct.

Could the gaining over of Futty Sing be accompliſhed, making him bona fide an ally, and enabling him at the ſame time, without too much ſubjection to ours, to ſhake off the Maratta yoke, would, if not conciliate the principal Jaghiredars, at leaſt render them leſs alert in the common cauſe, and might have a conſiderable effect upon Madjee Scindia; who, as he would then become our neighbour, we ſhould be better able to reduce his power, and to keep him within due bounds.

A fair opportunity offers for an opening with Futty Sing from the difference which has lately ariſen between Futty Sing and Nannah, regarding the Jaghire given by him to Sacaram Bapoo, and which, ſince his confinement, is claimed by the Poonah Government.

The baits we have to offer to induce Futty Sing to connect himſelf with us, are of ſo tempting a nature, that if managed with addreſs, they can ſcarce fail of having effect on him. The procuring for and guaranteeing to him an independent principality; the uſe of our troops in his ſupport and defence; the enabling him to rely as little as he may chooſe on the Poonah Durbar, in alienating him from which we gain an uſeful aſſiſtant towards ſubverting that power from which we have the moſt to fear; ſome intimations to him reſpecting Govind Row's claims, which unleſs he agrees to co-operate with us, we ſhall be neceſſitated to maintain, may operate upon his fears.

It appears to Mr. Carnac, that the Nabob of Cambay may be uſefully employed in conciliating to our Government the Powers on the northern ſide of the Myhie, the Cattawar, Cutch, &c. who groan under the oppreſſion of the Bramin tyranny. As we have long experienced the favourable diſpoſition of the Nabob towards the Engliſh, it would be good policy to afford him our aſſiſtance ſo as to enable him to ſet up for himſelf, and wholly to ſhake off the Maratta yoke.

16th November 1779. John Carnac.

Gentlemen,

The ready attention which you have paid to every application of mine for promoting the good of the public ſervice, calls for my moſt ſincere and hearty acknowledgments; and I beg to expreſs to you in the moſt particular manner, the warm ſenſe I entertain of the ſpirited and deciſive conduct you have purſued, in the reinforcement of troops which you have at preſent afforded me. Permit me further to declare, that I cannot but conſider this compliance as the moſt happy preſage of future fortune; and by continuing to receive the ſame ſteady and reſolute ſupport from your Government, I aſſure myſelf that my endeavours to execute whatever plan may now be reſolved upon, will be crowned with ſucceſs. Goddard Gen. letter from.

In my addreſs to you of the 3d inſtant, I gave my ſentiments at large of the preſent ſituation of affairs, and meaſures I thought moſt expedient to be followed; I now beg leave to add a few words. There appears to be no doubt at preſent remaining of the abſolute neceſſity of the war itſelf; the point now to be determined is, in what manner this war is to be carried on—Whether we ſhould act offenſively or defenſively? Whether we ſhould move to diſtreſs the enemy, and poſſeſs ourſelves of reſources immediately, or wait inactive to be inſulted and attacked by them in our camp?

Were there any hopes of an accommodation with the Maratta Miniſter, from the knowledge I have of the ſincere deſire of the Bengal Government for peace, and the advantages that might attend it, I ſhould be the laſt to precipitate matters, or recommend a commencement of hoſtilities on our part; but it is now too late to negociate, and even this object of peace can only be obtained by our acting with vigour and reſolution.

The fair and reaſonable propoſals made to the Miniſter; the alternative of peace or war, openly and generouſly left to his option, and his imperiouſly preferring the latter by rejecting the terms that were offered him, and preſuming to impoſe diſgraceful ones upon us, amply juſtify our conduct, in being the firſt to unſheath the ſword; I ſhould have ſaid, render it a duty we owe to the honour of our inſulted country, and the intereſts of the Company, to ſhew our reſentment of ſuch behaviour, by avenging upon the earlieſt occaſion. Every circumſtance alſo of political concern unites in commendation of our entering upon immediate action. We ſhall, by poſſeſſing ourſelves of a tract of country, open the ſources of preſent wealth, and provide for future ſupplies, and by theſe means proſecute the war with anticipated advantages, while our enemies will be intimidated; and thoſe whoſe inclinations are wavering or ſecretly diſpoſed to our intereſts, will derive courage from the early ſucceſs and vigour of our meaſures.

A moſt material advantage that ſtrikes me from this mode of conduct, is regarding the intended connection with Futty Sing; for if we attack him while under the impreſſion of his preſent fears, it would not be difficult to bring him over to our views, either by negociation or force; or ſhould even the former not ſucceed, it will be an eaſier taſk to accompliſh by the latter at this time, than when joined or ſupported by the force of the miniſterial party.

To all theſe arguments, as a further motive of encouragement to enter upon vigorous and active meaſures without delay, I am happy it is in my power to acquaint you, that ten lacks of rupees are coming round from Bengal, for the expences of the army, five lacks in ſpecie, and five in bills. Theſe I have reaſon to believe from the nature of my information (which though not from the Supreme Board collectively, is wrote me by Sir Eyre Coote) muſt have left Bengal long before this time; and it is not to be doubted, when the certain accounts of war are communicated to them, they will take the neceſſary ſteps for affording every effectual aid towards the proſecution of it.

Reſpecting Colonel Braithwaite I cannot help being of opinion, but when your letters which accompanied the veſſels ſent to tranſport his detachment arrive, and he reflects upon the importance of the public ſervice that now calls for his aſſiſtance, he will not heſitate a ſingle moment in forwarding it to Surat as expeditiouſly as poſſible, and I expect being joined by that force ſome time in the month of November; ſhould he not arrive ſo early, it need not I think be any impediment to entering upon action as ſoon as the troops of this Preſidency join, becauſe I am convinced the army under me will then be ſufficiently ſtrong for the ſervice to be performed, and I ſhall always have it in my power to favour and effect his junction with the main body. I cannot help alſo being of opinion that our operations will tend to facilitate the progreſs of the reinforcement coming from Bengal, under the conduct of Captain Popham; as the diviſion it muſt cauſe will not give the Marattas leiſure to attend to his motions, nor will they think it ſafe to our forces by detaching any conſiderable number of men to oppoſe, and interrupt his march.

Having thus mentioned the ſeveral arguments which forcibly ſtrike me for entering upon immediate hoſtilities, I am induced to hope they will meet with your concurrence and approbation, and that you will furniſh me with the neceſſary inſtructions and powers, both regarding the general plan, and the particular object of the operation to be at preſent purſued, previous to my ſetting out to join the army, which I wiſh to be able to do in two or three days, as my preſence there is abſolutely neceſſary upon many accounts; and the appearance of backwardneſs and want of vigour, which my too long abſence will carry with it, might alſo be productive of diſagreeable conſequences.

The points regarding which I am moſt ſolicitous, are the mode of treating with Futty Sing, conſiſtent with the treaty now ſubſiſting betwixt the Honourable Company and him, and the line of conduct to be purſued reſpecting Ragonath Row. On theſe two ſubjects I have already ventured to give you my ſentiments; and I have only to repeat, that I ſhall cheerfully and zealouſly concur, and exert myſelf in ſucceſsfully accompliſhing your views relative to them and the other objects of the preſent expedition, as far as lies in my power. This declaration I conſider as ſufficient for me to make; and doubt not its being fully ſatisfactory at this time. In obſerving upon the former part of the Honourable Preſident's minute of the 10th inſtant, regarding the powers that have been given me by the Honourable Governor General and Supreme Council, and the relation in which I ſtand to the Government, the ſincerity of my preſent aſſurances will I hope be fully apparent from the conſiſtency of my future conduct with them; and I truſt no differences or miſconception in points that are not ſtrictly eſſential to the ſucceſs of the buſineſs in hand, will ever ariſe to interrupt that harmony and good underſtanding that has hitherto marked the councils and reſolves of this Committee in the meaſures concerted for the common cauſe in which we are embarked, and which cannot fail, under the ſame circumſtances, of being brought to a happy and glorious iſſue.

I have the honour to be,
Gentlemen,
Your moſt obedient humble ſervant,
Thomas Goddard.

Appendix, No. 253. A.

Thurſday. Signed our inſtructions to General Goddard, and credentials for his negociating with Futty Sing, in the name of this Government: alſo inſtructions to Lieutenant Colonel Hartley in command of the Bombay detachment, and to the Commiſſary and Paymaſter thereof; likewiſe letters to Surat, and to the Chiefs of Surat and Broach, all entered in the order now ſpecified.

To Brigadier-General Goddard.

Sir,

Goddard, Gen. his inſtructions. The ſtate in which affairs with the Marattas now ſtand, ſince the anſwer returned by the Miniſter to your propoſals for a pacification; your diſmiſſion of the Vackeel in conſequence; and the intermediate declaration made by you to the Durbar, in obedience to the inſtructions from the Governor General and Council, dated the 14th of September; together with the military preparations, which we learn from all quarters are making at Poonah, leading us to conclude a war with that State inevitable, we have at ſeveral meetings, to which you have been invited, conſidered with the moſt ſerious attention, the conduct proper to be obſerved in our preſent circumſtances, as well as the object to which the efforts of our force may with moſt advantage be directed, whenever it ſhall be judged expedient to commence operations; in order that we might aſſiſt you with our beſt advice for the benefit of the common cauſe on this very intereſting occaſion.

The powers you had under the Governor General and Council, make it proper to acquaint you that we do not conſider the war now impending as a meaſure of this Government, nor ourſelves in any manner as reſponſible for the ſucceſs of it. We do not ground this poſition on any opinion we have formed relative to the neceſſity or good policy of the war, which is a queſtion we ſhall not enter into; but on the principle, that as the negociation was opened and concluded under the ſeparate and diſtinct inſtructions of the Governor General and Council, who have expreſsly acquainted us the principal reſponſibility will reſt with them, and as you are in conſequence made reſponſible to them for your conduct in the operations of the war, we ſhould under ſuch circumſtances be wanting in juſtice to ourſelves, if we did not diſclaim all reſponſibility, both as to the meaſure of the war itſelf, which is the iſſue of that negociation, as well as the ſucceſs of it when commenced; the officer intruſted with the conduct of the operations being reſponſible to another juriſdiction.

After this previous explanation it is equally proper to aſſure you, that we ſhall, according to our duty to the Company, and from motives of juſtice and honour with reſpect to the Bengal Government, contribute our aſſiſtance moſt zealouſly and cordially to bring the war to a ſpeedy and advantageous concluſion both with the forces of this Preſidency, and with ſuch advice and recommendation to you as our knowledge and experience may at any time ſuggeſt, or you may require from us. In this confidence you may take your meaſures, and depend upon every aid and ſupport in our power to afford.

We have, as you have been before acquainted, diſpatched a ſufficient number of veſſels to bring up the forces and ſtores from Mahé, and a poſitive requiſition to Colonel Braithwaite to embark them thereon, and to join the army under your command; but from his lateſt advices are uncertain whether he may think himſelf at liberty to comply therewith, or whether he may not receive contrary orders from his ſuperiors at Madras, who appear to be on the eve of a war with Hyder Ally. We have alſo determined, in addition to the detachment of one hundred artilleny men before ſent, to reinforce you with a body of 200 European infantry, the firſt battalion of Sepoys, and a battalion of drafted Sepoy grenadiers, which is the utmoſt our eſtabliſhment will afford at this time, and the laſt embarkation of this force will now accompany you on the Revenge, and other veſſels, to join the army at Surat.

Though we have thus done our utmoſt to put your army into the moſt reſpectable ſituation, we ſtill continue to think it will be more adviſable to endeavour to gain time, and to protract any determination or acts of hoſtility till we are in a better condition to meet the war, provided the motions of the enemy will in prudence permit; and we accordingly ſtrongly recommend to you, to obſerve temporizing meaſures for the preſent. Our reaſons for this recommendation have been fully explained to you in our letter of the 29th October, before we knew of your diſmiſſion of the Maratta Vackeel, and alſo perſonally at the council table; and when ſummed up, conſiſt in the uncertainty we are under of the junction of the troops from Mahé; the great diſtance of Captain Popham's detachment; the hazard to which any immediate acts of hoſtility may expoſe that very conſiderable reinforcement; our ſituation in point of money, which totally diſables us from giving you any aſſiſtance in that reſpect, or even bearing the expences of the Bombay detachment in the field; the deſtruction of the harveſt in the Guzerat province, the firſt ſtep the enemy will probably take on your putting the army in motion; and the diſtreſs ſuch a meaſure will produce to the country and the Company's ſettlements, as well as the effect it will have on the ſupplies to the army; all which objections it appears to us may in a great meaſure be removed in a few weeks, and the army enabled to take the field with much greater advantage, by the nearer approach of Captain Popham's detachment; perhaps alſo the arrival of the troops from Mahé, and the ſupplies of money that may ſoon be expected from the Governor General and Council, and the magazines of grain that may be ſecured after the harveſt is collected.

But if after conſideration of the reaſons above ſtated you ſhould ſtill judge it eligible, or find it neceſſary to enter upon immediate action, the determination muſt reſt with you, as we by no means intend to lay any reſtraint upon you in this point; but only according to the principle we have laid down for our conduct, to give you ſuch advice as in our opinion is moſt ſuitable to preſent circumſtances, and moſt conducive to the benefit of the common cauſe.

Whenever the objections now exiſting may be removed, and circumſtances may be ſufficiently favourable for commencing operations, we entirely agree with you in the opinion expreſſed in your letter of the 3d ultimo, that the grand and primary object ſhould be to ſecure a country and revenue which would afford a certain and extenſive field of ſupply for the exigencies of the war, and we hope for the future emolument of the Company. In this light we regard the plan laid before us by the Preſident the 30th of March laſt, of which you have ſo fully teſtified your approbation; and we accordingly then recommend to you to adopt and carry it into execution, ſo far as relates to the ſettlement of the Guzerat province, in concert with Futty Sing, and the reduction of the Maratta poſſeſſions adjoining to Surat and Broach, which we truſt will effectually anſwer the great ends abovementioned, and tend materially to diſtreſs the enemy.

We do not, however mean, that any time ſhould be loſt in opening the negociation with Futty Sing, which may be immediately commenced; and we hope you will be able to convince him, how much it will prove to his intereſt to unite with us in the ſettlement of the Guzerat province; nor from the advantage which a coalition with him will afford to your future operations, and the Company's poſſeſſions in that quarter, can we doubt of your exerting your utmoſt addreſs to bring this point to bear by an amicable compoſition, rather than by an exertion of your force. For this purpoſe it ſhould be clearly explained to Futty Sing, that we mean no injury to him, but only to take into the Company's hands the Poonah ſhare of the revenues held in participation with him, and thereby to diſtreſs our enemies, with whom we are at war; that it is our wiſh to be on the moſt friendly terms with him; and that we have fully empowered you to make an amicable and equitable ſettlement with him of the province of Guzerat, upon terms of mutual advantage and ſecurity to him from all future dependance and exactions by the Poonah Durbar, or grounds for diſpute with the Honourable Company.

We accordingly herewith deliver your credentials, under the ſeal of the Honourable Company, authorizing you, in behalf of this Government, to negociate, and conclude a treaty with Futty Sing Guicawar, whom we conſider as the head of that family, the elder brother, Seajee, being diſordered in his mind, and having no concern in matters of Government. It is, however, neceſſary we believe his name ſhould be inſerted in any engagement you may form with Futty Sing; and alſo a clauſe, reſerving the final ſanction and ratification of ſuch engagement to the Governor General and Council, agreeable to their inſtructions of the 14th of June.

The grounds of the engagement to be formed with Futty Sing, muſt be our ſupporting and defending him in poſſeſſion of his ſhare of the Guzerat province, independent of the Poonah Government; and his engaging to ſupport us in the ſhare now held by that Government. To make this ſettlement as convenient as poſſible to the Honourable Company, and to Futty Sing, and to avoid the continual differences which muſt ariſe from both parties having an intereſt in the ſame places; we recommend to you to propoſe to Futty Sing, to make an abſolute and ſpecific partition of the territory between him and the Honourable Company, according to the proportion of the revenues now reſpectively held by him and the Marattas; and each party to have the diſtinct and ſole Government and poſſeſſion of the diviſion which may be allotted to them in the new ſettlement.

The propoſed mode of partition, and the revenues drawn by the Poonah Circar, and the Guicawars, from the province of Guzerat, are deſcribed with all the accuracy our preſent knowledge will allow, in the Preſident's minute of the 30th of March; a copy of which has been already put into your hands, and will ſerve in general as your guide in the diſcharge of this part of your commiſſion; the general outlines of the partition are,

The Company to be put in poſſeſſion of the Guicawar diviſion of the country ſouth of the Tappy, their ſhare in the revenue of the city of Surat, and ſuch other lands as may nearly make up an equivalent to the Maratta poſſeſſions north of the Myhie, which will be guaranteed to Futty Sing.

It is to be obſerved, that the diſtricts between the Myhie and the Tappy, as far eaſtward as Brodera, Dubhoy, Zinnore, and Verſavee, which make part of the Preſident's plan, will be held by the Company as acquiſitions gained from the Poonah Circar, to which they ſolely belonged, except Coral, ceded by Futty Sing, in 1775, and for which the Guicawars are not entitled to any conſideration; theſe diſtricts will be taken notice of in the ſequel of this letter.

You may alſo ſtipulate with Futty Sing, that we will ſupport him in withholding the tribute of 27 lacks per annum, now paid to the Poonah Circar for his Jaghire in the province until a final treaty of peace is concluded between the Company and that Durbar, in which you may aſſure him his intereſt will be carefully attended to, if he cordially unites in the ſettlement now propoſed to him.

If you ſhould find it practicable, we recommend to you to obtain from Futty Sing the ceſſion of Zinnore, which lies very commodiouſly for completing our line of northern territory, in which we apprehend you will find but little difficulty, as a conſiderable ſhare is collected for the Poonah Circar; and this place was once before ceded by Futty Sing, in the year 1755, but then relinquiſhed for reaſons which had weight at the time.

There

Appendix No. 253. A.

There being alſo ſome villages of Futty Sing's intermixed with the Broach Pergunnah, we recommend it to you to get them ſecured for the Company in the propoſed treaty of partition—the gentlemen at Broach can inform you of the particulars.

In conſequence of the exchange propoſed to be made with Futty Sing, ſhould he requeſt the Company's aſſiſtance for putting him in poſſeſſion of the territories of the Poonah Circar, north of the Myhie, we conceive ourſelves authorized by the Governor General and Council's letter of the 14th June, to make a ſtipulation for affording him ſuch aſſiſtance, which we accordingly empower you to accede to in our behalf; obſerving the following caution to which they have enjoined us to pay the ſtricteſt attention, ſhould this plan be carried into execution, viz. that the engagement you may enter into ſhall be offenſive only, for the object of our immediate operations, and in all other reſpects purely defenſive.

As Govind Row has always ſhewn himſelf well diſpoſed to our intereſt, and in order to preſerve the country from the continual depredations occaſioned by the contention between the two brothers, we could have wiſhed in the arrangement with Futty Sing to ſecure a ſatisfactory proviſion for him; but the Governor General and Council have expreſsly forbad us to aſſume a mediation between them, or to take any part whatever in their domeſtic diſputes, further than to ſupport the party in alliance with the Company and his poſſeſſions againſt foreign invaſion; and not to commit the dignity of the Company, or pledge the national faith in formal treaty with a perſon of rank or power unſuitable to ſuch a diſtinction. If this point can be accommodated without deviating from the above reſtriction, we think the Company will derive honour and advantage from it.

The Nabob of Cambay likewiſe deſerves our attention in the ſettlement of the northern country, part of which was formerly wreſted from his dominions, and from his enmity to the Marattas, and attachment to the Company, may be made of uſe to you in your operations; we therefore recommend to you, to procure for him ſuch ceſſion of territory as you may find practicable.

The Company's ſervants at the northern ſettlements will be directed to give you ſuch information as you may require, of the intereſts and connections of the country Powers in their neighbourhood.

We have not at preſent any thing further to offer on the ſubject of the propoſed alliance with Futty Sing; but in the courſe of the negociation ſhall give you any other information that may occur, or that you may deſire from us. But as ſuch materials may be of preſent uſe to you, we herewith deliver copy of the treaty made with Futty Sing in 1775; alſo of a letter from Lieutenant Colonel Keating, containing an hiſtorical account of the Guicawar family; a copy of ſome propoſals made by Futty Sing in the year 1772 to Mr. Price, the Chief of Surat; and an account of the diſtricts formerly annexed to Surat, under the name of Autoveezy, the reſumption of which makes a part of the plan above recommended to you.

As ſoon as you may judge it expedient to commence operations, we recommend to you to proceed in the reduction of the Maratta poſſeſſions ſouth of the Tappy, and their Pergunnahs of Ulpar, Hanſood, Occlaſeer, Deſborah, Ahmood, Dubhoy, and Verſavee. The diſtricts above alluded to lying between the Tappy and the Myhie, care ſhould be taken not to moleſt the Guicawars choties, and collectors; and in the reduction of theſe places, the Chiefs of Surat and Broach will be directed to afford you every aſſiſtance you may deſire, and to receive charge of them from you when reduced, according to their reſpective ſituation; that is, the places north of the Tappy, except Ulpar and Verſavee, will fall under charge of Broach Chiefſhip; and thoſe ſouth of that river, with Ulpar and Verſavee, under charge of Surat.

Theſe places we apprehend will be reduced without much difficulty; and by that time you will be able to diſcover Futty Sing's diſpoſitions towards the propoſed ſettlement, and to determine your future operations.

We entirely concur with you in the plan propoſed in your letter of the 3d ultimo to be purſued reſpecting Ragoba, and avoiding any poſitive engagement with him for the preſent. We truſt, that ſeeing the neceſſity of the ſyſtem we have adopted, he will be reconciled to it; and conſidering how deeply the Company is already involved on this account, will allow the juſtice of our ſecuring ſome means of reimburſement and reſource for future ſupply, before we can avowedly aſſert his pretenſions; and more eſpecially when he conſiders, as you obſerve, that we ſhall enter this war as principals. We alſo further approve this way of proceeding, as we may expect orders reſpecting him from the Governor General and Council, when they are apprized of the ſituation of affairs.

Lieutenant Colonel James Hartley proceeds in command of the Bombay detachment, and we have directed him to put himſelf entirely under your orders, as per copy of his inſtructions encloſed. A return of the force under his command will be delivered you by himſelf.

Mr. George Green is appointed Commiſſary of ſtores and proviſions to the ſaid detachment, and Mr. William Lewis, paymaſter; and as it is not in our power to furniſh money for the expences of their department, we have directed them to make their drafts on you.

As Samuel Richardſon, one of the principal ſurgeons of our hoſpital, and ſurgeon-major of the garriſon, proceeds in charge of the hoſpital for the Bombay detachment, Mr. Durham, as ſurgeon of the artillery, and Mr. Clugſtone, as ſurgeon of the infantry, Mr. Tootney will now act as an aſſiſtant ſurgeon with Mr. Green, now proceeding: and they are all put under the orders of Mr. Richardſon, the ſurgeon-major.

In conſequence of your deſire, we have permitted Meſſrs. Warden and Hull to accompany you to the army.

We now encloſe a commiſſion, authorizing you to appoint and confirm general courts martial, and a blank warrant for a Judge Advocate.

However averſe we may be to entail expence upon the Company, yet as you have acquainted us, that you cannot take upon you to reduce the Bengal troops to the ſame footing with the Bombay troops, in reſpect to field allowances; and as ſo conſiderable a diſparity muſt occaſion great jealouſies and diſcontent, and be very detrimental to the ſervice, we muſt admit the juſtice and neceſſity of making no diſtinction between the forces of the ſame maſter, employed in conjunction upon the ſame ſervice; and therefore are entirely of opinion, that the Bengal batta ſhould be allowed to the officers of the Bombay detachment, ordered to join the army under your command. We deſire, however, it may be clearly explained to the troops, that this is not to be conſidered as a precedent, and will not in future be allowed, except when acting in conjunction with the forces of the Bengal Preſidency.

A Company's ſeal is herewith delivered to you; and heartily wiſhing you ſucceſs, we remain,

Sir,

Your moſt obedient humble ſervants,

Bombay Caſtle, 2d December 1779.

Goddard, Gen. his credentials for concluding a treaty with Futty Sing.

Sir,

We the Governor and Select Committee of Bombay, in virtue of the powers veſted in us by the Honourable the Court of Directors, and having the ſanction of the Governor General and Council at Calcutta, relying on your fidelity, prudence, and integrity, do authorize and empower you, in the name of this Government, and in behalf of the Hon. United Eaſt India Company, to negociate and conclude a treaty of alliance and friendſhip with with Futty Sing Row Shamsher Bahadur, and to make with him an amicable and equitable settlement of the province of Guzerat, on such terms as shall be for the mutual honour, benefit, and satisfaction of both parties, and we hereby give you full powers to that effect; declaring that we will ratify whatever agreement shall be concluded by you in behalf of this Government, and which will likewise be confirmed and ratified by the Governor General and Council, according to the instructions herewith delivered to you.

To Lieutenant Colonel James Hartley.

Hartley, Lieut. Col. instructions to him.

Sir,

Having appointed you to the command of a detachment of the troops of this Presidency, consisting of 100 artillery, 200 European infantry, and 2 battalions of Sepoys, with which we have resolved to reinforce the army under General Goddard, and the last embarkation now proceeding to Surat, we direct that you likewise take passage on one of the vessels ordered for the accommodation of the forces; and on your joining the army, to put yourself and detachment under the orders of General Goddard, to whom you will deliver a return thereof.

Mr. George Green is appointed Commissary of stores and provisions, and Mr. William Lewis, Paymaster, to the Bombay detachment; and as it is not in our power to furnish money for the expences of their departments, we have instructed them to make their drafts on General Goddard.

Mr. Samuel Richardson, one of the principal surgeons of the hospital and surgeon-major of the garrison, proceeds in charge of the hospital, Mr. Durham as surgeon of the artillery, and Mr. Clugstone as surgeon of the infantry; Mr. Tooney will now act as an assistant surgeon with Mr. Green now proceeding; and they must all be put under the orders of Mr. Richardson the surgeon-major.

The Bombay detachment will be put on the same footing in point of batta as the Bengal troops; but this indulgence is not to be construed into a precedent, or expected, but when acting in conjunction with the forces of that Presidency.

To enable you to discharge the duties of your command with satisfaction, we have thought proper to allow you a staff, consisting of an aid-de-camp, Secretary, and Brigade Major; and are

Your loving friends,

Bombay Castle, 2d December 1779.

&c. Committee.

To Mr. George Green.

Mr. George Green, his instructions.

Sir,

Having appointed you Commissary of stores and provisions to the detachment of forces commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Hartley, for the reinforcement of the army under General Goddard, we direct that you take upon you the charge of that department, and proceed on the Revenge to join the army at Surat.

As we are unable to furnish money for the charges of the detachment in the field, you must make your drafts on General Goddard for such sums as you may require in your department.

We are your loving friends,

William Hornby,
&c. Committee.

Bombay Castle, 2d December 1779.

To Mr. William Lewis.

Lewis, Wm his instructions.

Sir,

Having appointed you Paymaster to the detachment of Bombay forces under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Hartley, for the reinforcement of the army under Brigadier General Goddard, you will accordingly take upon you the charge of that office, and proceed on the Revenge to join the army at Surat.

General Goddard will supply you with money for the expences of the detachment, on whom you will accordingly make your drafts.

We are your loving friends,

William Hornby,
&c. Committee.

APPENDIX, No. 254. A.

Bengal Secret Consultations, 24th February 1780.

THE 1st of January 1780, General Goddard wrote the following letter to Bengal, viz.

Gentlemen,

I have the honour to acknowledge your letter of the 14th October, enclosing copy of your instructions to Captain Popham, and a bill of exchange for Bombay rupees 1,927. 4. 3. which shall be negociated in the manner you are pleased to direct.

When I last had the honour of addressing you, I expressed my intention of putting the army in motion in a very few days. This design I have found necessary to carry into execution on account of the circumstances which have occurred in the course of my intended negociation with Futty Sing Guicawar, that tend to raise doubts of his inclinations being friendly towards the English, and justify a belief that he wishes only to gain time, until an army from Poonah may be sent to his assistance, to unite his forces with theirs against us. I have already informed you of the powers delegated to me by the Government of Bombay, to conclude a treaty on their part with Futty Sing; the object and nature of which will be fully explained to you by the several papers I had the honour to enclose for your perusal in my letter of the 10th ultimo, I accordingly communicated to Futty Sing through the medium of the two confidential people whom I had sent to attend me, the proposals of the English, in terms calculated to give him every confidence in, and assurances of, their sincerity, if he truly and heartily entered into their views; and at the same time, to convince him if he acted on this occasion with duplicity and deceit, he must expect to be treated by them as an enemy.

The period requisite for a reply, which I requested he would send without loss of time, had elapsed many days, when at last my own Hircarrahs returned with a letter from Futty Sing, in which he took no notice whatever of the proposals that had been made him, nor referred me to his Vackeels for further information. He only repeated the common professions of friendship and regard for the English, and assurances of his intentions to maintain the ancient alliance mutually subsisting between them inviolable. The Vackeels themselves, when questioned upon the cause of this doubtful and improper delay; would answer me only with the most obvious subterfuges and evasions; my Hircarrahs also informed me, that the night before their departure from Brodera, Futty Sing's capital messengers had arrived from Poonah, with letters from the Miniſter and Scindia, exhorting him not to unite with the Engliſh; and promiſing to ſend an army immediately to his aſſiſtance. I further learn, that Futty Sing is augmenting his own ſtrength, and calling in troops from all quarters to join his ſtandard; and is at preſent two coſs from his capital, at the head of an army, which may conſiſt of about ten thouſand men.

Notwithſtanding all theſe ſuſpicious appearances, I am far from relinquiſhing the proſpect of bringing over Futty Sing to become an ally in the preſent war; nor ſhall I treat him as an enemy, until he gives me certain proofs that the proffered friendſhip as actually required by him, famed as he is for treachery, even above the perfidious ſtamp that marks the whole of the Maratta race; it is neceſſary to take every political precaution againſt his deceit, and bring his conduct to an immediate poſitive teſt; ſo that by marching towards him I ſhall obtain the deſired object of winning him to a decided declaration in our favour; or ſhould he be refractory, and adverſe to our meaſures, accompliſh a ſtroke that muſt be of the moſt beneficial conſequences in the commencement of the war, before the ſuccours from Poonah ſhall arrive to his aſſiſtance. From this laſt place, my advices mention, that a few bodies of horſe have been already detached, and that the main army is expected ſoon to follow.

Let me repeat, that induced by the ſeveral reaſons above related, I have put the troops in motion, and this morning croſſed the Tapty river, on the north bank of which I am at preſent encamped. I have the pleaſure further to acquaint you, that moſt of the Pergunnahs belonging to the Poonah Government, ſouth of the Myhie river, have been taken poſſeſſion of in the name of the Eaſt India Company, and delivered over to the Chiefs of Surat and Broach, to be collected in the neighbourhood of whoſe reſidencies they are ſituated. The inhabitants, accuſtomed to a change of maſters, ſeem to embrace the dominion and protection of the Engliſh, with an unuſual joy and alacrity, and no doubt, anticipate the proſpect of being delivered from the oppreſſion of their tyrants.

The only principal diſtrict now remaining on this ſide of the Myhie is Dubhoy; and as that contains a fortreſs, and is within 12 or 13 coſs of Brodera, it will be ſubjected upon the arrival of my army, for the march of which this pretext alone would be a ſufficient point of direction, and furniſh a juſt reaſon to ſatisfy Futty Sing.

I ſhall continue to communicate to the Select Committee of Bombay, every occurrence regarding the preſent ſervice, and receive ſuch inſtructions and information from them as may aſſiſt in promoting the ſucceſs of it, according to the rules you have laid down for my guidance.

The ſeveral papers encloſed in my letter of the 10th ultimo, will have fully explained to you the object of our preſent plan, and furniſhed ample grounds for you to tranſmit us inſtructions for our future direction, conſiſtent with the political views you may find it proper ultimately to form; to which I ſhall pay the ſtricteſt attention and moſt implicit obedience.

The point on which I am moſt ſolicitous to know your pleaſure, relates to Ragonaut Row. I have already apprized you of the difficult taſk I knew I ſhould find in reconciling the meaſure now adopted by us, to the high hope with which his mind was filled; nor was I deceived in my expectations. I however conſidered it as an object of the higheſt political importance at preſent, and what was likely in the end to crown the war we are engaged in with the moſt complete glory and benefit, to keep him in good humour and dependance upon us; and ſpared no arguments for that purpoſe; and I have the ſatisfaction to tell you that I have ſucceeded to my wiſh. I pointed out to him the juſt and good policy of ſecuring to ourſelves ſome certain fund for reimburſing paſt heavy expences, and ſupporting the charges of the preſent war in which we were involved, and conſidered by the Miniſters as principals, ſolely from our friendſhip and regard to him; but at the ſame time aſſured him, that as the Engliſh had invariably and long protected him, and exerted themſelves for his intereſt, it was ſtill their wiſh to reſtore him to the ſtation and guandeur to which his birth entitled him, whenever circumſtances might render ſuch an attempt favourable, or a party in the State declare themſelves decidedly in his favour.—He acknowledged the propriety of what I had ſaid, and profeſſed an entire confidence in the favourable intentions of the Engliſh to accompliſh his wiſhes; but he obſerved, that unleſs ſome increaſe was made him to his allowance on a part of the conquered Pergunnahs ceded for his uſe, thoſe who ſecretly favoured his intereſts would be doubtful of deſign to ſerve him; and beſides would want the chief inſtrument of reward in proſpect to join his ſtandard. In anſwer to this I repeated my former arguments, adding, that the ſucceſs of our army, while he remained under our protection, would be ſufficient to bring over thoſe who were really well affected to him; that he might in the mean time take every conſiſtent and neceſſary ſtep to encourage his partizans in the State; and that if any reſpectable party ſhould ſtand forth, the inſtructions which I expected to receive from your Government regarding him, would arrive in time to execute the plan you might deem beſt calculated for the honour and benefit of himſelf and the Engliſh nation. Appendix. No. 254. A.

On the ſubject of money, although he pleaded the neceſſity of an addition to ſupport thoſe who might flock to his ſtandard, I would promiſe nothing; I only told him, that when the ſeveral leaders, his partizans, with a ſufficient force ſhould join him, it would then be time to provide a fund for their ſubſiſtence. The ſufficiency of theſe arguments, though it did not altogether convince, yet he ſeemed to acquieſce in—they were contrary to his ſentiments and ideas of his own greatneſs and ſtation; and men find it difficult to reconcile to their choice, what militates againſt their favourite ruling paſſion, which I believe among the Bramins may be confined to two, avarice and pride.

The infirm and ſickly condition of Ragonaut Row prevents his accompanying the camp at preſent, but he ſent his adopted ſon Omrat Row, with about two thouſand horſe and foot; theſe he expects will daily increaſe on the march, and will look to be ſubſiſted; to afford them ſome encouragement is the only teſt by which we can try Ragoba's cauſe, therefore beg leave to propoſe ſome queſtions both on this ſubject and in what relates to the buſineſs of Ragoba altogether: your directions, and the knowledge of your pleaſure regarding which will be very uſeful and neceſſary for my guidance.

1ſt. Is it your wiſh to adopt and take active meaſures in favour of the cauſe of Ragoba, if circumſtances ſhould hereafter render it favourable, by an overthrow of the miniſterial forces, or by a declaration of a ſtrong party in the State in his favour?

2d. In the event of a ſucceſsful war, if no conſiderable party makes its appearance, is it your intention to aſſert his claim?

3d. What are the expreſs limitations you think it neceſſary to lay me under with regard to the two foregoing points?

4th. With regard to money for the ſubſiſtence of his troops, I beg to receive your inſtructions, how far and under what reſtrictions it is your pleaſure he ſhould be aſſiſted; and as it is requiſite to keep him in hopes, and at the ſame time ſacrifice as little as poſſible to that end, what advances in money, and what ceſſions of conquered country ariſing from the ſucceſsful operations of a war, you may think it adviſable to give or admit him to a participation of, till the abſolute proof of his real weight and influence in the State can be obtained.

I have mentioned the above circumſtances which ſuggeſt themſelves to me; and as no doubt others will occur to you as neceſſary on this important occaſion to be provided vided for, I hope to receive your full particular inſtructions as early as poſſible.

I beg to acquaint you, that no part of the Madras reinforcements have yet joined me. Colonel Braithwaite, the officer in command at Mahé, writes me that he had ſhipped off the artillery and Europeans of his detachment for Surat, as the natives to whom the choice had been left by the Select Committee of Madras, of returning home or ſtaying to ſerve on this coaſt, had to a man preferred the former. The Colonel ſince writes me, that on account of ſome troops belonging to Hyder Ally being in motion towards Tellicherry, he has found it abſolutely neceſſary to re-land the Europeans and ſtores, ſo that I have no proſpect of being ſoon joined by any of the Mahé forces, nor have I received any advices from the Madras Government, by which I can form a judgment when the troops coming immediately from that Preſidency may arrive.

I am alſo in the ſtate of ignorance reſpecting Captain Popham's detachment as when I laſt wrote you, none of the Hircarrahs whom I ſent to meet him and bring me intelligence having yet returned; ſo that I have reaſon to ſuppoſe that he has not yet croſſed the Jumna.

I beg leave to repreſent to you my ſituation with reſpect to caſh: I have received part only of the bills tranſmitted me for five lacks in your letter of the 6th September, and there is no news of the Britannia. This Government, as you would perceive by their letter to me of the 2d of December, have not been at all aſſiſting to the charges of the war, for which they urge the very impoveriſhed and neceſſitous ſtate of their own circumſtances. The junction of the detachment from Bombay has occaſioned an increaſe of expence, and this, added to the delay in the arrival of the five lacks in time, has entirely exhauſted the treaſury, and left me without any reſource for the ſubſiſtence of the army, than that of drawing bills upon your Government, which I have done upon the moſt favourable terms I could poſſibly obtain, to the amount of between four and five lacks. I hope you will be pleaſed to approve of my conduct in this particular; and as I can have no certain dependance even upon the expedient of drafts, and the ſum I am at preſent poſſeſſed of is barely ſufficient to pay off all the troops for November, including December's pay, I hope you will take ſuch meaſures for the ſupply of this neceſſary and indiſpenſable article as you may find moſt ſpeedy and effectual.

I have honour to be, &c.

Mr. Barwell indiſpoſed.
Sir Eyre Coote on a viſit to the different ſtations of the army.

READ the following letter from the Preſident and Select Committee at Fort St. George.

Gentlemen,

We yeſterday received a letter from Colonel Braithwaite, giving an account of his proceedings in conſequence of our orders to him for evacuating Mahé, and ſending the detachment to Surat: a copy of this letter we tranſmit for your information, and you will perceive by it the diſagreeable ſituation of affairs at Tellicherry, and the reaſons which induced Colonel Braithwaite to remain there with the whole detachment to act in defence of that ſettlement; we wiſhed the Europeans had been ſent at all events to Surat; but ſtill we cannot blame Colonel Braithwaite for uſing his diſcretion, in a caſe where one of the Company's poſſeſſions was to be defended againſt an actual and powerful attack; the part taken by Hyder Ally in fomenting theſe diſturbances, and marching a large body of his troops to take poſſeſſion of the ruins of Mahé, on account of its proximity to Tellicherry, ſhew no very favourable diſpoſition towards us, and might well warrant the conjecture formed by Colonel Braithwaite, that he would probably aſſiſt the Nairs in their attempt upon that factory. There is however reaſon to fear from what Colonel Braithwaite writes, that the gentlemen of Tellicherry have imprudently provoked hoſtilities by interfering in the country diſputes, and giving protection to people obnoxious to Hyder and the Nairs. If ſo, they have certainly been very culpable, and we hope their ſuperiors will inſtantly take meaſures to promote an accommodation, for we are ourſelves averſe from engaging our troops in ſo unjuſtifiable a quarrel. We made it a part of our inſtruction to Colonel Braithwaite during his command at Mahé, to have no interference directly or indirectly with any Powers or Chiefs beyond the limits of his authority; and he appears to have ſo ſtrictly conformed to our orders in this reſpect, that we do not believe he has had the ſmalleſt ſhare in any of the tranſactions which may have given riſe to the preſent troubles.

The moment we heard of theſe diſturbances, and the conſequent detention of our troops at Tellicherry, we came to the reſolution of ſending, at all events, immediately from hence, a reſpectable reinforcement to join General Goddard's army at Surat; and ordered a complete battalion of Europeans, a company of artillery, and a battalion of Sepoys, to be held in readineſs to embark at a moment's warning. His Majeſty's ſhip Sea Horſe being here, we applied to Captain Panton for his aſſiſtance on this occaſion, and we have taken up the Horſendor, a country ſhip, as a tranſport; theſe two veſſels, which are all we have at preſent, will receive the battalion of Europeans and company of artillery, and ſail with them in five or ſix days at furtheſt, directly for Surat: the battalion of Sepoys we ſhall embark upon the Besborough and Britannia, which we underſtand may be hourly expected from Bengal on their way to Bombay or Surat; we ſhall alſo hold a battalion of Sepoys more in readineſs to the ſouthward, to embark from Anjengo, ſhould there be occaſion for them; and we have ſent directions to Colonel Braithwaite to forward the Europeans with him, by the firſt opportunity, to Surat, unleſs circumſtances ſhould have materially changed ſince he wrote laſt; that is to ſay, unleſs Hyder ſhould have openly taken ſuch a part in the attack of Tellicherry as to render it abſolutely neceſſary for the Europeans to act in its defence.

This exertion, we aſſure you, is the utmoſt we are capable of making in the critical ſituation of our affairs with Hyder, and it is ſuch, that ſhould a powerful invaſion take place, we muſt act entirely upon the defenſive, and look chiefly to the care of our garriſons; nevertheleſs, in the preſent ſtate of affairs on the other ſide of India, we conceive it to be our duty to ſacrifice much to promote the object of peace, and we hope and truſt that the conſiderable reinforcement we are ſending to General Goddard, may enable him to accompliſh it upon ſafe and honourable terms.

Extract of Bengal Secret Conſultations, the 24th February 1780.

PRESENT,

The Honourable Warren Haſtings, Governor General, Preſident;
Philip Francis, Edward Wheler, } Eſquires.

Sir Eyre Coote abſent with the army.

READ the following letter from Bombay Secret Committee.

Gentlemen;

Having been fully engaged in a diſpatch of conſiderable length to the Honourable Company, it has prevented us ſending you an account of the reſult of Gen Goddard's negociation, or the meaſures reſolved upon in conſequence; and which was the leſs material, as that gentleman acquainted us he had himſelf fully written on the ſubject; but a ſafe convevance now offering by ſea to Anjengo, we take the opportunity of tranſmitting by that route to Madras, copies at length of letters delivered to us by General Goddard during his continuance at Bombay: of a letter of inſtructions and credentials we delivered him on his departure to join the army; and of a ſubſequent correſpondence; which explain ſo fully our preſent political ſituation with reſpect to the Marattas, that it is needleſs to ſay any thing in addition, further than to confirm our aſſurances in the letter to General Goddard of the 3d inſtant, that we ſhall moſt zealouſly ſupport him in the vigorous proſecution of the war upon the principle therein laid down, though without any ſhare in the reſponſibility.

We have already in our letters of the 7th and 13th of October repreſented to you the reduced ſtate of our finances, and our preſſing demands for money. Since the month of September laſt, we have advanced General Goddard no leſs than ſix lacks of rupees; a moſt heavy deduction from our limited income, only made equal by ſupplies from your to our ſtated expences, and for which of courſe we muſt be proportionably unprovided. We were the more induced to make the laſt advance of two lacks, that he might not be under the neceſſity of taking up money at Surat for bills on your Government, which we were apprehenſive from your letter of the 14th October might be the means of defeating your endeavours to procure remittances both from the army and this Preſidency, and thereby adding to our preſent difficulties. In order to raiſe a fund for our immediate exigencies we have given directions for a loan being made at Surat, which the Chief acquaints us will not amount to more than five or ſix lacks of rupees; out of which, the beforementioned advance of two lacks is to be deducted, and with our ſmall ſtated receipts, the expences of this Preſidency, and alſo of the Madras detachment at Tellicherry, are to be defrayed till we receive ſupplies from you. We will not pretend to ſay what reſources we may find from the ſucceſs of the meaſures committed to General Goddard; but whatever future advantages they may produce, it would not be prudent to place much dependance upon them for any conſiderable immediate relief, and we therefore truſt you will have taken meaſures for ſending us our uſual ſupply hitherto received in part of this ſeaſon, and that you will make allowance alſo for the extraordinary demands we may be expoſed to in the preſent ſituation of affairs.

APPENDIX, No. 257. A.

Extract of a Letter from the Preſident and Select Committee at Bombay, to the Secret Committee of the Court of Directors, dated the 31ſt December 1779.

WE had the honour to addreſs you on the 30th of April by your ſhip, the Royal Admiral, and the ſame time tranſmitted a triplicate of our addreſs, dated the 27th of March, diſpatched to England expreſs by the Betſy ſnow. Appendix Nos. 256 & 257. A.

The moſt material political tranſaction communicated in the laſt mentioned addreſs, was our reſolution to the Governor General and Council, the determination of the meaſures to be purſued with reſpect to the Poonah Government, and to refer to their deciſion a plan propoſed to us by the Preſident for the line of conduct that appeared to him beſt adapted to our then circumſtances; a copy of which was tranſmitted by the Royal Admiral.—Juſt at the time this plan was laid before us, the letter was received from the Governor General and Council, dated the 8th February; and came at the ſame time under our conſideration at a meeting to which we had invited Colonel Goddard, who then laid before us credentials given him by thoſe gentlemen to act as their Miniſter at the Court of Poonah, on certain points independent of our controul; and alſo acquainted us, that as in the event of the failure of our plan for the reſtoration of Rageba, he was directed to reſume the negociation with Moodajee Bouncello, he ſhould forthwith take the neceſſary ſteps for that purpoſe; and requeſted that aſſurances might be given to the Rajah on our part of the full ſupport and concurrence of this Government, in any meaſures which might be concerted between them; which we accordingly complied with.

As our engaging in any meaſures hoſtile to the Poonah Government, might afford Moodajee a pretence for breaking off the negociation, if he was not ſeriouſly inclined to an alliance with the Company, and might interfere with the views of the Governor General and Council, with whom we were truly deſirous of acting in concert upon ſome ſettled and aſcertained plan; theſe were the conſiderations that impelled us to the above reſolution, and which we have judged it neceſſary to recapitulate in this addreſs, to preſerve connection in the account of our proceedings, in caſe our advices by the Royal Admiral ſhould have miſcarried.

We alſo in our ſaid addreſs ſtrongly recommended Colonel Goddard to your moſt favourable notice; and ſolicited ſome diſtinguiſhed mark of regard from you for his judicious and deciſive conduct in quitting the negociation with Moodajee Bouncello, and his ready determination of advancing to our aſſiſtance, as well as for the activity and military ſkill with which he conducted ſo difficult and dangerous a march through a country never before traverſed by the Company's troops.

Remaining therefore in expectation of directions from Bengal to fix our meaſures, we on the 20th of May received a letter from the Governor General and Council, dated the 5th of April, after advice had reached them, of the failure of the expedition; in which they acquainted us, that they had inveſted Colonel Goddard with full powers, as Miniſter of that Government, to treat with the Peiſhwa and Miniſters of the Maratta State for the renewal or confirmation of the treaty of Poorunder; provided they would recede from the pretenſions they had acquired by the late treaty at Worgaum, and would agree not to admit any French force to their dominions, nor allow that nation to form any eſtabliſhment on the Maratta coaſt; empowering him to conclude a treaty with them on thoſe conditions, the acceptance or refuſal of which was to determine the alternative of peace or war.

The Governor General and Council further ſignified to us, that their firſt object in this negociation was to obtain peace on honourable terms; and in the mean time they recommended to us to be prepared either for repelling any hoſtile attacks of the Marattas, or for any other ſervice which they might hereafter judge neceſſary; but they formally forbad us to undertake any offenſive meaſure, without explicit and poſitive orders from them.

Colonel Goddard commenced his negociation upon theſe

theſe grounds; and we gave him every neceſſary information to aſſiſt him in the conduct of it, furniſhing him with extracts from your commands of the 7th of May, and a copy of thoſe of the 31ſt of Auguſt 1778. Before his negociation was brought to any point, a very unexpected circumſtance happened, which may produce very important effects on the political ſyſtem of this Preſidency.

Ragoba, ſince his ſeparation from our forces at Tellagaum, had remained under charge of Mhadjee Scindia; who, though deſirous of retaining poſſeſſion of his perſon for purpoſes of political advantage, treated him with every external mark of reſpect, and even left him his artillery and moſt of the forces he had brought with him from Bombay, to accompany him on the march to the place deſtined for his reception. Scindia's Duan, with 4,000 horſe, was appointed to eſcort him; and his intention appears to have been to carry him into the diſtant provinces in his own direction and diſpoſal. In this ſcheme he was however baffled; for upon their arrival at the Nerbedah, and preparing to croſs that river, Ragoba found an opportunity of executing a plan, no doubt previouſly concerted, for his eſcape; and an action enſuing, which we are informed was commenced by Scindia's horſe, upon ſome ſuſpicion of Ragoba's deſign, Scindia's troops were totally routed and diſperſed, and the Duan himſelf mortally wounded.

Ragoba, immediately after the action, made the beſt of his way to Occlaſeer, near Broach, with about three or four thouſand horſe and foot and his guns, to the number of twenty. After remaining there a ſhort time, he joined Colonel Goddard's camp near Surat, the 15th of June, having previouſly requeſted permiſſion to come in, together with his family, and receive the protection of the camp; which the Colonel acquainted us he judged proper from political conſiderations, ſo far as it extended to their perſonal ſecurity, to grant him in the name of the Bengal Government, till he could receive their pleaſure regarding him.

The Governor General and Council were immediately adviſed of this event, by a veſſel diſpatched expreſs; but on the firſt intimation we received of Ragoba's eſcape and deſign to put himſelf under our protection at Surat, we reſolved, in order that no ſtep on our part might tend to fruſtrate the negociation they had been pleaſed to commit to Colonel Goddard, to direct the Chief to deſire him to ſeek an aſylum in ſome other place; and we at the ſame time intimated, that as the Colonel muſt be the beſt judge how far the Company's taking Ragoba under protection, might interfere with the preſent views of the Governor General and Council, it would reſt with him to act in this point according to his own judgment; and he muſt be reſponſible for the conſequences. The execution however of this order was ſuperſeded by Ragoba's making application in the firſt inſtance to Colonel Goddard; and he has ſince, at the Colonel's deſire, had a habitation aſſigned him in the city of Surat.

It was not till the 29th of Auguſt, that we received from the Governor General and Council their reply to the diſpatches ſent them by Mr. Horſley, relative to the failure of the late expedition and the plan propoſed by the Preſident. This was conveyed to us in a letter, dated the 14th of June; in the preamble of which they acquainted us they ſhould decline all review of our paſt proceedings, and confine themſelves to the choice of meaſures that appeared to them beſt calculated to retrieve our affairs.

Theſe meaſures, ſtriking at the very exiſtence of our rights, and the power eſpecially entruſted to us, and being in our opinion abſolutely inconſiſtent and incompatible with the avowed object of them, namely, peace with the Maratta Government, ſuperadded to their directions being conveyed in terms ſo intricate and liable to miſconſtruction, that it would be very difficult to give a faithful abſtract, make us deem it very material to ſend you a copy of it at full length by the preſent diſpatch.

Mr. Horſley, who was allowed acceſs to this letter before it was diſpatched from Bengal, ſet before the Governor General and Council, in a very able and maſterly manner, the general objections which lay againſt the extenſive powers they had conferred on General Goddard, as well as the particular parts of the letter which ſeemed likely to prove detrimental to the public ſervice; we have therefore accompanied this letter with a copy of Mr. Horſley's on the ſubject, in which you will find he has diſtinguiſhed the powers of the two Governments with the utmoſt accuracy, and aſſerted our right with becoming ſpirit, and unanſwerable ſtrength of argument.

You may believe we felt moſt ſenſibly this invaſion upon the rights and powers immediately veſted in us by you, and thus illegally transferred to Brigadier General Goddard, on whom the Governor General and Council have thought proper to confer that rank for the ſervice on which he is now employed. Their charging him, to our entire excluſion, with the immediate intereſts of this Preſidency; with the power of making peace or war at his own choice; and with an army under his own independent command, to proſecute whatever meaſures he may think proper to adopt; are inſtances of delegated authority, both unconſtitutional, and in the higheſt degree injurious to the rights abſolutely inherent in us, under the ſubordination due to the Governor General and Council by Act of Parliament. This conduct is directly repugnant to the ſentiments you expreſſed on their interference with the rights of this Government, though in a much more limited degree, in the inſtance of Lieutenant Colonel Upton: and without intending the ſmalleſt reflection on General Goddard, but only as an obſervation naturally ariſing from the caſe itſelf, we muſt remark, that by their uniting in a military man, poſſeſſed of the uncontrolled command of an army, the charge of a negociation, the powers of making peace or war, and of conducting that war himſelf, and planning the operations in any manner he may think proper, they have formed a truſt of ſuch an oppoſite and diſſimilar nature, and ſo much at variance with profeſſional principles, that in the diſcharge of it a bias, though perhaps imperceptible to the agent, muſt prevail in favour of military meaſures; and that choice will the more juſtly excite ſurprize, as the Governor General and Council have repeatedly expreſſed, that their predominant wiſh is for peace; and that they look to the iſſue of this negociation, if it ſhall prove ſucceſsful, as their primary object, and the termination of all their political views, on this ſide of India.

We alſo obſerved with concern, as a circumſtance that muſt tend to the diſadvantage of your affairs, the little inclination manifeſted by the Governor General and Council, of acting on any terms of union or concert with us, which we had ſo anxiouſly wiſhed for, and in the hope of which, though the neceſſity was imminent, we had deferred fixing upon our meaſures, without their previous concurrence; but as we have had nothing in view but your intereſt, and the good of the ſervice, which muſt ſuffer injury in any conteſt between the two Governments, and eſpecially on points of ſuch a nature as our preſent cauſe of complaint, we came to a reſolution not to oppoſe the operation of their orders, or of General Goddard's power, and to unite with him cordially and confidentially in the common cauſe, ſtill making reſervation of our rights thus violently infringed, and declaring them not to be conſidered as in the ſmalleſt degree impaired or injured by our conceſſion in this inſtance.

We flatter ourſelves you will approve the reſolution we have taken, conſidering our circumſtances, and the bad conſequences that muſt have followed from an oppoſition to General Goddard's powers; between which and the line of conduct we have taken, there appeared no alternative. The confuſion an oppoſite conduct muſt have produced, ſo raſhly hazarded by the Governor General and Council, will we truſt be a ſtrong recommendation commendation of the moderation we have ſhewn, and evince our diſpoſition to contribute our beſt ſervices for the advancement of your intereſt, even to the injury of our own rights and privileges; but at the ſame time that we make this ſacrifice to the public ſervice, we look up to your juſtice and authority to reinſtate us in the free exerciſe of the powers conſtitutionally inherent in us, and to prevent all future infringements of them, which alone can reſtore to this Government the weight and conſequence of which it has been ſo unjuſtly and impolitically deprived, or enable your delegates here to carry on your affairs with any degree of honour to themſelves, or advantage to the Company.

Though any diſtinction that could, with propriety, have been conferred on General Goddard would have given us pleaſure, and we had recommended him to the Governor General and Council for ſome mark of their favour, we could have no idea of their rewarding him at the expence of the rights of this Government, by giving him a local rank, confined to the proper ſphere of our own juriſdiction. It requires no arguments to prove, that they have no right to grant ſuch a commiſſion, the validity of which we are apprehenſive might be diſputed, in caſe of the arrival of any officers, ſuperior in rank to General Goddard's ſtanding upon the Bengal eſtabliſhment; and as there would be no poſſible doubt but that officer, with his former rank, and in the ſtation he held, would have been intruſted with the chief command of the army in the event of a Maratta war, had the option of ſhewing him this mark of confidence been left to us, and we had it not even in our power to ſuperſede him in the command, had we been ſo inclined; their conferring ſuch an appointment appears therefore quite inexpedient, and an unneceſſary uſurpation of power, unſupported by any legal authority veſted in the Governor General and Council.

Thoſe gentlemen in a ſubſequent letter, dated the 8th of July, acquainted us that they have entirely approved the protection granted to Ragoba, and that they have directed General Goddard to continue to afford it to him ſo long as he ſhall demand it; provided he ſhall not forfeit his right to it by any act of infidelity, or attempt to defeat the effect of the negociation to which General Goddard was to give his entire attention: without regard to any other conſideration for the reſt, they left him to act under their inſtructions of the 5th of April, in which they ſaw no cauſe to make any alteration on account of that event.

To give you an idea of our political ſituation with reſpect to the Marattas, we muſt principally take our accounts from General Goddard's letters, as no degree of agency being left to us, we can give you no direct account from ourſelves. The firſt information of any conſequence relative to his negociation was contained in a letter, dated the 10th of September at the camp near Surat, from whence he carried it on, in which he acquainted us, that his propoſals were communicated to the Miniſter by letters diſpatched expreſs the 19th of Auguſt; but from what cauſe he knew not, either a ſtudied delay on his part, or by reaſon of ſome diſturbances on the road, no anſwer had been received. That to obviate as much as poſſible any further inconvenience from delay, he had diſpatched the Aſſiſtant to the Maratta Vackeel, who attended him, expreſs to Poonah, with the terms on which he was authorized to conclude a peace, and had limited his return to twenty days, which he had faithfully promiſed to do.

He inferred from this account the uncertainty of the event of his negociation; and obſerved, as he had reaſon to apprehend, (notwithſtanding his poſitive declarations he would never conſent to grant any) that the Miniſter would demand ſome conſiderable conceſſions on our part, in return for their ſacrificing all claims derived from the convention of Worgaum, it was a very probable circumſtance that we might be compelled to take up arms. At the ſame time he remarked, that he had hitherto received nothing from the Miniſter, but the ſtrongeſt aſſurances of friendſhip for the Engliſh, and that the profeſſion of his emiſſary promiſed only the moſt favourable iſſue to the negociation. Appendix No. 257. A.

You will doubtleſs obſerve, that when we have mentioned the Poonah Adminiſtration with any relation to perſon, we have made uſe of the ſingular number, the reaſon of which is, that Nannah Furneeſe is at preſent the ſole Miniſter, Sacaram Bappoo being, as we underſtood, under confinement through his means.

General Goddard in the ſame letter writes: "Should "however a war become neceſſary, the ſeaſon is ſo far "advanced, and ſo little time can hereafter be ſpared "for deliberation, that it will be expedient to conſult "and to determine upon ſome plan of operations as "early as can be done with convenience." He alſo aſſured us of his zeal and readineſs to promote any views he might have formed for the honour and intereſt of the Company in general, or the particular advantage of this ſettlement; and requeſted we would communicate ſuch parts of them as we might judge proper at that time, that he might be fully prepared to aſſiſt and co-operate in their accompliſhment.

He accompanied this letter with indents for ſtores of all kinds to complete the army for ſervice, which we immediately furniſhed from our own magazines.

In our anſwer we acquainted him, that if he found his negociation likely to break off, we were of opinion it would be more adviſable for him to come down to Bombay to conſult with us reſpecting the plan of operations in ſuch caſe to be purſued, and which would thereby be determined with more expedition and accuracy than by letter. In the mean time we ſent for his conſideration a copy of the Preſident's minute of the 30th of March; obſerving only to him, that that plan was concerted without any relation to Ragoba, who was then in the power of Mhadjee Scindia.

At this period we received a letter from the Governor General and Council, dated 2d of Auguſt, acquainting us, that from accounts lately received of the ſtrength of the French at the Mauritius, they had great reaſon to apprehend an attempt was intended againſt this ſettlement; they therefore deemed it of the utmoſt importance to provide for its ſafety, by reinforcing the army under General Goddard with a reſpectable addition of troops, and ſhould direct him to be prepared for the expected event, and to make it his firſt object to afford us the moſt effectual ſupport and protection in his power.

That the Commander in Chief had informed them, one battalion of Europeans, three battalions of Sepoys, and 50 artillery, might be ſpared from the Madras eſtabliſhment; and that we could likewiſe contribute 300 Europeans, two battalions of Sepoys, and 100 artillery, for that ſervice, without any inconvenience or diſtreſs to the garriſon; they had therefore written on the ſubject to the Select Committee at Madras, and they earneſtly recommended it to us to iſſue immediate orders for our quota to be aſſembled to join General Goddard at ſuch place of rendezvous as might be appointed, without delay.

General Goddard, immediately after this information reached him, acquainted us under the 29th of September, that in his opinion, Surat was the moſt eligible rendezvous for the army; and requeſted that veſſels might be inſtantly diſpatched to bring up the troops from Mahé, which were to compoſe part of the quota to be furniſhed from Madras; and that our quota might be in readineſs to join him whenever it might be judged expedient from circumſtances to put them in motion.

In the ſame letter he acquainted us he had not received any advices from the Maratta agent he had diſpatched to Poonah; but would as ſoon as poſſible adviſe us of the reſult of his journey.

We will not enlarge upon the inconſiſtency of detaching any part of our garriſon to join General Goddard's army at Surat, for the avowed purpoſe of protecting this iſland from invaſion, but proceed to acquaint you, that in his next letter, dated the day after the one laſt noticed, and received at the ſame time, he related a material piece of intelligence he had juſt received from Poonah, which he ſaid he had reaſon to believe might be relied on; the particulars of which were, that the Miniſter and Scindia, in conjunction with Hyder Ally, Nizam Ally, and Moodajee Bouncello, meant to make a general attack upon the Engliſh, at their ſeveral ſettlements, and had entered into formal agreements for that purpoſe.

General Goddard further obſerved, that however the probability of their executing literally a plan of ſuch extent might be ſuſpected, he could then ſcarce entertain a doubt of the hoſtile views of the Miniſter; and ſtrongly repreſented the neceſſity of having the army put into a condition for inſtant and active ſervice, by collecting ſuch a force as might be ſufficient to attack or to reſiſt the attacks of the enemy. For theſe reaſons, he again urged the expediency of bringing up the troops from Mahé; and propoſed, that the detachment from this Preſidency ſhould be ordered to join the army immediately.

In conſequence of this requiſition, and intelligence of the hoſtile intentions of the Miniſter, we reſolved to diſpatch with the utmoſt expedition a ſufficient number of veſſels to bring up the forces and ſtores from Mahé; the fortifications of which were nearly demoliſhed, except ſome few works for the mere protection of the garriſon; but at that time (being the 6th of October) we did not judge it prudent to detach any part of our garriſon, until the ſeaſon might be ſo far advanced, as to put it out of the power of our enemy's fleets to come upon us by ſurprize, which would be the caſe by the time the troops might arrive from Mahé, and in the interval our preparations would be in forwardneſs.

Our veſſels ſailed from Mahé the 17th of October, and on the 22d, we received a letter from the Governor General and Council, dated the 14th of September, in which they acquainted us, that as it was poſſible the Poonah Government might have found means to protract the negociation, and as in that caſe they would have had full time for deliberation, if they were at all inclined to eſtabliſh an amicable connection, they had therefore ſent injunctions to General Goddard, to repeat their offers to the Durbar, and to demand their definitive anſwer within the ſpace of twenty-four hours, declaring their refuſal or delay beyond that time to be equivalent to a declaration of war, and that he would act accordingly.

If General Goddard ſhould be reduced to this extremity, they recommended to us to grant him every aid in our power, and to endeavour by every means that might be neceſſary, to render his ſucceſs ſpeedy and effectual.

Theſe orders reaching General Goddard before they arrived with us, we on the 29th received a letter from him, acquainting us, that in conſequence thereof he had declared to the Maratta Vackeel in his camp, the ſuſpicions he could not but entertain of the hoſtile intentions of his maſter, from the delay that had unneceſſarily aroſe, in ſending an anſwer to the propoſals ſo long before tranſmitted to him, to which an anſwer had been faithfully promiſed in twenty days; that twice that period was then elapſed, and the Vackeel had repeatedly amuſed him with accounts of the agent before mentioned to have been ſent to Poonah, having received his diſmiſſion—it appeared from his own acknowledgments, he had not then ſet out, and would not in all probability leave Poonah till ſome time after: he had however declared to the Vackeel, that notwithſtanding theſe circumſtances of ſuſpicion, the Engliſh were ſtill ready to ſhew their ſincere inclination for peace, and that therefore he would wait fifteen days more; in which time an anſwer might be received from Poonah, to a letter the Vackeel would that inſtant diſpatch; at the expiration of which period, if the agent did not arrive, or a ſatisfactory anſwer to the propoſals tranſmitted by him, he ſhould conſider the delay as a declaration of war, and act accordingly. This paſſed the 18th of October, and the limited term was to expire the 3d of November.

We beheld with concern matters verging ſo cloſe to a rupture, when we were ſo little in a condition to meet the war: our treaſury was very low; we had no adequate reſources; nor had the Governor General and Council given us any aſſurances of aſſiſtance of money from Bengal; General Goddard had ſhortly before drawn four lacks from the Surat treaſury, which was the utmoſt we could ſpare; and we had juſt received advice by private letters, of the loſs of the Stafford in Bengal river, with a conſiderable ſum for the ſervice of his army; we had no reaſonable expectation of the arrival of the fleet in India before the month of January, an event which would diffuſe ſtrength to all your ſettlements, and give confidence to our meaſures; nor could we expect till then to receive the quota of troops from Madras, that Preſidency having, as we learnt from private advices, ſent an army into the field under Colonel Harper; the object of which, having no information from them, we do not underſtand, but have heard it was with an intention to take poſſeſſion of Guntoor, ceded by Bazalet Jung, in which he had been oppoſed by an officer of Hyder Ally's, ſtationed at Cuddapa, lately ſubdued by him; and that they were on very doubtful terms with that Nabob. Colonel Braithwaite likewiſe did not ſeem to intend to join the army with the forces from Mahé, until he received orders from Madras; and we further knew from undoubted authority, though not directly from the Governor General and Council, that a ſtrong detachment, conſiſting of 49 artillery, 2,000 Sepoys, and 750 horſe, was to march from the Bengal provinces under the command of Captain Popham, the ſafety of which might be put to extreme hazard by an immediate rupture with the Marattas: all which conſiderations, and the time it muſt neceſſarily take up before the different bodies of troops that were to compoſe the army could be collected and put in a condition to act offenſively, made us clearly of opinion, that it was right policy to endeavour to gain time, and to protract the criſis which a literal execution of the orders from Bengal muſt immediately produce; we therefore on the ſame day, the 29th October, diſpatched a letter to General Goddard, ſtating the above reaſons, and ſtrongly recommending to him, if the Miniſter did not accede to the offered terms, not to make any immediate declaration, but according to their own policy, to procraſtinate and protract, till we were in a better condition for an active war, if a rupture ſhould at laſt be found inevitable.

Before our letter could reach Surat, General Goddard himſelf arrived here in a gallivat on the 1ſt of November, and perſonally acquainted us, that before any anſwer could arrive from Poonah to the declaration he had made to the Maratta Vackeel, in conſequence of the laſt order from the Governor General and Council, the agent formerly diſpatched thither with his terms, as mentioned in the 19th paragraph, had returned with letters from the Peiſhwa and the Miniſter, the purport of which was ſimply to acknowledge the receipt of his propoſals, and to refer him to the agent for an anſwer, as being fully inſtructed and informed with their determination, which he would communicate.

That in a conference with the agent on the ſubject he had in anſwer to the propoſals made to the Durbar, plainly declared, that the Miniſter would not make peace with the Engliſh, unleſs Salſette was relinquiſhed, and the perſon of Ragonaut Row delivered up: that upon theſe conditions, and theſe only, he was ready to agree to the propoſals that had been ſent to him; and declared in the moſt pointed terms, that unleſs they were agreed to, there was no further occaſion for negociation.

General Goddard gave the Vackeel his diſmiſſion the next day, and immediately embarked for Bombay, to conſult with us upon the meaſures to be purſued. He gave us his ſentiments very fully on the ſubject, ſtrongly urging vigorous and deciſive meaſures; and the Preſident alſo propoſed to us, a plan of conduct to be obſerved in our preſent circumſtances, on which we ſeverally gave our opinions; but as a detail of particulars would lead us to a length much beyond the limits of an over-land addreſs, we ſhall, as moſt material, adviſe you only of the reſult of our deliberations, and of the meaſures finally determined.

From the above ſtate of the caſe, and the military preparations we learnt from all quarters were making at Poonah, we were of opinion, that a war with the Marattas was inevitable, and that it would become our duty to afford our utmoſt aſſiſtance to carry it on with vigour, when no longer to be avoided; of which we were neither competent judges, nor able in any manner to controul the event; the negociation, as well as all powers relative to peace and war, being taken off our hands: but without entering into any queſtion of neceſſity or good policy, we judged it neceſſary to mark it clearly on our proceedings; and we requeſt it may be fully underſtood, that the war now impending is not a meaſure of the Select Committee of Bombay; and that whether it is approved or condemned, we do not conſider ourſelves as reſponſible either for the meaſure itſelf, or the ſucceſs which may attend it. Our reaſons for this poſition are founded on the principle, that as the negociation was carried on under the ſeparate and diſtinct inſtructions of the Governor General and Council, who have expreſsly acquainted us, that the principal reſponſibility will reſt with them; and as General Goddard is in conſequence made reſponſible to them for his conduct in the operations of the war, we ſhould be wanting in juſtice to ourſelves, if we did not diſclaim all reſponſibility both as to the meaſure of the war itſelf, which is the iſſue of that negociation, as well as the ſucceſs of it when commenced; the officer entruſted with the execution being reſponſible to another Power. We are alſo of opinion, that after thus diſclaiming all reſponſibility, whatever we might have to offer to General Goddard in the courſe of ſervice, could only amount to advice or recommendation; neither were we warranted by the Governor General and Council to give him direct orders for his conduct; ſince according to the reſpective powers now held by this Committee and General Goddard, any orders we might give are no further binding than according to his own conſtruction of them; and that it would therefore be ineffectual, and needleſsly hazarding our own conſequence to aſſume any ſuch power.

The grounds upon which we ſhall act being thus aſcertained, and which we clearly explained to General Goddard, we beg leave to aſſure you, that according to our duty to the Company, and from motives of juſtice and honour, with reſpect to the Bengal Government, we ſhall contribute our aſſiſtance moſt zealouſly and cordially to bring the war to a ſpeedy and advantageous concluſion, both with the forces of this Preſidency and the beſt advices and information in our power to give to General Goddard.

In order to make his army as reſpectable as poſſible, we immediately, upon the General's acquainting us of the negociation being broken off, ſent a poſitive requiſition to Colonel Braithwaite to embark the forces at Mahé, upon the veſſel ſent down to receive them, and to join the army at Surat without delay; making him reſponſible for the conſequences of a non-compliance: and we determine forthwith to complete the artillery detachment to 100 men, and further to reinforce the army with a body of 200 European infantry and two battalions of Sepoys, one of which conſiſted of drafted grenadiers, which force we put under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Hartley, and was the utmoſt our eſtabliſhment could afford at this time; they were ſent up to Surat as we could procure conveyances, the laſt embarkation accompanying General Goddard, who on the 3d inſtant proceeded on the Revenge to join the army, when we delivered him a letter of advice for his conduct, the heads of which were as follow:

Appendix. No. 257. A.

We repeated our reaſons before-mentioned, for thinking it more adviſable to endeavour to gain time, and to protract any farther declaration or any acts of hoſtility, provided the motions of the enemy would in prudence permit; and we again ſtrongly recommended to him, to obſerve temporizing meaſures for the preſent; but we likewiſe obſerved, that if after conſideration of our reaſons he ſhould judge it eligible or neceſſary to enter upon immediate action, the determination muſt reſt with him, as we by no means intended to lay any reſtraint upon him, but only to offer him the advice in our opinion moſt ſuitable to preſent circumſtances.

Whenever the objections now exiſting might be removed, and circumſtances might become ſufficiently favourable for commencing operations, our ſentiments then entirely coincided with General Goddard's upon the plan of action to be purſued; this will be to ſecure a country and revenue capable of affording an extenſive field of ſupply for the exigencies of the war, and we hope for the future emolument of the Company; and the Preſident's plan of the 30th of March, ſtriking us both in this light, and General Goddard aſſuring us his force was fully equal to the undertaking, we have recommended to him, as his firſt object to carry it into execution, ſo far as relates to the reduction of the Maratta poſſeſſions adjoining to Surat and Broach, and the ſettlement of the Guzerat province, in concert with Futty Sing.

We however deſired him to loſe no time in commencing a negociation with Futty Sing, and to endeavour to convince him of the advantage which will enſue to him from uniting with us in the ſettlement of the province upon the propoſed plan; recommending ſtrongly to the General to uſe his utmoſt addreſs to bring this point to bear, by an amicable compromiſe rather than by an exertion of force.

For this purpoſe, we deſired him to explain clearly to Futty Sing, that no injury was meant to him, but only to take into the Company's hands the Poonah ſhare of the revenues held in participation with him, and thereby to diſtreſs our enemies with whom we are at war; but that it is our wiſh to be on the moſt friendly terms with him; and that General Goddard was fully empowered to treat with him for an amicable and equitable ſettlement, upon terms of mutual advantage and ſecurity to him from all future dependance on the Poonah Government, or ground for diſpute with the Company.

The grounds of the engagement to be formed with Futty Sing will be our ſupporting and defending him in poſſeſſion of his ſhare of the Guzerat province independant of the Poonah Government, and his engaging to ſupport the Company in the ſhare now held by that Government. To make this ſettlement as convenient as poſſible, and to avoid the continual differences which muſt ariſe from both parties having an intereſt in the ſame places, it will be propoſed to Futty Sing to make an abſolute and ſpecific partition of territory, according to the proportion of the revenues now reſpectively held by him and the Marattas, and each party to have the diſtinct and ſole government and poſſeſſion of the ſhare which may be allotted to them in the new ſettlement.

The propoſed mode of partition is to put Futty Sing in poſſeſſion of, and guarantee to him, the Maratta poſſeſſions to the northward of the river Mahie, and for him to make over to the Company the Guicawar diviſion of the countries ſouth of the Tappy, their ſhare in the revenues of Surat, and ſuch other lands as may nearly make up an equivalent to the countries to be guaranteed as above to Futty Sing. When a ſettlement is made on theſe terms, and the Maratta garriſons expelled, the Honourable Company will receive poſſeſſion of the diſtricts anciently annexed to Surat, and particularized in an account entered in the Select Committee's diary, under the 6th May 1772.

Appendix. No. 257. A.

It is alſo to be ſtipulated with Futty Sing, that we will ſupport him in withholding the tribute of 27 lacks per annum, which he now pays to the Poonah Circar for his Jaghires in Guzerat, until a final treaty is concluded between the Company and that Government, and that his intereſts will be carefully attended to therein, if he cordially unites in the propoſed ſettlement.

Theſe are the general outlines of the intended ſettlement; beſides which, we recommended as leſſer points to General Goddard to attend to the intereſt of the Nabob of Cambay and Govind Row, ſo far as he could, conſiſtently with the inſtructions from the Governor General and Council, dated the 14th of June, and alſo to ſtipulate with Futty Sing for the ceſſion of ſome few villages he ſtill retains in the Broach Pergunnah, and of another diſtrict adjoining thereto.

Whenever it ſhall be determined no longer to obſerve temporizing meaſures, General Goddard will proceed in the reduction of the Maratta poſſeſſions adjoining to Surat, and the Pergunnahs between the Myhie and the Tappy, comprehending the country in Guzerat, ceded to the Company by the treaty with Ragoba, taking care not to moleſt the Guicawars cheties and collectors, in their ſeveral ſtations. The object of his future operations will be determined by the reſult of his negociation with Futty Sing, whom we moſt ardently wiſh he may be able to detach from his connection with the Poonah Government, and to fix him in an alliance with the Company, which will be attended with the grand advantages of giving ſecurity to your northern poſſeſſions, and depriving the enemy of the aſſiſtance of a powerful ally.

Another moſt powerful recommendation of the propoſed plan, is the neceſſity of continuing the army in the Guzerat province, until a junction is effected with Captain Popham's detachment, which we learn is to march by the way of Agra and Azmere to Amedavad; and we hope before hoſtilities are commenced, will have made conſiderable progreſs, ſo as to be rendered ſubſervient to the execution of the plan by the reduction of the countries to the northward of the Myhie, which are to be guaranteed to Futty Sing, while the poſition of the army under General Goddard will facilitate their approach, and take up the chief part of the enemy's attention: we have yet no accounts of the ſituation or motions of that detachment.

The line of conduct to be purſued reſpecting Ragoba was likewiſe ſeriouſly conſidered, when we concurred with a recommendation from General Goddard, not to enter into any poſitive engagement with him at preſent, or appear as the avowed ſupporters of his pretenſions, but to look forward to his reſtoration at ſome future period when circumſtances may be more favourable. General Goddard will however hold out to him the hopes of firmly eſtabliſhing him in the Government of the Maratta State, as our grand and ultimate object, and we hope will be able to reconcile him to the ſyſtem we have adopted, by repreſenting to him in its true light how indiſpenſable it is for us to ſecure ſome firm and ſolid eſtabliſhment of territorial poſſeſſion and revenue, before we ſhall be in a condition to proſecute any other plan more immediately tending to his advancement.

General Goddard acquainted us that he had found Madjee Scindia ſo averſe to any accommodation, and ſo much inclined to hoſtile meaſures, that he did not think proper to commit the honour of the Company, by making any overtures to him, according to the inſtructions from the Governor General and Council.

You have now before you the ſtate of matters when General Goddard left Bombay; and we have the ſatisfaction to acquaint you that we received his warmeſt acknowledgments for the ready ſupport and aſſiſtance afforded him by this Government, and the harmony and good underſtanding mutually obſerved in our deliberations, from which he drew the happieſt omens of ſucceſs, nor ſhould we omit to acquaint you that he at the ſame time gave us notice of his having received advice of ten lacks of rupees being remitted from Bengal for his army, half in ſpecie and half in bills, and a packet containing bills has been lately forwarded to him, but we know not to what amount.

Your affairs at Tellicherry are in a diſagreeable ſituation, and particularly embarraſſing to us at this juncture. The Prince of Cherrika, of whoſe unfavourable diſpoſition to the Honourable Company repeated mention has been made in our late advices, has at length in conjunction with the young King of Cartenaddue, openly commenced hoſtilities, and entered Tellicherry diſtricts with a conſiderable force. The enemy had poſſeſſed themſelves of ſome adjoining hills, in conſequence of which, the Reſident and factors thought it neceſſary, on the 1ſt ultimo, to deliver over the keys of the fort to the commanding officer, and to leave to his direction the meaſures for repulſing the enemy, who, though they appeared numerous, your ſervants acquainted us they were not under any apprehenſions for the ſafety of the fort or your property.

Several ſkirmiſhes and attacks of poſts happened in the month of November, and the enemy gained ſome ground, when our officers finding Tellicherry garriſoned, not equal to the taſk of diſlodging the enemy, made application to Colonel Braithwaite, who accordingly, after completing the deſtruction of Mahé, brought in his whole force and took upon him the command of the fort the 1ſt inſtant.

It is not material at this time to enter fully into the cauſes which may have induced theſe Malabars to act in this hoſtile manner, but Colonel Braithwaite is ſtrongly of opinion their conduct is principally influenced by Hyder Ally, and he even expects they will be joined by a body of the Nabob's troops which had taken poſſeſſion of the ruins of Mahé, it is ſaid with an intention to fortify it again. A more confidential communication on the part of the gentlemen at Madras would enable us to form a better judgment of the foundation of Colonel Braithwaite's opinion; but we, however, have the ſtrongeſt hopes the reſpectable force now in Tellicherry, will be able effectually to defeat and diſlodge the enemy, and Colonel Braithwaite has aſſured us his moſt active efforts will be exerted for that purpoſe. The Preſident has likewiſe written to Hyder Ally, and we hope by his anſwer to be able to judge with ſome certainty of his intention. This event has delayed the junction of the forces from Mahé with General Goddard's army, but the veſſels have brought up to Bombay the ordnance and ſtores taken there. We have no advice from the gentlemen at Madras reſpecting the remainder of the quota they were deſired by the Governor General and Council to furniſh for the army under General Goddard; and we only learn from Colonel Braithwaite, that they had directed the Europeans of his detachment, conſiſting of one company of artillery, and one of infantry, in the whole not 100 men, to be ſent up to the army with one battalion of Sepoys.

Monſieur Picot, late Chief of Mahé, having requeſted our permiſſion to take paſſage to Europe in a Portugueze ſhip bound from Goa to Liſbon, we conſented thereto, as there was no probability of a ſhip being diſpatched from this place for ſome time, and the charge of ſupporting him and his ſuite would thereby be put an end to; we allowed him 12,000 rupees for the whole expence to be incurred on that account, and took his parole to return to France according to his capitulation. We were afterwards acquainted by Mr. Briſtow with the directions he was commiſſioned by the Deputy Chairman to ſend to the different Preſidencies reſpecting the return of French priſoners, which we ſhall duly obſerve.

The only letter we have received from General Goddard ſince his arrival at Surat, is dated the 15th inſtant, in which he acquainted us, that having made every neceſſary arrangement, he expected ſoon to inform us of the troops being in motion; that he had opened the negociation with Futty Sing, and communicated his propoſals, to which he expected an anſwer in a few days, though as the ſucceſs thereof would rather be advanced than retarded by the movement of the forces, he ſhould not remain inactive on account of any delay in Futty Sing, but enter upon military operations whenever circumſtances might render it convenient, obſerving the moſt ſcrupulous attention to the preſervation of the country belonging to the Guicawars.

The General being very preſſing for a further ſupply of money till his remittances arrive from Bengal, which the Governor General and Council acquaint us under the 14th of October, they ſhould find means to furniſh without allowing him to draw upon them, we agreed to advance him two lacks more out of a loan of five to ſix lacks we had been under a neceſſity of empowering the Chief of Surat to raiſe there for our own immediate expences; and having applied on this occaſion to the Nabob, the ſum offered by him was ſo trifling, that we did not think it proper to accept it.

By letters from Tellicherry of the 20th inſtant, we do not find Colonel Braithwaite had taken any ſteps for diſlodging the enemy, but had been engaged in a long correſpondence with your ſervants. Major Cotgrave had juſt arrived from Madras to relieve him in the command.

APPENDIX, No. 258. A.

Extract of a Letter from the Governor General and Council in Bengal, to the Court of Directors in their Public Department; dated the 14th January 1779.

THE drafts made upon us by General Goddard ſince his arrival at Surat, have amounted to ſicca rupees 32,49,090. 7. 1.; beſides which, we have ſupplied him by bills 5 lacks, in ſpecie by the Britannia 8 lacks, and by the Besborough 2 lacks.

The great diſadvantage ſuffered by the Company in the low rate of exchange obtained by General Goddard for his bills, ſome of which were drawn at 93, and none higher than 95, Surat rupees for 100 Calcutta ſiccas, induced us to put a ſtop to his power of drawing; and to adopt the remittance of bullion, as a preſent mode of ſupply, which may enable us to bring back the exchange ſomewhat nearer to its original ſtandard.

The united demands upon us from Bombay, General Goddard, and the different offices here, for the neceſſary charges of our own eſtabliſhments, added to the total loſs of 5 lacks in the Stafford, have ſo far dried up our immediate reſources, that we have been obliged to refuſe any further compliance with the application of the Preſidency of Fort Saint George for caſh, and to excuſe ourſelves from ſending the balance, being 5 lacks, which remained to complete the ſupply of 15 lacks promiſed to them in March laſt.

APPENDIX, No. 259. B.

Extract of a Letter from the Governor General and Council of Bengal, in their Secret Department, to the Court of Directors; dated the 3d March 1780.

Par. 16. WE find by letters received from General Goddard, ſince his return to the command of the army at Surat, that the plan which he has adopted with the concurrence and aſſiſtance of the Preſident and Select Committee at Bombay, is to open a negociation, and conclude a treaty of alliance and ſupport with Futty Sing Guicawar, to engage him in which he is to be rendered independent of the Poonah Government, and the Guzerat country is to be divided with him, the Company retaining that ſhare of the revenue now paid to the Marattas, and releaſing Futty Sing's proportion from all the claims formerly made upon it; there being no object either to invite or juſtify an immediate attempt on the capital itſelf, the ſucceſs of which, though more ſplendid, would be acquired with greater hazard, and yield no ſubſtantial advantage, nor ſo near a proſpect of terminating the war, as the plan which has been adopted. Appendix. No. 258. A. No. 259. B.

17. In conformity to this plan, offers were tranſmitted by General Goddard to Futty Sing; but whether from doubt of their ſincerity, or dread of the reſentment of the Maratta Chiefs, he endeavoured to protract or avoid any determination upon them, by evading to acknowledge the receipt of them in letters which he afterwards wrote to General Goddard; as the ſubject of thoſe letters was confined barely to profeſſions of friendſhip and attachment which he bore towards the Engliſh.

18. Thus ſituated, General Goddard thought it adviſable to force him to an immediate declaration of his intentions, by marching the Engliſh army directly towards Broderà his capital. The troops have accordingly croſſed the Tappy, and were under march on the 1ſt January to the northward.

19. In the preſent plan of operations, Ragoba is excluded from any poſitive ſhare in the ſucceſs of the war: he has been informed, that the revenue which will be collected from Guzerat is a neceſſary fund for the ſupport of the army which may hereafter be employed to further his views in the Maratta Government, when a party ſhall have been made ſufficiently ſtrong to enable him to purſue them with advantage. In the mean while, being drawn into the preſent war as principals, we have reſolved to act as ſuch, and ſupport it ourſelves; allowing Ragoba no direct participation in the conqueſts which may reſult from it. On this principle we have forbid General Goddard to enter into any engagement with him whatſoever, or to ſuffer him to become chargeable on the Company, but to confine his connection with him to perſonal protection only. This will leave us at liberty to purſue ſuch line of conduct with regard to him as may hereafter be thought expedient. General Goddard himſelf, before he could have received our final orders, had cautiouſly avoided any participation of intereſts with him, and reſerved an opening to adopt any other meaſures that might be reſolved on; but we are ſorry to ſay, that ſuch an univerſal indiſpoſition ſeems to prevail towards Ragoba, either from the character which he bears, or the ſuppoſed conſequence of his pretenſions, that we muſt fear an open declaration in his favour would only multiply our enemies, and draw upon us the oppoſition of perſons naturally averſe to his intereſts, who might not otherwiſe interfere in our diſputes with the Marattas; a nearer alliance with him would therefore, we apprehend, be detrimental to our views and burthenſome to the Company.

20. General Goddard has been reinforced by a detachment from Bombay, conſiſting of 100 Europeans artillery,

1 Battalion Sepoys,
1 Ditto drafted grenadier Sepoys.

21. The troops expected from Mahé had been prevented from joining him by diſturbances within the limits of the Company's territory at Tellicherry, which required their immediate preſence and aſſiſtance, and obliged Colonel Braithwaite to repair to and take the command of that garriſon, in order to prevent his being attacked by the Nairs, ſubject to the Prince of Cherickee, with whom the Company's troops ſtationed at Tellicherry, had previouſly had ſome ſkirmiſhes, in ſupport, as Colonel Braithwaite writes, of the protection given by that factory to the King of Cartinada, who is at variance with the other Chief, and has an army drawn out to oppoſe him.

22. The Preſident and Select Committee, on hearing that the force intended for the ſuccour of General Goddard was thus diverted from its deſtination, reſolved to grant him a military aid immediately, from their own eſtabliſhment, and ordered 1 battalion of Europeans, 1 company of artillery, and 1 battalion of Sepoys, to be embarked without delay for Surat, and 1 battalion of Sepoys more to be in readineſs at Anjengo, if their ſervices ſhall hereafter be required.

23. The Preſident and Select Committee at Fort Saint George likewiſe inform us, that they have ordered Colonel Braithwaite to ſend the Europeans under his command to join General Goddard, unleſs Hyder Ally ſhall have taken part in the diſputes of his tributary dependants, and conſequently given orders for hoſtilities to be committed on the Company's factory at Tellicherry.

24. General Goddard, expecting to receive a reinforcement of the Madras troops, has mentioned his intention of keeping open the communication for a junction with his army, to be formed by the way of Surat.

25. He likewiſe mentions, that the collections of the countries adjoining to Surat and Broach, over which the power of his arms extended, had been delivered to the charge of the Company's civil ſervants there, and that the people appeared to be very well ſatisfied with their change of maſters.'

APPENDIX, No. 251. B.

Bengal Secret Perſian Correſpondence.

From Moodajee Bhoſila; received 19th January 1780.

THE letters and numberleſs meſſages which have paſſed between us in the courſe of one year, cannot be conſidered as ſimple letters of compliment and friendſhip; but every letter may be looked upon as a record, ſince they have contained remarks on the acts of Government, and every affair both the moſt inconſiderable and of the greateſt conſequence; the declining and adopting every deſign; and the pointing out with caution and foreſight conditions in every affair which required prudence and circumſpection; together with your ſtrict attention to truth, which has never admitted of the ſmalleſt deviation; and your impartial juſtice, before which, from the reſolute firmneſs of your mind, the weighty mountain and the light ſtraw are of equal balance; and repeated remarks of the affairs of Bengal, which muſt all have certainly been underſtood by you.

Of three of your letters, containing the whole of your deſigns and the ſituation of your quarter, one on your apprehenſions from the reception of a French Vackeel in the territories of Pundit Purdhaun, and your having no confidence in his actions and thoſe of the rulers of Poonah; on your deſire in conſequence of ſending an army with a chief in your confidence for the protection of Bombay, and that a perſon ſhould be diſpatched to ſupply the army with proviſions and other neceſſaries, who conducting them to Hoſhungabad, might diſmiſs them in ſafety from my territories: and the third written after the death of Mr. Elliott, on your having committed to Beneram Pundit every thing that had been entruſted to the deceaſed; his ſetting off with Ramkaunt with my anſwers; his arrival at Calcutta; and your being made acquainted with the contents of all my letters on theſe ſubjects, were received.

What I underſtand by your letters, although they ſeem to contain much, is in few words, that you conſider my deſigns as inconſiderable, and do not approve of my views. I have therefore laid aſide my intentions for ſome time, and dropped the proſecution of them; but I am nevertheleſs ready, at all times, to perform the duties of our ancient friendſhip and connection; and from the open and friendly intercourſe between me and Colonel Goddard, I am prompted to aſſiſt him with my advice and counſel. By the bleſſing of God, when it ſhall be neceſſary, I will adviſe in the beſt manner. But you have ſaid in moſt of your letters, that every one thinks his own opinion beſt. Thus Colonel Goddard, contrary to my advice, marched towards Surat; and the Chiefs of Bombay, without caution and circumſpection, and without your permiſſion, marched into the territories of Poonah to the ſupport of Ragonaut Row; but their projects did not ſucceed, and Ragonaut Row put himſelf under the protection of Sindeah; and the Chiefs of Bombay having for their own ſafety made a new engagement in the room of the treaty of Colonel Upton, returned to their own territories. The Engliſh of Bombay, in this quarrel and open hoſtilities, in which they were worſted, were guilty of many breaches of faith towards the Miniſters of Poonah, and did not regard the treaties which all Rulers of States pay the greateſt attention to, and without any conſideration of their honour and dignity, acted contrary to prudence and to your directions, as you informed me in a great number of letters, and as Colonel Goddard alſo wrote to me.

From my knowledge of the ſtate of affairs, and from the exerciſe of our friendſhip which has been kept up for upwards of a year, by a mutual communication of the ſituation of things, and of the moſt inconſiderable as well as important matters, I diſcover three things in your letters and thoſe of Colonel Goddard; one, that the Bombay Chief ſupported Ragonaut Row without any authority from you: the other, that you have dropped your great deſigns, but are reſolved to keep up our former friendſhip; and the third, what you mention in all your letters, that every one thinks his opinion the beſt. The firſt is fact, that whatever the Chief of Bombay has done has been contrary to your advice, who are alone able to adviſe: and the ſecond, that in every ſituation you will maintain our friendſhip, is alſo to be depended on: and the third, that every one thinks his own opinion the beſt, is a common proverb, but it is not however the notion of wiſe men, who never have any connections with powerful States, except thoſe of peace and friendſhip. This you muſt have written in your diſpleaſure, upon hearing of the Bombay Chief having acted ſo imprudently, but you cannot conceive it to hold good in every inſtance.

The 2d article, which is worthy to be followed, you ſhould maintain: but that friendſhip which is kept up and openly ſhewn by letters only, and which when wanted, does not exert itſelf; ſo far from being of any advantage, may bring the greateſt detriment. My maxim on the contrary is this, that with whomſoever I enter into alliance, although there ſhould be innumerable diſadvantages in it, I never turn myſelf aſide from it. My advantageous connection with Pundit Purdhaun, and the friendly connection of letters with you, which you commenced upwards of a year ſince, are equally firm.

The arrival of Colonel Goddard with his whole army, ſtores, artillery, &c. on the borders of my territories; his remaining there two months; the intercourſe of preſents between us; my ſending, when neceſſary, proviſions and every thing which he deſired; that Mr. Watherſtone, who came here with few attendants, departed with the money for his bills on Benares, with oxen, and every article which he deſired of me; that two gentlemen of your confidence who were with Mr. Elliott ſhall remain here two months; all this you cannot conſider as ſmall matters. For although I perceived the danger of expoſing myſelf to the reſentment of the people of Decan, who are maſters of large armies, powerful reſources, treaſures, forts, and ſtrong places, notwithſtanding what my apprehenſions from them might be, I, from the duty of friendſhip towards you, reſolved to take upon me the worſt of their reſentment, in conformity to the proverb which ſays; "You muſt not with your open eyes throw yourſelf into a whirlpool; but ſhould you find yourſelf in one, you muſt not give yourſelf up to your apprehenſions."

Reflect maturely upon what I write; for from what can ariſe my expoſing myſelf to deſtruction, by not obeying the ſummons, and not performing what might be expected pected from my ancient connection with Pundit Purdhaun and the Nabob Nizam-ul-Dowlah, except from my friendſhip for you, although there are no immediate advantages to be drawn from it?

At preſent that I have received a Karetah from you, in which like a honey bee which contains both ſweetneſs and a ſting, you drop your great deſigns, but reſolve to preſerve the duties of our friendſhip, and finiſh by ſaying, that every one thinks his own opinion the beſt; in conſequence of my apprehenſions, I laid aſide the ſting and adopted the ſweetneſs, and accordingly diſpatched Dewagur Pundit to Poonah, and ſent this meſſage by him to the Miniſters of Poonah: "I am a branch of the illuſtrious family of the Raje; you are the rulers of all matters belonging to it: if you chuſe to keep up friendſhip and connection with me, I will continue attached to you; but I have not need of the aſſiſtance of the Raje; for, from of old I have been cloſely connected with the Soubahs of Bengal, and with one, who has the ſupreme direction over all the countries, and who from his wiſdom and ſuperior prudence is faithful to his word and ſtrict to his engagements. That peace may be firmly eſtabliſhed between us by treaty, you muſt entertain no thoughts of war, ſince none of thoſe advantages which are to be acquired by peace can be found in diſſenſions and hoſtilities."

Dewagur Pundit after his arrival at Poonah had many conferences in free and unbiaſſed terms, either by fear or partiality with the Engliſh gentlemen; and for three months was employed in oppoſing both openly and in private, the demands of the Miniſters, in ſuch a well reflected manner, that if you had a perſon there to have ſeen and heard it, he would certainly have written it to you, and you could not have diſbelieved it. Nanna Purnaveeſe, who is the chief Miniſter, is poſſeſſed of ſuperior wiſdom and prudence, is well adviſed, of ſtrict truth, and in his attention to his treaties, like a leaf which trembles at the leaſt wind, he has dreaded the ſmalleſt innovation in them, from the time of Ballajee Biſhennaut, till the treaty of Colonel Upton, and from that time till the formation of the new treaty which was made with the Bombay Chiefs, by Pundit Purdhaun, through the means of Sindeah, after the breaking out of the war and the arrival of Ragonaut Row. He made Dewagur Pundit acquainted with all the former tranſactions and the preſent ſtate of affairs, and ſhewed him all the treaties which had been made, and deſired him to ſee on what ſide the breach of faith was, and which part was guilty of infractions: and yet, ſaid he, they declare that they ſtick to their engagements. Dewagur Pundit, after diſcovering the ſituation of affairs, wrote repeated letters to Colonel Goddard, adviſing him to be cautious and prudent in his proceedings, and to keep in view the conditions of the treaty, which he muſt know to be an hundred times better than war and hoſtilities, and wrote alſo in the ſame terms to you, and diſpatched thoſe letters together with Rhautahs from me from Naigpore to Calcutta. You will doubtleſs have underſtood all theſe particulars, which were dictated by the ſincereſt friendſhip, but I have been for this long time to the preſent inſtant in expectation of your anſwer to them.

Repeated letters are received from Colonel Goddard, by Pundit Purdhaun and Dewagur Pundit, at Poonah; the firſt to acquaint them, that as he had many ſecret things to communicate, they ſhould ſend a confidential perſon to him, to whom he might impart every circumſtance, and ſettle with the terms of the treaty. Nanna Purnaveeſe in compliance with this, diſpatched, with the advice of Dewagur Pundit, a perſon in his confidence to Surat:

He was not yet arrived there when a ſecond letter was received from the Colonel, that as it would be a long time before the arrival of the agent, he was therefore determined to come in perſon with all expedition by the Dauk to the neighbourhood of Poonah, and have a perſonal conference: that he had been appointed to the ſole management of the negociations with Pundit Purdhaun, and that the ſole deſire was to ſettle to mutual ſatisfaction the terms, that ſo all diſputes and differences might be ended, and the treaty faithfully obſerved by both parties: that they ſhould be aſſured that there was no other reaſon for his keeping with him Ragonaut Row, who had come of himſelf to Poonah, than to preſerve the treaty and friendſhip ſubſiſting with Pundit Purdhaun, and to prevent the diſputes from proceeding further. Nanna Purnaveeſe, in anſwer to this, wrote himſelf, and made Dewagur Pundit write, that nothing could be more adviſable; that his houſe was the Colonel's, and that he ſhould come without delay, as they were anxiouſly expecting him; that they had erected for his reception a tent and pavilion without the town. Appendix No. 251. B.

About this time letters were received from Colonel Goddard, that he did not aſſent to the treaty made by the Bombay Chief, but that both ſides muſt conform themſelves to the treaty executed by Colonel Upton: Karetahs likewiſe for me, and letters from Dewagur Pundit, were received at the ſame time from you, as alſo for Pundit Purdhaun and Nanna Purnaveeſe, that you had no inclination for war, but were reſolved to maintain the treaty of Colonel Upton: that you could not aſſent to the new engagements entered into by the Bombay Chief, or agree to any thing by which the honour and dignity of the Government might be impaired.

When Dewagur Pundit had, agreeable to that, repreſented every thing that was to be expected from his friendſhip, Nanna Purnaveeſe brought out the treaty of Colonel Upton, and ſaid to him, "See what a number of "conditions of this treaty even have not been complied "with; and in the inſtance of Ragonaut Row, they have "infringed every treaty, by giving him a place of re"fuge with them, which is forbidden by numberleſs "articles: in giving up Jeiſpore and Salſette, &c. Ma"hals, belonging to Gojeraut, what numbers of excuſes "have they not made. But without mentioning the "enmity and reſentment which they have conceived "againſt us, for ſending back their army in ſafety "to Bombay, they have again received Ragonaut Row, "and are buſily employed in preparing for war; tell "me now on which ſide the greateſt attention to "treaty is ſhewn?" Dewagur Pundit having made a copy of many of the articles of Colonel Upton's treaty, ſent it with letters directed for your quarter, to Naigpore, which were diſpatched by the way of Cuttack, with Karetahs from me, containing cautious and prudent reſolutions, dictated by foreſight and long reflections, and by my friendſhip and affections, by which the good adminiſtration of affairs, and the ſecurity of the people are eſtabliſhed, and in which no duty of my friendſhip was forgot; doubtleſs after their arrival all their contents were made known to you. This is the fourth month ſince my diſpatching thoſe letters, but as yet I have received no anſwer to them, that, in conformity to that, the negociations might be ſet on foot.

Upon the arrival of the confidential perſons from Pundit Purdhaun, at Surat, and their having a meeting with Colonel Goddard, he laid aſide his former intention of going to Poonah; and ſent back one of the agents of Pundit Purdhaun to Poonah, with this meſſage, that they muſt pay for the expences of his quarter one year's kiſt, for the Mahals of Gojeraut, which they gave the year after the formation of Colonel Upton's treaty, and of which at preſent, ſince the making the new treaty, there appears to be one year's kiſts due by the accounts; and that they muſt reſtore all Ragonaut Row's money or effects, which may be in their poſſeſſion, and allot him a place for his habitation, and diſcharge the pay due to his followers; together with many other articles which would be too prolix to be written. Nanna Purnaveeſe, upon hearing all theſe particulars, ſaid to Dewagur Pundit, "Do you hear what meſſage they have ſent?

Appendix, No. 251. B.

" you may recollect what they before uſed to write, and " how they have ſince acted."

As from the time of the death of Narain Row, for the ſpace of four years, the Nabob Nizam-ul-Dowlah, has been, from his heart, attached to Punait Purdhaun, and agrees with him in every reſolution both for war and peace; and as the Miniſters of Poonah conſult the Nabob in every matter, even of the ſmalleſt moment, and will ſupport him with all their power, they have therefore written to him every thing that has taken place with Colonel Goddard, and the conference of Dewagur Pundit; and the Nabob has wrote in anſwer, that Mr. Hollond was arrived from Madras, for the purpoſe of negociating with him; but that in the affair of Shinkakull Rajebundry, and the dependency of Arcot, which by the treaty belongs to him, what that gentleman ſays, is contrary to the treaty; that he had ſaid to Mr. Hollond, and wrote to Madras, whatever was proper to be ſaid in anſwer, and would wait the event of the negociation; and that he ſent letters to Calcutta, that they ought to conform to the conditions of the treaty with Pundit Purdhaun, and with him, and not infringe them in the leaſt, but that he did not expect to receive a ſatisfactory anſwer. That which ever way theſe matters may end, they ought to be ready for either peace or war; that this muſt be done by collecting troops, and preparing quantities of all kinds of ſtores: that as the Engliſh are ſituated on three ſides of them, they alſo ſhould oppoſe the Engliſh on the three ſides, and gain over Hyder Naig to their aſſiſtance: that in the tranſactions with the three quarters (whatever might be expected from the Engliſh, whether war or peace) they ought to proceed in this manner, to chuſe out one perſon from ſeveral (either Pundit Purdhaun, or himſelf, or the Bhoſilas) to whom they might commit the negociations for peace with the Engliſh, on the three ſides, and not remain obſtinate in their demands, as by ſo being, peace would be delayed. That ſuch was his advice, and the only one he could give; but that they were the maſters, to follow it or not.

Upon the arrival of theſe letters to the Poonah Miniſters, of which tenor there were alſo letters for me and Dewagur Pundit, Nanna Purnaveeſe ſaid to the Pundit, that he knew of no better advice; and that he had been thinking of the ſame himſelf, and was employed in negociating a ſtrict alliance with Hyder Naig, and in raiſing troops, and collecting military ſtores: that it was likewiſe neceſſary for him (Dewagur Pundit) to raiſe troops and defend the third ſide; for that as he was ſo cloſely connected with him, whenever their power, or that of the Nabob Nizam-ul-Dowlah, ſhould be in danger, his country and power would not be ſafe from the attacks of the Engliſh. Dewagur Pundit replied to him, that the branches of the illuſtrious family of the Raja, who were ſupported under the ſhadow of the Muſnud of the Raje of Pundit Purdhaun, had no other employment but to aſſiſt him with all their power. That in conformity to the reſolution before mentioned, he would collect troops, and take charge of the ſide he ſpoke of, and would employ himſelf in negociations with the Engliſh gentlemen agreeable to the treaty. Nanna Purnaveeſe anſwered, if negociations can be carried on through you, agreeable to the treaty, and be brought to a determination, it is well; but let it not be in ſuch a manner, that while the Engliſh are putting you off with excuſes and delays, they ſhould be raiſing troops, and of a ſudden break out in hoſtilities, whilſt I am off my guard and not ſuſpecting it. You muſt therefore employ yourſelf buſily at home in theſe matters, and ſettle in whatſoever manner the circumſtances ſhall require.

As your anſwers have been late in coming, and the conferences with Colonel Goddard are at a ſtand; Dewagur Pundit not thinking adviſable to carry theſe matters any further without your permiſſion, after he had procured his diſmiſſion, came by long journies to Naigpore, and repreſented to me all the particulars above written.

I have in the mean while received frequent letters from the Nabob Nizam Ally and Pundit Purdhaun to get ready my troops and march them out. Accordingly my ſon Jemmajee Booſla on the Duſs are encamped; and after having got together ſtores for the cavalry and other neceſſaries, was ſent towards Andery, with counſellors of known wiſdom and experience, that remaining ſome time at the ghaut of Andery, he may collect the troops of the Duſs Sirdars, from moſt of whom Vackeels have come offering their ſervices, till anſwers to my letters ſhall arrive from Calcutta and from Colonel Goddard.

As in this our intercourſe of friendſhip, you have written letters of equal length with thoſe of the news writers; and as our connection and alliance is well known to Pundit Peiſhwa and the Nabob, and all the Decan people; and it is a ſaying with them, that the Engliſh and Booſla are as one: from the arriving of Colonel Goddard at Hoſhungabad, and his remaining there two months from my advice; from the conferences of Dewagur Pundit at Poonah, and his ſending frequent letters with my opinion on the beſt terms to be ſettled upon by the Miniſters with the Engliſh, and adviſing them to peace: and as our friendſhip cannot be carried any further; and the connection between the family of the Raje and Pundit Purdhaun and the Nabob, which is able to laſt from generation to generation, cannot be dropped; I am therefore deſirous, that through my mediation peace may be eſtabliſhed with you, by Pundit Peiſhwa and the Nabob, at any rate, and by you with theſe two Chiefs, and that on the ſettling the negociation, a treaty may be made between you on ſuch ſolid grounds as to admit of no breach of promiſe, but may ſerve for ever the peace and ſecurity of your ſubjects. Whenever the negociations on the part of the two Chiefs ſhall be tranſacted through me, I have no doubt of ſucceeding in making peace between you. Having maturely reflected and reſolved in your mind my communications to you, which have been greater and more unreſerved than what is thought neceſſary in friendſhip, and which I made for your information, you will without doubt adopt whatever is moſt likely to promote friendſhip, and to preſerve the treaties exiſting, without my pointing it out to you; and for ſuch conduct a reward is to be expected from God.

I accordingly requeſt you would write to me explicitly, agreeable to my former letters, in which I incloſed you papers reſpecting the treaty of Colonel Upton, whether the negociations are drawing to a concluſion, and whether the conditions with the Nabob can be ſettled; that in conformity to that, peace may be made with Pundit Purdhaun and the Nabob; and that you will write to Colonel Goddard whatever you think adviſable in this matter, that he may apply himſelf with my friendly aſſiſtance to the eſtabliſhment of peace, and not go in the leaſt aſide from the tenor of the treaty, of which none but the wiſe are able to judge. You muſt reflect maturely on what I have written, which is the dictates of my heart; for what purpoſe I have written it: not for my own advantage, but ſimply from my friendſhip. I have no doubt but this will gain me your good will, and that you will not forget theſe proofs of my friendſhip, but remove my anxiety, by favouring me with an anſwer. In ſhort, as long as Ragonaut Row ſhall remain with the Engliſh, no concluſion or repoſe from theſe diſputes and miſunderſtanding can take place: but his ſtay will be an endleſs ſource of quarrels and breaches of treaty. On the contrary, the delivering him up to Pundit Purdhaun is extremely adviſable, and will be the means of preſerving the treaty, and of keeping the rights of all ſides entire.—But one word to the wiſe is ſufficient.

From Dewagur Pundit, dated the 21ſt Likaida, December 1779; received the 29th January 1780.

Before this I wrote you frequently from Poonah, in my anſwers to your letters, whatever was moſt adviſable

after

after my interviews and repeated conferences with Nanna Purnaveeſe, and my diſcovering and being witneſs to the faith and ſtrict attention to treaties in all the Miniſters, and the firmneſs and courage of the Generals, ſuch as Madajee Row Sindiah, Tocojee Holcar, and other Chiefs of note, and that the Nabob Nizam ul Dowlah was as one in all the intereſts and concerns of Pundit Purdhaun, and that all the Chiefs and Zemindars both of the hills and low countries, from the river Nurbudda to the banks of the Shoor, who inhabit the ſix Soubahs of Decan, and the Talookdars of the Carnatic, who are ſettled in that large tract of country, are attached from the bottom of their hearts to the illuſtrious houſe of the Raje and the family of Pundit Purdhaun, in ſuch a manner, that if hoſtile intentions ſhould be diſcovered from any quarter, or any inclination for war, or breach of faith and treaty appear in any one, we ſhould all join with Pundit Purdhaun, and, as if in defence of our own poſſeſſions, bring our quota to the war; not like the friendſhip of thoſe who only court the world. You wrote in anſwer, that you had not the ſmalleſt inclination to break the treaty, and that what was done by the Bombay Chief, aroſe from his imprudence and raſhneſs; that in whatever brought no detriment to the honour and dignity of your nation, you would preſerve every tittle of your treaties, and maintain your friendſhip; that you had given Colonel Goddard the ſole power of making peace. Theſe anſwers I received ſeverally, and alſo letters from Colonel Goddard, full of profeſſions of his inclinations for peace, and of his having given Ragonaut Row a place of refuge with him ſolely for this purpoſe, that he might keep the peace with Pundit Purdhaun inviolate, by preventing him from taking refuge any where elſe, and raiſe commotions there; that it was neceſſary a confidential agent ſhould be diſpatched to him, to whom the greateſt ſecrets might be imparted, and peace concluded with him. Agreeable to this, a perſon of truſt was diſpatched to him from Poonah, who was not yet arrived when a ſecond letter was received from the Colonel, that many delays would be occaſioned by the going and coming of the agent, and that there were many ſecrets of ſuch a nature as not to be properly communicated except in a perſonal conference; that he was therefore greatly deſirous of a meeting with the Miniſter, and that if they would ſignify their approbation he would come.

The Miniſters being greatly pleaſed with this offer wrote that they ſhould receive the moſt ſincere ſatisfaction from his arrival, and pitched a tent for him without the town, and remained in the tent anxiouſly expecting his arrival, and I myſelf wrote him letters full of the moſt friendly aſſurances, to inform him of the pleaſure which his arrival would give; indeed, his coming hither was moſt adviſable, as he could have added ſtrength to the peace and friendſhip, and removed all cauſes of miſunderſtandings, confirmed the treaty for ever, and relieved them from all apprehenſions for the ſafety of their country and poſſeſſions.

On the arrival of the agent from hence, Colonel Goddard diſpatched in a Dauk palowkeen one Neal Chund, an agent who had been ſent from hence with the agent to this quarter with Karetahs from him, who on his arrival at Poonah delivered theſe Karetahs of Colonel Goddard, containing every particular; and ſaid, in the preſence of Nanna Purnaveeſe, Madajee Row Sindeah, myſelf, and other perſons, whatever Colonel Goddard had verbally committed to him; the ſubſtance of which was, firſt, that they muſt make good whatever appears by his accounts to be deficient in the performance of Colonel Upton's treaty: ſecondly, that as at the time of making peace, Mahals to the yearly value of three lacks of rupees, dependent on Gougeraut for the Jaghier of the Kaikwars were made over to the Engliſh, it was neceſſary that they ſhould have been delivered over to us at that time, but as they were not ſurrendered till a year after, three lacks of rupees are due for one year's collections: thirdly, that as there are not three lacks of rupees collected from thoſe Mahals, but a deficiency of 96,000 rupees ariſes, they muſt make out the account, and ſend the difference; that reſpecting Ragonaut Row they muſt grant him a diſtrict to ſupport his expences, in the ſame manner as it was given him by the former treaty; and that the ſaid Row ſhould be permitted to reſide wherever he may think proper; together with many other particulars on the ſame ſubject, which would be too voluminous, were all repreſented to us by Neal Chund. After hearing the whole of the meſſage from that quarter, Nanna Purnaveeſe and Madajee Row Sindeah, turning to me, ſaid "You inſiſt that the words of the Engliſh gentlemen are to be depended on, and that they have no intention but that of maintaining their treaties. You have now heard what kind of meſſage they have ſent, and are alſo acquainted with what they before wrote. Colonel Goddard firſt determined to come here, and has now laid aſide that reſolution; and with reſpect to Ragonaut Row, whom he declared that he kept with him for good reaſons, and not from any enmity to us: and in the Mahals, which by the papers of the Sircar are ſettled at three lacks of rupees, they pretend that there have been deficiencies, and demand the balance from us, and require of us ſeveral lacks of rupees: ſuch conduct cannot be agreeable to God. With reſpect to a French merchant who came here, they wrote ſo many angry letters, and accuſed us of ſo many breaches of the treaty, that we diſmiſſed him contrary to the cuſtom of the Durbar. Ragonaut Row, from whom commotions and loſſes have ariſen, they have again given a refuge to under their protection: and after the concluſion of the war, we on the contrary made this agreement with the Bombay army that they ſhould return in peace to their own territories." It is a proverb, "that if you do juſtice, although you ſhould throw it into water, it will be favourably received by God." But ſince affairs are come to this paſs, this we have determined by the advice of Nizam-ul-Dowlah, upon preparing for war with the three quarters; and Hyder Naig is likewiſe attached to us.

I then ſaid to Nanna Purvaneeſe, that as yet anſwers to our negociations were not arrived from Calcutta; and that, as I had no doubt but that they would be ſuch as would tend to peace, what reaſon could he have for preparing for war? He anſwered me, that it was adviſable for every one to be prepared at home, and not, while the others are collecting every thing neceſſary for war, for him to be unſuſpecting and unprepared; but that ſhould anſwers tending to peace be received, he would readily agree with them. After learning all theſe particulars, I took leave of Nanna Purnaveeſe, and arrived by long journies at Naigpore, where I paid my reſpects to the Rajah my maſter, and informed him of all my conferences with the Poona Miniſters, and of their having determined, according to the advice of Nizam-ul-Dowlah, to carry on war with the four quarters, and of Hyder Naig's being attached to them; and alſo made him acquainted with the contents of all Colonel Goddard's letters, which you will learn from the Rajah's Kawtahs, where he has written them without the leaſt reſerve. My only wiſh is, that a peace and treaty may be made between you and Pundit Purdhaun and the Nabob Nizam-ul-Dowlah, through the mediation and under the guarantee of the Rajah my maſter, agreeable to the former treaty, before war ſhould break out with the four quarters; and that Ragonaut Row, who is the cauſe of all theſe miſunderſtandings, may be delivered up to Pundit Purdhaun. This would be a hundred, nay a thouſand times better than war and hoſtilities. Attend with mature reflection to theſe particulars.

Before this, numberleſs letters on this ſubject have been written to you, and at preſent nothing has been omitted in the Rajah's letters. You will make yourſelf thoroughly acquainted with them, and will be aſſured that they were dictated ſolely by friendſhip and good will towards you; and will ſend an anſwer without delay, and write to Colonel Goddard whatever you may think think advisable; since a word once spoken, and an arrow shot away from the bow, cannot be recalled. I am a sincere well-wisher to you, and for this reason alone have written all these particulars to you.

From the Nabob Nizam Ally Khan: received 19th January 1780.

Your gracious letter under date the 25th Shawaul, 6th November, to this purport, that the Governor and Council of Madras, had deputed Mr. John Hollond to Hydrabad, to explain to me those points which might tend to the strengthening our friendship; after having informed you of it, and that whatever that gentleman has mentioned further than what may tend to this end, is contrary to the intentions and permission of the Council, that you have therefore directed the Governor and Council of Madras to attend particularly to this matter; and that you have written to Mr. Hollond to put a stop to his negociations till he shall receive explicit letters from Madras; was delivered me by that gentleman; and from the contents of it I received great satisfaction.

The friendship and faith to their treaties in the English Company, have been from the beginning the admiration of all the rulers; and I, after the conclusion of the treaty in 1182, (1768) from my own experience found this maxim, of the whole world to be true. At the time of your coming to the Governor in that quarter, and the superintendance of the affairs of all the English settlements; and of your writing to me that you had learnt from all quarters, and by the actual situation of affairs the firmness of our friendship, you were made particularly acquainted with the negociations which with the approbation of the Governor and Council of Madras, had been entered upon between the Company and this quarter. I also gained information of the situation of all matters from Colonel Upton, when on the breaking out of Ragonaut Row's quarrel with the Sirkar, he came here in his way to Poonah, to settle the negociation between Row Pundit Purdhaun, Madho Row Narrain. But of late how so many evident infringements of the treaty should occur, is matter of the greatest astonishment to any one who reflects on the former alliance, and the established custom of the country.

Whatever I discovered on the subject of Ragonaut Row, I formerly wrote to you, and now enclose you a copy of it; and you wrote to me in answer, that all the negociations and transactions of the English Company were the same, and that no alterations or infringement should ever be made in the treaties entered into by the Governor and Council of Madras; but whatever has since happened contrary to this declaration, is not of consequence to be repeated, since Ragonaut Row is now, in the same situation in which he was formerly.

Mr. Hollond, upon his arrival here, requested of me, contrary to all right, to annul the small tribute for Rajemundery and the other Sirkars, for which formerly I received from that quarter lacks of rupees; the particulars of which I before informed the Company in an enclosed paper, and for which since I have not received altogether the tenth part of what I formerly did; and the Governor and Council of Madras, have by violence seized on the Sircars of Murtezzanagur, which by the treaty belonged to my brother Ameel ul Omrah, Sujah ul Mulk Bahadre Bissalet Jung. Reflect now what can be concluded from such conduct, except a breach of the treaty. I accordingly wrote to you on the 2d Rejjab and the 2d Ramzaum, all these particulars by two Hircarrahs with a copy of my former letter. As your answer was late in arriving, and in the mean while the violences of the Governor and Council of Madras increased, I was on the eve of revenging them as was proper, when your letter arrived: and on the perusal of the explicit contents of it, I put a stop to my preparations. If what you write is from your heart, and the Governor and Council of Madras will remain strict to the treaty and alliance, and give over all further demands to have the tribute to the Sircar annulled, and will relinquish possession of the Sircar of Murtizzanagur, it is well; if they will not, I have nothing of more consequence than the preserving and defending my country, and the spark of dispute and enmity will be raised to a flame: that I have overlooked and connived at the provocations which have been given me, and which I before informed you of, was owing to my desire to preserve the treaty, not to my inability to revenge myself. By the blessing of God I am prepared, and am in no want of assistance; for the Rulers of Poonah, whose dignity and exalted state of power is owing to my protection and assistance, are attached to me, and would support me to the utmost: and Modajee Bhosila is my ally, and is as one with the Rulers of Poonah; and Hyder Naig, who entertains enmity against the English Company, having lately entered into a treaty with the Poonah Ministers, agrees with us in all matters.

Do you, who are prudent and foreseeing, and able to determine on the right plan, reflect maturely upon these circumstances, and consider attentively in your mind, that it is from this new line of conduct of the English Company, that the foundations of enmity have been laid in the whole country of Hindostan; and should your views be hostile, which appearances seem to point out as immediately impending, let not the time be lost in fruitless pretences; but whatever is proper to be written, do you write to the Governor and Council of Madras, without delay.

Further particulars will be made known to you by the letters of Mr. Hollond, who, agreeable to your orders, remains silent until the arrival of explicit directions from Madras.

My views and sole desire, which you request of me to write to you, are, that no infringements be made in the treaties between me and the Company; and that our friendship and alliance may remain firm and stedfast.

Knowing my anxiety, write without delay, answers to my former and present letters.

From Nizam Ally Khan; received 24th February 1780.

I have received your letter to this purport, that in your former letters you had said, that your Government had never any intention of supporting Ragonaut Row, but that every event has since appeared contrary to it. That in fact, what you write in your former letters, was strictly true; but that since from a concurrence of circumstances in that quarter, which you could by no means foresee, so as to prevent them, the Governor and Council of Madras had joined with Ragonaut Row, and taken steps for his assistance, the event of which is well known: but that the present disputes of your Government have no connection with Ragonaut Row, but have arisen from their want of foresight, presumption, and pretensions to which they have not the least right, and which cannot be agreed to without disgrace and dishonour: that you have given them notice that you are ready to stick to the conditions of the treaty made by Colonel Upton; but they have not complied with this; that peace and war depends upon them, and not on you, and that one of the two must be already determined on: that you have been desirous of a peace, but if contrary to your inclination, war should be begun for your own defence and from necessity, it is agreeable to the customs of all nations, and to common prudence, that every one who can be of assistance to you, should be made a friend of; that in this view, Ragonaut Row also may become your ally, but that no such connection shall be formed, as may produce any detriment to the Sirkar, or the smallest deviation in the treaty which has been long established.—All these particulars I perfectly understand.

I know that Ragonaut Row has taken refuge with the English Company, and that they will not chuse to deliver him up. His father and grandfather were brought up, supported, and protected by my family; and all the country of Decan, as far as the banks of the Nerbudda, was under this Sircar: after the death of the late Nabob, the deceased Asoph ul Dowlah committed the ſame innovations that have now happened in the country, of the Marattas; by this, great injury was done to the Sirkar. At that time the Marattas, while Ballajee Row was ſtill alive, and when their limits extended in Decan and Hindoſtan, as far as the boundaries of Attuck, and they had great authority in it, waged war with this Sirkar, and during the life of the late Aſoph ul Dowlah, poſſeſſed themſelves of many countries; after that, while Madho Row, and Ragonaut Row tranſacted the affairs of the Pundit Purdhauny, in conſort, Madho Row attempted to confine Ragonaut Row, who flying, unattended, arrived at Kojeſtabuniand, at the Preſence, and gave to the Preſence Sunnuds of relinquiſhment of the country, and the city of Burhanpore, and of the fort of Aſhier, &c. Chiefs were ſent with an army, from the Preſence, with Ragonaut Row, who begun hoſtilities with Madho Row, defeated his army, and eſtabliſhed Ragonaut Row, who got Madho Row into his power. Of the engagements and Sunnuds for the relinquiſhment of the country, which he had made, he broke moſt of the articles; on which account war took place between him and the Preſence, and my victorious army conſumed Poonah with fire. A little after this, Madho Row, by treachery, confined Ragonaut Row; by which means, after the death of Madho Row, Narrain Row, his younger brother ſucceeded to him, whom Ragonaut Row by treachery put to death, and aſſumed the government; he having begun, in appearance, negociations of alliance with the Preſence, and having, under preſence of war with Hyder Naig, aſſembled a large army, and by frequently declaring to the Preſence, that he was marching againſt Hyder Naig, having gained entire confidence to his aſſurances, of his going to war with Hyder Naig, which ſet at eaſe, with reſpect to any hoſtile intentions in him, while the Chiefs and the army of the Preſence, who had returned to their habitations, were not aſſembled to oppoſe him; of a ſudden he began hoſtilities againſt the Sirkar; at that time I, with what ſmall number of troops attended on me, marched to the fort of Buder, and approached near Ragonaut Row; the war laſted for about a month, when he finding that my victorious army was invincible, ſurrendered himſelf up to me, and entered into a new engagement, and then turned towards Hyder Naig. The inſtant he had departed, he forgot every letter of his engagement, and marched againſt Hyder Ally, ravaging the country of the Sirkar in his way. The Miniſters of Poonah united themſelves with the Preſence, and on account of the treachery and want of faith in Ragonaut Row, an engagement was made with them, and they were aſſiſted by the Preſence; at that time Row Pundit Purdhaun was not born, his birth happened ſoon after, and a treaty of alliance took place with the Miniſters. I then drove Ragonaut Row from the country, and I have always before been ſteadfaſt to the treaty, and am reſolved to remain ſo for ever.

You write that no detriment ſhall come to the Sirkar from Ragonaut Row. At the time that the limits of the Marattas extended as far as the boundaries of Attuck, when there was no diſputes in their country, and their power was entire, at that time he could cauſe no injury, and he was always reduced, and kept in ſubjection to me; ſince God is the protector and ſuccourer of my Government at preſent, that he is driven out of this quarter, and can effect nothing in that quarter; what injury can ariſe from him to the Sirkar? You write that you are ready to abide by the treaty of Colonel Upton; the Marattas alſo declare that they are ſteady to Colonel Upton's treaty, and remained perfectly at eaſe that no breach would ariſe from the Engliſh; but that the Governor and Council of Bombay uniting with Ragohaut Row, broke the treaty and engagements, and approached within 12 coſs of Poonah, the event of which is well known; that the breaches and innovations in the treaty of Colonel Upton came from your ſide, and that ſuch being the caſe what dependance can they have on Colonel Upton's treaty, or in future upon any other new engagements; for theſe reaſons the Marattas are reſolved that by any means Ragonaut Row muſt be delivered up to them; that they may be at eaſe as to their Government; the Governor and Council of Bombay, in open breach of the treaty formerly made by Colonel Upton, taking Ragonaut Row with them, approached within 12 coſs of Poonah; they after that delivered him up, and made a new engagement, and have now received him again under their protection. Should they yield up theſe points, and ſhould the Company act again in the ſame manner as before, this would be contrary to all policy. How long ſhall I, neglecting the guarding the adminiſtration of my own country by night and day, watching this enemy. While I am thus employed in obſerving him, how can I attend to the management of my interior concerns. It is therefore neceſſary for me firſt to remove this cauſe of apprehenſion. I have had many proofs of the treachery and bad faith of Ragonaut Row. Since the Miniſters of Poonah have united themſelves with me, and have made a treaty with me; ſhould I now break that treaty, what dependance would the Engliſh Company have upon my obſerving the engagements which I have with them. You write that the friendſhip between the Engliſh Company and the Preſence daily increaſes, and that no detriment ſhall ariſe to the friendſhip between us, ſo as to prevent our intereſts being united. Reflecting on this, I have told Mr. John Holland, that as it would certainly be a diſhonour for the Engliſh to deliver up Ragonaut Row to the Marattas, I will procure for him a Jaghire in the Sirkar, on the footing, that he is with the Engliſh, which will remove our mutual objections. In the time of the late Nabob, our order was obeyed through all Decan and Hindoſtan, as far as the limits of Attuck, and their riches and warlike ſtores were very conſiderable. The late Nabob employed himſelf a long time in reducing Ragonaut Row, but from his great power, was unable to effect the expulſion of him. The Nabob died, and war was carried on a long time againſt him by the Sirkar to ſuch extremities, that Poonah was deſtroyed by fire. I can ſee nothing can be done except the reduction of him by the bleſſing of God; you are wiſe, and will ſee that it is adviſable that this cauſe of apprehenſion ſhould be removed.

From Moodajee Bhoſila; received 24th February 1780.

Before this I have ſent ſucceſſive Karetahs to you containing all particulars, by the way of Cuttack; and alſo by the route of Benares; but as yet I have not received an anſwer to any one of them; and Colonel Goddard likewiſe has delayed ſending replies to my letters. As our friendſhip requires that we ſhould be explicit in our communications on all points, I have therefore written what was proper to Beneram Pundit, who is at preſent in his own houſe at Benares for the recovery of his health, and directed him to repair immediately to Calcutta, and having made you acquainted with all the particulars written to him to procure an anſwer, and diſpatch it to this quarter; and to remain in future at your Preſence, that he may write me whatever you ſhall inform him of as adviſable and as being your deſire. As our correſpondence is of ſervice to keep up our friendſhip and alliance, it is neceſſary that you delay no longer to write an anſwer to my letters, which are all dictated by friendſhip, prudence, and foreſight: you are wiſe and prudent, and will pay proper attention to them.

CONSIDERING you as a friend of the Engliſh Company, both in virtue of the engagements which have been formed between you and them, and by the contiguity guity of your country to the borders of that of the Nabob Wallah Jah, their ancient friend and ally, I have long desired to write to you; but I have been hitherto prevented, partly from a consideration of the distance and uncertainty of the place and state in which you might be on the receipt of my letters, and principally by reason of the intercourse which subsisted between you and the President of Madras, which was in effect the same as if it existed with us, since we are the servants of the same master, and entrusted, though in a different degree, with portions of the same common interests. But some reports which have been lately and successively conveyed to me, have induced me to address you immediately on the behalf and in the name of this Government, for the purpose of removing any false appearance or conceptions which might disturb the good understanding which it is my desire, and which I believe to be equally yours, to perpetuate between us.

It has been variously suggested at one time, that you proposed to invade the Carnatic; at another, that you had actually commenced hostilities; and lastly, that you had entered into combinations with the Rulers of the Maratta State at Poonah, and other Powers, against the English Government, and against their ally the Nabob of the Carnatic. I have given no credit to these reports, because I confide in your wisdom, that you will never suffer any illusion to draw you from the line of your true interest. It is not your interest to make the English your enemy: it is their interest, and equally their inclination, to preserve your friendship; but suspicions and mutual jealousies often create enemies by the very cautions which they excite on both sides. And thus two States, whose dominions border upon each other, are often drawn into a war against the interests and wishes of both. Therefore, and to prevent such consequences, I write to you, that being fully and certainly informed of the sentiments and intentions of this Government towards you, you may form your own accordingly.

You are well informed, that by the regulations and commands of the King of England, the determination of peace and war with any of the English Governments in India, depends on the Superior Council of Bengal. Of that Council I am the Chief; and I now in that character in the first place declare to you, that nothing hostile to your person or Government is intended, nor shall be undertaken by any of the English Governments, as the aggressors; and in the second, to request that you will acquaint me with your intentions respecting the conduct which we are to expect from you, that we may act accordingly.

I had an opportunity when I was nearer to you than I am at present, of obtaining a knowledge of your character. I know that all your measures are dictated by a wise and well-formed policy, united with a regard to justice and public faith, and the courage of a soldier, who has ever shewn himself superior to the arts of deception; I shall therefore wait with impatience for your answer, in the assurance that it will afford me the complete satisfaction which I require.

To prevent the consequences of delays I have written this, and shall dispatch it to you by express Cossids. But if it is your wish to improve the connection between you and the Company by nearer ties, I will either send a person properly empowered and entrusted to you for that purpose, or receive one so qualified from you, whichever mode you shall most approve. In the mean time, &c. &c.

APPENDIX, No. 253. B.

Bombay Select Committee Consultations, 25th January 1780.

Tuesday 25th. RECEIVED the following letters from General Goddard.

Goddard General, letter from.

Gentlemen,

I am favoured with your letter of the 27th ultimo, enclosing extracts of Colonel Braithwaite's letters to you; by which I find he is determined not to join me with any part of the Mahé detachment. The event will hereafter prove upon what grounds he has founded his opinion of Hyder's intentions being hostilely bent against us: and it will be also left to decide how far the interests of the Company are most essentially served, by staying to watch the motions of a suspected enemy only or assisting in the operations of a war actually carrying on by the English nation against the whole of the Maratta empire.

My letter of the 30th ultimo would explain to you the appearance of affairs respecting Futty Sing in which no change or event from which to form more certain conjectures of his real designs, has since taken place. One of his officers, with about 3,000 followers, has stationed himself in the Pergunnah of Ahmood, and detached a small party of 300 men into that of Desbara, which has caused a temporary suspension in the taking possession of these two districts by the Chief of Broach. The man himself pretends that the motives of his stay are to receive some money from them, promised by the late Poonah collectors on account of assistance he gave them in quelling some recent disturbances. I have sent word to Futty Sing to withdraw his people from these Pergunnahs immediately; but a sufficient time has not yet elapsed to judge whether he means to comply, or not; at any rate they will be evacuated on the approach of the army.

I crossed the Tappey the 1st instant, as I informed you I would, and halted three days on the north side of it, to put every thing in proper order. I yesterday put the army in motion, and have this morning passed the Kein Nuddy; in two days more I expect to reach Soncleterrah on the banks of the Nerbedah.

I am obliged to you for the credit you have given me upon your Chief of Surat for two lacks of rupees, which the most absolute necessity will too soon compel me to make use of; because, but for the expedient of passing bills on Bengal, I should have found it impossible to subsist the army till this time. In order to enable me to avoid having recourse to this mode, which the urgency of the service only induced me to adopt, and which I have continued to follow with the utmost repugnance, I must place my present dependance upon the further aid of your Government, which I trust you will afford me in the most effectual manner you possibly can; and for this end, beg to repeat the request contained in my last letter, of permitting me to draw on your treasury in favour of individuals, the amount of which may remain deposited in it, and bonds granted by you in the usual form. This mode of negociation will furnish me with a most useful resource, without diminishing your treasury; and at the same time you will establish such rules and limitations respecting it, as you may judge requisite and proper.

I hope in a few days to be able to inform you more decisively of what may be expected from Futty Sing; and have the honour to be,

Gentlemen,
Your most obedient,
humble servant,
Thos Goddard.

Gujurram, on the Keim Naddy Camp, 6th January 1780.

Goddard General, letter from.

Gentlemen,

I have the pleasure to inform you of my having crossed the Nubeddar yesterday at the Ghatt of Bowa Pur. I found it necessary to halt a few days at Selecleturrut, to give time for conducting the four eighteen pounders and military stores from Broach, which joined me safe under escort of a battalion of Sepoys, I had sent over the river at Serecleturrut the day of my arrival at this place.

It is with pleasure I can communicate to you the prospect I have reason to believe there now is of adjusting every point to your wish, and for the interest of the Company, with Futty Sing. I have exerted every endeavour deavour to effect this alliance, becauſe of the important advantages it will immediately ſecure to the Engliſh in Guzerat, and of the future favourable conſequences they muſt derive from it in the grand conteſt they are now entering upon with the Maratta Government. The leiſure allowed by the inactivity of the Miniſter, which has, I conceive, been principally occaſioned by the diſputes betwixt him and Scindia, has proved very convenient to the ſettlement of the Guzerat province, which I hope may be finally concluded before any conſiderable body of troops can arrive from the Decan. For this reaſon, as the effect it muſt have had upon Futty Sing, in inclining him to take a more ſpeedy and deciſive part upon the occaſion, the early movement of the army towards Dubhoy and Brodua became a point moſt neceſſary and eſſential to the good of the ſervice. He has promiſed to ſettle every thing on my arrival at the former place, from whence I ſhall be able to addreſs you more fully, as the ſincerity of his preſent profeſſions will then be put to the teſt, and till that can be done no certain judgment is to be formed of the real deſigns of a man ſo famed for treachery and deceit as Futty Sing is reported to be.

As you will ſo ſoon hear from me again I ſhall conclude at preſent, and have the honour to ſubſcribe myſelf,

Gentlemen,
Your moſt obedient and
moſt humble ſervant,
Thomas Goddard.

Goddard, General, letter from.

Gentlemen,

In my letter of the 16th inſtant, I informed you I ſhould march towards Dubhoy the 18th: at which place I arrived yeſterday; and having ſummoned Ballagee Ragonath, the perſon who held it on the part of the Poonah Government, with a garriſon of above two thouſand men, to ſurrender the place, and received a refuſal, I immediately made the neceſſary preparations for beſieging it. The place of attack being fixed upon, a battery of three 18 pounders, within 200 yards of the wall, was completed by this morning, at day-break; when I found the enemy had evacuated the town which I have taken poſſeſſion of in the name of the Company, and congratulate you upon this acquiſition to your territorial poſſeſſions in Guzerat. The inhabitants, many of whom remained in the place, ſeem perfectly well diſpoſed to obey and live under the protection of the Engliſh Government; and as the fortifications, though inſufficient to reſiſt a regular European attack, might, with a ſmall force, be defended againſt a conſiderable body of country troops, the poſſeſſion of it muſt confer ſtability and ſecurity upon your territories on this ſide, and in the event of an accommodation with Futty Sing, from its vicinity to Brodera, prove a check and reſtraint upon his future conduct. I have wrote to Mr. Gambier, your Chief at Broach, to ſend proper perſons to ſettle and collect the revenues of the country, and ſhall afford him every further aſſiſtance neceſſary for this purpoſe.

I am happy at an opportunity of mentioning to you the ſatisfaction I received from the ſkill and aſſiduity of Major Spaeth, the chief engineer, in conſtructing and completing the battery with ſo much expedition. Lieutenant Charles Reynolds, who acted under him, and ſhewed himſelf exceedingly alert and active in his duty, received a wound in his thigh, from a matchlock, which however I am hopeful will not prove any way dangerous.

I have not heard from Futty Sing ſince my laſt of the 16th inſtant. I expected the return of his Vackeels, with every thing finally ſettled and agreed to, the day of my arrival here, or this day at fartheſt: as they may yet arrive in the courſe of it, or to-morrow morning, I ſhall defer ſaying more upon the ſubject of Futty Sing, till I can write you with an abſolute certainty.

I have the honour to be, Gentlemen,
Your moſt obedient
humble ſervant,
Thomas Goddard.

Appendix. No. 253. B.

Goddard, General, letter from.

Gentlemen,

I had the pleaſure of informing you yeſterday of the treaty concluded betwixt the Honourable Company and Futty Sing Guicawar, and now encloſe you a copy of the original treaty, the exact counterpart of which is in the poſſeſſion of Futty Sing, which I hope will meet with your approbation. By the laſt article, it is provided that two copies of this treaty ſhall be forwarded by your Government to the Honourable Governor General and Council, for their confirmation and ratification; which I take the liberty of requeſting you will be pleaſed to do by the earlieſt opportunity.

I have thought it requiſite to retain the original treaty at preſent with me, as in the courſe of the campaign occaſions may offer to render the immediate producing it uſeful and neceſſary to the good of the ſervice; and the authenticated copy I now ſend, will be ſufficient fully to anſwer the preſent purpoſe of your and the Bengal Government.

I have from time to time communicated to you the progreſs of my negociation, and the difficulties I met with in the courſe of it to bring it to a ſucceſsful iſſue, which, from a conviction of the real and ſolid advantages ariſing to the Company by a connection with Futty Sing, I have ſeriouſly and aſſiduouſly laboured to effect. It is unneceſſary to point out to you, who have ſo exact and perfect a knowledge of the province of Guzerat, the particular advantages of country and revenue acquired and ſecured to the Company by this treaty whoſe dominion in Guzerat I conceive now to be fixed upon the moſt firm and unſhaken baſis; as the only Power, beſides the Engliſh, who can have any legal or juſt claim to the poſſeſſion of country, is equally intereſted with them to exclude the Maratta Government from all ſhare of participation in it whatever; and although the alliance with Futty Sing may not bring any very material acceſſion of military force to the Company, the influence it muſt have upon the minds of the Maratta leaders renders it a favourable and fortunate circumſtance at the commencement of the preſent war, and effectually provides many prevailing arguments of right and juſtice, ſo neceſſary to reconcile the ſentiments and opinions of men in all changes of Government, to the form that may be introduced and eſtabliſhed.

In conſequence of what you mentioned reſpecting the neceſſity you ſuppoſed there might be of inſerting the name of Seajee in any engagement formed with Futty Sing, I propoſed that he ſhould alſo be mentioned, but was told, that ſince the concluſion of the former treaty betwixt Ragoba and Futty Sing, through the mediation of the Engliſh Company, the Sunnuds of Rajah had been made out in the ſole name of Futty Sing, and ſent him from the Court of Sittara. To avoid however every poſſibility of diſpute hereafter, I have conſidered Futty Sing, as he certainly now is, the head of the family, and made his engagement with the Honourable Company in the name of the whole of the Guicawars.

According to the wiſh you expreſſed of ſecuring a ſuitable proviſion for Govind Row, I hinted your inclination to Futty Sing; but found, if I ſucceeded in that point, I muſt have poſitively inſiſted upon it; and as in doing ſo, I muſt have deviated from the orders of the Honourable Governor General and Council, wherein they expreſsly forbid the aſſuming any mediation betwixt the two brothers, to which you have alſo deſired me to pay particular attention, I rather choſe to deſiſt from further ſolicitation on that ſubject, by recommending a reconciliation betwixt them, as a circumſtance that would be much to his honour and advantage, and give great ſatisfaction to the Engliſh.

It was with a good deal of reluctance that Futty Sing could be brought to conſent to the ceſſion of Zinnore, and ſtrongly pleaded for having the Pergunnah of Dubhoy in exchange given up to him; but knowing the importance of both theſe places, and particularly the latter, to the Company, I tried every argument to induce him to comply; in which I at laſt ſucceeded, by proving to him the real and advantageous compenſation he would reap from the preſent treaty with the Engliſh. This is a point I have endeavoured to perſuade him into a firm belief of, through the whole negociation, well knowing, that to ſecure the faithful and ſtrict adherence of any perſon to the engagements he may have entered into, it is a material object to convince him they are for his intereſt. The earneſtneſs expreſſed by Futty Sing, to be put in poſſeſſion of Dubhoy, clearly ſhews that he conſiders that place in the important point of view it deſerves; and is apprehenſive of its being in the hands of ſuch formidable neighbours as the Engliſh.

I ſhall ſhortly write you of the particular plan I mean to follow, in effecting what remains to be executed reſpecting the ſettlement of the province; and ſhall take leave at preſent, by repreſenting to you the neceſſity there appears at this criſis, of augmenting the number of troops on your eſtabliſhment, to maintain the flouriſhing ſtate of the Company's affairs in this quarter, and to defend and protect the Company's acquiſitions from any future alarm or depredation of their enemies.

I have the honour to be,
Gentlemen,
Your moſt obedient and
moſt humble ſervant,
Thomas Goddard.

Copy of the treaty entered into with Futty Sing.

Treaty between the Honourable Engliſh Eaſt India Company, and Futty Sing Row Guicowar Shemſeer Bahaudar; concluded at the village of Candeela, in the Pergunnah of Dubhoy, January the 26th 1780.

The Miniſters of the Maratta State having refuſed to accept of the reaſonable terms of accommodation offered them by Brigadier General Thomas Goddard, in the name of the Honourable Governor General and Council of Fort William, and by their obſtinate perſeverance in hoſtile intentions againſt the Engliſh, compelled them to take up arms in defence of their own rights and poſſeſſions, the Honourable the Preſident and Select Committee of Bombay, with the ſanction and approbation of the Honourable the Governor General and Council of Fort William, have appointed and authorized Brigadier General Goddard, to ſettle and conclude a treaty of laſting peace and alliance betwixt the Honourable Engliſh Eaſt India Company on one part, and Futty Sing Row Guicowar Shemſeer Bahaudar, for and in the name of all the Guicowar family, on the other; and the following are the articles of convention mutually entered into.

Article 1ſt.—The Engliſh and Futty Sing Row agree to a league of defenſive alliance, and to protect each other againſt all foreign enemies whatever.

Article 2d.—The Miniſters of the Maratta State by repeated violations of treaty, as well as their late conduct having drawn on themſelves the juſt reſentment of the Engliſh, having alſo by undue acts of oppreſſion, proved themſelves the enemies of Futty Sing; for theſe reaſons, and becauſe the moſt firm and ſincere friendſhip has long ſubſiſted betwixt the Honourable Company and Futty Sing, the contracting parties mutually agree to enter immediately into an offenſive league, excluding the Government of Poonah from all ſhare of country in the province of Guzerat whatever.

Article 3d.—The Engliſh agree to ſupport and defend Futty Sing in poſſeſſion of his ſhare of the Guzerat province, and Futty Sing is to aſſiſt and ſupport the Engliſh in poſſeſſing themſelves of and maintaining the ſhare now held by the Government of Poonah.

Article 4th.—In order to accompliſh this ſervice, as a firm friendſhip is now eſtabliſhed betwixt the Engliſh and Futty Sing, the latter agrees to join the Engliſh with 3,000 horſe according to cuſtom, and as many more as he can poſſibly raiſe, to act in conjunction with them during the preſent war, whenever they ſhall call upon them to do ſo.

Article 5th.—As the preſent mode of partition betwixt the Poonah Government and Futty Sing is attended with great loſs and inconvenience from the diſputes that muſt ariſe from the interference of the officers of each in collecting the revenues of the ſame places, and that lay interſperſed with one another, it is agreed upon that a new ſettlement of the province of Guzerat ſhall take place for the mutual benefit and convenience of both parties, the expreſs object of which will be an abſolute and ſpecific partition of the whole territory betwixt the Honourable Eaſt India Company and Futty Sing, according to the proportion of the revenues now reſpectively held by him and the Marattas.

Article 6th.—Ahmedabad and its dependencies, that is to ſay, the country to the north of the river Myhé, now poſſeſſed by the Poonah Government, to be allotted to Futty Sing; in lieu of which the Engliſh are to be put in poſſeſſion of the Guicowar diviſion of the country ſouth of the Tappey, known by the name of Attaveezy, and their ſhare of the revenues of Surat.

Article 7th.—The Engliſh will give ſuch aſſiſtance of force as Futty Sing may require to conquer and put him in poſſeſſion of the Poonah ſhare of the country to the north of the Myhé.

Article 8th.—The final partition and ſettlement of the Guzerat province being made, each party is to have the diſtinct and ſole government and poſſeſſion of the diviſion allotted him, and to hold his ſhare independent of, and unconnected with the other, except when united for their common defence againſt a foreign enemy, which they mutually and in the moſt ſolemn manner agree to do; and this partition and ſettlement mutually agreed to, is to be binding upon them and their poſterity for ever.

Article 9th.—Futty Sing having requeſted that the Engliſh ſupport him in withholding the annual tribute hitherto paid by him to the Poonah Government, it is ſtipulated that the Honourable Company will do ſo, till a final peace ſhall be concluded betwixt them and the Poonah Government, in which the intereſts of Futty Sing ſhall be carefully and equally attended to with their own.

Article 10th.—In conſideration of the advantage that will ariſe to Futty Sing from the above article, and as a proof of his ſincere regard and friendſhip for the Engliſh, he agrees to cede to them the diſtrict of Zinnow, and the villages ſituated in the Broach Pergunnah now belonging to him; both which are to remain for ever in the poſſeſſion of the Company.

Article 11th.—All the countries and places made over to the Engliſh in this treaty by Futty Sing, are to be delivered into their hands, and the collections accounted for to them from the day that Futty Sing is put in poſſeſſion of the city of Ahmedabad, and no demands of collection for any paſt time is to be made in them by Futty Sing.

Article 12th.—It is agreed, that two copies of this treaty be immediately ſent to the Honourable Preſident and Select Committee of Bombay, for their approbation, and to be by them tranſmitted to the Honourable Governor General and Council of Fort William, under whoſe ſanction it is concluded, in order to receive their final confirmation and ratification; after which, one copy ſo authenticated, is to remain with the Honourable Preſident and Select Committee of Bombay, and another with Futty Sing.

Goddard, General, letter to.

To Brigadier General Goddard.

Sir,

We have received your letters of the 26th and 27th ultimo, and very ſincerely congratulate you on the ſucceſs of your negociation with Futty Sing.

We entirely approve of the terms of the treaty you have concluded with him, which promiſe to accompliſh the great purpoſe of extending the Company's poſſeſſions ſouth of the Mahié, and of uniting the Guicowars to us by the ſureſt tie, that of our common intereſt. Futty Sing, we flatter ourſelves, will be thoroughly ſatisfied in receiving by your means ſuch acceſſion of territory as is ſtipulated for him north of the Mahié, and in being relieved from the heavy tribute formerly exacted from him by the Poonah Government.

We ſhall be glad to receive the particular plan you propoſe to communicate hereafter, with regard to what remains to be executed for the ſettlement of the province: by the 5th article of the preſent treaty, we obſerve that this remains open to future adjuſtment; and indeed it would have been impoſſible for you at ſo ſhort a warning, to have entered into all the details which will be neceſſary to the partition of the province between the Company and Futty Sing, according to the proportion of revenue held reſpectively by him and the Poonah Government; it was therefore neceſſary to reſerve this for a definitive treaty, which after ſettling the grand outlines, as marked in the abovementioned article, may be completed at greater leiſure.

In order to ſupply you with the neceſſary materials for this purpoſe, we have directed the Chiefs of Surat and Broach, and the Reſidents of Jamboojier and Cambay, to ſend you the beſt accounts they can procure of the ſeveral Pergunnahs and diviſions of the Guzerat province, with all the extracts they are capable, the particular value of each to the Poonah Circar, Futty Sing, the Nabob of Surat and Cambay, and the Graſſias or other Rajahs. We flatter ourſelves likewiſe, that at Ahmedabad you will be able to procure very authentic and particular information on this ſubject from the perſons who have been employed in the collections, as well as from Futty Sing himſelf; which latter may have its uſe, though it cannot certainly be relied on altogether, on account of his private intereſt to procure as advantageous a bargain as poſſible in the ſettlement of the propoſed exchanges. Appendix. No. 253. B.

The reſident at Cambay has been long in that part of the country, where our information is at preſent moſt imperfect; and as you may perhaps find him uſeful in proſecuting your inquiries on this ſubject, we have given him orders to attend you, ſhould you judge it proper to ſend for him.

We flatter ourſelves you will find leiſure for the final adjuſtment of this very eſſential part of your negociation. As ſoon as you may have reduced Ahmedabad, Futty Sing, on the proſpect of ſo noble an acquiſition, will probably be diſpoſed to ſettle exchanges with a more liberal ſpirit than can uſually be expected from a Maratta, in treating on a matter of this ſort, which will ſave you both much trouble and time.

We concur with you in regard to the neceſſity of augmenting the number of troops on our eſtabliſhment for the protection of the new acquired countries, and ſhall ſhortly determine on the meaſures to be taken for this purpoſe.

We ſhall take the earlieſt opportunity of tranſmitting a copy of the treaty with Futty Sing to the Governor General and Council agreeable to your deſire.

We think it neceſſary to acquaint you, that by the laſt advices from Major Cotgrave, at Tellicherry, dated 21ſt ultimo, he informs us, that he was finiſhing the lines of that place with all expedition, and which he hoped would be completed in ten or twelve days, when he propoſed embarking for Surat on the Eagle, with the company of European artillery and company of infantry, leaving the grenadiers and twentieth battalion of Sepoys for the defence of the place, which in his opinion would be fully ſufficient againſt their preſent enemy.

We encloſe copy of an extract of news juſt received from our Reſident at Anjengo, and by advices from Tellicherry, we learn that our honourable maſters ſhip Hawke, which imported at Anjengo the 24th ultimo from Great Britain, on the 16th of the ſame month off Ceylon, ſpoke with his Majeſty's ſhip the Seahorſe, and other ſhips in company, both of which were bound to this coaſt with troops from Fort Saint George, and which we ſuppoſe are thoſe mentioned in the extract of news.

We are,
Sir,
Your moſt obedient,
humble ſervants,

Bombay Caſtle, 9th February 1780.

Goddard, General, letter from.

Gentlemen,

I have been favoured with your letter of the 11th inſtant, and communicated to Mr. Richardſon, as you deſired, the reſolution you had taken reſpecting his reference; I at the ſame time indulged him with the choice of returning to his duty in this army, if he would comply with the general regulations I had found it neceſſary to eſtabliſh for the hoſpital department; and received through Lieutenant Colonel Hartley, his anſwer, copy of which I have encloſed for your peruſal.

It is matter of concern to me that Mr. Richardſon ſhould thus perſiſt in oppoſing an authority which you have been pleaſed to give as your opinion is veſted in me, for the internal regulation of this army, and which I am conſcious of having exerted for the good of the ſervice. The application he has made for a general court martial will, I make no doubt, appear to you moſt ſtrange and improper. He has not been accuſed of miſconduct; I have even thought proper to overlook his former diſobedience of orders, in declining to act under the regulations I had eſtabliſhed, on account of the reference made to your Government; and however his preſent behaviour might juſtly deſerve the ſeverity of that ſtrict inquiry he ſolicits, from the diſregard ſhewn to your authority, in thus perſiſting to diſpute the legality and propriety of my orders, I have, from a regard to the preſent ſervice, declined bringing him to a trial here, and given him permiſſion to repair to your Preſidency, to anſwer to you for his conduct; which I beg leave to repreſent has in this freſh inſtance, as well as through the whole of the buſineſs, been highly unjuſtifiable and unmilitary.

Having experienced on my march to the Nerbudda the inconvenience that aroſe from tranſporting a quantity of ſtores which were in charge of the Commiſſary of your troops, and which were altogether unneceſſary to the ſervice; I directed them to be ſent to Broach, and delivered over to your Commiſſary there, by which means a very conſiderable reduction has been made in the expence, and the army eaſed of a heavy incumbrance. In proſecution of the ſame plan of economy, ſo eſſentially requiſite at this time, when the Company are engaged in an important and expenſive war, I have alſo regulated the Bombay hoſpital department conformable to thoſe of the Bengal army, which are ſufficiently ample for every purpoſe of the ſervice, and have reſtricted the Commiſſary's charges, as nearly as poſſible, to the ſame eſtabliſhed ſtandard. From a conviction of the further convenience it would be of to the ſervice, as well as the diminution of expence, if the officers of your troops were permitted to carry their own camp equipage, inſtead of proceeding upon the former expenſive plan, I have taken upon me to grant the allowance for that purpoſe; but their tents are furniſhed by the Honourable Company. The advantage which the Company will derive from theſe regulations make me aſſured of their meeting with your ſanction and approbation, which I hope you will be pleaſed to favour me with.

The charge of the Bombay hoſpital by the departure of Mr. Richardſon, devolves upon Mr. Durham, the ſenior ſurgeon nominated in your letter to me; but Mr. Grant Clugstone, conceiving he has a prior claim of rank to him, has delivered me an addreſs to you on the ſubject, which I have now the honour to encloſe to you, and beg to receive your determination upon it.

I ſhall, agreeable to your deſire, ſend the papers relative to the Dutch intrigues to Mr. Boddam, who will forward them to you.

I have the honour to be,
Gentlemen,
Your moſt obedient
humble ſervant,
Thomas Goddard.

Camp, near Broda,
30th January 1780.

Friday 24th.

Signed the following letter to General Goddard, giving cover to an abſtract of the revenues of Guzerat; alſo a letter to the Chiefs of Surat and Broach.

To Brigadier General Goddard.

Sir,

Goddard, General, letter to.

Having received advice from the Chiefs of Surat and Broach, of your having reduced the city of Ahmedabad, we moſt ſincerely congratulate you on your ſucceſs, hoping ſoon to receive the particulars from yourſelf.

Since our letter of the 9th inſtant, we have been favoured with yours of the 30th ultimo; and entirely agree with you, that Mr. Richardſon's application for a court martial was very improper, after the reference made to us at his own deſire, and the opinion we had given on the ſubject; and we have made known to him our ſentiments of his conduct.

We ſhall always give our warmeſt approbation of every reduction you can make in the expences of the army conſiſtent with the good of the ſervice; on which principle the regulations you have eſtabliſhed reſpecting the Bombay detachment have our entire ſanction.

We requeſt you will ſignify to Mr. Grant Clugstone, as our determination on his claim, that the Honourable Company's orders give him no pretenſions to the charge he now ſolicits, nor to any higher rank on the liſt of ſurgeons, until a vacancy ſhall happen in the Bombay hoſpital. He ought to conſider himſelf ſufficiently favoured in having the next ſucceſſion in preference to ſo many of his ſeniors; and if, as he ſtates in his letter, the Company's appointment was grounded upon a miſconception of his rank and pretenſions, his argument operates againſt himſelf.

In conſequence of your recommendation for augmenting our military eſtabliſhment, we have determined forthwith to raiſe two additional battalions of Sepoys; but as you muſt be a perfect judge of the ſubject, we ſhall be glad to be favoured with your opinion of what force will be neceſſary for the protection of our new acquiſitions.

Since we wrote you on the 9th inſtant, we have received an account from Mr. Boddam, of the revenues reſpectively collected by the Poonah Government and the Guicawars from the province of Guzerat. By this account it appears, that the ceſſions already made to the Company by the late treaty, are much inferior in value to the territories northward of the Myhie, the poſſeſſion of which is to be ſecured to Futty Sing. And to explain this the more clearly, we now tranſmit an abſtract of the account, arranged in diviſions, diſtinguiſhing the reſpective values of the Pergunnahs belonging to the Peiſhwa and the Guicawars, and their ſituation, with reſpect to the rivers Tappey, Nerbedah, and Myhé, by which you will at once diſcover the amount in which, by this account, the Company's ſhare falls ſhort of Futty Sing's. We will not anſwer its being altogether accurate; but we tranſmit it to you as containing the beſt light we are able to afford to aſſiſt you in the new ſettlement, which, according to the 5th article, ſtill remains to be made of the general province, not doubting but you will exert your utmoſt efforts to ſecure ſuch a further tract of country, between the Nubedah and Tappey, or Nubedah and Myhé, as will make the Company's diviſion fully equal to Futty Sing's, to which they have the ſtronger claim for relieving him from the heavy tribute before paid to the Poonah Circar.

The importance of ſecuring the friendſhip of Hyder Ally during the preſent war with the Marattas, or even his neutrality, and other conſiderations, regarding the ſtate of affairs on the Malabar coaſt, and the Company's commerce in his dominions, have led us to determine on ſending a gentleman to his Durbar commiſſioned to treat on theſe points; to which we have been the more encouraged by a late letter the Preſident has received from him. We have appointed Mr. Horſley for this commiſſion, and ſhall communicate to you as ſoon as poſſible ſuch information as he may be able to obtain reſpecting the Nabob's diſpoſition towards us, and what expectations may be reaſonably formed from him with reſpect to the material objects before mentioned.

The Chief of Surat having been invited to take poſſeſſion of Gogo, we have given him an authority for that purpoſe, when circumſtances may be convenient, as it will be a very deſirable acquiſition to the Company. You have already had notice from him of this affair, that you might regulate yourſelf in your negociations; and Mr. Malet can give you any information you may want reſpecting this place, and the importance of it to the Company.

The remainder of the battalion of Europeans from Madras, is arrived here on the Hawke; and we ſhall forward him to Surat as ſoon as the Revenge returns into port from Fort Victoria. We likewiſe ſoon expect the Europeans from Tellicherry, and a complete battalion of Sepoys from Madras.

The gentlemen at Madras expreſs much anxiety to us for a ſafe and honourable peace with the Marattas; to enable you to effect which they have ſent ſuch a large force to this ſide of India. They apprehend much danger and embarraſſment from a combination between the Marattas, Hyder Ally, and the Nizam; and even acquaint us, the two latter have actually conducted an offenſive alliance againſt us, and that the latter is ready to join upon the firſt ſignal.

Tueſday 14th. Received the following letter from General Goddard, and one from the Chief of Surat, encloſing ſundry grants to the Honourable Company from Futty Sing.

Goddard, General, letter from.

Gentlemen,

I have been favoured with your two letters of the 24th and 26th ultimo; and have had the ſatisfaction to make known to the army the ſentiments you have been pleaſed to declare in the latter. I may not anſwer ſo fully to the ſeveral points expreſſed in the former as they deſerve, for which the active ſervice in which I am at preſent engaged will I hope be accepted as an apology.

In a letter which I had the honour to addreſs you the 1ſt inſtant, acquainting you with my intentions of marching the day following, I took the liberty of obſerving that it would be politically prudent, at this juncture, to wave a diſcuſſion of ſuch points as might appear to you requiſite to ſettle in a final adjuſtment of the partition of Guzerat with Futty Sing, as the grand outlines of his agreement with the Honourable Company being effectually ſecured, the taſk of providing for the leſs important intereſts of our ſettlement with him would become hereafter perfectly eaſy, and to urge them at preſent could not be productive of any real or adequate advantage. Reſpecting the ſtatement, which you have been pleaſed to ſend me, of the revenues of Guzerat as ſhared by the Peiſhwa and Guicawar, but which, you add, you do not anſwer for its being altogether accurate, I beg to aſſure you that from the moſt exact information I have received, it is exceedingly erroneous and incorrect: I ſhall take an opportunity of laying before you an exact and ſatisfactory ſtatement of the collections of the province for your more particular information very ſoon; at preſent only permit me to obſerve, that the eſtimate made of the Peiſhwa's ſhare of the diſtricts to the north of the Myhie; exceeds the proper value by at leaſt fifteen lacks of rupees. I ſhall mention three inſtances in which they are greatly exaggerated. Firſt, reſpecting Pitlad; the whole amount of which may be reckoned at ſix lacks: ſecond, the city of Ahmedabad, whoſe collections amounted to about three lacks, and little more than half belonged to the Poonah Circar: thirdly, the revenue mentioned under the name of Mulluckgurry, the real value of which depended upon the force employed, and was never valued to the Peiſhwa at more than three lacks. If to theſe deductions be added the expences neceſſary to collect the revenues from the Zemindars, as well as to protect the country from the inroads and depredations of the Cottywars and other freebooters, it will be found that the real value of the Pergunnahs ceded to the Engliſh, liſh by Futty Sing, excluſive of the convenience and advantage of their ſituation, is equal, if not ſuperior, to that guaranteed to him by the Company in lieu of it.

As you have been pleaſed to expreſs your wiſh to receive my opinion on the propoſed augmentation of your military eſtabliſhment, I ſhall do myſelf the honour of communicating it to you, and every idea that may ſtrike me as eligible on the ſubject, very ſoon; begging you will accept of the reaſon mentioned in the firſt part of my letter as an excuſe for not writing you fully upon it at preſent.

I have the honour to be,
Gentlemen,
Your moſt obedient
humble ſervant,
Thomas Goddard.

APPENDIX, No. 254. B.

Bombay Select Conſultations, the 25th February 1780.

Friday 25. RECEIVED the following letter from General Goddard, adviſing the reduction of Ahmedabad.

Goddard, General, letter from.

Gentlemen,

That no time might be loſt in communicating to you the fortunate intelligence of the reduction of Ahmedabad, the capital of Guzerat, I diſpatched a ſhort note to Mr. Gambier, the Chief of Broach, the inſtant of the troops entering the place, requeſting he would immediately tranſmit an account of it to you; which I hope you will have received. Permit me to congratulate you moſt ſincerely, upon an event ſo honourable to the Britiſh arms, and ſo favourable to the intereſts of my Government.

On the 10th in the morning I arrived before the city, and wrote to the Maratta Governor, Rago Pundit Tatwa, deſiring him to deliver up the place to me: with this demand he affected an intention of complying, but his conduct was entirely the reverſe of any ſuch intention, for the troops from the walls fired upon ſuch of the camp people as approached them, and endeavoured to do all the miſchief in their power. In his excuſe the Pundit alleged, that the Aral and Scindy Jemautdars, who garriſoned the place, had large arrears due to them, and would not be induced to give it up till a ſum of money was agreed to be paid them, and that they kept his perſon in confinement, becauſe he was unable to ſatisfy them. There was, I believe, ſome foundation for this aſſertion: theſe Arabs and Scindys had arrears due to them from the Poonah Government, they were hired mercenaries, and it was in all probability a matter of indifference to them what Power's ſervice they entered into; they would therefore gladly have accepted their arrears, upon condition of being continued in the garriſon of the place; but I am convinced they never would have permitted the Britiſh troops to be put in poſſeſſion, or have evacuated it themſelves, if required to do ſo, becauſe they had, from a reſidence of many years, been conſidered as the legal eſtabliſhed militia of the city, and from the ſucceſs with which they had always heretofore oppoſed the efforts of the moſt numerous armies, none of whom could ever conquer the place, as well as the ſtrength of their own garriſon, which conſiſted of at leaſt 6,000 Arab and Scindy foot, beſides 2,000 horſe, they were inſpired with a degree of ſelf-confidence and aſſurance that their arms were invincible, and the city impregnable to our force. Finding therefore all my efforts to obtain poſſeſſion of the place by any other means ineffectual, I made the neceſſary preparations for beſieging it; and on the 12th, at one o'clock P. M. opened the batteries againſt it, which continued to play till the 13th in the evening, when the breach being practicable, I formed an intention of ſtorming next morning; but from motives of humanity and compaſſion, as the city was extenſive and populous, and I well knew the undiſtinguiſhing ſlaughter that almoſt unavoidably attends the fury of entering a city by ſtorm, I deferred the attack one day, in hopes that the enemy might accept the mercy I had proffered them: in this hope I was however deceived; and accordingly this morning gave orders for an aſſault, which ſucceeded to my utmoſt wiſh. The enemy fled from their works, after having endeavoured, without effect, to oppoſe the fierce onſet of the grenadiers, who, with their officers, diſtinguiſhed themſelves in a moſt remarkable degree; and I beg leave to recommend their conduct to your notice and approbation, and generally that of the whole army during the ſiege. Near three hundred of the enemy fell near the breach and about the gateway, beſides others who were killed and wounded after entering the place; and what makes the enterprize particularly fortunate, conſidering the deſperate reſiſtance of the enemy, and the difficulties we had to encounter, is the little loſs on our ſide with which it was achieved. This circumſtance I conſider as a bleſſing, on which I beg leave to congratulate you, and alſo on the honour which the Britiſh arms have acquired, by the moderation and mercy, ſo ſtrikingly marked in their conduct, after getting poſſeſſion of the place, for not above two of the inhabitants were wounded, which might have been the effect of accident entirely; and many who were in arms, upon ſubmitting and delivering themſelves up, had their lives ſpared them.

Lieutenant Colonel Parker having received a wound on the 14th, which I have the ſatisfaction to acquaint you is not by the faculty deemed dangerous, I committed the conduct of the attack to Lieutenant Colonel Hartley, and I am happy at an opportunity of teſtifying the high ſenſe I have of his merit and gallantry as an officer, from the whole of his behaviour on this occaſion. While I expreſs my warmeſt approbation of Major Spaeth's ſkill and aſſiduity, I am concerned at the ſame time to inform you of his being wounded by a ſabre in ſeven places, which he received in aſſiſting with his people and materials to fill up the ditch for the paſſage of the grenadiers; I cannot at preſent ſpeak with any certainty upon the nature of his caſe. I am very ſorry to give you the diſagreeable intelligence that Captain Gough has this evening expired of the wounds he received in the ſtorm this morning. Mr. Wright, a volunteer of your eſtabliſhment, was killed by the accident of the burſting of a ſhell on the 13th inſtant. The names of the ſeveral gentlemen who have received wounds, all of which I have reaſon to hope are not dangerous, are as follow: Lieutenants Caldwell and Prole, of the engineers; Lieutenant Stuart, ſurveyor; Lieutenant Long, of the artillery; and Lieutenants Mackintoſh and Croſsly, of the infantry, and two volunteers.

I cannot help taking this opportunity of recommending to your favourable notice the conduct of Mr. Fraſer, who acted as a volunteer during the ſiege, and accompanied the forlorn hope on the ſtorming party: let me hope that the proofs of courage he has ſhewn, will at my inſtance be an inducement to reſtore him to your ſervice with his rank. Mr. Clanſey, who was ſome time ago unfortunate enough to loſe your ſervice, and has ſince been admitted to the Bengal eſtabliſhment, where he is now an enſign, ſolicited an opportunity for wiping away any ſtain that might have been thrown on his character, which I am happy to aſſure you he has effectually done by his gallant conduct in mounting the breach with the forlorn hope. Enſign Heirn's behaviour, who carried the grenadier colours, merits particular mention; he followed the forlorn hope with the colours, and having mounted the breach, ruſhed to the gateway amidſt a number of the enemy, and planted them in triumph.

The volunteers of your eſtabliſhment were in the trenches during the whole of the ſiege, and marched foremoſt foremoſt to the ſtorm. Let me hope that you will find it conſiſtent to give ſome promotion as a reward for their good behaviour. Serjeant Hugg, who led the forlorn hope, diſplayed extraordinary marks of bravery; and as he is well educated and very deſerving, I hope I do not intrude too much on your indulgence, by ſoliciting he may be appointed a cadet.

The troops have taken a number of ſtandards from the enemy in aſſaulting the breach, which I propoſe ſending to your Government to be hung up as trophies of the conqueſt of Ahmedabad by the Britiſh arms, either in the church at Bombay or your armory, as you may think moſt proper.

The return of the killed and wounded not being ready for this diſpatch, I ſhall ſend it by the next opportunity, when I will addreſs you particularly: at preſent I am taking meaſures to protect the city and encourage the inhabitants.

I have the honour to be,
Gentlemen,
Your moſt obedient and
moſt humble ſervant,

Goddard, General, letter from.

Gentlemen,

I had the honour to addreſs you the 15th inſtant, informing you of the reduction of Ahmedabad by the Britiſh arms; and now beg leave to encloſe you a return of the killed and wounded, from the commencement of the ſiege till the period of its concluſion.

Since my laſt I have received authentic and undoubted intelligence that Scindia and Tockajee Holcar had paſſed the Gaut of Caſſubarry, and were encamped the 5th inſtant at Arrahpore, which is reckoned about 60 coſs from Broderah. Scindia had ſent off all his heavy artillery to Burhampore; and with ten or twelve light field pieces, and about 1,500 horſe, was himſelf advancing towards Guzerat. Should not the intelligence of the fall of Ahmedabad put a ſtop to his progreſs, which I hope it may not, I do not doubt being ſoon able to give you a good account of him; at any rate I ſhall keep a ſtrict watch over his motions, and be prepared to receive him: unleſs, which is alſo reported, the Miniſter is ſending another army to his ſupport, I can ſcarcely think he would venture into the Guzerat with ſo ſmall a force as he has at preſent with him. It is however pretty evident, that the ſuppoſed animoſity betwixt thoſe Chiefs is leſs confirmed and violent than what we had reaſon to believe from former reports; though at the ſame time Scindia it is well known has not been ſatisfied by the Miniſter reſpecting the demands he made upon him, and will therefore moſt probably be the readier to act upon his arrival the part he may find moſt for his own intereſt.

I ſhall not fail to communicate any new intelligence I may receive;

and have the honour to be,
Gentlemen,
Your moſt obedient,
humble ſervant,

To Brigadier General Goddard.

Sir,

We have had the pleaſure to receive your letters of the 15th and 18th inſtant, with the return of the killed and wounded at the ſiege of Ahmedabad. Goddard, General, letter to.

The reduction of this important place, in ſo ſhort a time, with ſuch inconſiderable loſs, and againſt ſo obſtinate and formidable an enemy, will reflect the higheſt honour on the Britiſh forces, and the officer under whoſe command they have ſo eminently diſtinguiſhed themſelves. And we ſend off this diſpatch purpoſely to convey our warmeſt approbation of the conduct of the army during the ſiege; and particularly of the officers and men engaged in the aſſault, not only for their gallantry in the attack, but for the moderation and humanity they diſplayed after getting poſſeſſion of the place, which entitles them to every mark of applauſe in our power to beſtow; and we therefore beg our thanks may be particularly given to them in public orders, as well as to the army in general.

We ſhall ſhortly reply to the other points in your letter of the 15th; and are with much eſteem,

Sir,
Your moſt obedient
humble ſervants,
Bombay Caſtle, 26th February 1780. William Hornby, &c. Committee.

APPENDIX, No. 255. B.

Received the following letter from General Goddard. Friday 10th.

Gentlemen,

I had the honour to addreſs you the 15th ultimo, ſince which Goddard, General, letter from.

which I have been favoured with your letter of the 9th. I am happy at the ſentiments of ſatisfaction you therein expreſs on the ſubject of the treaty with Futty Sing; in the concluſion of which, independent of immediate benefits of territory and revenue, I had principally in view the grand object of the preſent war, and ſecuring an uſeful and laſting alliance with a Power, whoſe affairs being inſeparably connected with our own, would effectually bind him to our intereſts in the proſecution of it; and who from ſituation, as well as policy, would become an uſeful and faithful ally to the Engliſh Company. This point I conceive, as far as human prudence and foreſight can judge, is now completely attained. Futty Sing ſenſible of the preſent power and ſtrength of the Engliſh, feels himſelf through their means raiſed to a ſtate of greatneſs and independance from which he muſt immediately fall, if deprived of their ſupport and aſſiſtance. The terms upon which he has been treated with were thoſe of the ſtricteſt impartiality and moderation, and the exchange of country made with him was proportioned to the ſhare he before held, and to that of the Peiſhwa's given him in lieu of it. Of theſe circumſtances he is himſelf fully ſenſible; and I only mention them now as arguments, that he muſt from intereſt as well as inclination be ready to unite heartily with us in defence of the province, and in proſecution of the war againſt the common enemy. The period calling upon him to do ſo ſeems now arrived, as my former letters will have already acquainted you; for Scindia and Holkar, notwithſtanding the various reports, firſt of their diſputes with the Miniſter, and afterwards of their intentions to march to the Malva province, are I underſtand advancing with an army rumoured to be about 40,000, towards Surat: I propoſe moving with all expedition to oppoſe them; and have ſent off to Cambait the heavy artillery, with a quantity of the moſt weighty and cumberſome ſtores, which might have proved an impediment to the rapidity of my march, to be tranſported from hence by water to Surat.

In purſuance of the engagements made with Futty Sing, I have put him in poſſeſſion of the city and collections of Ahmedabad, and have received from him, in the name of the Honourable Company, grants for the ſeveral Pergunnahs ceded to them, which I have tranſmitted with the neceſſary papers to the Chiefs of Surat and Broach, in order that they may take poſſeſſion of them in your name, and begin to collect the revenues from the 28th of February, the day on which Futty Sing received the government of Ahmedabad, agreeable to what is ſtipulated in the 11th article of the treaty. The grants are four in number, one for the Chout of Surat, another for the country of Autweezy, a third for the villages in the Broach Pergunnah, and a fourth for Zeimore; the two former I have ſent to Mr. Boddam at Surat, and the two latter to Mr. Gambier.

With reſpect to what you mention regarding the points yet remaining to be ſettled with Futty Sing, it will be political to defer any attention to or adjuſtment of theſe to a future opportunity, when the grand objects of the war are ſufficiently ſecured to leave full leiſure to enter into the details of particular intereſts; the ſettlement already made, generally provides for the equal partition of the provinces, in a proportion drawn from the ſhares before poſſeſſed by the Peiſhwa and Guicawars; and to advance any further claims at preſent, might only tend to alarm and excite the apprehenſions of Futty Sing, prejudicial to our views at this critical juncture; that the points about which we may be ſolicitous, would if attained be ſerviceable. In order to render eaſy the diſcuſſion of ſuch buſineſs as may hereafter require to be ſettled, and generally to conduct the affairs of your Preſidency at the Court of Futty Sing, I have propoſed to him that an Engliſh gentleman ſhall in future remain there in the character of Reſident, to which he has cheerfully aſſented, and has addreſſed the honourable Preſident accordingly; this meaſure I beg leave to recommend as beſt calculated to preſerve a mutual good underſtanding betwixt the Engliſh and Futty Sing, and ſecure to them an uſeful and decided influence in his affairs, which may be improved as circumſtances ſhall hereafter render eligible; and I have only to requeſt at preſent reſpecting this appointment, that as the nature of Futty Sing's engagements with the Engliſh will neceſſarily connect him particularly with me in the operations of the preſent war, you will give directions to your Reſident to receive ſuch orders and inſtructions from me as I may find it requiſite to give him in purſuance of the objects that may have been planned and concerted with you. Appendix. No. 255. B.

From the ruined and deſolate ſtate of this city, and the hopes that by proper encouragement the trade and manufacture, for which it was once ſo famous, might revive and flouriſh, I have ſettled with Futty Sing, that the Engliſh ſhall eſtabliſh a factory at Ahmedabad; this cannot fail to produce great commercial advantages, as there is no doubt but moſt of the trade would ſoon paſs through our hands from the influence we ſhould poſſeſs in the place, and the ſuperior confidence which the merchants and natives would place in us, to induce them to put themſelves under our protection. If the plan ſhould meet your approbation, it remains with you to make ſuch arrangements and regulations for its proper execution, as your experience, and knowledge of the Company's commercial intereſts in this part of India may ſuggeſt.

I am obliged to you for the permiſſion you have given the Reſident at Cambait to come to my camp, ſhould I judge it proper to require his attendance, and beg to aſſure you that in every part where I could have wiſhed to receive information, I have found extremely ready and capable of giving me ſatisfaction.

I have already mentioned my intentions of marching towards Surat with all expedition; and in order to remove every obſtruction to the rapidity of my motions, I ſhall leave the ſick and wounded of the army behind at Ahmedabad; I have alſo thought it eligible to leave a ſmall detachment of eight companies of Sepoys drafted from the eight battalions, and two guns here, under the command of Major Fullarton: theſe are in poſſeſſion of a ſtrong poſt within the city, formerly the reſidence of the collector, who reſided at Ahmedabad, on the part of the Guicawar. The weight which the preſence of this force, and in ſo reſpectable a poſt, will give to the Engliſh in the eyes of the inhabitants, and the decided influence it will ſecure to them againſt the deſigns of any Governor who may command in the place on the part of Futty Sing, will be of the greateſt preſent benefit to them, and render eaſy the future accompliſhment of their views reſpecting it.

It is with pleaſure I can inform you, that in conſideration of the Nawab of Cambait's long and ſteady attachment to the Company, your recommendation of his intereſts, and the commercial benefits which he might be enabled to derive from any increaſe of influence at Cambait, I have obtained from Futty Sing, as a voluntary act and proof of his reſpect for the Engliſh, a relaxation in the chout, formerly collected by the Maratta Government, and which by his late agreements with us was become his rightful claim.

The ſacred light in which I ſhall ever conſider engagements under the ſanction of the public faith prevented me from too peremptorily inſiſting upon a point which might ſeem to be an innovation of them, or requeſting an entire acquittal of the Nawab's chout; and the Nawab will have ſufficient reaſon to be grateful to the friendſhip of the Engliſh, for the partial indulgence he has obtained through their means, which exempts him from the payment of any chout within the city of Cambait, reſerving only to Futty Sing the collections levied in the Pergunnahs.

The paper ſpecifying this releaſe, I have encloſed to Mr. Malet, the Reſident, and have confided in his local experience and information to propoſe ſuch advantages in commerce, and ſecure ſuch a decided influence to the Company with the Nawab as may be found conſiſtent and practicable: I ſhall immediately forward to you the reſult of what he may communicate to me in reply on this ſubject.

By intelligence juſt received, I learn that a body of 6,000 horſe have croſſed the Nubedah at Bowapeer; I ſhall march from this place to-morrow morning, and ſhall give you from time to time information of my progreſs.

I have the honour to be, with reſpect,
Gentlemen,
Your moſt obedient
humble ſervant,

APPENDIX, No. 256. B.

Letter from Preſident and Select Committee at Bombay, 7th March 1780, Governor General and Council, ether to.

To the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Eſquire, Governor General, &c. Council, at Fort William.

Gentlemen,

Our laſt addreſs was dated 31ſt January, of which a duplicate is encloſed

We have ſince had the pleaſure to receive advice from General Goddard of having come to an accommodation with Futty Sing, and a copy of the orginal treaty. Agreeable to the laſt article, we now forward two copies for the confirmation and ratification of your Government; the articles being inſerted in Perſian in the copy to be delivered to Futty Sing.

We alſo now tranſmit a continuation of our correſpondence with General Goddard ſince the date of our laſt letter with an abſtract of the revenues of the Guzerat province, ſubdivided according to the boundaries of the different diſtricts, and the ſhares reſpectively held by Futty Sing, and the Poona Government. We requeſt your particular attention to what we have urged to General Goddard in our letters of the 9th and 24th ultimo, reſpecting the further ſettlement and diviſion of the province, and the great diſproportion of the ſhare at preſent allotted to the Company; not that we doubt of the General's moſt zealous efforts to ſtipulate for a more adequate diviſion, but that you may likewiſe ſee the neceſſity which is ſuggeſted to us by our knowledge of Futty Sing's character, of not giving the treaty your implicit ratification as final and definitive, but guarding it with a reſerve, providing for a new and equitable ſettlement of the province, according to the 5th article.

After the concluſion of the treaty, General Goddard loſt no time in moving with the army to put Futty Sing in poſſeſſion of the country to the north of the Myhie, being accompanied by that Chief with a body of his forces. He arrived before the city of Ahmedabad on the 10th inſtant, which he found garriſoned with at leaſt ſix thouſand Arabs and Scindy foot, beſides two thouſand horſe, and after ſome fruitleſs negociation with the Maratta Governor proceeded to beſiege the place. The batteries were opened on the 12th, and continued to play till the 13th in the evening, when the breach being practicable, the General had formed an intention of ſtorming the next morning, but from motives of humanity deferred the attack one day, in hopes the enemy would ſurrender upon terms. Being however diſappointed in this hope, on the morning of the the 15th he gave orders for the aſſault, which he acquainted us ſucceeded to his utmoſt wiſh; the enemy being unable to maintain their works againſt the vigorous attack of the grenadiers, who with their officers, diſtinguiſhed themſelves in the moſt remarkable manner. Lieutenant Colonel Parker having been wounded on the 11th. the conduct of the attack was committed to Lieutenant Colonel Hartley, of whoſe gallantry and merit as an officers the General teſtified a high ſenſe, from the whole of his behaviour on the occaſion. Near three hundred of the enemy fell in the breach, whilſt on our ſide the loſs was inconſiderable, as will appear by the encloſed return. We are however concerned to mention that Captain Gough of your eſtabliſhment died the ſame day of the wounds he received in the ſtorm, and that Major Spaith of the Bombay engineers was very dangerouſly wounded, and we have juſt heard he is ſince dead.

We beg leave to congratulate you on the reduction of this important place, which enables us immediately to fulfil the Company's engagement with Futty Sing, and entitle them to the poſſeſſion of the places ceded to them by the treaty. Our laſt letter from General Goddard was dated the 18th inſtant; when he was employed in taking meaſures to protect the city and encourage the inhabitants, but we are impatient to hear of his having brought matters in that quarter to a concluſion with Futty Sing, as the late motions of the Maratta forces appear to make his preſence neceſſary more to the ſouthward.

A body of horſe, ſaid to conſiſt of about 20,000, under the command of Madjee Scindia, and Tookajee Holkar, have arrived within about twelve coſs of the paſs of Soargur, near 40 coſs from Surat; Mr. Farmer, who continues with Madjee Scindia, wrote the Chief under the 21ſt ultimo, that he learnt they were to remain in that quarter until ſomething was ſettled by negociations intended to be ſet on foot with General Goddard and Ragonath Row. It was alſo ſurmiſed that a ſurprize was intended, to plunder the city of Surat, and ſeize the perſon of Ragoba, but the ſeaſonable arrival of Colonel Brown's detachment from Madras, places us above all apprehenſions of any attempt of that nature, and will make a moſt reſpectable addition to the army under General Goddard, who does not doubt of ſoon being able to give a good account of the enemy.

A body of about 5,000 Maratta horſe, under the command of the miniſterial officer, has alſo approached Surat from the ſouthward, on which account the detachments placed at the ſeveral diſtricts which had been taken poſſeſſion of, have been recalled into garriſon, and the country muſt neceſſarily be expoſed to ravage till General Goddard returns to the ſouthward.

In our letter of the 2d January we acquainted you, that the Preſident had written to Hyder Ally on certain points of his conduct; and we have now the pleaſure to encloſe a copy of his anſwer, and of another letter ſent him by the Preſident in conſequence. When theſe papers were laid before us, the neceſſity of ſending a gentleman to Hyder was repreſented to us in a ſtrong light by the Preſident in a minute be delivered in upon the occaſion, a copy of which is likewiſe encloſed; and the propoſal entirely coinciding with our own opinion, and being ſtrictly conſonant to the ſentiments of the Honourable Company expreſſed in their lateſt commands, we have appointed Mr. Horſley to this commiſſion, on which he will ſhortly proceed; and he will be inſtructed punctually to communicate to you every material information he may be able to obtain reſpecting Hyder's diſpoſitions towards the Company, and expectations from them in caſe he can be induced to join in our views againſt the Marattas. It will likewiſe, in theſe times, be of eſſential importance to compoſe the troubles on the Malabar coaſt; and at any rate it will be a capital advantage to obtain ſome preciſe knowledge of the views and proceedings of a Power of ſo much conſequence in the political ſyſtem of India, neither of which points can be effected but by ſending a gentleman directly to his Durbar. This meaſure having before met with your concurrence when propoſed to you in the year 1778, and the exigency being ſo preſſing as not to admit of any loſs of time, we propoſe diſpatching Mr. Horſley as ſoon as the proper paſſports arrive from the Nabob.

Our lateſt advices mention that Scindia and Holcar were to croſs the Nubedah, the 29th ultimo, and to puſh on into Guzerat, and we conjecture General God- daid would leave Ahmedabad about the firſt of this month to meet them. We doubt not the General will either bring them to action or oblige them to quit the province, unleſs their views ſhould be to come to an accommodation, of which their conduct has not much the appearance. Colonel Brown with his detachment, conſiſting of one battalion of European infantry, and one company of artillery, is now at Surat, and the enemy between him and our army; nor do we know what orders General Goddard has given reſpecting them; but ſhould he want them to join him before he reaches Surat, a junction may be effected without danger, by tranſporting them by ſea, if neceſſary, to any convenient poſition.

We are, with reſpect,
Gentlemen,
Your moſt obedient
humble ſervants,
Wm Hornby,
&c. Committee.

APPENDIX, No. 257. B.

Bombay Select Conſultations, 6th April 1780.

Extract of a Letter from General Goddard to the Preſident: dated Camp at Pittoul, 24th March 1780; received yeſterday.

I am now about to ſpeak to you on a ſubject which appears to me of the utmoſt conſequence to the intereſts of the Company in the preſent ſtate of affairs, and in which, before I can take any ſtep, it is neceſſary to receive the ſanction of your Government. The want of proper management in regulating the revenues of Futty Sing; his own weakneſs and impolicy; and the fluctuation of power that attends a deſpotic reign, added to the general corruption and avarice which pervades every part of our adminiſtration, governed by the narrow views of Maratta policy, which ſeek only the gratification of the preſent moment, has reduced him to the moſt extreme diſtreſs and poverty. He has repeatedly, and at different times, ſince he firſt accompanied me to Ahmadavad, repreſented his ſituation in this reſpect, and the hopes he had of finding relief from his neceſſities in the friendſhip and aſſiſtance of the Company; but till this period, as circumſtances did not before this period render the opportunity ſo favourable, and the riſk was not ſo imminent, his troops have continued pretty ſilent: they now clamorouſly demand the payment of a part of their arrears; and unleſs they can be ſatisfied in ſome meaſure, the moſt alarming conſequences are to be apprehended. It is not the abſence of theſe troops that would be any way prejudicial, but the effect it muſt have, not only on the enemy, but on the mind of Futty Sing, and in his intereſts who deſerves every conſideration as an ally of the conſpiracy, who has proved himſelf ſo, and riſked the enmity of his former friends on their account: he has urged me repeatedly to aſſiſt him with five or ſix lacks of rupees, for which he is ready to give ſecurity and aſſignments upon his own Pergunnahs, ſhould he fail in repaying it at the promiſed period. To a man thus in poſſeſſion of country there can be no riſk in lending money; on the contrary, the greateſt political benefit may be derived, and claims eſtabliſhed through his kingdom, which the Company might hereafter aſſert at pleaſure. Should our own neceſſities be urged as a reaſon why we cannot avail ourſelves of his preſent diſtreſs, they may furniſh a cauſe why we might not aſſiſt him to the extent he wiſhes; but ſtill we ought to exert ourſelves all we can upon the occaſion; and beſides it may not be neceſſary to pay the whole amount at preſent, but to give ſecurity for its being paid at the expiration of one or two months: if this plan meets with your approbation, which I have reaſon to hope from every circumſtance it will, let me beg you will ſend authority from your Committee to ſettle it on the moſt advantageous footing for the Company, the amount to which you think it neceſſary to limit me; and alſo give directions to your Chief of Surat and Broach to advance ſuch proportion of money for this buſineſs as you may deem moſt conſiſtent with their views and means. Appendix No. 257. B.

Signed the following letter to General Goddard: Thurſday, April 6th 1780.

To Brigadier General Goddard.

Sir,

We have duly received your letters of the 24th and 27th ultimo, with thoſe antecedent thereto, ſince your departure from Ahmadavad.

The equivocal and myſterious conduct of Madjee Scindia, leaves us much at a loſs as to his real views and intentions; but whatever may be the active and vigorous meaſures you have purſued, we think they cannot fail having a good effect, and haſtening a deciſion, which, as the ſeaſon advances faſt, we moſt ardently hope will ſpeedily be produced, that you may be at liberty to employ the army to more advantage than watching the motions of Madjee Scindia.

In the preſent ſituation of affairs, and whilſt Futty Sing is actually in the field as our auxiliary in the war, it ſeems to us not neceſſary to ſend a gentleman to his Durbar reſident on the part of this Government; but when it may be judged a convenient time for ſettling the point yet remaining to be adjuſted, this meaſure can then be adopted. In the mean time Mr. Malet may be employed on any occaſional buſineſs with Futty Sing, in which you may judge his aſſiſtance neceſſary, as his ſituation at Cambay will enable him to attend at the ſhorteſt warning, and his knowledge of the language and politics of the country fully qualify him for the employment.

Neither do we as yet judge it expedient to make uſe of the privilege you have obtained for the Company of eſtabliſhing a factory at Ahmadavad.

As Mr. Farmer's application has been referred to the Governor General and Council, we cannot take upon us to decide upon it.

We are very ſenſible of your attention and trouble in giving us your thoughts ſo fully on the propoſed augmentation of our military ſtrength, from which we doubt not to derive very eſſential advantage and information, in the arrangement we ſhall now very ſpeedily make.

The Preſident has laid before us an extract of your letter to him on the ſubject of a propoſed loan to Futty Sing.

Whatever benefit or good conſequences might be expected from our compliance with this propoſal, we can aſſure you with the utmoſt truth, the thing is in itſelf utterly impracticable in the preſent ſtate of our finances; you cannot but be ſenſible, in what difficulties it involved us to ſpare the ſums which we have ſupplied for the ſervice of the army; and our wants now preſs ſo hard upon us that we can hardly raiſe money for the payment of our garriſon and other indiſpenſable occaſions, much leſs can we anſwer this unforeſeen demand: and ſhould we even attempt to raiſe the ſum by a loan, or in any other manner, the ſcarcity of ſpecie would alone inevitably prevent our attempt ſucceeding; even could we entertain a thought of diverting any money we could obtain to any other object than the preſſing exigencies of this Government.

We requeſt you will continue your directions to Major Fullarton to enliſt ſuch recruits as he may be able for this Preſidency, upon the ſame footing as the other Sepoys upon this eſtabliſhment.

Thurſday 16th. RECEIVED the following letter from General Goddard:—

Goddard Gen. letter from.

Gentlemen,

I wrote to you from Fazilpore, acquainting you of my having croſſed the Myhie, on the ſouth bank of which I remained encamped the 7th inſtant; and on the 8th marched to this place, on the Beſwamuntry Nuddy, within two miles of Broach. I have yet met with no ſort of attempt to moleſt the followers of the camp from Scindia's troops: nor have they, by any act ſince quitting the neighbourhood of our Pergunnahs, teſtified a hoſtile diſpoſition in their maſter towards the Engliſh; on the contrary, he has himſelf, as far as was in his power, endeavoured to evince his own friendly inclinations, by releaſing voluntarily and unaſked, Meſſrs. Farmer and Stewart from their confinement, and diſmiſſing them to my camp, where I have the pleaſure to inform you they arrived ſafe the evening of yeſterday. He at the ſame time deputed Appajee Subajee to deliver them over to me, with letters from himſelf and Holkar, ſetting forth the proofs he had formerly given of his friendly intentions to the Engliſh at Worgaun, he having perſiſted in the ſame ſentiments towards them, till the preſent period; which was ſufficiently manifeſted in the treatment he had given Meſſrs. Farmer and Stewart, during their reſidence in his camp, and particularly in the liberty he had now granted them to return; and that he wiſhed to know whether our inclinations were of a hoſtile or friendly nature towards the Peiſhwa and himſelf, as from our conduct hitherto, he had reaſon to believe the former? In anſwer to this, I told Appajee Subajee, that his maſter could not be a ſtranger to the diſpoſition of the Engliſh to live in terms of peace and amity with the Peiſhwa's Government; that to this effect, I had made fair and equitable propoſals of accommodation to the Miniſter, which had been rejected by him; and that in conſequence of this refuſal, the Engliſh had been compelled to enter upon a war, in defence and vindication of their own rights and honours; that their quarrel was with the Miniſter, to whoſe obſtinate and pernicious councils the evil that might befal the Maratta State in the courſe of this war, muſt alone be attributed; that they had no cauſe of enmity againſt Scindia whatever, but on the contrary were conſcious of the favourable diſpoſition he had always ſhewn to their intereſts; and if he continued to prove himſelf their friend, were ready to teſtify their ſenſe of his ſervices, and unite in any plan that might be propoſed and adopted for their mutual benefit.

After converſing ſome time, the Vackeel told me that his maſter was equally with us the enemy of Nanah Furneeſe; ſince, notwithſtanding he was indebted for all his preſent greatneſs and ſecurity to the powerful aid of Scindia, who had confined both Siccaram and Moraba, he had acted with the blackeſt ingratitude, and had leagued with the Booſla and Nizam againſt Scindia. He dwelt much upon the power of his own maſter, and the inferior light in which the Miniſter ought to be conſidered, being in fact entirely ſubject to the controul and direction of Scindia. He concluded with declaring, that the inclinations of the Engliſh and Scindia were, he found, reciprocally friendly to each other, and hoſtile towards Nanah; and requeſted I would upon theſe grounds make ſuch propoſals to his maſter as might be conſiſtent with the views, and conducive to the intereſts of both parties.

I plainly perceived from the converſation of this man that his drift was to obtain from me the firſt overtures towards a particular connection with Scindia, either with a view of giving his maſter a ſuperiority in the courſe of the negociation, if he was ſincere in the friendly wiſh he then expreſſed, or if he meant to deceive, to draw ſuch a diſcovery from me as might be of ſervice to his own deſigns: I therefore contented myſelf for the preſent with obſerving, in addition to what I have above mentioned, that it would be a circumſtance perfectly agreeable to the Engliſh, if Scindia heartily united with them againſt the Miniſter; and that with reſpect to the future ſettlement of the Government of Poonah, as he muſt be the beſt judge how it might be effected in the moſt eligible and beneficial manner, I wiſhed to receive his ſentiments upon the ſubject, to which I would reply with candour and ſincerity.

Senſible how important a firm alliance with Scindia would be to the intereſt of the Company at this juncture; and how deciſive with reſpect to the object of our preſent operations, as well as on account of the line of conduct the Honourable the Governor General and Council recommended me to purſue regarding this Chief; I have at the ſame time given him every proper encouragement to unite himſelf with the Engliſh, and in general terms held forth to him the honour and advantage he muſt ultimately derive from ſo conſiderable and diſtinguiſhing a connection. The Vackeel has this morning ſent off to his maſter the particulars of what paſſed; and I expect to receive an explicit anſwer to-morrow, from which I ſhall be able to form a more certain idea of his real views, and what plan muſt ultimately be reſolved upon regarding him. I beg to aſſure you, that I ſhall not be ſeduced by the ſhining advantages this alliance offers, to place any implicit confidence in his profeſſions, but ſhall act in the negociation with the utmoſt circumſpection and deliberation, and guard, as far as human prudence and foreſight can determine, againſt every poſſibility of deceit.

Permit me to requeſt that you will favour me as early as poſſible with your ſentiments on the conduct proper to be purſued regarding this Chief; and in the mean time believe that I ſhall be guided by an invariable attention to the objects contained in the general plan concluded with you for the ſucceſsful concluſion of our preſent conteſts with the Maratta empire. I ſhall not fail to give you the earlieſt information reſpecting this buſineſs in my power.

And have the honour to be,
Gentlemen,
Your moſt obedient
humble ſervant,
Thomas Goddard.

APPENDIX, No. 260.

Bombay Select Conſultations, 24th March 1780.

Gentlemen,

Since my letter of the 10th inſtant, which informed you of the arrival of Meſſrs. Farmer and Stewart in my camp, and the converſation I had held with Apajee Subaiee, who accompanied them on the part of Scindia, I have entertained hopes of being able to communicate to you ſomething deciſive with regard to the negociation ſet on foot by that Chief; but notwithſtanding the expected anſwers have arrived, I am ſorry it is not in my power to ſatisfy you further on this important point.

Goddard Gen. letter from.

Theſe anſwers from Scindia and Holcar were delivered me laſt night by the Vackeel, and contained only general declarations of their own friendly ſentiments, and the ſatisfaction they had derived from my aſſurances of the favourable inclinations of the Engliſh towards them; requeſting further, that as the buſineſs to be mutually adjuſted was of the moſt important nature, I would ſend a confidential perſon to their camp, fully informed of the views views of the Engliſh, with whom they might come to a final ſettlement and determination. After the proofs ſo recently given by Scindia, of his wiſh to preſerve the good opinion and friendſhip of the Engliſh, I could not with any propriety have heſitated to ſhew him this mark of my confidence, had it appeared neceſſary to the ſucceſs of our negociation, or even calculated to promote it in any degree; but, excluſive of a certain conviction in my own mind to the contrary, I further conſider that the deputing a perſon to him at this time would carry the appearance of being too eager in making overtures which might be conſtrued in an unfavourable light; and was beſides particularly improper, from the circumſtance of Scindia's having correſponded with me under the ſeal of the Peiſhwa; and that ſince the refuſal of the Miniſter to accede to the terms I had propoſed, all propoſals for accommodation ought to be firſt made by their Government.

I therefore declined ſending any perſon immediately from myſelf to Scindia, but in ſuch a manner as to avoid impreſſing him with a belief that my diſſent aroſe from any motives of diſtruſt, or a want of alliance on his honour or ſincerity; and have given Apajee Sabajee leave to return to his maſter, empowered to offer every general aſſurance on the part of the Engliſh, of the proper ſenſe they have of his ſervices, and their wiſh to continue on terms of amity with him; if by his conduct he will give them an opportunity of proving their friendly diſpoſition and deſire to promote his intereſts, in conjunction with their own. Apajee Sabajee ſet out this day for his maſter's camp, which is about ten coſs diſtant, with a promiſe of returning the day after to-morrow; to which period, I have thought it neceſſary to limit him, as Scindia will have ſufficient leiſure to deliberate fully upon the meaſures he wiſhes to propoſe, and at the ſame time an excuſe for further delays be avoided. I have conſented, however much againſt my inclination, to the delay hitherto practiſed, from the probability there appears of ſucceeding in this negociation, and the certain and deciſive advantages an union of intéreſts with Scindia will give us in the preſent war. Since croſſing the Mybé his army has alſo remained perfectly quiet in the neighbourhood of Paun-Ghur, and the Company's Pergunnahs do not experience the effects of their ravages and depredations. My next will, I flatter myſelf, give you that certain and poſitive intelligence I am ſo deſirous of conveying to you.

Goddard. Gen. letter from.

Gentlemen,

On the 10th inſtant I had the pleaſure of acquainting you with the ſafe arrival of Meſſrs. Farmer and Stewart in my camp, ſince which I have received a letter from the former, copy whereof accompanies this. In conſideration of the circumſtances under which theſe gentlemen became priſoners in the camp of Madjee Scindia, the hardſhips they muſt have undergone during their confinement, not ſo much on account of any actual ſeverity they may have met with, and of which indeed they do not complain, as from the idea that their lives were become forfeited to the capricious pleaſure of a perſon who might think himſelf juſtified in adopting the harſheſt meaſures; I conceived a particular happineſs in ſeeing them enter my camp in ſafety; and I conſidered this conduct in Madjee Scindia, in voluntarily delivering up their perſons, as moſt fortunate to themſelves, and highly honourable to the Engliſh name.

I ſhould therefore have been exceedingly happy to relieve Mr. Farmer from the inconvenience he ſays he has ſuffered in his private fortune, on account of the money he found neceſſary to advance to procure his enlargement, and to which, I beg leave to add, he appears to me very well entitled; but as in my inſtructions from the Honourable Governor General and Council, I received no orders on the ſubject of the releaſe of theſe gentlemen, nor was any proviſion made for the circumſtance that has now happened, and which indeed they could not foreſee; I have been under the neceſſity of declining to comply with his requeſt myſelf, but have, as he further ſolicited, referred and ſtrongly recommended his caſe to the conſideration of the Bengal Government. Appendix. No. 260.

I ſhould be wanting in juſtice to Mr. Farmer, did I not avail myſelf of the preſent opportunity to teſtify, in the ſtrongeſt and moſt public manner, my ſenſe of his attention to the Company's intereſts, as ſtrikingly proved in the danger to which he expoſed himſelf, by tranſmitting me at different times from the camp of Madjee Scindia advices of the ſtate of affairs there, and of the movements of his army, together with ſuch other uſeful intelligence regarding the intentions of the ſeveral Maratta leaders, as could come within his knowledge; I am for this reaſon further induced to recommend his caſe to your particular attention, and, as he has repreſented to me the extreme inconvenience he muſt ſuffer in his private affairs from the delay of the payment of the ſum he has advanced, to hope you will deem it conſiſtent with your own ſentiments of Mr. Farmer's merits to afford him immediate relief from his preſent embarraſſments, without waiting for the reſult of the reference I have thought it neceſſary to make to the Government of Bengal.

Copy of a Letter from Mr William Gamul Farmer to General Goddard.

To Brigadier General Goddard.

Sir,

It had been long ago propoſed to me to be deputed to you in order to endeavour at an accommodation between you and Scindia; but the mode was, that Mr. Stewart ſhould be left as a ſecurity for my return, which was in fact doing nothing effectual as to our releaſe; becauſe in the event that no accommodation took place, we ſhould have remained juſt where we were. I perceived that they had it really in mind to depute ſomebody, and they alſo wiſhed that I ſhould go with this perſon. On this ground I held out, that if Scindia would permit me to go, I would endeavour the moſt in my power to effect the buſineſs to his ſatisfaction. I further obſerved, that if to the ſervices on which he founded certain claims, he added the full and ample releaſe of Mr. Stewart and myſelf, it would be an act that, added to his treatment of us, would give him great calls on the gratitude of the Engliſh, and go very far to convince them that he looked to a laſting connection with them. This ſuggeſtion I was told was a very good one, and that it would be made uſe of; but it was inſinuated to me that I knew the Miniſters of Scindia's Durbar were obliged annually to make large preſents to their Chief; and that the only reſources they had were the opportunities of rendering ſervices to people in affairs they might have at the Durbar; that the releaſe of Mr. Stewart and myſelf was one of theſe opportunities; and that I muſt reflect, that as the agreements we were hoſtages for were of no leſs value to Scindia than the ſum of twelve lacks per annum, at any other period than the preſent, he might perhaps inſiſt on ſome pecuniary compenſation for himſelf; and that then as the amount might be beyond my abilities to ſatisfy it, we had little proſpect, if the preſent moment paſſed by, of any thing better than a very very tedious confinement; that it would therefore be wiſe in me not to let ſlip this opportunity of extricating ourſelves from a very diſagreeable ſituation. There ſeemed to me a great deal of reaſon alſo in this argument, and knowing that it was impoſſible to effect a buſineſs of this kind without previouſly ſecuring the Miniſters, I accordingly begun treating, on the footing that the ranſom would be entirely at my own expence, as I had formerly taken care to have them convinced that the Company would not pay a rupee towards it. They began by talking of a lack, then 75,000, from which I brought them down to half a lack; and after much diſcuſſion I finally concluded for 35,000, to be paid to the different Miniſters of Scindia's Durbar, part on our receiving our public diſmiſſion, and the remainder on the ſafe delivery of Mr. Stewart and myſelf into your hands; there was then no kind of difficulty; the buſineſs was taken up on the footing I had pointed out; and we have once more the happineſs of being reſtored to the ſociety of our own countrymen.

When we became hoſtages for the treaty of Worgaum, as far as I could then perceive it was deemed a meritorious ſervice, and I believe no one thought that we were to be left expoſed without conſideration as ſacrifices to the reſentment of the Marattas. I truſt therefore, that in the opinion of every man the expenſe of our releaſe ſhould be borne by thoſe for whoſe intended benefit we did expoſe ourſelves to what we have already ſuffered. On this footing it may perhaps happen, that in the event I have acted for the benefit of the Honourable Company; for ſhould no accommodation take place, and I had not embraced the opportunity of the preſent moment, it would poſſibly hereafter have been requiſite to have made ſome pecuniary compenſation to Scindia himſelf, and in that caſe the preſent ſum is trifling to what would have been demanded; as it has been heretofore hinted to me, that if my employers did not intend to comply with the treaty, they ought in juſtice to ſet on foot ſome endeavours for our releaſe, and that for the value of five or ſix lacks to Scindia and his Miniſters, the buſineſs might be effected. If I could have paid ready money it would have been poſſible to have accompliſhed this buſineſs for a leſs ſum, but it was only in my power to pay a part, and for the reſt I have paſſed ſuch obligations, and given ſuch ſecurity as will render my private fortune anſwerable for the payment; and I have alſo left my Dewan and another perſon there as further ſecurity. I have thus, Sir, taken the liberty to ſubmit the whole tranſaction to you; and conclude by requeſting that you will enable me, from the public caſh, to ſatisfy theſe obligations.

Having underſtood that the Honourable Governor General and Council have veſted you with the entire and uncontrouled conduct of all affairs on this ſide that may have any relation with the Marattas, I thought that the foregoing could with propriety only be addreſſed to you; and I have been rather fuller than perhaps might at firſt appear neceſſary, in order to ſave you the trouble of explaining the juſt ground on which my requeſt is founded: I muſt alſo aſſure you, that bad as our ſituation would probably have been on the event of hoſtilities with Scindia, I would gladly have been content to have expoſed myſelf to the worſt, ſooner than bring any expence on the Honourable Company; but from what I heard of the general apprehenſions relative to the fate of Mr. Stewart and myſelf, I thought that being freed from theſe apprehenſions, you would alſo be freer to take every opportunity againſt Scindia, without any burthen to your private feelings; and further, that in caſe by the events of war any Chief ſhould fall into your hands, whoſe abſence would diſtreſs him or Holkar, that advantage might be loſt by the exchange that you might be induced to make of them for us; and I know perfectly that the capture of certain Chiefs would diſtreſs them, becauſe without their Sirdars, the men would either refuſe to act, or moſt probably altogether diſband themſelves.

I beg leave to conclude by obſerving, that I make no claims on the Company for all that I have ſuffered both of body and mind, during a tedious confinement in the Maratta camp, nor for the hazard it is certain I have undergone; that my life was not made anſwerable by the Marattas for the failure of thoſe engagements for which I pledged it in their hands. I ſimply requeſt, that to theſe ſufferings and theſe hazards may not be added a loſs which would go far to conſume all I have been labouring for in this climate during a courſe of near 18 years, devoted to the ſervice of the Honourable Company.

I am, with great reſpect,
Sir,

humble ſervant,
Will. Gan^l Farmer.

Gentlemen,

Goddard Gen. letter from.

The expected propoſals on the part of Madjee Scindia have at length been made me through Abajee Sabajee, who yeſterday brought me letters from his maſter, filled only with general expreſſions of friendſhip, and referring me for particulars to his man. He accordingly, after repeating Scindia's enmity to the Miniſter Nana Furneeſe, and his wiſh to unite with the Engliſh in removing him from the Adminiſtration, and ſettling it upon a plan more conſiſtent with the intereſt of both parties, made me the following propoſal:—That formerly when Ragoba was at Tellaugaum, after the return of the Engliſh army to Bombay, an agreement had been entered into betwixt him and Scindia, and written engagements mutually exchanged for its performance, wherein the former conſented to relinquiſh all claims to any ſhare in the Adminiſtration at Poonah, and to retire towards Jeney, where he ſhould receive an allowance from the Peiſhwa's revenue of twelve lacks of rupees per annum; that the Sicca ſhould continue to be ſtruck in the name of the young Peiſhwa Maderow Narrain, and that Bajerow, the ſon of Ragoba, ſhould be appointed his Duan; but that as he was too young to tranſact the buſineſs of the office himſelf, being only four years of age, the care and management of it ſhould be left entirely to Scindia, by which means the ſole controul and direction of the Government would come into his hands. This plan Scindia propoſed ſhould now be purſued, that Ragoba ſhould immediately go himſelf to Jeney, and young Bajerow accompany him to Poonah, in order to fix the Adminiſtration in the manner above mentioned. This was the amount of what Scindia had authorized Sabajee to propoſe, without any reſervation or other clauſe whatever; and as it appeared plain his only drift was to get Ragoba and his ſon into his own power, by which means he meant to aggrandize himſelf in the State, without regard to the intereſts of the Engliſh, and perhaps through their means to make his own terms with the Miniſter, I have thought it proper to diſmiſs the Vackeel with this pointed and poſitive anſwer, that the Engliſh cannot, conſiſtent with their honour, nor ever will, agree to put any reſtraint upon Ragoba, or compel him to leave their dominions, where he has received an aſylum, againſt his own conſent: that however much they might be induced to unite in the propoſed ſettlement, they muſt be perfectly ſatisfied reſpecting the ſafety of young Bajerow, and every thing muſt be quietly ſettled at Poonah, before his preſence would be expedient, or even neceſſary there; and that admitting the Engliſh did agree to aſſiſt in putting the power of the State into the hands of Scindia, it was neceſſary that he alſo ſhould, on his part, and in the name of the Peiſhwa, conſent to the performance of certain conditions favourable to their intereſts, as well in conſideration of the important advantages he was to receive through their means, as to compenſate for the heavy expence of the wars, which formerly and in particular at this time, they had been involuntarily compelled compelled to wage with the Maratta State. With this anſwer I this morning diſmiſſed Abajee Sabajee to his maſter; and as in explaining fully my ſentiments to him, and giving him to underſtand I could not conſent to any that were of a diſhonourable nature, I at the ſame time uſed every endeavour to convince him of my ſincere inclination towards an accommodation; if his deſign is really to unite with the Engliſh, it will be at once proved by the conduct he adopts on receiving my anſwer. One circumſtance which tends to eſtabliſh a belief of his hoſtile intentions, and which I think proper to mention to you is, that he wrote to Govind Row, the diſaffected brother of Futty Sing, who has long reſided with the Sundarvaree Rajah, inviting him to his camp, and promiſing to put him in poſſeſſion of the Guicawar ſhare of Guzerat; and I this evening learn that he has actually arrived and been received by Scindia.

I propoſe halting to-morrow, when I ſhall determine upon the ſteps it will be neceſſary to follow, and immediately inform you.

Monday 3d. RECEIVED the two following letters from General Goddard:—

Goddard, Gen. letter from.

Gentlemen,

Agreeable to the intention expreſſed in my former letter, I have, in conſequence of your deſire, taken the liberty of ſending my opinion on the ſubject of the propoſed augmentation of your military eſtabliſhment; in doing which, I have further preſumed to lay before you, ſuch plan for the complete regulation of your army, as appears to me calculated to anſwer the uſeful, and at this time, neceſſary purpoſe of increaſing your military ſtrength, and at the ſmalleſt additional expence poſſible. I have endeavoured to be as full and as explicit as I could, in order to ſatisfy every doubt, and remove every difficulty, which muſt unavoidably ſuggeſt itſelf in the firſt introduction of a change, ſo entire and important as the arrangements I have now propoſed in every department will occaſion in your ſervice. If any points yet remain to be explained, I ſhall eſteem myſelf happy at an opportunity of elucidating to your ſatisfaction; and I beg leave only to add, that as I ſhall conſider it moſt fortunate and honourable to me, if the thoughts I have expreſſed in the incloſed papers meet with your approbation, ſo I do not doubt being freely excuſed for the trouble I may give you in the peruſal of them, if they ſhould not be found to anſwer the good and uſeful purpoſes for which they were intended.

In my laſt letter, I informed you of the diſmiſſing Scindia's Vackeel, and my intention to move towards him. I have accordingly advanced to a place called Pittoul, on the banks of the Biſwanuntry Nuddy, and about eight miles to the eaſt of Brodra. On the day of my arrival here, I found Scindia had ſent his camp equipage, buzar, baggage, &c. for ſecurity to the neighbourhood of Paungbun, and himſelf with the greateſt part of his army, unincumbered with any ſort of baggage whatever, had taken poſt at the diſtance of about twelve miles; the remainder of his troops he had diſperſed in different bodies round himſelf, and on the road leading to my camp, ſo as to be effectually guarded againſt every poſſibility of a ſurprize, which he is much afraid of, and which I have ſtudied all in my power to obtain an opportunity of attempting with any proſpect of ſucceſs; but on account of the diſpoſition above deſcribed, hitherto to no effect. I am anxious to accompliſh this, becauſe from the nature of his army, and the mode of war he practiſes, I can neither approach near enough to attack him ſuddenly to advantage, nor will he riſk the hazard of meeting me openly in the field. If I advance, he will certainly retreat; and to think of purſuing him beyond his preſent encampment, would not be the means of bringing on a deciſive action, nor could it be attended with any real or ſolid benefit, proportioned to the inconvenience of expoſing the Company's and Futty Sing's poſſeſſions in the Guzerat, to the inroads and depredations of a ravaging enemy, from which they are at preſent entirely free. I think it neceſſary to mention to you, that ſince the diſmiſſion of Scindia's Vackeel, I have received no ſort of meſſage or overture from him whatever; and that notwithſtanding the reports, and the general belief of an enmity ſubſiſting betwixt him and the Miniſter; the agents of the latter reſide in his camp, and I am credibly informed, letters are conſtantly paſſing and repaſſing betwixt them; from all theſe circumſtances, I am confirmed in the conjecture which Scindia's late conduct ſuggeſted, that the ſhew of his animoſity againſt Nana Furneſe, was an entire pretext to deceive the Engliſh, and get the perſons of Ragoba and his ſon into his hands, for purpoſes merely for his own advantage, and attaining the accompliſhment of his views with the Miniſter. I ſhall write you very ſhortly, and have the honour to be,

P. S.—In conſequence of the intention expreſſed in your former letter, of raiſing two new battalions immediately, I gave orders to Major Fullarton, commanding the detachment at Ahmadavad, to entertain ſome Sepoy recruits, of which numbers were offering themſelves; and as I have reaſon to believe that country the beſt nurſery for ſoldiers on this ſide of India, I take the liberty of further propoſing that you will allow me to authorize Major Fullarton to enliſt ſuch number as you may judge requiſite to complete the augmentation propoſed to take place in your military eſtabliſhment.

Thomas Goddard.

Gentlemen,

Goddard, Gen. letter from.

My letter of the 24th inſtant informed you particularly how affairs were ſituated reſpecting Scindia, in which ſtate they remained without any alteration till this morning, when it became requiſite to move ground on account of a ſcarcity of water at the former encampment; I accordingly determined upon marching to this place, which was about five miles diſtant, and upon my approach, found a large party of the enemy's horſe had occupied the village of Camloud, cloſe to which it was neceſſary to encamp. As I advanced nearer, their numbers continued to increaſe, till obtaining a more diſtinct view, I perceived their whole army had collected in its neighbourhood, covering a ſpace of at leaſt three miles in extent, on the right and left, and the rear of the village. I therefore immediately ordered the line to form, and advanced in order of battle to the village, which, after firing a few rockets, they precipitately abandoned; but as their army ſtill ſhewed themſelves upon the plain in front, diſpoſed to annoy the troops, I thought it neceſſary, for the eaſe and convenience of the camp, to diſperſe them, and accordingly ordered a few diſcharges of the artillery, which had the deſired effect, and they immediately fled with the loſs of ſome men and horſes, nor have they ſince appeared to give me any diſturbances.

I cannot exactly aſcertain their preſent ſituation, any farther than that their guns and baggage are moved to a conſiderable diſtance out of reach, and where it would neither be conſiſtent with good policy to follow them, nor could it be attended with any immediate advantage, as they would contrive to carry them to a ſtill greater diſtance as they advanced. I ſhall obtain every neceſſary information reſpecting the enemy, after which I ſhall determine upon the ſteps proper to be taken, and give you inſtant intelligence.

Gentlemen,

Goddard, Gen. letter from.

IN my letter of the 27th ultimo, I communicated to you the circumſtances that happened the day of my arrival at this place; ſince which time nothing of any conſequence has occurred, till this morning, when finding the enemy would neither venture to come to a fair and deciſive action themſelves, nor put it in my power to attack them with all the advantage I could have wiſhed, having ſent their guns and ſtanding encampment at too great a diſtance in their rear for me poſſibly to overtake them; I came to the reſolution of diſlodging their army from the poſt they then occupied with their horſes and arms, only about ſix miles from my camp, and marched myſelf for that purpoſe at two o'clock with a part of the army, leaving the remainder at the former ground, under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Hartley. The force I took with me conſiſted of 200 Europeans, ten grenadier companies of Sepoys, the 4th and 7th battalions of Bengal, and the 8th battalion of Bombay infantry, together with 2 twelves, and 10 ſix pounders of artillery: I alſo took with me the regiment of Mogul cavalry and Candahar horſe. Theſe I divided into two lines, giving the command of the rear line to Major Hopkins, which conſiſted of two battalions of Sepoys, with the cavalry divided on either flank. Lieutenant Colonel Baillie and Major Forbes were ſtationed to the front line.

The ſituation in which I knew the enemy to be poſted, the care they took to prevent being ſurprized, and the eaſe and expedition with which they would be able to move off upon the firſt alarm being given, gave me no hopes of coming upon them unprepared, and ſurprizing them effectually; but the objects I principally had in view were to induce them to venture an action with only a part of the army oppoſed to their whole force; to drive them from the poſt they then occupied; or if they fled without reſiſtance, to prove the manifeſt ſuperiority of our arms in the moſt ſtriking and honourable manner. I am happy to inform you, the event has far exceeded my expectations; I approached much nearer to their camp, without being diſcovered by any of their ſmall out-poſts, than I could have conceived poſſible, and a little before day-break came upon their grand guard, conſiſting of ſix or ſeven thouſand men, and commanded by Parajee Punt and Baghretty Scindia, which I paſſed through without diſcharging a ſhot, determined to reſerve my fire till I came to the main body under Madjee Scindia himſelf. This being a mile and a half in front, I did not reach till about ſunriſe, when their whole army was in motion, and the action immediately commenced. Seeing the inferiority of our force, and preſuming upon their own numbers, they advanced with much appearance of courage and reſolution, but were received by ſo warm and well-directed a fire from our artillery, that they were obliged to give way, and in the ſpace of about an hour quitted the field entirely. In order to diſlodge a large body of the enemy, who were very troubleſome to the troops by firing matchlocks and rockets from behind the cover of ſome buſhes on the right flank of the line, I ordered the regiment of cavalry and the Candahar horſe to advance; which ſervice they performed with equal ſpirit and ſucceſs, and having drove them to the plain, gave an excellent opportunity for the artillery to fire upon them as they retired.

After remaining two hours upon this ground, and the Marattas not daring to make their appearance again, I ordered the troops to return to camp, which they did without any further moleſtation from the enemy, or any party of their horſe ſhewing themſelves in the rear. From this circumſtance, and the effect which it was plain our artillery muſt have had among them, I am perſuaded the enemy muſt have ſuffered conſiderably; I cannot at preſent aſcertain it exactly; but the reports of the Hircarrahs who are come in, make the numbers who fell very conſiderable, beſide thoſe who were carried off wounded.

We have ſuſtained no loſs on our ſide, except among the Candahar horſe, of whom fifteen were killed and wounded in charging the enemy as before related, which they did very gallantly; one Mogul trooper is wounded, and alſo one Sepoy by a matchlock ball. I ſhall ſhortly inform you what effect the action of this day has upon Scindia's operations, and beg leave to conclude at preſent by expreſſing to you my ſatisfaction at the ſteady, uniform, and proper behaviour of Major Hopkins, who had charge of the rear line, during the whole of the engagement.

I have the honour to be,
Gentlemen,
Your faithful and obedient ſervant,
Thomas Goddard.

Minute reſpecting the Return of the Bombay Detachment.

Goddard, Gen. no account received of his moving to the ſouthward. Concern to be expreſſed to him at the little proſpect that appears of Baſſein's being reduced before the ſeaſon cloſes. Bombay not to be left deſtitute during the rains.

AS the approach of the monſoon is now ſo near, and we have received no information of General Goddard's moving to the ſouthward, our concern muſt be expreſſed to him, at the little probability there appears of his accompliſhing the moſt material object of our wiſhes, the reduction of Baſſein before the cloſe of this ſeaſon; and it muſt be ſignified to him, that at any rate if he does not move down himſelf, it is abſolutely and indiſpenſably requiſite for the ſafety of this place, that the Bombay detachment ſhould be returned into garriſon before the rains; as it would be the height of imprudence to ſuffer this ſettlement to remain in its preſent deſtitute and defenceleſs ſituation, at a ſeaſon when no ſuccour could be afforded us in caſe of any attempt from the French. The return of our detachment muſt for theſe reaſons be inſiſted on, and the Chief at Surat muſt be directed to provide boats for their embarkation immediately on their arrival from the army.

Our detachment therefore to be called away.

To Brigadier General Goddard.

Goddard, Gen. letter to.

Sir,

OUR laſt letters from you are dated the 3d and 4th of this month.

We obſerved with much pleaſure the advantage gained over the enemy in the action of the 3d, but are impatient to hear from you what effect your ſucceſs may have had on Scindia's operations; and what plan you propoſe purſuing, which, as the ſeaſon grows late, it is of conſequence for us to be informed of as early as poſſible.

The poſſeſſion of Baſſein, conſidered in every point of view, is an object of ſo much importance to the Company, that we cannot help expreſſing our anxiety at the probability there appears of this ſeaſon elapſing, and Baſſein ſtill unſubdued. The danger of ſuch a fortification ſo contiguous to our poſſeſſions, remaining in the hands of the enemy in this time of an European war, and the advantage and ſecurity the acquiſition of it would give to this Preſidency, make us very earneſt in our wiſhes not to leave the reduction of this place to the hazard of future accidents or circumſtances; nor can we think that any other object can claim a preference to your attention, or bring the campaign to a more honourable and advantageous concluſion. The Preſident has acquainted us, that he wrote to you ſome time ago on this ſubject; and the rule we have laid down for our conduct will not permit us to withhold our advice on ſo very material an affair; but ſhould you not intend to move to the ſouthward before the cloſe of the ſeaſon, a due attention to the ſafety of this place, which you muſt be ſenſible is now in a very deſtitute and unprovided ſituation with reſpect to troops, makes it abſolutely and indiſpenſably requiſite that the Bombay detachment under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Hartley ſhould be returned into garriſon as ſoon as poſſible, before the monſoon ſhuts up the communication by ſea; as it would be the height of imprudence to ſuffer this place to remain with ſuch a ſlender force for its defence, at a ſeaſon the moſt favourable for a ſudden attack, and when no relief can be afforded in caſe of any attempts from the French; if therefore your operations for this ſeaſon ſhould be confined to Guzerat, the weighty reaſons above recited, we doubt not, will convince you of the neceſſity of immediately complying with our requiſition for the return of our detachment, a meaſure we cannot diſpenſe with, and ſhall accordingly depend on your ordering it to Surat to be embarked for Bombay, whilſt the weather will permit; on which head we ſhall give the neceſſary orders to Mr. Boddam.

The number of our Europeans, and the preſent diſpoſition of them, will not, we think, for the preſent, admit of our carrying into execution the alterations propoſed by you with reſpect to them, in any manner that will prove of advantage to the ſervice, adequate to the great increaſe of expence; but we have determined immediately to raiſe ſeven additional battalions of Sepoys, in order to complete our eſtabliſhment to fifteen battalions, which will be formed of the ſtrength and model propoſed by you; and we ſhall ſoon adviſe you of the particular arrangement we propoſe making of them.

We have appointed Captains Weſt, Waddington, and Mr Culloch, now ſerving under you, to command three of the new battalions, and hope to hear of Major Fullarton's ſucceſs in raiſing recruits at Ahmedabad.

humble ſervants,

APPENDIX, No. 265.

Bombay Select Conſultations, 8th April 1780. At a Select Committee;—Preſent, the Honourable William Hornby, Eſquire, Preſident and Governor; Daniel Draper, Eſquire.

READ the letter from Tannah received yeſterday.

The village of Culwa and Bellapore fort, to be taken poſſeſſion of.

As we may both take and keep poſſeſſion of the village of Culwa, without difficulty or danger, it being entirely under the command of the guns of Tannah fort; and as our being eſtabliſhed there will command an extent of ſhore on the continent, and leave an opening for our getting ſupplies of grain and proviſions, by removing the Maratta Chowkees to a greater diſtance; likewiſe, as our taking poſſeſſion of Bellapore fort will anſwer the ſame purpoſe in a much more extenſive degree, and give us the entire command of the Maratta ſhore, from Tannah to Bellapore, a ſpace of near 12 miles; it is agreed to take poſſeſſion of both theſe places as ſoon as poſſible, and the Preſident will give the neceſſary orders, with the utmoſt ſecrecy, which is abſolutely neceſſary to be obſerved; and it is moſt probable, that in the execution of theſe meaſures, large quantities of grain will be immediately ſecured, which will prove a very timely ſupply in the preſent ſcarcity of that article. Appendix. Nos. 265 & 266.

Tannah, no batta to paſs from Salſette to Baſſein.

The Chief and factors muſt not permit any batta to paſs to Baſſein; by which means it will remain in the country, and there will be the better chance of obtaining it for our own inhabitants.

APPENDIX, No. 266.

Bombay Select Conſultations, 13th April 1780.

RECEIVED the following letter from Tannah, and one from Captain Campbell to the Chief and factors.

Honourable Sir, and Sirs,

We have the pleaſure to acquaint you, that in conſequence of orders from the Honourable the Preſident to the Chief, Captain Campbell's detachment took poſſeſſion of Parſeek fort early this morning. Encloſed is copy of his letter juſt now received. A ſmall party of Sepoys has alſo taken poſſeſſion of Culwa.

The Major and Engineer will go over this afternoon to examine Parſeek, and report to us what is neceſſary to be added to the fort, and what garriſon is requiſite for its defence.

We ſhall be able to furniſh your Honour, &c. with further particulars, we hope ſhortly.

To John Halſey, Eſquire, Chief, &c. Factors at Tannah.

Gentlemen,

Copy of Captain Campbell's letter to the Chief and factors at Tannah.

At day-break this morning we arrived here, and marched up to the water gate, which we were obliged to break down, though the people within made no reſiſtance, but kept the gate faſt. There was not a ſhot fired from the fort, and there were in it but 15 men as I learn, four of whom we have laid hold of, and I ſend them to you, a Havildar and three Sepoys.

This fort is a miſerable place, would ſcarce contain forty men; but from its ſituation might defend itſelf with thirty men, againſt I think any number, unleſs it were knocked all to pieces. I have poſſeſſion of the church above the fort and keep a picquet there.

I think it would be impoſſible to bring guns againſt the fort, I have brought our field pieces up the hill between the church and fort.

There is no village here, and the troops muſt be proviſioned from Tannah for any thing I can yet ſee.

I wait your directions for my further conduct.

There are ſix ſmall guns mounted in the fort, but they appear to me to be unſerviceable.

I ſend two boats that were found here; in one there are ſome copper pots.

I have no colours for this place but my battalion colours, therefore requeſt one may be ſent here.

I have the honour to remain, with reſpect, Gentlemen,
Your moſt obedient
humble ſervant,
Richd Campbell.

We also wish for your directions as to the other villages near Bellapore, that we may, if they are put under our orders, make the necessary inquiries with respect to batta, &c. as we have already done to the villages near us.

Tannah, letter to.

Gentlemen,

We have received your letter dated yesterday.

The batta belonging to the Sirkar, which may be in the Autgams, or near to Parseek, you have our directions to seize, carefully avoiding to injure the property of private persons, but giving every encouragement to export their batta hither.

You will make the strictest inquiries respecting the quantity of batta laid up by the Marattas in your neighbourhood, and send us your report as soon as possible; at the same time informing us of the state of the country between Culwa and Bellapore.

We are your loving friends,

Sunday.

The following five letters were received by the President from Captain Lendrum respecting the capture of Bellapore and Panwell, and are entered for the information of our honourable employers.

Letter from Captain Lendrum to the President.

Honourable Sir, 12th April 1780. 7 o'clock.

I have sent Mr. Read with the flag of Bellapore, which I surprised at four o'clock this morning: I took it by escalade. The bamboo ladders exactly answered. I had only one European wounded; and killed two of the enemy. Mr. Read mounted the ladder which I placed for him; nothing could be a completer surprise; there were three Europeans in the fort that got off, to my great concern. I have sent to the inhabitants, and given them protection, as you was pleased to order.

I shall wait here with the whole of the men, until I have your orders.

With the greatest respect, I am,
Honourable Sir,
Your most obedient humble servant,
John Lendrum.

P. S. I had Mr. Burchall from Tannah with me, who was at the escalade, and one of them that did it.

2d letter from Captain Lendrum to the President.

Honourable Sir,

I embarked last night with about 300 men, and arrived here at day-break. Finding the enemy was apprized of our coming, by the taking of Bellapore, having an advanced picquet at the Bunder, I was obliged to wait for the two 6 pounders being landed. As soon as the men were formed, about 200 of the Poonah Guardees, that is, disciplined Sepoys, advanced within 400 yards, and from an eminence kept up a continual fire from matchlocks and ginguls. Having the guns with me, I advanced on them to about 250 yards, gave them two round shot, which dispersed them; they retired 300 yards, and then stood and fired; I pushed after them, but on account of the marshy grounds, I could not get the guns up fast enough to give them grape; besides, the Lascars are great poltroons, I could not get them on fast enough. I advanced to the Pagoda, near the large tank, and gave them another shot, which dispersed them. At this discharge of the gun, the arm of the axle-tree snapped off short at the linchpin, and the gun became useless; the axle very improperly is made of black wood; I shall get the axle-tree repaired here. I had not one man killed from their irregular fire; nor could I seize them although I sent a party round the village of Panwell to the southward, hoping to intercept them. I have taken post at the Pagoda, where Captain Carpenter and I will put it in such a state of defence, that I am in hopes it cannot be forced without cannon. There are many inhabitants in Panwell: I have not permitted one of them to be plundered or molested.

Yesterday a man left this place on our taking Bellapore, for more troops. Now this is so near Poonah, I make no doubt both men and guns will be furnished against us; and having good advice here, that there is not, nor did not come down, any force worth mentioning to Bundy, as was reported; and considering the great force in Tannah, if you would be pleased to order me one or two companies of Sepoys from Salsette, that I may give Captain Carpenter, for Bellapore is very thin, only 95 men under the command of Lieutenant Marshall, which is not enough for the fort. The necessary expenditure of cash I will supply for the hire of Biggarees, &c. &c. until I receive your orders. I shall this evening load all the boats I brought up with me with batta, and send to your Honour to Bombay to-morrow. Next springs I hope you will have received a plentiful supply by the merchants from hence, for there is a great store that belongs to them here. The rents of this Pergunnah are chiefly paid in money, which have been mostly paid. The galivat will be well up the river this tide. The inhabitants are apprehensive that you will not retain Panwell, which makes them uncertain about returning. I beg you will please to order ten barrels of powder to Bellapore; and as I presume that place will be kept, also six 4 or 6 pounders, iron, with their carriages, to mount there.

With the greatest respect,
I am, Honourable Sir,
Your humble and obedient servant,
John Lendrum.
Panwell, 13th April 1780. 4 o'clock, P. M.

3d letter from Captain Lendrum to the President.

Honourable Sir,

I have received your Honour's commands of the 13th, and now send Mr. George Hutchinson agreeable to them; the other Cadets I will collect and send also, and the Lascars; but I hope to have your orders regarding Panwell this next flood, as I sent an express at 3 o'clock P. M. the 13th; Panwell is the capital of a large Pergunnah, not in any manner dependant on Bellapore; it will require a good force to remain in it; there is a great quantity of batta in store. I shall not put any in the boats until I have your orders, either to evacuate it or maintain it. I have wrote to Lieutenant Marshall, to deliver the goods to the Vanjairahs, and let them carry them to Bombay. At my taking Bellapore, I gave these people centinels to protect their effects, and I believe they have not lost any part; I have sent and inquired after the goods of any of the Bombay merchants here, but none can be found, for most of the people went off the day before yesterday, when they found Bellapore was taken. There is batta belonging to some of them here, which the Subedar had detained; it can't be well removed until the springs, for the Shybars at the town will not float until then. I shall examine the river that runs E. N. E. up to Tullaja, which I believe is about six miles from Bellapore. There are 82 villages in Bellapore Pergunnah; the revenues I believe is about one lack, or 1½ lack of rupees annually: the parts most exposed, are those villages between Tullaja and Parseek, for the river runs no higher than a little above Tullaja; I shall have the Sircar's book examined, and send a particular list to your Honour.

Mr. Halsey has wrote to me to guard a pass over the hills called Silcaum, near Bellapore, to the north, which I shall do as soon as I return from hence as I propose leaving leaving Captain Carpenter in charge of this poſt, with as great a force as I can, provided I have your orders for maintaining it.

With the greateſt reſpect,
I am
Your moſt obedient
humble ſervant,
John Lendrum.

Panwell,

3 in the morning.

4th letter from Captain Lendrum to the Preſident.

Honourable Sir,

This moment I have received your Honour's letter of the 14th, and ſhall act accordingly. The poſt at the Pagoda I am fortifying with breaſtworks and embrazures, and requeſt you will pleaſe to order me ſix bricklayers here, and the three pounders or four pounders that Captain Carpenter wrote your Honour for. I hope theſe ſprings I ſhall ſend away 100 boats with batta belonging to ſeveral people here and at Bombay. The tides are ſo low that I cannot get the boats up until tomorrow to the Bunder; I am ſending away all the merchants things that were detained here, I aſſure your Honour nothing was taken from them.

I am not apprehenſive but I will always be able to retreat; the Company of Sepoys will be a great reinforcement for me; I do not think I ſhall want any more, Bellapore is in no danger; I ſhall viſit it myſelf occaſionally.

I beg you will pleaſe to order ſome here for batta, not too long ones, on account of the ſhoal water.

Pray let the ſix pounders be left at Bellapore, with ſome grape and round ſhot for them, and alſo rammers and ſpunges for them; and ammunition likewiſe for the guns you pleaſe to ſend to this place.

There are only ſix Shybars here, and many of the people have left them.

With the greateſt reſpect,
I am
Your moſt obedient
humble ſervant,
John Lendrum.

14th April 1780.
P.M.

P. S. I beg you will pleaſe to order me a pair of Hircarrahs to procure intelligence.

5th letter from Captain Lendrum to the Preſident.

Honourable Sir,

Nothing extraordinary has happened ſince yeſterday, except laſt night, ſome people firing at our boats as they paſſed from hence to Bellapore, at the mouth of this river, joining to the Bellapore river. The galivat is coming up to the Bunder; an armed boat will protect theſe if you will pleaſe order one here, and I will ſtation her near the village Belpara. There are reports of ſome horſe collecting, their number I cannot aſcertain with any certainty. The Sepoys from Tannah are not yet arrived.

I ſend 16 ſmall boats laden with batta, to the care of Mr. Martin, on account of the merchants: I cannot prevail on them to go themſelves, or ſend it but through me; they are ſo intimidated by the ſtrict order from Poonah, I muſt give them bills on Mr. Martin for the amount. The Bundar is ſo bad, I cannot get away the other boats. I hope you will pleaſe to ſend me ſome boats, for I am afraid Panwell will be burnt; and on account of its great extent, I can ſcarce hope to protect it if the enemy advance.

I ſhall appoint Captain Carpenter Commiſſary of ſtores and proviſions for this detachment, if you will pleaſe to approve it.

The firing laſt night was on the 12 men I detached from Bellapore to Shabajee, but no damage done.

humble ſervant,

Signed the following letter to Tannah:

Gentlemen,

Tannah, letter to.

We have received your letter dated yeſterday. We approve of your giving repairs to Parſeek fort to the amount mentioned in your letter, and acquieſce for the preſent in the garriſon allotted for that fort.

If the four boats are loaded with Sircar's batta, they muſt be taken poſſeſſion of for the benefit of the Honourable Company; but if private property, the proprietors muſt be directed to bring it to Bombay, to diſpoſe of it at this market; and this rule you muſt obſerve with reſpect to any batta that may be found in the Autgaums, or in any other place.

And here we muſt admoniſh you of the purpoſe for which our troops have been ſent to the Continent, and of the neceſſity there is of activity and diſpatch in ſecuring all the grain within your reach, before the enemy can come and deſtroy it. As to the Autgaums, they may be maintained with the ſmalleſt force, and are at all times at our command; they need not however be neglected, but we think the moſt ſervice for the troops, and not to be delayed, is for them to proceed up to Callian, and to eſtabliſh a ſtation and collection of grain there, in the ſame manner as the party from Bellapore have done at Panwell; and this we direct to be done as ſoon as poſſible, unleſs you ſhould judge it not practicable without too much riſk to the troops, which we think by proper meaſures may be rendered very inconſiderable.

Tannah, letter from.

Honourable Sir, and Gentlemen,

We have been favoured with your commands of the 14th inſtant.

The engineer has been called upon to give his opinion of the ſtate of Perſeek fort, and if any repairs were abſolutely neceſſary: encloſed is a copy of his letter. It ſeems eligible that this place ſhould be maintained with a ſmall garriſon, and as it can be made very defenſible with ſuch a one, for the trifling expence of 500 rupees, we have directed the engineer to give it what repairs he ſays is abſolutely requiſite, which we flatter ourſelves your Honour, &c. will approve.

The commandant of the troops having delivered it as his opinion, that one European ſubaltern, one Subedar, three Jemidars, ſix Havildars, ſix Naiques, and one hundred Sepoys, with one bombardier, five matroſſes, and 12 Laſcars, will be ſufficient for the preſent defence of Perſeek fort; we have in conſequence of the orders contained in your letter of the 14th, directed Captain Campbell to leave the above detachment at Parſeek, and march with the remainder of his force to the Autgaums, and other villages in the neighbourhood, in ſearch of the Sircars batta. He is deſired carefully to avoid injuring private property, but to give every encouragement to the inhabitants.

Advice having been received by the Chief from the other ſide, that a ſmall party of horſe and foot were ravaging the villages in the Bellapore diſtrict, he deſired the Major to ſend a detachment over, to prevent them from coming, at leaſt on the weſt ſide of the diſtrict, but he ſaid he could not ſpare a man; we have therefore directed him to recal a company of Sepoys from the outpoſts, who with forty of thoſe at preſent at Culwa, will we hope be ſufficient to protect the villages on this ſide the hills.

Ten boats, containing about 70 morahs of batta (two of which have been before mentioned to your Honour, &c.) that were proceeding to Baſſein, were brought into our Bunder ſome days ago. We requeſt your orders what is to be done with it.

Copy of a Letter from the Engineer at Tannah to the Reſident and Factors.

Gentlemen,

Agreeable to your orders I went this morning with the commanding officer, Major Weſtphall, to examine the fort Perſeek, ſituated on the right ſhore of Callian river, and I have now the honour to inform you, that the walls of the fort are here and there not above eight or ten feet high from the ground to the embraſures and to the creſt of the parapets, which ſubjects thoſe parts to be eaſily eſcaladed: others, particularly thoſe which ought to command the brow of the hill, are ſomewhat too low, and therefore commanded from the hill before them. The embraſures are much damaged and too confined, and require therefore more opening; a good many loop holes ought alſo to be made, and the banquets repaired, &c. Thoſe little alterations and repairs, abſolutely requiſite, if only a ſmall garriſon of 50 men ſhould be intended to be kept there, will not admit of a regular eſtimate, but cannot, as I imagine, come to above 500 rupees, including the boat hire for bringing the chunam, bricks, and other materials from Tannah to Perſeek fort. I have nothing more to add, but that I am, with reſpect, gentlemen,

Honourable Sir, and Sirs,

I encloſe a duplicate of my addreſs to your Honour, &c. under the 10th inſtant.

Dulop's fleet arrived this morning at Sevendrog, and every information ſays they are to act jointly with the troops againſt this place. I requeſt that your Honour, &c. will be pleaſed to ſend the additional reinforcement immediately.

I am, with the greateſt reſpect,
Honourable Sir, and Sirs,
Your moſt obedient
humble ſervant,
George Dick.

Fort Victoria,
13th February 1780.

Honourable Sir, and Gentlemen,

Your commands of the 28th January per Drake came to hand the 9th inſtant, and the packet for General Goddard was immediately forwarded to him. By the lateſt advices from him, dated the 5th current, they were then on their march from Pitlatt, about 25 coſs from Ahmedabad, which capital they expected to reach the 8th or 9th at fartheſt. Surat. letter from the Chief.

The three field pieces and howitzers have been landed, and the General duly acquainted of their arrival; alſo the Ghee, and the boat diſpatched on to Broach agreeable to your directions; and in conſequence of General Goddard's requeſt, I have taken charge of the conſignment of treaſure for the ſervice of the army brought by the Britannia.

A party of Maratta horſe having come up from Baſſein, I have been neceſſitated to withdraw our people placed in the Tannah at Verſaul, it being a place entirely open, and not capable of being defended, as otherwiſe they would in all probability have run the riſk of being cut off, as the town is ſituated three miles from the landing place, and it would have been almoſt impoſſible for them to have retreated, had the enemy got between them and the ſea-ſhore. They are aſſembling near Polners, to about 3 or 4,000 horſe and a few foot, under Gunniſs Punt, and another officer. Of the above circumſtance I have duly adviſed General Goddard, and at the ſame time repreſented to him the abſolute neceſſity of his ſending as ſpeedily as poſſible a ſuitable force to protect the ſouthern Pergunnahs as well as thoſe adjacent to this place, otherwiſe great riſk there is of their being plundered and entirely ravaged by the enemy, from our inability to ſend into the field any proper force to prevent the ſame.

The General having forwarded to me the intercepted letter from the Dutch Chief to the Poonah Miniſter, as alſo the Vackeel's letter that gave cover to it, I now tranſmit the ſame to you, having, agreeable to your directions, taken exact copies of the ſame. I alſo encloſe the tranſlates, made by the General's interpreter, of both thoſe papers.

I am, with great reſpect,
Honourable Sir, and Gentlemen,
Your moſt obedient
humble ſervant,
Rawſon Hart Boddam.

Received the following letter from Fort Victoria: Tueſday 29

Honourable Sir, and Sirs,

I addreſſed your Honour, &c. the 23d inſtant, per the Revenge. The Marattas have collected all their troops at Tarlee and Sevendrog, about 12 hours march from hence; and they being daily expected here, I requeſt that your honour, &c. will be pleaſed to ſend the gunners and field pieces as ſoon as poſſible, the guns here, in their preſent condition, being unſerviceable.

Received the following letter from Fort Victoria: Friday 17th

Honourable Sir, and Sirs,

I addreſſed your Honour, &c. the 25th ultimo, and 16th inſtant. Dulop's fleet was ſeen yeſterday off Anjenevall, by one of my own people, ſtanding to the northward; he has been expected ſome time at Sevendrog, and the troops at Farlee only wait his arrival; they are in readineſs; and there being no doubt of their immediate hoſtile intentions againſt this place, I requeſt that your Honour, &c. will be pleaſed to ſend the gunners,

and

and a reinforcement of Sepoys directly; eighty to ninety recruits are ready.

I am, with reſpect,
Honourable Sir, and Sirs,
Your moſt obedient
humble ſervant,
George Dick.

Fort Victoria,

Saturday 18th. Signed the following letter to Fort Victoria:

To Mr. George Dick, Reſident at Fort Victoria.

Sir,

We have received your ſeveral letters to that dated the 12th, on the ſubject of the expected attack, and the required reinforcements.

By the Bombay grab, which ſailed the 13th inſtant, we ſent you the gunner's field pieces, and the ſtores mentioned in your indent, amounting, as per the incloſed invoice, to rupees 1,855. 2. 11. and this is all the ſupply that we can ſpare or think neceſſary.

We are your loving friends,

APPENDIX, No. 268.

Bombay Select Conſultations, 25th February 1780.

RECEIVED the following letter from Col. Brown:

Honourable Sir, and Sirs,

I have the honour of acquainting you of my arrival here the 21ſt inſtant, with ſix companies of European infantry and a company of artillery from the coaſt, amounting to 472 non-commiſſioned rank and file.

In conſequence of the preſſing neceſſity urged by the Governor General and Council at Bengal, the gentlemen of the Committee at Fort Saint George were induced to put on board the above number of men on the Seahorſe, Horſenden, and Morning Star, beſides two companies which I found myſelf obliged to ſend on board the Hawke, as they were ſo crowded on the Horſenden as made me apprehenſive for their health; which two companies Captain Cotton promiſed Captain Panton and me to return to the Horſenden, when we ſhould arrive off the port of Bombay; inſtead of which he, apparently by deſign, left us off Ceylon, and we have not ſeen them ſince; I therefore requeſt you will be pleaſed to diſpatch them with all expedition on their arrival; and ſhould Captain Durand, who commands them, be in want of money during the ſtay there, I beg you will order him to be ſupplied, and take his bill on me for the amount.

It was the earneſt wiſh of the gentlemen at Madras, that the detachment at Tellicherry ſhould join me as ſoon as poſſible, for which purpoſe they ſent the neceſſary orders to Major Cotgrave; but as it is impoſſible for him to comply therewith, without you aſſiſt him with a conveyance, I hope you will ſpeedily enable him to do it.

In addition to the above two detachments I am in daily expectation of receiving another battalion of Sepoys from Pondicherry.

I have the honour to encloſe you a letter from the Committee at Fort Saint George.

Surat, letter from. Honourable Sir, and Sirs,

Our laſt addreſs, of the 17th ultimo, waited on you by the Drake.

We have the honour to acquaint you, that the Madras troops under the command of Colonel Brown marched from hence the 21ſt ultimo, to join General Goddard's army; and that in conſequence of an application from the General to the Chief, they were accompanied by a detachment from this garriſon of 500 Sepoys, which was to proceed with them to Soncleterrah Ghaut, and which the Chief informs us, will be back again in a few days.

Honourable Sir, and Sirs,

Our laſt addreſs is dated the 2d inſtant. We have the honour to acquaint you that our honourable maſters ſhip the Besborough arrived at this bar yeſterday, with a detachment on board her from Madras, conſiſting of five companies of Sepoys, under the command of Captain John Walker; which the Honourable the Governor and Select Committee of Madras acquaint us, is a reinforcement for the army under the commmand of General Goddard. Five companies more are on board the Atlas and Grafton, but the Besborough parted company from theſe veſſels off Cochin.

APPENDIX, No. 269.

Bombay Select Conſultations, 2d January 1780.

To Major Cotgrave.

Sir,

COLONEL Braithwaite has acquainted us of your having arrived to relieve him in the command of the Madras detachment, and we conclude this will find you in charge of the forces at Tellicherry.

That gentleman had alſo propoſed to us to ſend a ſufficient force from hence to relieve the Madras detachment from the charge of Tellicherry, which is an abſolute impoſſibility, as we have detached every man we could ſpare to reinforce the army under General Goddard; we however hope that your detention at Tellicherry will only cauſe a temporary delay to your proceeding to the northward, and that your active efforts to diſlodge the enemy, will be ſo ſucceſsful, as to admit of your quitting your preſent charge, and leave you at liberty to purſue the purpoſe for which you were ordered to this coaſt. We think it expedient to ſuggeſt to you, that if a vigorous effort ſhould be found neceſſary to diſlodge the enemy, and your preſent force not be judged adequate, the battalion deſtined to relieve the 20th, may be brought up to Tellicherry before the latter is ſent down to Anjengo, which will give you an addition of force not to be reſiſted by the enemy, and when the ſervice is effected, the 20th may be returned, and you can proceed with the remainder to join General Goddard.

We have alſo hopes of ſome good effect from a repreſentation that has been made to Hyder Ally of the conduct of his tributaries.

Letter from Tellicherry.

Honourable Sir, and Sirs,

Our laſt addreſs of the 1ſt inſtant was tranſmitted you the ſame day per expreſs boat, duplicate of which is encloſed.

Major John Cotgrave having communicated his intentions to the Reſident of proceeding on the Britannia, with the companies of artillery and infantry of the Madras detachment, to join General Goddard's army, which ſtep we were of opinion might at this juncture prove highly prejudicial to the Honourable Company's affairs here; we in conſequence thereof wrote him a letter, copy of which is encloſed, acquainting him therewith, and requeſted he would remain here ſome time longer, but to which he has not replied.

N. B. The above letter being a duplicate, did not encloſe the addreſs of the 1ſt inſtant.

Honourable Sir, and Sirs,

We addreſſed you laſt the 5th inſtant, by our honourable maſters ſhip Britannia, duplicate of which is now encloſed.

On the 16th ultimo, the Mahundy Savoy, commanded by Antonio Perez, laying in Mangulow roads, was boarded and taken by eight French, and four Portugueze ſailors, belonging to the ſmall French ſnow at Goa, (noticed before to your Honour, &c.) commanded by Captain De la But, and who had come from thence to Mangulore in a ſmall boat, under pretence of protecting their Captain, who had been at Mangulore for ſome time paſt on his return to Goa. We learn that the above veſſel was carried to the latter place, where the Government on finding in what manner ſhe had been ſeized, took her under its protection, and confined the crew. It is alſo ſaid that Captain De la But is alſo confined at Mangulore, for being privy to the capture.

Sadir Cawn is expected ſhortly at Callicut from Seringpatam; notwithſtanding the Nabob's troops have been in poſſeſſion of Mahé, we do not find any new works have been made at that place.

There has been no alteration in our military operation ſince the Britannia left this place; the Nairs ſtill continue on the hills and in the poſts around us, as they ſeem determined not to quit us for ſome time, the Reſident on the 5th inſtant wrote a letter to the Nabob Hyder Ally, (copy of which is encloſed) acquainting him of the Prince of Cheuka's proceedings.

A few days ago a fiſhing boat from Bombay was taken by one of Hyder's gallivats, off Mangulore, and ſent into that place.

As you have been pleaſed to communicate to the Reſident your intentions of proceeding upon the Britannia with the companies of artillery and infantry of the Madras detachment, to join General Goddard's army, agreeable to the orders you have received from the Honourable the Select Committee at Madras, we think it incumbent on us, in the preſent ſtate of our affairs, to requeſt you will remain here for ſome time longer.

Copy of a Letter from the Reſident and Factors at Tellicherry.

To the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Governor General and Council, at Fort William.

Honourable Sir, and Sirs,

In a letter received from our ſuperiors at Bombay, dated the 2d inſt. we are directed to adviſe your Honour, &c. of the preſent ſtate of affairs at this place, not doubting but that they now fully acquaint you with the cauſe of our troubles with the neighbouring Powers, tributaries to the Nabob Hyder Ally Cawn.

The forces of the Prince of Cherika and King of Cartinadue, ſtill continue ſtrongly intrenched on different hills and poſts in the Honourable Company's diſtricts, the commanding officer finding it impoſſible, from frequent attempts, to diſlodge them with our preſent force. Whether the enemy only intend to bring us to an accommodation upon their own terms, if poſſible, or have more extenſive views, we cannot ſay; but underſtand, that Sadur Cawn, the Nabob's Governor of Callicut, is expected from Seringapatam with a large force to ſettle the troubles on this coaſt, and in particular our diſputes with his maſter's tributaries.

The Honourable the Preſident of Bombay has wrote a letter to the Nabob Hyder Ally, repreſenting the conduct of his tributaries towards the Honourable Company; we therefore hope that it will have a proper effect, though the extraordinary conduct of his officers at Mangulore, and other poſts, give us reaſon to think that Hyder has ſecretly hoſtile intentions againſt the Company.

and

Wedneſday. 2d February.

Received the following letter from Major Cotgrave at Tellicherry:

Honourable Sir, and Sirs,

I have been honoured with the receipt of your letter of the 2d inſtant.

I ſhould be extremely happy was it in my power to effect the ſervice your Honours require of me; but it is now too late; the enemy being ſo ſtrongly ſituated as not to be diſlodged without the loſs of more men than can be ſpared at this juncture. I have already made attempts on two of their fortified hills, one of which failed; and I am convinced, by the obſtinate reſiſtance we met with, that to ſubdue them would require a much greater force than we can bring againſt them, even ſhould the other battalion arrive from Madras; the extraordinary ſituation of this country putting the beſt diſciplined troops in the world ſcarcely on a par with theſe people. I am as faſt as poſſible completing the lines, which I hope will be in ten or twelve days, when I ſhall embark for Surat on the Eagle, with the Company of European artillery and company of infantry, leaving the grenadier battalion and the 20th battalion for the defence of the place, which in my opinion will be ſufficient againſt the preſent enemy.

I am with great reſpect,
Honourable Sir, and Sirs,
Your moſt obedient and
moſt humble ſervant,
John Cotgrave.

Tellicherry,

Bombay Select Conſultations, 6th March 1780.

Tellichery. Conſiderations reſpecting Major Cotgrave, and the troubles there.

Read the laſt advices from Tellicherry.

We ſhould have been happy, had circumſtances permitted of Major Cotgrave's quitting Tellicherry, to join General Goddard with the European force under his command, which not being very conſiderable, a temporary detention there can have no very material effect upon the General's operations; more eſpecially ſince the arrival of the very ample force under Colonel Brown at Surat, while the Major's quitting Tellicherry until the troubles are in ſome train of being adjuſted, might greatly endanger the ſafety of that ſettlement, or give an unfavourable turn to the negociations which appear likely to be opened with the enemy. For theſe reaſons we approve of the factors oppoſing their departure, and Major Cotgrave muſt be deſired not to quit Tellicherry with the Europeans till ſome accommodation has taken place; but the moment it can be done with propriety, we ſhall give our free conſent to his joining General Goddard, and the Reſident and factors will be then directed to ſend away the Madras forces as expeditiouſly as poſſible, in order to reduce the heavy expence of that garriſon. In the mean time we muſt be of opinion, that Major Cotgrave, by continuing at Tellicherry in defence of that ſettlement, will perform a more acceptable and real ſervice to the Company; than any aſſiſtance he could afford to the army in Guzerat.

Major Cotgrave's conduct diſapproved of;

Reſpecting the general orders iſſued by Major Cotgrave the 5th ultimo, and complained of by the Reſident and factors, we are of opinion he has greatly exceeded the powers veſted by the late regulations in military commanding officers under his circumſtances, and aſſumed an authority which can in no degree be ſuppoſed neceſſary for the defence of the ſettlement, to which object alone his powers are confined. While we are pleaſed with the moderation and conciliatory conduct obſerved by the Company's civil ſervants at Tellicherry, we cannot but obſerve with diſapprobation and diſpleaſure, the proceedings of the military commanding officer, ſo contrary to the true conſtitution of the ſervice, and which can produce no other effect but jealouſies and diſcords detrimental to the common cauſe. Theſe irregularities again recal to our obſervation the bad conſequences of the inattention of the Government at Madras in ſending to this coaſt a military force not ſubordinate to our authority; which muſt be ſtrongly repreſented to the Company, that no ſuch proceeding may be permitted in future, and in the mean time, our diſapprobation muſt be expreſſed to Major Cotgrave of the conduct he has purſued.

Appendix. No. 269.

Reflections on the bad conſequences ariſing therefrom.

The factors to have permiſſion to land from the Besborough, two lacks and a half of rupees, out of the five lacks expected from Bengal on that ſhip: having no other method of ſupplying them to the amount they require; and left the ſhip ſhould have paſſed their port, 50,000 rupees will be immediately ſent from hence on a veſſel which will be ordered for that purpoſe. The Reſident at Onore muſt alſo have permiſſion to land one lack of rupees from the Besborough.

Thurſday 9th.

Received the following letter from Colonel Brown:

Honourable Sir, and Sirs,

By the officers who arrived yeſterday in the Revenge, I am much concerned to find that the Reſident at Tellichery has given poſitive orders to the Captains of all ſhips which anchor there, not to receive any of the Madras troops on board; by which behaviour, the ſervice here will be much impeded, and the officer commanding there is deprived of the power of putting his orders into execution. I am therefore again obliged to trouble you, requeſting that you will be pleaſed to ſend orders down to the Reſident, that no farther obſtacles may be thrown in the way of their embarkation.

Bombay Select Conſultations, 13th March 1780.

To Colonel Browne.

Sir,

We have been favoured with your letter of the 25th ultimo, and 2d and 4th inſtant.

We have given orders for the rice and water caſks to be landed from the Horſenden; and when the amount is aſcertained, ſhall adviſe you thereof.

We ſhould have been very glad, had circumſtances permitted, of Major Cotgrave's quitting Tellicherry, with the European infantry and artillery under his command; but their force is not ſo conſiderable, as to allow us to think that a temporary detention there can have any material effect on the operations of the army in Guzerat, eſpecially ſince the arrival of the reſpectable force under your command; whereas his quitting Tellicherry till the troubles are in ſome train of being adjuſted, might endanger the ſafety of the ſettlement, or give an unfavourable turn to the negociations which appear likely to be opened with the enemy. For theſe reaſons, we have approved of the conduct of the Reſident and factors, in oppoſing Major Cotgrave's intentions of withdrawing the Europeans from Tellicherry; and we cannot doubt but Major Cotgrave will ſtand juſtified for a delay in the execution of his orders, which ariſes from the neceſſity of his his not quitting an important ſettlement of the Company's under his charge for defence, and with an enemy actually before it carrying on an attack.

We ſhall leave no means untried to compoſe the troubles at Tellicherry; and the moment it can be done, will do our utmoſt to expedite the junction of Major Cotgrave and his party, with the detachment under your command.

We have had intelligence of the Select Committee at Madras having engaged ſhipping to bring round the battalion of Sepoys to this coaſt, and their arrival with you may be ſoon expected.

We are, Sir,
Your moſt obedient
humble ſervant,

Bombay Caſtle, 13th March 1780.

W. Hornby, &c. Committee.

To Mr. Richard Church, Reſident, &c. Factors at Tellicherry.

Gentlemen,

We have received your letters of the 25th and 28th of January, and 2d, 9th, 11th, and 21ſt ultimo.

Having diſpatched a ſhort letter to you by a boat, under the 6th inſtant, we now encloſe a duplicate thereof.

The European force under Major Cotgrave, is not ſo conſiderable, that a temporary delay in their joining General Goddard, can have any material effect on his operations; eſpecially ſince the arrival of the reſpectable reinforcement under Colonel Brown; whereas their quitting Tellicherry at this juncture, might greatly endanger the ſafety of the ſettlement, or give an unfavourable turn to the negociations which appear likely to be opened with the enemy, and which we moſt ardently wiſh may terminate in an accommodation. Upon theſe grounds we approve of your conduct in oppoſing Major Cotgrave's intention of withdrawing the Europeans, as circumſtances ſtood at the date of your laſt advices; but the moment it can be done with propriety you will ſignify your conſent to Major Cotgrave's proceeding to Surat according to his orders, and return the Madras Sepoys to Anjengo, with the utmoſt expedition, as the expence of your garriſon is at preſent almoſt inſupportable.

We are of opinion that Major Cotgrave, in the orders you complain of, as recited in your letter of the 9th ultimo, has much exceeded the powers, veſted by the late regulations in the commanding officer, in ſuch circumſtances, and aſſumed an authority which can in no degree be ſuppoſed neceſſary for the defence of the ſettlement, to which object alone his powers are confined.—We ſhall by this opportunity, ſignify to Major Cotgrave our diſapprobation of his conduct; and we approve of your moderation on the occaſion. We muſt take notice of your omiſſion in not ſending a copy, at length, of the general orders of the 5th ultimo, though mentioned in your letter of the 9th to be forwarded with the other papers.

The Reſident ſhould certainly have anſwered the Nabob Hyder Ally's letter, and kept up the correſpondence with him; as your taking no notice of this letter may give diſguſt, and the Reſident's having wrote to him was no reaſon for your diſcontinuing a correſpondence with him. The Nabob's anſwer to the Preſident, ſo far as it related to the Tellicherry affairs, was much to the ſame purport as his letter to Mr. Church, and in other points was expreſſive of attention to this Government; but as the moſt effectual method of coming to a right underſtanding with the Nabob, and aſcertaining his real diſpoſition towards the Company, as well as bringing the troubles at Tellicherry to a concluſion, we have reſolved to ſend Mr. George Horſley on a deputation to him, who will be inſtructed to make a proper repreſentation on the conduct of his tributaries, and to endeavour to obtain ſuch orders as may reſtore tranquillity; and as in the courſe of the diſcuſſion of this ſubject, he will have occaſion for the moſt ample information, we direct that you immediately forward to him at Onore, a full account of the origin and cauſe of the preſent troubles, and that you correſpond with him on all parts, relating to our ſettlement, in which the exerciſe of the Nabob's influence may be requiſite.

We have, as before adviſed, given you authority to land two lacks and a half of rupees from the Besborough out of the promiſed ſupply from Bengal, and though it muſt be attended with loſs to the Company, we can find no other mode of ſupplying you to ſo large an amount: but in caſe the Besborough ſhould have paſſed Tellicherry before the receipt of this order, we now ſend you, by the Morning Star, a ſupply of 50,000 rupees for your immediate expences, and ſhall furniſh you with the remainder of the ſum required in the moſt expeditious manner, which we ſhall be very glad to ſee appropriated to the purchaſe of pepper, inſtead of being expended in military charges.

We cannot give any orders about the works at Tellicherry till we receive what Mr. Dacer has to offer further upon the method of putting them into a more compact ſtate of defence.

We encloſe a copy of our letter of this date to Major Cotgrave, and an invoice of the treaſure and ſtores on board the Morning Star for your ſettlement, the whole amounting to ..... rupees.

After landing the conſignments of the Morning Star you will return her to the Preſidency immediately.

We are your loving friends,

Bombay Caſtle, 13th March, 1780.

W. Hornby, &c. Committee.

To Major Cotgrave.

Sir,

We have received your letter of the 21ſt January, and ſhould have been very glad, had circumſtances permitted of your quitting Tellicherry with the European detachment, in order to join the army under General Goddard; but their force is not ſo conſiderable, that a temporary ſtay there can have any material effect on his operations, eſpecially ſince the arrival of the reinforcement under Colonel Brown, whereas your quitting Tellicherry till the troubles are in ſome train of being adjuſted, might greatly endanger the ſafety of the ſettlement, or give an unfavourable turn to the negociations which appear likely to be opened with the enemy. For theſe reaſons we think it proper you ſhould not quit Tellicherry with the Europeans, till ſome accommodation has taken place; but the moment it can be done with propriety, we ſhall give our conſent to your joining the army under General Goddard; and in the mean time we muſt be of opinion, that your continuance at Tellicherry, in defence of that ſettlement, will recommend you more to your ſuperiors, and be a more acceptable and real ſervice to the Company than any aſſiſtance you can afford to the army in Guzerat.

The Reſident and factors have made a repreſentation to us upon the ſubject of the general orders iſſued by you the 5th ultimo, in which we likewiſe think you have much exceeded the powers veſted by the late regulations in a military commanding officer in your circumſtances, and aſſumed an authority which can in no degree be ſuppoſed neceſſary for the defence of the ſettlement, to which object alone your powers are confined. While we are pleaſed with the moderation and conciliating conduct obſerved by the Company's civil ſervants at Tellicherry, we cannot but obſerve with diſapprobation and diſpleaſure the proceedings of the military commanding officer, ſo contrary to the true conſtitution of the ſervice, and which can produce no other effect but jealouſies and diſcords detrimental to the common cauſe.

You can have no ground of apprehenſion, that any cenſure will revert to you for any delay in joining General Goddard, that may be occaſioned by the neceſſity of your not quitting one of the Company's ſettlements, under your charge for defence, and with an enemy actually before it carrying on an attack.

We ſhall leave no meaſure untried to accommodate the troubles at Tellicherry, on which ſubject letters have paſſed between our Preſident and the Nabob Hyder Ally; and we find ſome overtures have been made to Mr. Church; but as the moſt effectual method, we ſhall inſtantly depute a gentleman to the Nabob himſelf, who will have particular inſtructions to make it his firſt object to ſettle all diſputes with his tributaries at Tellicherry. The Reſident and factors having mentioned in one of their late letters that you had written to us on the ſubject of a large indent for ſtores, which we received under cover of a letter from Colonel Braithwaite, but without any notice or advice from him; we think it neceſſary to acquaint you that no ſuch letter has been received from you.

We are, Sir,
Your moſt obedient humble ſervants,
W. Hornby,

Bombay Select Conſultations, 5th April 1780.

Signed the following letters to Tellicherry and Fort St. George.

To Mr. Richard Church, Reſident, &c. Factors at Tellicherry.

Gentlemen,

We have received your letters of the 9th, 14th and 15th ultimo.

We have already acquainted you in our letter of the 13th ultimo, of the only effectual method that has occurred to us, of reſtoring tranquillity to your ſettlement; but Mr. Horſley has not yet been able to proceed on his deputation, owing to the Nabob not having ſent the proper paſſports.

As by the reſolute meaſures you have purſued, Major Cotgrave has been prevented from quitting Tellicherry, and a continuation of the ſame conduct, and our letter of the 13th, will probably make him deſiſt from all thoughts of that nature; we ſee no occaſion to ſend you a reinforcement of artillery ſolicited in your letter of the 9th ultimo; and we now write to the Preſidency of Madras, deſiring them to revoke their orders for his joining General Goddard, and to put him under the orders of this Government.

We direct that you ſend up as ſoon as poſſible the ſhybars now lying at Tellicherry, upon a heavy freight, as if circumſtances ſhould happily permit of your returning the Madras Sepoys to Anjengo, we conclude you will find no difficulty in providing other means of tranſportation.

As it will be utterly impoſſible for us to ſend any further ſupply of money to Tellicherry this ſeaſon; and if your preſent balance is expended in purchaſes of pepper, there will be no means left of defraying the expences of the troops now there for your defence, which may be attended with the moſt alarming conſequences; we muſt, however unwillingly, direct that if you ſee no immediate proſpect of the troubles being accommodated, you reſerve the whole of your preſent balance of caſh for the payment of your garriſon, and diſcontinue your purchaſes of pepper.

We are your loving friends,
Bombay Caſtle, W^m Hornby,
5th April 1780. &c. Committee.

To the Honourable Sir Thomas Rumbold, Preſident and Governor, &c. Select Committee of Fort Saint George.

Gentlemen,

As it is not impoſſible but the troubles of Tellicherry may prevent Major Cotgrave from quitting that ſettlement before the rains, we requeſt, for the good of the ſervice, and to prevent the confuſion and embarraſſment which will continue to ſubſiſt whilſt he has the ſanction of your orders for withdrawing from a diſagreeable ſtation to a more eligible ſervice, that you will revoke your orders for his proceeding to join the detachment under Colonel Brown, and put him under the orders of this Government; aſſuring you that we will expedite his junction with Colonel Brown as ſoon as circumſtances will permit of its being done with any degree of propriety. Appendix. No. 270.

Incloſed is copy of a letter we lately found it neceſſary to write to Major Cotgrave, whoſe ſubſequent conduct has increaſed the neceſſity of the meaſure we have above recommended to you.

The interruption to our communication with the Continent, in conſequence of the rupture with the Marattas, having cauſed a very alarming ſcarcity of grain on this iſland, we earneſtly requeſt you will if poſſible ſupply us with 20,000 or 30,000 bags of rice, as early as you may be able, after receipt hereof, diſpatching the veſſels on which you may lade it, by the ſouthern paſſage; in which caſe a ſupply will arrive in time to be of the moſt eſſential ſervice to this ſettlement, and prevent much diſtreſs.

We are, Gentlemen,
Your moſt obedient humble ſervants,

APPENDIX, No. 270.

Bombay Select Conſultations, 23d April 1780.

Received per Besborough the following letter from Madras.

Gentlemen,

We have received your letter of the 2d January, with the papers of intelligence.

If Hyder Ally has taken, or means to take, any part in the diſputes with the Nairs, we apprehend it muſt be from ſome provocations, real or pretended, that have been given him by the gentlemen of Tellicherry, in which we are the more confirmed by our letter from Colonel Braithwaite; we have no ſubject of difference with him here that could induce him to take ſuch a part, and we particularly ordered Colonel Braithwaite when at Mahé, to interfere in nothing relating either to Hyder or the Nairs. Hyder's conduct at preſent depends very much on the tranſactions with the Marattas; a peace with them would have kept him in awe, and delivered us from every idea of troubles from that quarter; but it will be difficult to ſay what line he will purſue, now that the negociation with the Marattas is at an end, and hoſtilities commenced; for we ſuppoſe it muſt be known to you, that a treaty has been concluded between the Marattas and him, with a view of increaſing our difficulties; and that the Nizam has been from the beginning of theſe diſputes directed ſolely by the influence of the preſent Powers at Poonah.

You expreſs your wiſhes, that at this time we may be full and unreſerved in our political correſpondence; hitherto we are not ſenſible of having omitted to give you every information that was neceſſary, and our duty to the Company will certainly incline us to continue theſe communications without reſerve. Upon this principle we deem it expedient to give it as our opinion, that a war at this time may unite againſt us all the principal Powers of India; and when it is conſidered, that we have an actual war to ſuſtain againſt the two greateſt Powers of Europe, we think a peace with the Marattas is ſafer and more deſirable upon almoſt any terms, than troubles which threaten ſo many dangers, and for our own part, ſetting aſide the evils which preſent themſelves from war at this juncture, we do not ſee from whence the Company are to derive reſources ſufficient to manage undertakings of ſuch great magnitude.

For theſe reaſons we ſincerely hope, that every conſiſtent endeavour will be uſed to bring about a peace; and we flatter ourſelves from your exertions joined to thoſe of General Goddard, that an event ſo much to be wiſhed may ſpeedily take place. We ſhould have been obliged to you if you had acquainted us with the terms that were propoſed to the Marattas, and the terms on which they were willing to come to an accommodation. Theſe particulars would have been very ſatisfactory, and we requeſt you will communicate them to us as ſoon as poſſible.

You will have been informed by our letter of the 3d ultimo, a duplicate whereof is now tranſmitted, what reinforcement we had determined to ſpare General Goddard's army. A complete battalion of Europeans and a company of artillery went to Surat by the Sea Horſe, Horſenden, and Morning Star, and we ordered the battalion of Sepoys we propoſed ſending to be embarked on the Beſborough, Atlas, and Duke of Grafton, for Surat.

Should Captain Montgomery, by proceeding in conſequence of our orders directly to Surat, be unable to fulfil his engagements exactly to the time with reſpect to the delivery of his ſhip to you, we requeſt and hope that ſuch failure may be no detriment to him, as the public ſervice only will be the occaſion of it.

We have the pleaſure to acquaint you that Sir Edward Hughes, with ſix ſail of the line, arrived here the 18th ultimo, together with ſeveral of the Company's ſhips as per liſt encloſed, and a battalion of His Majeſty's 73d regiment.

Extract of Bombay Select Conſultations, the 29th May 1780.

To the Honourable Sir Thomas Rumbold, Baronet, Preſident and Governor, &c. Select Committee at Fort Saint George.

Gentlemen,

We have been favoured with your letters of the 4th and 8th February and 18th March.

Your wiſhes cannot be more ardent than ours for a ſafe and honourable peace with the Marattas, nor will any endeavours be wanting on our part, to promote ſo deſirable an event; but as matters now ſtand, we have no direct agency in the meaſures now purſuing, the Governor General and Council having reſerved the conduct of this war entirely in their own hands.

General Goddard received his powers for the late negociation with the Poonah Government, from the Governor General and Council, who acquainted us they had commiſſioned him to treat of the renewal or confirmation of the treaty of Poorunder, provided they would recede from the pretenſions they had acquired by the convention of Worgaum, and agree not to admit any French force into their dominions, nor allow that nation to form any eſtabliſhment on the Maratta coaſt; and that the acceptance or refuſal of theſe conditions, was to determine the alternative of peace or war.

In anſwer to theſe overtures, General Goddard acquainted us, that the Durbar declared in plain terms they would not make a peace with the Engliſh, unleſs Salſette was reſtored, and the perſon of Ragoba given up; and that on theſe conditions, and theſe only, they would agree to the other terms propoſed to them by General Goddard.

We have called upon the commander of the Atlas reſpecting the two deſerters, but have not yet received his anſwer.

We are, Sir, and Sirs,
Your moſt obedient ſervants,
William Hornby,
&c. Committee.

APPENDIX, No. 271.

Bombay Select Conſultations, 29th April 1780.

Copy of General Goddard's Plan for the Military Eſtabliſhment of Bombay.

THE opportunity which the Select Committee have afforded me in their letter of the 24th of February, to lay before them my ſentiments upon the preſent ſtate of their military eſtabliſhments, and the moſt eligible plan for increaſing them, has given me the greateſt pleaſure, and I can only lament that I have not the means immediately of affording you my opinion, ſo fully as I could wiſh, on ſo important a ſubject; I ſhall however generally obſerve, it is my recommendation that your military eſtabliſhment ſhould undergo a reformation in all its branches; and to this end, I have put together ſome remarks on the means of a general arrangement, which ſhall be compatible with the preſent ſtate of your ſettlements, and which I truſt will prove ſufficient for the requiſite exigencies of the ſervice. I have for your more ready information on theſe points, ſeparated the different departments into diſtinct heads; and believe me I ſhall be happy if they produce the benefit that is propoſed.

Artillery Department.

The utility of this corps, and its very reſpectable advantages, are too obvious, to make any comments thereon at all neceſſary. I would recommend the augmentation of it to the ſerious attention of the Committee. The ſtability of your poſſeſſions is intimately connected with the degree of perfection to which this corps can be ſupported; the greateſt caution therefore will be neceſſary in the formation and completing of it; and due regard ſhould be had to the characters of the men, their ſize, and nation. It has long been a regulation in the corps at Bengal, that no foreigners are admitted into it.

Propoſed that the corps of artillery for the ſervice of the Preſidency of Bombay be formed into a battalion, to be compoſed of ſix companies; each company to conſiſt of the following ſtrength.

Appendix. No. 271.

Strength of a Company of European Artillery.

	Commissioned Officers.
	Lieutenant Colonel.	Majors.	Captains.	Captain Lieutenants.	Lieutenants.	Lieutenant Fire Workers.	Serjeants.	Corporals.	Drummers and Fifers.	Bombardiers.	Gunners.	Matroſſes.	Total, including Non-commiſſioned Officers, &c.

That there be a Lieutenant Colonel Commandant to the battalion, and two Majors, as mentioned in the ſtrength; and that the Staff of the battalion conſiſt of a Brigade Major, one Adjutant, and one Quarter Maſter, with fixed monthly allowances, both for the field and garriſon: the non-commiſſioned Staff to be regulated according to the uſage of the ſervice. That on a company or more being detached from the battalion an officer receive the temporary appointment of Adjutant and Quarter Maſter for the duration of the ſervice, with the uſual allowances.

Laſcars for the Service of the Ordnance and Ordnance Stores.

Unacquainted with your preſent eſtabliſhment of Laſcars, or the mode by which you provide them, I can only recommend in general terms, that this corps ſhould be formed on a fixed eſtabliſhment; that they ſhould be incorporated into companies, clothed, and paid, under the ſame regulations as propoſed for the Sepoy corps, and placed under the direction of the commandant of artillery, who will on every occaſion of the ſervice detach them with the artillery, in ſuch proportions as the nature of the ſervice to be executed ſhall require.

European Infantry.

I recommend that this corps be formed into a regiment, to conſiſt of two battalions, each battalion to be formed of one company of grenadiers and eight battalion companies; but as I am aware of the inability of the preſent ſtate of the ſettlement to effect this plan, one of the battalions might be completed upon the propoſed eſtabliſhment, until the Honourable the Court of Directors ſhall enable the more full execution of it.

I have recommended that each battalion ſhall have a Lieutenant Colonel and a Major; and it is underſtood that your ſenior military officers, or the Commander in Chief, be conſidered as the Colonel of the regiment.

The complete ſtrength of the regiment will then be as follows, according to the aforegoing propoſed eſtabliſhment.

Sepoys, or Native Infantry.

As pride in the natives ſeems more the adherent of family or of religion, than the effect of conſtitutional virtue, from which paſſion alone we can hope to remove the natural prejudices under which they are bred, ſo as to impreſs them with that deference and grateful reſpect and attachment to our ſervice, which has hitherto ſupported the ſtability of the Company's poſſeſſions to this period; I cannot but view the confined limits of the poſſeſſions attached to Bombay, as a great misfortune in the advancement of the Sepoy corps to the perfection they might otherwiſe have acquired. I will hope, that the extenſion of your poſſeſſions in the courſe of the preſent ſervice, will open a field for the ambition and abilities of your military, which will do them credit in their profeſſion.

The maintenance of theſe poſſeſſions will naturally require an augmentation of your native battalions: but as it is my wiſh to propoſe the means of increaſing your military force with as little increaſe of expence as poſſible, I ſhall ſubjoin to the propoſed eſtabliſhment ſome remarks, that I truſt will tend to the reduction of your preſent current charges.

I would recommend that your eſtabliſhment of native troops be formed ſolely on one plan, without partiality or diſtinction. Two good ends I propoſe by this; the firſt, and moſt material is, that by this mode your military force will be united and connected, and will acquire an habitual confidence in each other; the ſecond is the advantages of command being thus impartially diſtributed to your military commanders by ſeniority, or tour of command, emulation will be excited, and your troops, by frequent changes with each other to the different parts of your poſſeſſions, will extend your influence, and that they will comply with willingneſs and confidence, on any exigency that may require their acting at either extremity, without danger of deſertion or diſguſt.

I would propoſe, that on the arranged plan being put in practice, your corps of Topaſſes, local Sepoys, and temporary military of every denomination, now requiſite in your ſubordinates to aſſiſt in the branches of collection and traffic, be ſeverally diſcharged, as an expence that is not only more burthenſome than regular Sepoys, but whoſe want of ſubordination and diſcipline might rather tend to tarniſh the credit of your arms on occaſion of ſervice, than to afford them ſupport; and I truſt you will be of opinion with me, that the propoſed eſtabliſhment of native battalions provides for the ſecurity of your poſſeſſions, and will admit of a very eligible army being readily drawn together at a very ſhort notice. The marine battalion may have its uſes and advantages; and as I do not deem myſelf a competent judge of them, I ſhall only obſerve, that the corps ought to be diſtinct from the regular troops: the officers to command and ſerve in it, may be ſelected from the army liſt; conſidering this duty a retirement for ſuch whoſe wounds or other infirmities have rendered them incapable of a more active line of employ.

I have formed the eſtabliſhment of native troops upon the following plan for the defence of the line of your poſſeſſions, viz.

Eſtabliſhment of Battalions of Native Infantry.

N° of Battalions.	Stations.
4	To garriſon the iſland of Bombay, and to furniſh the requiſite detachments to the ſouthward.
3	For the iſland of Salſette and its dependencies.
3	For the defence of Surat, and its dependant Pergunnahs of Parnulla, Oorpear, and the eaſtward frontiers of the acquired lands upon the Taptee, or the Attawiſſee.
3	For the garriſon of Broach, its dependencies of Jamboſies, Ahmood, Oclaiſeer, and the Gauts of Suckleturat, and Bowahpeirah.
1	Garriſon of Dubay.
1	Extra ſervices in the Guzerat.
15	battalions.

I propoſe that theſe battalions be formed upon the eſtabliſhment here ſubjoined. They appear to be too unwieldy upon their preſent ſtrength, and it becomes more difficult to keep up the ſame degree of ſubordination, diſcipline, and appearance, than might be effected with a more compact body, by the charge being more divided; I cannot offer a more deciſive argument for the utility of this reduction, than that ſome very able military characters have, on mature conſideration, deemed it expedient, and as much recommended it: I therefore propoſe that the battalions be formed of the following ſtrength, to be compoſed of two grenadier companies, and eight battalion companies.

Appendix No. 271.

	European Commiſſioned Officers.		Serjeants.	Drums and Fifes.	Native Warrant.		Trumpeters.	Non-warrant and Private.			Total Rank and File.	Staff Effective.
	Captains.	Lieutenants.			Subedars.	Jemadars.		Havildars.	Naicks.	Sepoys.		Commandant.	Adjutant, as Subedah.	Doctors Native.	Writers.	Watermen.	Artificers.
Propoſed ſtrength of a grenadier company	-	-	-	2	1	2	1	6	6	84	96	—	—	—	—	—	—
Of a battalion company	-	-	-	2	1	2	1	6	6	64	76	—	—	—	—	—	—
A battalion of 2 grenadier and 8 battalion companies	1	6	11	20	12	20	12	60	60	680	800	1	1	3	3	10	9

I recommend that there be attached to each battalion of Sepoys, two ſix pounder field pieces, braſs ordnance, and that for their care two European gunners and twenty native Laſcars be alſo attached to the battalions reſpectively; it being remembered, that the Sepoys are to work the guns.

I think it expedient that the native infantry be brigaded, and recommend it as a meaſure that will give conſequence to the eſtabliſhment, and promote a great ſpirit of emulation in the corps.

I propoſe that the eſtabliſhment of fifteen battalions be formed into three brigades, of five battalions each; that a field officer of the rank of Major be appointed to the command of each brigade, and that there be a Lieutenant Colonel Commandant of the eſtabliſhment of native infantry; that a Brigade Major be appointed to the corps, and that each brigade have an adjutant and a quarter maſter. When a battalion or more ſhall be detached, the temporary appointment of Adjutant and Quarter Maſter ſhall be given to one of the officers, with the uſual allowances. You will perceive I have reduced the eſtabliſhment of European officers to a battalion, and that it is provided they ſhall be Lieutenants, the ſenior of their rank in the army, unleſs when there ſhall exiſt exceptions to wave this right. It is a known fact, that the benefit to be expected from the European officers, can only reſult from their knowing and being known to their men.

The conſtant fluctuation and changes, attendant on the promotion of enſigns to Lieutenants, muſt fruſtrate this intent, and the ſervice ultimately ſuffers. It is therefore I adviſe, that Lieutenants be the ſubalterns rank, to be attached to the Sepoy corps, and that removals from battalions be never admitted but on very ſufficient reaſons.

Another point I recommend to the attention of the Committee. It is, that officers holding eſtabliſhed ſtaff employments, be ſtruck off the effective ſtrength of their corps, and their vacancies filled up. It is a public injury to the ſervice, that any poſt ſhould become a ſinecure, and it is a partial injury to the army, by the ſevere check it muſt conſequently give the emulation.

I do not mean to infer by this reduction of European officers, that ſix are fully equal to the ſervice of a battalion. Whenever the ſtate of your army will permit, I am perfectly of opinion it would be eligible to augment them again to ten, or one to a company; but my arguments for their being all of the rank of Lieutenants, will be worthy your attention.

Having in the aforegoing drawn the outlines of the mode for augmenting your military eſtabliſhment, I ſhall proceed to lay before you ſome remarks on the means of reducing the attendant charges on your army diſburſes, wherein your heavieſt expences have heretofore been incurred; and I promiſe myſelf in the event you will find that the mode I have to recommend for the charges of this augmented force, will bear no comparative proportion to the preſent expence of your military eſtabliſhments: I have included the Commandant and Adjutant as two extra Subedars, upon the ſtrength of the battalion: it is highly neceſſary that the rank of Subedar ſhould be annexed to the poſt of Adjutant, in order to give the office weight in the corps; and the perſon holding that poſt, is generally conſidered the firſt for promotion to the rank of Commandant.

Commiſſary's Department.

I have had ſo much occaſion to interfere in this branch of your military diſburſe, but I muſt make my obſervation on the office as full as poſſible, for the information of the Select Committee, from the mode I found to be the practice; I could not poſſibly form to my own opinion, a limit to the attendant charges of this office, and at length I was neceſſitated almoſt to annihilate the duty of the poſt, rather than involve the Company in expences which could neither be confuted nor reſtricted upon the principles under which they would have been incurred. It appeared to me, a poſt without any form, without any regularity; a poſt, which the greater profuſion and waſte of ſtores, the greater the emolument of the Commiſſary, and neither authority or voucher was to be collected for theſe iſſues. To effect the deſired check to theſe charges, I muſt here remark on the two moſt principal points under which they are incurred.

1ſt. The mode of your victualling your troops, &c.

2d. The furniſhing of ſtores to your army, victualling troops, &c. and cattle.

Your preſent regulations of victualling the native troops, artificers, labourers, &c. impreſſed in the Honourable Company's pay, I moſt earneſtly recommend to the Committee to aboliſh: and that in lieu thereof, a monthly allowance, proportionate to the value of proviſions, be made to all native troops, Laſcars, labourers and artificers (to be ſtyled additional pay or batta) which ſhall be drawn from the Paymaſter monthly, in a ſeparate roll, and iſſued to the people with their ſubſiſtence. A difference muſt be allowed between the batta of field and garriſon, as an inducement to your troops and labourers to bear the additional fatigue and expence of the field with alacrity and eaſe.

It will be difficult to aſcertain how far this alteration in the victualling department will cauſe a decreaſe of expence; a reaſonable judgment may nevertheleſs be formed, by recurring to the firſt expence of the purchaſe of a month's proviſions, the charge of cattle neceſſary for its tranſportation with an army, the pay of ſervants in charge of it, its loſs of quality and quantity by carriage, and the poſſible loſs by an enemy. Theſe ſeveral charges accumulated and united would form the compariſon, but it is needleſs to go further than one reflection, i. e. the monthly ſum to be allowed the people will be leſs than the original purchaſe of the proviſions for a month.

With reſpect to the victualling your European ſoldiery, I would adviſe, that in caſe of ſmall detachments they ſhould be allowed their victualling money, and provide themſelves, as moſt acceptable to the ſoldiery, and leaſt troubleſome: but when the major part of a corps is together, either in the field or garriſon, it would be preferable to victual them; not however by the preſent mode practiſed at your Preſidency, but by contract, as is the cuſtom of the Bengal army. The contract to engage to ſupply each man a certain daily ration of ſpirit, of wholeſome butcher's meat, and rice, or bread or biſcuit, at a certain monthly charge; the contract to be formed under reciprocal penalties, between the contractor and the Company; to be renewable annually or at two years, as may be moſt convenient; by this mode the returns of the corps aſcertain the propriety of the contractor's charges; and all expences of ſervants, riſks, tranſportation of proviſions, &c. in the execution of this office, is at the ſole charge of the perſon who contracts; the Company experience but one charge, and which cannot be abuſed. The contract for draft and carriage cattle, camels, carts, &c. neceſſary to the ſervice, is generally given to the victualling contractor, and they are provided at fixed monthly rates; theſe are muſtered monthly, and the bills audited by the Commiſſary of Muſters. The number of cattle are ſupplied on indent, by the authority of the reſpective commanders of detachments; and all cattle deemed by him inſufficient, are rejected occaſionally, and muſt be replaced.

Supplies of Stores.

This department ought to be regulated under the the moſt poſitive ſtrictures. I do not in this comprehend all ſtores whatever requiſite in an army; I only allude to articles of ſtores which are not provided in a grand magazine, which are procurable almoſt in every country market, and which are very ſuddenly and caſually wanted in the courſe of a ſervice. The regulations I recommend for this office are, that the Committee form a plan to affix prices for the various articles of ſtores which can be wanted in the different departments of the army, ſpecifying the rates they ſhall be charged for in Bombay, Salſette, Surat, Broach, and in the field; the Commiſſary to be allowed 15 per cent. upon theſe allowed prices; and they ought to be formed ſo as to exceed ſomewhat the average prices of thoſe articles at the afore-mentioned ſettlements.

The indents made to the Commiſſary, properly authorized by the ſignature of the ſenior military officer, become the vouchers for his charges.

The Commiſſary may provide his ſtores when and where he pleaſes; the ſervice has nothing to do with them till they are iſſued upon indent. This plan aboliſhes the preſent practice of their being purchaſed and carried at the charge and riſk of the Company.

And the arguments I have before aſſerted on the article of proviſions, will hold with equal force in this department, by the enhanced valuation all articles will bear in the courſe of a few months, from the charges, tranſporting, and decay incident thereto.

The poſt of Commiſſary of Muſters may be annexed to that of Commiſſary of Supplies; but it is inconſiſtent he ſhould have any charge of public ſtores.

The Commiſſary of Ordnance is the proper perſon to have the charge of public ſtores, under the inſpection of the ſenior officer of artillery.

Hoſpitals.

Were the conveniencies of the ſick to bear the leaſt proportion to the expences the Company have been at on this ſide of India, under the head of hoſpital charges, I might have taken more leiſure in the alterations I directed for the regulations of this department, in the troops furniſhed from your Preſidency to reinforce this army. It was my endeavour to provide for every reaſonable and neceſſary indulgence to the ſick ſoldiery, both European and native, and by theſe regulations I recommend your field allowances to be fixed.

Poſſibly theſe allowances may admit of ſome deduction in your garriſons; of this you, gentlemen, muſt be the moſt competent judges, and can frame your alterations by the current prices the requiſite conveniencies may bear at thoſe garriſons ſeverally; I can only add, that the allowances are equal to every poſſible want of the ſick, and leave a handſome emolument to the chief of the faculty for their aſſiduity in the care of them. The returns of your ſick, and the hoſpital reports, become the vouchers and check to the ſurgeon's charges: theſe charges become leſs intricate, and conſequently are not only moderated but aſcertained. The carriage of the ſick is the next point in conſideration: the number of doolies to be allowed will depend on the ſeaſon of the year, and the nature of the ſervice; the controul of this muſt reſt with the military officer. Six bearers are allowed to each doolie; their monthly pay I have fixed at 8 rupees each bearer; and it is provided that they ſhall be muſtered monthly with all other ſervants in the pay of the Honourable Company. This charge becomes aſcertained, and leſs liable to abuſe, than the mode heretofore followed. The article of pay to bearers, might, I think, under the direction of your Board, admit of a reduction in the courſe of time; but the advanced wages which ſervants of every denomination have been accuſtomed to, upon your troops taking the field on this coaſt, made even this pay to appear moderate, compared with the terms private gentlemen were obliged to comply with.

It is only neceſſary to remark further on this head, that the ſick Europeans are victualled by the ſurgeons, but no interference is admitted in the victualling of the native ſick; the ſurgeon conſequently receives the diet money of the ſick Europeans from the contractor, and reimburſes himſelf the expence of their maintenance; the ſurgeon draws from the Company the ſum of fifteen rupees per month for every ſick European, which includes all charges of ſervants, hoſpital cloathing, and buzar or country medicines, excepting when quilts are requiſite, which are ſupplied by the Company.

The charge to the Company for native ſick is at the rate of four rupees per month each, no other contingency allowed. The ſum of ten rupees per month is allowed for every native, Sepoy, or follower, that may be wounded; all Sepoys in the hoſpital with common diſorders have a deduction made from their pay, of one anna one pice per day, which is accounted for by the captains of corps to the ſenior ſurgeon, to defray the expence of ſervants, &c. and prevent men lingering. Europe inſtruments and medicines are ſupplied and carried by the Company.

I have now I think gone through the general lines of the reform I wiſh to recommend to you; I flatter myſelf that when you are enabled to draw the compariſon of your military diſburſe; upon the preſent regulations and thoſe now propoſed, you will find a conſiderable deduction upon the augmentation of your forces, and that you will be enabled to form an accurate idea of the ſubſidy that will be annually requiſite for the maintenance of your forces in the field or garriſon.

Thomas Goddard,
Brig^r General.

Preſident's Minute reſpecting the Augmentation of the Army.

General Goddard having furniſhed us with his opinion of the augmentation to be made of our military force, I think no time ſhould be loſt in raiſing and forming the new battalions that are wanted to complete the propoſed eſtabliſhment of Sepoys.

The number of our Europeans, and the preſent diſpoſition of them, will not for the preſent admit of carrying into execution the alteration the general propoſes with regard to them, in any manner that will prove of advantage to the ſervice, adequate to the great increaſe of expence. As we have reaſon likewiſe to expect to hear ſhortly from the Honourable the Court of Directors, in reply to our repreſentations of laſt year, on the ſubject of the ſtate of our army, and may conclude that they have taken meaſures for aſſiſting us with field officers of experience and ability, I think we ſhould not be precipitate in making promotions to that rank, nor in determining on general arrangements which may render ſuch promotions neceſſary, if they can with propriety be deferred.

I ſhall accordingly propoſe for the preſent, to carry into execution no more of General Goddard's propoſed plan than relates to the raiſing of the new battalions, and modelling thoſe now in the ſervice. Excluſive of the Topaz and marine battalions, we ſhall have occaſion for ſeven new raiſed battalions to complete our eſtabliſhment, according to the General's recommendation, to 15 battalions of Sepoys, which will be formed of the ſtrength and model propoſed by General Goddard as near as may be, if the other members of the Committee concur with me in the neceſſity of the augmentation and approbation of the General's propoſal regarding the form of our battalions.

With the above mentioned ſtrength once completed, I make no doubt we ſhall be able to maintain all our new acquiſitions in Guzzarat, as well as Baſſein when reduced, which I ſtill flatter myſelf may be effected either before the cloſe of the preſent ſeaſon, or at the very firſt opening of the next. This object accompliſhed, our views in my opinion ſhould be merely defenſive, and our military expences reduced as much within the compaſs of an ordinary peace eſtabliſhment as poſſible, by which means alone we can hope to render our acquiſitions of any value to our employers.

Upon this ſubject it will be neceſſary to communicate our ſentiments both to the Governor General and Council, and to the Select Committee at Madras, informing them of the augmentation we have reſolved to make of our troops, and our hope that they will, when complete, be ſufficient, for the defence of ſuch territory as will be anſwerable to the Company's expences on this ſide of India. It muſt be pointed out to them how abſolutely neceſſary it is to reduce the preſent military charges within more bounds than they can be brought to while the troops of their Preſidency are acting with ours: that nothing but the moſt preſſing exigence therefore can make us wiſh to detain them, and they may reſt aſſured of our returning them as ſoon as the ſtate of our affairs under our management will permit, if their ſtay or return depends on us: that though there has yet been neither concert nor communication between the three Governments on this important ſubject, and the newneſs of our ſituation leaves us much at a loſs with regard to the plan of conduct the gentlemen of Bengal and Madras may think of, for relieving our honourable maſters from their preſent burthens on this ſide of India; yet we have thought it our duty to put our military eſtabliſhment, with the advice of General Goddard, on ſuch a footing, as will render the neceſſary meaſures for the reduction of the military charges, practicable as far as depends on us.

Preſident's propoſal agreed to.

Agreed, according to the Preſident's recommendation, to defer the alterations propoſed by General Goddard, reſpecting our European corps and the promotion of field officers, as we have great reaſon very ſhortly to expect orders from the Honourable Company in anſwer to our advices of laſt ſeaſon, and that therefore it is unneceſſary at preſent to lay General Goddard's plan before the Board, as we at firſt intended, according to our minute of the 4th inſtant. A copy thereof muſt however be forwarded to the Honourable Company by the Hawke, and it muſt be brought on our diary under this date.

The augmentation of the Sepoy eſtabliſhment deemed immediately neceſſary.

But the augmentation of the Sepoy corps being immediately and indiſpenſably neceſſary, it is reſolved, that ſeven battalions be forthwith raiſed upon the model recommended by General Goddard; and in order to expedite the levies, that the officers be now appointed to command them; and accordingly Captains Weſt, Samber, Lendrum, Bowles, Hayes, Wadington, and Macculloch, be appointed to command the 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, and 15th battalions, reſpectively; which are to be formed by dividing the old battalions fairly and equally, incorporating the locals at Surat and Broach, and completed with new levies which already are in great forwardneſs in conſequence of former orders. Two of the new battalions muſt be formed at Surat, and two at Broach.

To be increaſed to 15 battalions. Manner of forming the new battalions.

Our ſentiments reſpecting the military, to be communicated to Bengal and Madras.

Our ſentiments on the ſtate of our military eſtabliſhment and expences muſt alſo be communicated to the Select Committee at Madras, and to the Governor General and Council, as propoſed to us by the Preſident.

APPENDIX, No. 272.

Extract of a Letter from the Preſident and Select Committee of Bombay to the Secret Committee of the Court of Directors, dated 30th April 1780.

WE had the honour to write to you fully in detail upon the political affairs of this Preſidency, under the 31ſt of December and 16th of March; and the ſhip Hawke being now diſpatched for England, we tranſmit copies of our addreſſes of theſe dates, with our diary in this department, from the 1ſt of May 1779 to the 30th of April 1780; which will fully illuſtrate every part of our advices ſince the diſpatch of the Royal Admiral.

We alſo ſend by this ſhip a complete ſecret diary for the year 1778.

The advices from General Goddard, conveyed in our addreſs of the 16th of March, tended to give us hopes of a favourable concluſion to the negociation opened with Madjee Scindia, which however were ſoon deſtroyed by his ſubſequent letters. The anſwers from Scindia and Holcar to the explicit declaration made to them by General Goddard, through Scindia's Vackeel, conſiſted only of general profeſſions of friendly ſentiments, and were cloſed with a requeſt to ſend a confidential perſon to their camp, fully informed of the views of the Engliſh, with whom they might come to a final ſettlement. This was declined by the General for the reaſons explained in his his letter referred to on the margin, but in ſuch a manner as to avoid impreſſing a belief that his diſſent aroſe from any motives of diſtruſt or want of reliance on Scindia's ſincerity; and he gave the Vackeel leave to return to his maſter, empowered to offer every general aſſurance on the part of the Engliſh, of the proper ſenſe they had of his ſervices, and of their wiſh to continue on terms of amity with him, if by his conduct he would give them an opportunity of proving their friendly diſpoſition and deſire to promote his intereſt in conjunction with their own. The Vackeel promiſed to return in three days from Scindia's camp, which was at the diſtance of ten coſs; and the General judged it neceſſary to limit him to that period, as Scindia would have ſufficient leiſure to deliberate fully upon the meaſures he might have to propoſe, and at the ſame time an excuſe for further delays be avoided.

The expected propoſals on the part of Madjee Scindia were at length made on the 16th of March, after the negociation had been open ſeven days, and were conceived in the following terms: "That formerly, when "Ragoba was at Tellaugam, after the return of the "Engliſh army to Bombay, an agreement had been en"tered into between him and Scindia, and written en"gagements mutually exchanged for its performance; "wherein the former conſented to relinquiſh all claims "to any ſhare in the Adminiſtration at Poonah, and to "retire towards Jancy, where he ſhould receive an al"lowance from the Peiſhwa's revenue of twelve lacks "of rupees per annum: that the Sicca ſhould con"tinue to be ſtruck in the name of the young Peiſhwa "Maderow Narrain; and that Bajerow, the ſon of Ra"goba, ſhould be appointed his Dewan; but that as "he was too young to tranſact the buſineſs of the "office himſelf, being only four years of age, the "care and management of it ſhould be left entirely to "Scindia. This plan Scindia propoſed ſhould now be "followed: that Ragoba ſhould immediately go himſelf "to Jancy, and young Bajerow accompany him to "Poonah in order to fix the Adminiſtration in the man"ner above-mentioned." This was the amount of what Scindia had authorized the Vackeel to propoſe, without any reſervation or other clauſe whatever. And as it appeared plainly, his only view was to get Ragoba and his ſon into his own power, by which he meant to aggrandize himſelf in the State, without regard to the intereſts of the Engliſh, and perhaps through their means to make his own terms with the Miniſter, the General thought proper to diſmiſs the Vackeel with this expreſs and poſitive declaration, that the Engliſh could not, conſiſtent with their own honour, nor ever would, agree to put any reſtraint upon Ragoba, or compel him, againſt his own conſent, to leave their dominions, where he had received an aſylum: that however much they might be diſpoſed to unite in the propoſed ſettlement, they muſt be perfectly ſatisfied reſpecting the ſafety of young Bajerow, and every thing muſt be quietly ſettled at Poonah, before his preſence could be even neceſſary there: and that, admitting the Engliſh did agree to aſſiſt in putting the power of the State into the hands of Scindia, it was neceſſary he alſo ſhould on his part, and in the name of the Peiſhwa, conſent to the performance of certain conditions favourable to their intereſts; as well in conſideration of the important advantages he was to receive through their means, as to compenſate for the heavy expence of the war, which formerly, and in particular at this time, they had been involuntarily compelled to engage in with the Maratta State. With this anſwer the Vackeel was diſmiſſed; and as the General, in explaining his ſentiments, and giving him to underſtand that he could not conſent to any terms that were of a diſhonourable nature, at the ſame time uſed every endeavour to convince him of his ſincere inclinations towards an accommodation. The conduct he adopted on receiving his anſwer, amounted to a proof that he had no real deſign to unite with the Engliſh; but the General then began to entertain a belief of his hoſtile intentions, from the circumſtance of his having invited Govind Row, the diſaffected brother of Futty Sing, to his camp, and promiſed to put him in poſſeſſion of the Guicawar ſhare of Guzerat.

After the diſmiſſion of the Vackeel, the General received no ſort of meſſage or overture from Scindia, and acquainted us that notwithſtanding the reports and general belief of an enmity ſubſiſting between him and the Miniſter, the agents of the latter reſided in his camp, and he was credibly informed letters were conſtantly paſſing and repaſſing between them; from all which circumſtances, he was confirmed in the conjecture, which Scindia's late conduct had ſuggeſted, that the appearance of animoſity againſt Nanah Furneeſe was merely a pretext, to deceive the Engliſh, and to get the perſons of Ragoba and his ſon into his hands, for purpoſes of his own advantage.

He therefore put the army in motion, and advanced to a place called Pittoul, about eight miles to the eaſtward of Brodera. On his arrival there, he found that Scindia had for ſecurity ſent his camp equipage, buzar, baggage, &c. to the neighbourhood of Paunghur, a ſtrong fort belonging to him, about thirty miles to the eaſtward of Brodera; and himſelf with the greateſt part of his army, unincumbered with any ſort of baggage, had taken poſt at about the diſtance of twelve miles; the remainder of his troops he had diſperſed in different bodies on the road leading to our camp, ſo as to be effectually guarded againſt every poſſibility of a ſurprize, which he ſeemed much afraid of, and which the General ſtudied all in his power to obtain an opportunity of attempting with ſome proſpect of ſucceſs. In his letter of the 24th March, he expreſſed much anxiety to accompliſh this point, becauſe from the nature of Scindia's army, and the mode of war he practiſed, our army could neither approach near enough to attack him ſuddenly to advantage, nor would he run the hazard of a general engagement in the field. As our army advanced, he retired; and to purſue him, the General was of opinion would not be the means of bringing on a deciſive action, nor be attended with any real or ſolid advantage, proportioned to the inconvenience of expoſing the Company's and Futty Sing's territories to the inroads and devaſtations of a ravaging enemy.

On the 27th the General found it neceſſary to change his ground, and advanced to a village called Camloud, above five miles diſtant from his former encampment, and found the whole army of the enemy collected in the neighbourhood of that village; but after a ſlight cannonade, they retired with the loſs of ſome men and horſes.

The enemy ſtill continued to purſue the plan of keeping their guns and baggage at a conſiderable diſtance out of reach, where it could be attended with no advantage to follow them, as they would continue to move them to a greater diſtance as our army advanced.

The General at laſt finding the enemy would neither venture to come to a fair and deciſive action, nor put it in his power to attack them with all the advantage he could have wiſhed, came to the reſolution of diſlodging their army from the poſt they occupied with their horſes and arms only, about ſix miles from his camp, and marched himſelf for that purpoſe, at two o'clock in the morning of the 3d inſtant, with a part of the army, leaving the remainder on the former ground, under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Hartley. The force he took with him conſiſted of 200 Europeans, ten grenadier companies of Sepoys, two battalions of Bengal, and one of Bombay Sepoys, with two twelves and ten ſix pounder pieces of artillery, and the regiment of Mogul cavalry and Candahar horſe. The whole were diſpoſed in two lines, the rear commanded by Major Hopkins, and Lieutenant Colonel Baillie and Major Forbes were ſtationed to the front line; and though the precautions taken by the enemy gave him no hopes of ſurprizing prizing them effectually, the objects he principally had in view, were to induce them to venture an action with only a part of the army oppoſed to their whole force, to drive them from the poſt they then occupied, or if they fled without reſiſtance, to prove the manifeſt ſuperiority of our arms, in the moſt ſtriking and honourable manner.

The event he acquainted us far exceeded his expectations. He approached much nearer to their camp without being diſcovered, than he conceived poſſible, and a little before day-break came upon their grand guard, conſiſting of ſix or ſeven thouſand men, which he paſſed through without diſcharging a ſhot, determined to reſerve his fire till he came up with the main body, commanded by Madjee Scindia himſelf. This being a mile and a half in front, he did not reach till about ſun-riſe, when their whole army was in motion, and the action immediately commenced. The enemy ſeeing the inferiority of our force, advanced with much appearance of courage and reſolution; but they were ſo well received, that they were obliged to give way, and in the ſpace of about an hour, quitted the field entirely. In order to diſlodge a large body which annoyed our right flank from behind the cover of ſome buſhes, the General ordered the Mogul and Candahar cavalry to advance, which they performed with great ſpirit and ſucceſs; and having drove the enemy into the plain, gave an excellent opportunity for the artillery to fire upon them with execution as they retired.

The enemy's loſs on this occaſion is ſaid to have been conſiderable, while on our ſide it fell entirely upon the Candahar horſe, of whom fifteen were killed and wounded in charging the enemy. The General has expreſſed his ſatisfaction at the ſteady, uniform, and proper behaviour of Major Hopkins, who had charge of the rear line, during the whole engagement.

We have received no further accounts from the General of his operations ſince this action, but we underſtand the armies were nearly in the ſame poſition the 20th of this month, and that he was joined by Colonel Brown's detachment on the 14th. We have for ſome time been very impatient to hear what effect his ſucceſs has had upon Scindia's operations, and what plan he propoſed purſuing, which as the ſeaſon grows late, it is of conſequence for us to be informed of, and is what the General promiſed, for we wiſh to ſee the army employed to more advantage than in watching the motions of Madjee Scindia.

After waiting ſome time in this expectation, we ſet forth to the General the importance of poſſeſſing ourſelves of Baſſein, and expreſſed our anxiety at the probability there appeared of this ſeaſon elapſing, and Baſſein ſtill remaining unſubdued. We are exceedingly earneſt not to leave the reduction of this place to the hazard of future accidents or circumſtances, eſpecially in the time of European war; and have offered our opinion to General Goddard, that no other object can claim a preference to his attention, or bring the campaign to a more honourable and advantageous concluſion. The Preſident had before written on the ſame ſubject, which we flatter ourſelves will have its due weight, and that General Goddard will be able to make ſuch a diſpoſition of the force under his command, lately reinforced with a battalion of Sepoys from Madras, as effectually to protect your poſſeſſions in Guzerat, and undertake the ſiege of Baſſein at leaſt on the very firſt opening of next ſeaſon, in which the troops in Bombay and Salſette can materially aſſiſt, and enable him to leave ſuch a force as the enemy cannot withſtand, for the ſecurity of your northern poſſeſſions.

Should he however not be able to move to the ſouthward before the monſoon, we have wrote to him moſt preſſingly immediately to return the Bombay detachment under Lieutenant Colonel Hartley into garriſon, as it would be highly improper to leave this place with no more than our preſent force for its protection during the rains, when no immediate relief could be afforded from the army to the northward. Appendix. No. 272.

In the preſent ſituation of affairs, and whilſt Futty Sing is actually in the field as an auxiliary in the war, we did not think it neceſſary to ſend a Reſident to his Durbar on the part of this Government, which we acquainted you in our addreſs of the 16th ultimo had been propoſed to us by General Goddard; but when it may be a convenient time for ſettling the points ſtill remaining to be adjuſted, this meaſure ſhall be adopted. In the mean time Mr. Mallet, the Reſident at Cambay, will be employed on any occaſional buſineſs, for which his knowledge of the language and politics of the country fully qualify him.

We tranſmit under No. 4, a copy of the late treaty with Futty Sing.

The General ſome time ago ſtrongly urged to the Preſident, to make a loan of ſix lacks to Futty Sing, on the Company's account; which, whatever might be our opinion of the advantage or expediency of ſuch a meaſure, the ſtate of our finances would not permit us to entertain a thought of.

General Goddard has tranſmitted to us a repreſentation, made to him by Mr. Farmer, reſpecting a ſum of money, to the amount of rupees thirty-five thouſand (35,000) which he found it neceſſary to advance, to procure his enlargement from Madjee Scindia; and the General gives his opinion, Mr. Farmer appears very well entitled to the repayment of this money: but as he had no inſtructions from Bengal on the ſubject, he had, according to Mr. Farmer's requeſt, referred and ſtrongly recommended his caſe to the conſideration of that Government. The General gave ſtrong teſtimony of Mr. Farmer's attention to your intereſt, by tranſmitting, with much hazard to himſelf, ſuch uſeful intelligence as he could collect in the enemy's camp; for which reaſon, and as a delay in the payment was an inconvenience to him, the General recommended to us to afford him immediate relief: but as he had himſelf referred the affair to the Governor General and Council, we thought it moſt proper to wait for their determination, and ſend a copy of his letter, under No. 5, for your notice.

The extent of country acquired by the treaty with Futty Sing, and the Maratta pergunnahs that have been reduced, neceſſarily requiring an augmentation of our military eſtabliſhment for their defence, and a proper diſpoſition to be made for that purpoſe, we conſulted General Goddard on theſe points; who accordingly ſent us a plan for the augmentation and regulation of the army in all its branches. He therein ſtrongly recommends, that a Major and two companies be added to the battalion of artillery; gives his opinion, that the infantry eſtabliſhment ſhould be completed to two battalions as ſoon as poſſible; that the Sepoy eſtabliſhment ſhould forthwith be increaſed to fifteen battalions, excluſive of marines: and that all irregulars and locals ſhould be diſcharged. Theſe fifteen battalions he propoſed ſhould be divided into three brigades, with a Major to each, and a Lieutenant Colonel to command the whole; and for your more full information we tranſmit a copy of the plan at length, under No. 7.

When this plan came under conſideration, the Preſident laid before us a minute on the ſubject, which ſtands on our proceedings under the 29th inſtant; and we agreed with him in opinion, that the ſtate of our European eſtabliſhment will not, for the preſent, admit of our carrying into execution the alteration propoſed by the General with reſpect to them, in any manner that will prove of advantage adequate to the great increaſe of expences; and as we may with reaſon expect to hear ſhortly from you, in reply to our repreſentation laſt year on the ſtate of our army, and may conclude you have taken meaſures for ſupplying us with field officers of experience and ability, we further agreed with the

Preſident, not to be precipitate in making promotions to that rank, nor in determining on general arrangements, which might render ſuch promotions neceſſary.

We accordingly reſolved for the preſent, to carry into execution no more of General Goddard's plan than raiſing ſeven new battalions of Sepoys, and modelling thoſe now in the ſervice according to the ſtrength propoſed by him: but without forming them into brigades. The new battalions will be formed at Bombay, Surat, and Broach, as may be moſt convenient; and the large bodies of irregulars at the two latter places, will be incorporated into them. Major Fullerton has alſo been directed ſome time ago to entertain recruits at Ahmedabad, and levies have been formed at Bombay in proportion for this increaſe; ſo that the new battalions will ſoon be in great forwardneſs.

With this ſtrength once completed, we hope to be able to maintain our new acquiſitions in Guzerat as well as Baſſein when reduced; and we can aſſure you, is no more than what appears to us really neceſſary, as we have not yet been in a condition to take poſſeſſion of the valuable ceſſions made by Futty Sing adjacent to Surat, deſcribed by the name of Autaveezy, for want of a ſufficient force; having hitherto been able only to afford one battalion of Sepoys for Surat, whereas three will now be the leaſt that can be diſpenſed with. We have in theſe levies extended our views no further than to form a proper peace eſtabliſhment, ſufficient for the defence of your poſſeſſions, which muſt in the end devolve upon us; and we ſhall have ample means of defraying the expence, when matters were ſettled. We were clearly of opinion it was highly expedient to carry this meaſure into execution without delay; as, if the war continued, General Goddard will not be able to ſpare us any part of the force under his command to garriſon our new acquiſitions, the benefit of which would be conſequently loſt to the Company; or if an accommodation takes place, we ought to have a proper force in readineſs for our own defence, as our firſt wiſh would be to ſend back the Bengal and Madras troops, which are maintained here at an almoſt unſupportable expence; but which cannot be done, unleſs we make proper proviſion for that event.

We cannot pretend to ſay to what extent the Governor General and Council carry their views in this war; but if we were convinced that the French would not make any further efforts to retrieve their affairs in India, we ſhould be of opinion, that after eſtabliſhing ourſelves in Baſſein and the Company's ſhare of Guzerat, which will afford a revenue equal to our expences on this ſide of India, our views ſhould be merely defenſive. Poſſeſſion, and a reſpectable force to repel any invaſion, will be a better ſecurity for the peaceable enjoyment of our acquiſitions, than any treaty, even if the Marattas could be brought to acknowledge our title by any formal engagement; and as in the courſe of a few months, we may hope our views in point of territory may be accompliſhed, and a force eſtabliſhed equal to its defence, we propoſe ſtating our ſentiments on the ſubject to the Governor General and Council, and the great importance of reducing the military charges ariſing from this war within more moderate bounds than they can be brought to whilſt the troops of the other Preſidencies are acting with ours; and that, as nothing but the moſt preſſing exigency could make us wiſh to detain them, they may be aſſured of our returning them as ſoon as the ſtate of affairs under our management will permit, if their ſtay or return is left to our option; having put our own military eſtabliſhment on ſuch a footing as will render the neceſſary meaſures for relieving the Company from this heavy burthen practicable, ſo far as depends on us.

We cannot quit the ſubject of the army, without once more preſſing you to exert every poſſible means to complete our very defective eſtabliſhment of European infantry to two battalions; and to provide for an increaſe of two companies to the battalion of artillery, which General Goddard ſo ſtrongly recommends, and will become neceſſary, as guns muſt be attached to the Sepoy battalions in the different pergunnahs, and we are averſe to inſtructing the natives in the practice of artillery.—About eight hundred recruits will reſtore our eſtabliſhment to a reſpectable footing, and effectually enable us to ſupport our plan of ſelf-defence, without ſubjecting you to the enormous expence of reinforcement from the other Preſidencies.

In order to get footing on the continent, and thereby to open a larger avenue for ſupplies of grain for this iſland, we lately ſent detachments to ſurprize the forts of Perſick and Bellapore; the former oppoſite Tannah, and the latter near the extremity of Caranja; which was completely done, and we thereby obtained a preſent conſiderable ſupply of grain, and the command of ſome rivers, which will afford a conſiderable ſource of ſupply in future. The pergunnah of Bellapore is, from ſome advantages of ſituation, eaſy of defence, and eſtimated to produce a revenue of near a lack of rupees; and being ſo ſituated as to give ſecurity both to Salſette and Caranja, from any petty incurſions of the Marattas, we look upon it as a conſiderable acquiſition.

We know not in what manner to account for the conduct of Hyder Ally, in not having yet given any anſwer to the propoſal made him by the Preſident, of ſending a gentleman to confer with him. The gentlemen at Madras expreſsly acquaint us, in a letter dated the 4th of February, that they have no ſubject of difference with him, but deliver ſentiments reſpecting provocation ſuppoſed to be given him by your ſervants at Tellicherry, which are plainly imbibed from Colonel Braithwaite's repreſentations, who can certainly have acquired no more than a very ſuperficial knowledge of the ſtate of affairs there; we ſhall however require them to clear up this matter very particularly. But the gentlemen at Madras in the ſame letter tell us, that Hyder Ally's conduct depends very much on the tranſactions with the Marattas; that a peace with them would have kept him in awe, and delivered them from all apprehenſions from that quarter; but that it will be difficult to ſay what line he will purſue now that hoſtilities are commenced with them, on account of the treaty in force between him and the Marattas, and the influence of the Poonah Miniſters in the Court of the Nizam.

The laſt letter from Tellicherry, entered on our diary under the 27th inſtant, gives us ſome hopes of ſeeing an end to the troubles there, by a treaty between the Nabob Hyder Ally, and the King of Cotiole; but any thing we can ſay on this head will be no more than mere conjecture, until we can obtain ſome more direct knowledge of the Nabob's diſpoſition towards us.

APPENDIX, No. 273.

Letter from the Preſident and Select Committee at Bombay, 25th July 1780.

To the Honourable the Secret Committee of the Honourable the Court of Directors for Affairs of the Honourable United Company of Merchants of England trading to the Eaſt Indies.

Honourable Gentlemen,

1. WE now diſpatch the Mercury packet to the gulf of Perſia, to afford a convoy, and for any diſpatches you may have forwarded by the way of Buſſorah for this Preſidency, or any of your other ſettlements in India, and that may arrive there after the departure of the Ranger and Eagle; it being very material that at this critical time every order and intelligence from Europe ſhould reach us with all poſſible expedition.

2. We addreſſed you at length by the Hawke, under the 30th of April, in continuation of our advices, dated the 16th of March, tranſmitted under the care of Mr. William

William Petrie. Theſe diſpatches gave you a full account of the treaty concluded by General Goddard with Futty Sing; of the attack and reduction of Ahmadavad by the Company's forces, and the ſurrender of it to Futty Sing, according to the treaty; of the march of Madjee Scindy and Tookajee Holcar into the province of Guzerat; and of General Goddard's fruitleſs negociation with Scindia; and of the military operations that enſued when the overtures towards an accommodation had proved abortive.

3. Though this campaign does not produce any deciſive advantages, the manifeſt ſuperiority of our arms was evinced in the moſt ſtriking and honourable manner. and your poſſeſſions depending on Surat and Broach were effectually protected from the incurſions of the enemy, General Goddard having confined his operations moſtly to the eaſtward of Brodera, belonging to Futty Sing.

4. The ſeaſon for action being nearly elapſed, nothing material happened between the grand armies after the date of our addreſs of the 30th of April; and ſhortly after General Goddard diſpoſed his forces in cantonments, at the moſt convenient ſtations for covering your poſſeſſions during the rains. The General has lately written us, that Scindia and Holcar have certainly retired to their capitals; and hopes it will be a grand object to detain them in their own provinces, while we purſue our ſchemes oppoſed ſingly by the forces of Nanna Furneſſe. He had ſuggeſted to the Governor General and Council the idea of cauſing a powerful diverſion to be made on both the ſides of Malwa, which, he was of opinion, would effectually anſwer that purpoſe.

5. After the ſeparation of the armies, a detachment was employed with much ſucceſs and advantage under the command of Lieutenant Welch. He ſurprized and totally routed a body of the Poonah forces, which had made an inroad from the ſouthward into the diſtricts adjoining to Surat, now devolved to the Company by the late treaty with Futty Sing, taking their camp, baggage, and artillery, with a conſiderable loſs of men on their ſide. He next reduced the fort of Purenulla, and two other forts, which are repreſented as acquiſitions of importance, from the ſecurity they will afford to our new poſſeſſions ſouth of the river Tappy, to which they will ſerve as a formidable barrier, giving us clear poſſeſſion of the country to the very border of the Portugueze diſtricts of Damaun, which now alone ſeparate the ſouthern frontier of your Surat province from the diſtrict of Baſſein.

6. The Chief of Surat has acquainted us, that he has frequented the Company's tannahs in the ſeveral diſtricts heretofore annexed to the city of Surat, and until lately poſſeſſed by the Poonah Government and Futty Sing; and that he hopes to collect a conſiderable revenue therefrom the enſuing ſeaſon.

7. The large force the enemy had in Guzerat, until the retreat of Scindy and Holkar, and the danger and bad policy of leaving our new acquiſitions and Futty Sing expoſed to their depredations, made General Goddard judge it neceſſary to delay the attack of Baſſein; the reduction of which we had once hoped would have cloſed the campaign. It will, however, if nothing unforeſeen happens, be the firſt object of his operations, after the breaking up of the monſoon; and we have, as more fully mentioned in our addreſs by the Hawke, offered our opinion to the Governor General and Council, that the reduction of this place ſhould be the termination of our views in point of territory, and the future operations of the war become defenſive; that is, ſhould have no further object than to eſtabliſh and confirm the Company in poſſeſſion of their new acquiſitions under this Preſidency.

8. In our preſent predicament we have not that direct information to afford, which you might expect from us, of the extent to which this war is meant to be carried, or the further meaures that may be intended in proſecution thereof, for the attainment of peace; the Governor General and Council not having communicated with this Government on theſe objects: but being firmly fixed in our opinion above expreſſed, which points out the moſt eligible ſtep that can be purſued in the preſent ſituation of affairs, next to obtaining a firm and permanent peace, and very anxious to relieve the Company from the enormous expence of the Bengal army, we reſolved on the meaſure already minutely explained to you, and now only briefly repeated, of immediately forming a force upon this eſtabliſhment, equal to the defence of our own poſſeſſions, which muſt at any rate in the end devolve upon us. This is the only meaſure that can make it practicable to relieve you from this heavy burthen of military charge, and enable us to diſpenſe with the aid of the Bengal and Madras auxiliaries, the expence of which we foreſaw muſt be an inſupportable drain upon the Bengal treaſury. For this purpoſe we are now raiſing ſeven additional battalions of Sepoys, and have ſtated our ſentiments fully to the Governor General and Council, that, if they concur with us, meaſures may be taken for the return of the foreign troops as early as may be judged prudent; though as our European eſtabliſhment is ſo very imperfect or incomplete, we have recommended, that the battalion of Madras infantry, and the detachment of artillery may be continued on this coaſt, which, added to the troops of this eſtabliſhment, will effectually enable us to ſupport our plan of ſelf defence. Appendix. No. 273.

9. In our addreſs by the Hawke, we wrote preſſingly for a ſupply of eight hundred recruits, for our infantry and artillery, and thirty-ſix pounder field pieces for the Sepoy battalions, which we earneſtly requeſt may be ſent out as ſoon as poſſible; and alſo a ſupply of ſeamen for our cruizers, which are now almoſt entirely manned by Laſcars.

10. We judged it prudent before the monſoon to recal into garriſon the detachment we had ſent to reinforce General Goddard, under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Hartley, which, as well as the footing we had gained on the Continent, were mentioned in our addreſs by the Hawke Shortly after date thereof, Captain Campbell with a ſmall detachment was ſent to take poſſeſſion of the town of Callian, in which he was ſoon after attacked by a large body of the enemy; who had, from Madjee Scindia, come down the Gauts, and forced one of our poſts defended by two companies of Sepoys, who were diſperſed, and three officers killed, one taken priſoner, and three pieces of cannon taken. The enemy elated with this attacked Callian with great vigour, which was defended with much gallantry by Captain Campbell, and reinforcements being ſpeedily ſent over, and the arrival of the detachment from the northward enabling us to detach a ſufficient force to meet the enemy in the field, Colonel Hartley ſoon drove them with diſgrace and loſs out of the country, and we have ſtationed a reſpectable force in Callian; from the poſſeſſion of which we hope to derive conſiderable advantages in the operations againſt Baſſein, and we truſt it will otherwiſe prove a beneficial acquiſition.

11. We have the moſt alarming apprehenſions of the difficulties we ſhall experience the enſuing ſeaſon for want of money; having lately received a letter from the Governor General and Council, acquainting us, that their own diſtreſs will put it out of their power to make additional remittances equal to the ſupport of this Preſidency, and the pay of the large army under General Goddard; and therefore deſiring that every acceſſion of income which may ariſe to the Company from the ſucceſs of that army, may be ſet aſide, and appropriated excluſively to that; and thus cutting off the principal reſource we had dependence on for our immediate exigencies. We have only the hope, that when they receive our propoſal for the reduction of theſe intolerable military charges, and ſee the ſtrong meaſure we have actually taken, to make it practicable, which of courſe will require an extraordinary proviſion for the preſent, they will

will at leaſt leave us in poſſeſſion of our own reſources; and, encouraged by the proſpect of ſome end to ſuch heavy drains, that they will make a vigorous effort to give ſucceſs to our plan, and exonerate us from the charge of maintaining ſuch ruinous auxiliaries.

12. The Governor General and Council have propoſed ſome alterations in the ſettlement of the Guzerat country made with Futty Sing, which it is not neceſſary at preſent to determine upon, or to trouble you with the detail.

13. The Governor General and Council having acquieſced in Mr. Farmer's claim, noticed to you in our laſt addreſs, we have reimburſed him the amount of the charge he ſtated, for effecting the releaſe of himſelf and Lieutenant Stewart, under this Preſidency.

We have the honour to be,
with the utmoſt reſpect,
Honourable Gentlemen,

Poſtſcript.—The Preſident has received an account that the fort of Vingorla, where the Company had a ſmall garriſon, has been treacherouſly taken by the Boundcello, and that the Reſident at Onore had been apprized by Hyder Ally of his intent of ordering him away from that ſettlement, and directed him to ſettle all his accounts and concerns.

APPENDIX, No. 274.

Bengal Secret Conſultations, 12th June 1780.

READ a letter as follows from Brigadier General Goddard.

Gentlemen,

I had the honour to addreſs you the 28th ultimo, informing you of the tranſactions with Madjee Scindia, and the ſituation I found myſelf in reſpecting that Chief, who with an army reported to be forty thouſand ſtrong, had entered the Guzerat province, and upon my approach had moved off towards Pawen Ghur, a fortreſs belonging to himſelf, ſituated betwixt the provinces of Guzerat and Malva. I had advanced from Baroda in hopes of bringing him to an action, or in the event of his declining it, and moving off on my approach, which proved to be the caſe, of manifeſting to the world the acknowledged ſuperiority of our arms, and impreſſing the Maratta nation with the belief and thorough conviction of their inability to contend with us.

On the 3d inſtant I marched with a part of the army to ſurprize Scindia, and drive him from a poſt he occupied about ſix miles in front with his fighting men only, for he had uſed the precaution of ſending off to a remote diſtance his artillery, baggage, and incumbrance of every ſort, as my former letter adviſed you. The particulars of this enterprize I laid before the Commander in Chief, the 4th inſtant, and as they will have been communicated to you by him, it is unneceſſary to trouble you here with a recapitulation. It is ſufficient to obſerve, that as I remained a conſiderable time upon the ground which the enemy had abandoned, giving them full leiſure to endeavour to retrieve their diſgrace of being defeated by ſo ſmall a part of my force, and afterwards rejoined the army without their daring to move towards me, or offer me the ſmalleſt moleſtation on my return; the triumph of our arms has been as complete and decided, as could have been expected or wiſhed for. On the 16th Colonel Brown, with the Madras Europeans arrived in camp; and on the 19th, convinced, from the extreme precaution and vigilance of the enemy, as well as the diſpoſition they had made of their force and followers, that any attempt to ſurprize them a ſecond time would be ineffectual, I determined upon advancing with the whole army to the ground then occupied by them, which they abandoned at my approach without any oppoſition, except firing a number of rockets, which fortunately did no damage. Owing to the ſeaſon of the year, and the ravages committed by the Marattas, the country for near twenty miles round was an entire deſert, and even the branches of ſuch trees as might have afforded nouriſhment to the cattle, were moſtly ſtripped of their leaves; I was therefore under the neceſſity of ſending to a conſiderable diſtance for forage, and of detaching a ſtrong party for the protection of the people, who were to bring it into camp. On the morning of the 22d Captain Campbell, with the 1ſt and 5th battalion of Bengal Sepoys, proceeded on their duty, and were attacked about twelve miles from my camp by Scindia and Holcar in perſon, with near 20,000 of their beſt horſe. The enemy advanced with great appearance of reſolution, and ſo near as to receive the fire of two grenadier companies, which threw them into a good deal of confuſion, and being at the ſame time warmly plied with grape from two ſix pounders, they ſoon fled with a good deal of loſs, and did not venture to renew the attack, but continued hovering in large bodies, at a conſiderable diſtance, all day.

A very near relation of Tuckajee Holcar, who was intruſted with the principal management of his affairs, fell among the ſlain. Captain Campbell appears to have behaved with great coolneſs and intrepidity on the occaſion, as well as the troops under him; and having effected the ſervice on which he was ſent, returned to camp early next morning without any loſs. This ſtriking proof of our ſuperiority has effectually completed their diſgrace; and they have not ſince that period ſhewn themſelves in any numbers, but have retired cloſe to Parvenghur. I have ſince moved back to within ten miles of Baroda, where I am at preſent encamped; and as the rainy ſeaſon is ſo near at hand, I purpoſe taking ſuch meaſures, as, from a proper attention to circumſtances, may appear beſt calculated for the ſafety and protection of our new acquiſitions, and the general tranquillity of the province, of which I ſhall not fail to give you immediate information.

You will perceive that my operations ſince the conqueſt of Guzerat have been chiefly defenſive; I have endeavoured to render them otherwiſe, as far as an attention to the proper line of policy, and the reaſons I have in a former letter aſſigned for not purſuing Scindia into the Malva province, would permit, by drawing him if poſſible to an action, but to no purpoſe; at the ſame time I doubt not you will approve of the ſteps I have been neceſſitated to take, which though not attended with the glare of additional conqueſt, have effectually ſecured thoſe valuable acquiſitions already made to the Company; and put them in a condition of ſupporting the war with every advantage, and furniſhed reſources in a great meaſure adequate to the extraordinary expences that may be requiſite for its proſecution.

I ſhall ſoon write you very particularly upon the political ſtate of affairs, as well as the military arrangements and diſpoſitions of the army I may find it neceſſary to make for the public ſervice, and have the honour to be, &c.

Head Quarters,
Camp near Camboull,

Bengal Secret Conſultations, the 24th Auguſt 1780;—at a Council; preſent, the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Governor General, Preſident; Edward Wheler, Eſquire.—(Mr. Francis indiſpoſed. Sir Eyre Coote abſent on a viſit to the different ſtations of the army.)

Read

Read the following letter from Brigadier General Goddard.

Gentlemen,

I had the honour to addreſs you the 27th ultimo, acquainting you with the enemy's forces having deſiſted from further attempts to make any impreſſion upon the Guzerat province, and that, from every intelligence I could learn, it was Scindia's intention to relinquiſh the country altogether, and march either towards Ugein or the Decan. A few days ſubſequent to the date of that letter, my Hircarrahs brought me certain accounts of Scindia's having moved with his whole army towards Ugein. Theſe reports have been ſince confirmed, and it is now generally and confidentially believed, that he has laid aſide the deſign it was ſuppoſed he had formed, of viſiting the Decan, and purpoſes to paſs the rainy ſeaſon at Ugein. Holkar has accompanied him, and will reſide at Indore, a principal city in the neighbourhood of Ugein, and the chief reſidence of his family.

In conſequence of the departure of Scindia from the neighbourhood of Guzerat, and the near approach of the rains, which did not admit of any delay, I re-croſſed the Nerbuddah, and directed my march to Surat; where I arrived, with the greateſt part of the army, the 8th inſtant. But as a report prevailed, and indeed carried with it great appearance of probability, that Scindia meant to have a conſiderable body of horſe in the neighbourhood of Pawanghur, I thought it requiſite, in order to provide for the ſecurity and defence of the diſtricts of Broach and the other Pergunnahs dependant on that collectorſhip, almoſt all of which are ſituated north of the Nerbuddah, to ſtation a force for their protection on that ſide of the river; and have therefore poſted two battalions of Sepoys at Zinnore, one of the Pergunnahs ceded by Futty Sing in the late treaty, only ſeven or eight coſs from Dubhoy, which will effectually ſecure all the country between the Mahé and Nerbuddah rivers from any ſudden attack or inroads of the enemy, who indeed can enter it from the eaſtward, that is, from Pawanghur, during the rains.

Since my arrival at this place, the detachment under Lieutenant Welch, with whoſe ſucceſs againſt Gunneſe Punt, one of the Maratta leaders, I have already made you acquainted, has effected a very material piece of ſervice, and completely eradicated every trace of the Maratta power in this neighbourhood, and deſtroyed every the moſt diſtant hope he could have of giving further diſturbance to our new poſſeſſions, except by ſending a large army into the Guzerat, which will not, I apprehend, in the future operations of the war, be at all convenient, or even practicable for them to do.

The enterprize I allude to, is the taking of Parneiro, a fort ſituated upon a high hill, about thirty coſs from Surat, upon the ſea coaſt. It was defended for two days by a garriſon, conſiſting of about 400 men, who finding Lieutenant Welch had with immenſe difficulty and perſeverance, and by his ſteady and good conduct, with the loſs only of two Sepoys, brought up two pieces of battering cannon to within a proper diſtance of the walls, which he had made a breach in, thought proper to capitulate and ſurrrender the place into the hands of the Engliſh.

Lieutenant Welch has ſince made himſelf maſter of two inferior forts, called Arzen Ghur and Under Ghur.—The former has a diſtrict of one lack of rupees lying around and dependent on it. They are both built upon hills, and defenſible, with a very ſmall force, againſt any number of Marattas. They are within three coſs of each other, and about ſix from Paineiro, and they were conſtructed, as report ſays, by the Marattas, to ſerve as a check upon the encroachments of the Portugueze, who have a ſettlement, called Damaun, on the ſea coaſt, at the diſtance of four or five miles from them.

Theſe acquiſitions have put the Engliſh in entire poſſeſſion of the ſea coaſt from Combair to Damaun, comprehending a tract of near 150 miles. Baſſein only remains to complete the conqueſt of the whole to the north of Bombay. I mentioned in my laſt letter, obſtacles that had prevented my undertaking that enterprize, on which I had fixed my mind, and that muſt ſtill delay its execution for ſome months, at the expiration of which, as every previous neceſſary preparation will be made, the taſk of reducing Baſſein will be eaſy and expeditious. The fall of this place may, I conceive complete your views of territorial acquiſitions on this ſide of India, and make the Company maſters of a tract of country, capable in their hands of becoming an inexhauſtible ſource of power and wealth, from the commercial advantages and capability of improvement in trade and manufactures it poſſeſſes, and which, from its convenient ſituation, may be maintained and defended at a ſmall expence of men and treaſure.

Appendix, No. 274.

By poſſeſſing Baſſein, which appears eſſentially requiſite to the proſperity and ſafety of this ſettlement, the ghauts and paſſes in its neighbourhood leading into the Decan, muſt be at all times commanded by us; and the terror this would excite in the Government of Poonah, from their vicinity to that capital, would create (more than any other conqueſt or advantage we could gain) a ſerious inclination in the Marattas to accommodate the preſent difference, and upon terms of honour and benefit to the Company. This, notwithſtanding the paſt ſucceſs of our arms, and the diſappointment all their efforts to interrupt their progreſs have hitherto met with, they will not at preſent conſent to at any rate; they would never agree to cede Baſſein to us; without which I repeat my opinion, the Company's affairs on this ſide of India cannot be conſidered as placed upon a firm and flouriſhing baſis. From this powerful conſideration, I do not think it political or expedient to make any overtures to the Poonah Government for peace, which would not be productive of the wiſhed-for effect, till Baſſein is ſecured, and our army has poſſeſſion of the ghauts, ready to fall upon the capital of the empire, we ſhall be in a condition to inſiſt upon ſuch terms as may be judged fully conſiſtent with our honour and intereſt, and adequate to the heavy expences we ſhall have incurred in proſecuting the war.

Affairs cannot arrive at this ſtate till next October, long before which I hope to receive a particular relation of your ſentiments, and the inſtructions you may deem it proper to give, in conſequence of a thorough knowledge of circumſtances, and of the ſituation of affairs at the concluſion of the campaign. Convinced upon the moſt ſure and ſolid grounds, that a pacification cannot be brought about during the rains, I ſhall venture to give you my ideas at large of the mode by which it appears to me the war ought to be proſecuted next ſeaſon, and the which from a ſurvey of the political ſtate of the Maratta nation; promiſe to contribute to its ſucceſs.

In the negociation opened with Scindia in March laſt, particulars of which have been laid before you, the chief object of his concern ſeemed to be, and I am perſuaded was, the diſpoſal of Ragoba. That point once ſettled, he affected to declare, the remaining ſubjects of conteſts between the Engliſh and Maratta nations would be without difficulty adjuſted. It muſt not be implied from this aſſertion of Scindia's, that admitting the obſtacle of Ragoba removed, a peace could have been concluded; becauſe it is evident, from the hopes he muſt at that time have entertained, either of his arms proving ſuperior to ours in the field, or of being able to draw over to his intereſts our new ally Futty Sing, which would have gone near effectually to deſtroy the fruits of all our labours in Guzerat, that he would never have been induced then to liſten to terms which even at this period of bad ſucceſs and diſappointment in all his projects, there is not any reaſon to believe would be accepted. My principal motive for mentioning the above circumſtances, is to point

point out the important light in which Ragoba is and muſt ever be conſidered by the Marattas, and how material the poſſeſſion of his perſon muſt prove to promote the views and intereſts of the Company, and bring about a happy concluſion of the preſent war.

Here I do not, in any ſhape, mean to recommend the abſolute, or even conditional re-eſtabliſhment of Ragoba in the Government of Poonah; what I contend for is the manifeſt and ſtriking advantages we muſt infallibly derive from his preſence with us; and this poſition I found upon the following reaſon: that the juſt and fair claims Ragoba poſſeſſes to the principal direction of the Adminiſtration, will ever make the preſent party apprehenſive of his intention to aſſert them; and that the certain conſequence of his ſucceſs, in ſpite of the moſt ſecure or ſolemn engagements in force, might to enter into, would ultimately prove their ruin and deſtruction. It is the ſame of all the principal Chiefs of the State, who have been more or leſs inſtrumental in reducing him to his preſent abject condition, during a ſpace of ſix years.

This argument, while it evinces the imprudence and bad policy of attempting to force a ruler upon the Maratta leaders, whoſe cauſe none of them are inclined, or if inclined, are however afraid to eſpouſe, points out all at once the utility, and even neceſſity, of retaining in our own hands a man who muſt ever be a terror to them, and whoſe forbearance they would wiſh to purchaſe at any expence from that power whoſe ſtrength they muſt be ſure, if exerted in his favour, would prove too dangerous to their intereſts and ſafety. I am therefore clearly of opinion, that the ſame line of conduct hitherto adopted reſpecting Ragoba, ſhould continue to be purſued; that is, no formal or expreſs engagements ſhould be entered into with him; but we ſhould leave ourſelves at liberty to purſue ſuch plan regarding his diſpoſal, as circumſtances might hereafter render eligible and convenient. His pretenſions to ſovereignty ſhould be in no degree ſupported, and we ſhould continue to afford him a ſafe and certain aſylum in the Company's dominions, whenever the war ſhall terminate: his intereſts, at leaſt as far as they relate to perſonal ſafety, &c. proviſion for himſelf and family, ought to be attended to, and included in the general plan of peace.

This line of conduct reſpecting Ragoba being adopted, the next object is the mode of proſecuting the war; which, as it is a meaſure at preſent of conſiderable neceſſity, the more heartily and vigorouſly it is entered into the ſooner we may expect it will be brought to a period. I have already hinted the manner in which I propoſe to commence the military operations, by taking Baſſein, and poſſeſſing myſelf of the neighbouring paſſes that lead into the Decan. Here it is probable the fears and anxieties of the Miniſter may bring the war to an immediate concluſion: ſhould they not, the point next to be conſidered, is, whether you would chuſe to purſue it upon an offenſive plan, and penetrate into the Decan, and ſeize upon the capital, or confine your operations to the defence of the territories lying between the ghauts and the ſea ſhore, comprehending Guzerat, and all the track along the ſhore from Cambay to Bombay.

The determination of this point will however depend a good deal upon circumſtances: if Scindia continues at Ugein till the cloſe of the rains, which I now conceive will be the caſe, a powerful diverſion might be made in that quarter, to prevent his paſſing to the ſouthward of the Nerbudda, to ſuccour Nanah Furnefe, and I would venture to pronounce, as far as human probability and reaſon may preſume, that without Scindia's-aid, the Miniſter would be immediately compelled to terms, and enter into any engagements that might be required of him. This is no chimerical idea, for beſides Scindia and Holkar, there remain only two Chiefs of conſequence in the State, Nanah and Hurry Punt Furkia, and I do not believe that any foreign Power will draw upon himſelf the future enmity of the Engliſh, by openly declaring his party, and marching to their aſſiſtance.

In the event of ſuch powerful diverſion being made to the northward, Scindia will find too much employment at home to have leiſure to raiſe any diſturbance in Guzerat; and indeed the Sepoy force, which may very well be ſpared in that province, acting with the troops of Futty Sing, which it may not perhaps be convenient to carry with me to the ſouthward, will prove ſufficient for its ſecurity and defence, againſt a very large body of the enemy, ſhould any conſiderable army (which in the plan above mentioned appears ſcarcely practicable) be ordered to enter it.

What I have above mentioned comprehends almoſt every thing that occurs to me, both with reſpect to the preſent political ſtate of affairs, and the advantages we may expect to derive from it in the courſe of the future operations of the war. The four leading men now in the empire, and indeed in whoſe hands all power is placed, are Nana, Hurry Punt, Scindia, and Holkar; theſe, notwithſtanding the cauſes of diſpute that may be ſuppoſed to exiſt, from the former conceiving that no uſeful or meritorious ſervice has been performed by the laſt; and Scindia again arrogating a merit derived him by the others, and claiming rewards to which he will not conſent, will, I am perſuaded, be found cordially to unite in oppoſition to the Engliſh.

As the rains are now but little advanced, I truſt I ſhall receive a full and particular reply to this letter long before their concluſion, that is late in Auguſt or early in September; and I earneſtly entreat you will tranſmit it me as expeditiouſly as poſſible, that I may be completely maſter of your object and inclinations before the opening of the campaign, and act accordingly.

I have the honour to acknowledge your letter of the 20th April: my laſt letter will fully have replied to what you are pleaſed to direct reſpecting Ragoba; and you will perceive I have, permit me to ſay, contrary to my own inclinations and opinion, thought it neceſſary to comply with your poſitive inſtructions for withdrawing Ragoba's allowance, in its fulleſt extent and without any limitation.

I am truly ſorry at the directions you have been pleaſed to give reſpecting the regiment of cavalry, whoſe uſeful and even neceſſary ſervice I have experienced on many occaſions, during the late campaign, both in protecting the parties that were ſent out to forage near the camp, and in keeping off the pendaries and other ſmall bodies of the enemy's horſe, who approached its environs, as well as covering and defending the baggage on the line of march; on all theſe ſervices, and whenever I found it neceſſary to employ them, they have behaved with credit to themſelves and ſatisfaction to me.

The ſucceſs againſt Gunneſe Punt was entirely their own. The battalion that accompanied them could not poſſibly have reached his camp before the alarm muſt have been given, and the enemy have eſcaped unhurt, to moleſt and haraſs the country by future depredations. From all theſe circumſtances, and the inconveniencies that might attend the diſmiſſing of a corps at this diſtance from home, that has ſerved with credit from the commencement of the expedition, by the damp it might throw upon the ardour of the reſt of the troops, added to the unfavourable conſequences it might be of regarding the enemy, who from repeated proofs I know entertain a high opinion of their ſkill and diſcipline, I have deferred the execution of your orders reſpecting this regiment, until I can receive your further inſtructions, in which I flatter myſelf you will approve and authorize its continuance in the ſervice.

I ſhall not fail to obſerve the rule you have laid down for my direction, with regard to detaching any part of your forces for the defence of the country ceded to Futty Sing, independent of the general plan of the campaign. My reaſon for not fixing a ſubſidy for the expence of the troops left in Ahmedabad, was, that I conſidered this meaſure as coming under that predicament; and that in the infancy of a war, before the affections and diſpoſitions of men had been properly put to the teſt, I thought it a point of political convenience and expediency, to guard as much as poſſible againſt every unfavourable conſequence that might ariſe from any change of ſentiment or party.

APPENDIX, No. 275.

Extract of Bengal Secret Conſultations, 24th July 1780.

READ a letter from Bombay, as follows:

Gentlemen,

We encloſe a duplicate of our laſt letter, dated the 29th ultimo, and of the correſpondence with General Goddard therein forwarded.

Our lateſt letter from him is dated the 7th ultimo, when he was preparing to make a diſpoſition of his forces, for the protection of the diſtricts adjoining to Surat and Broach during the rainy ſeaſon; but we underſtand he has ſince been under the neceſſity of deferring the execution of his intentions, by the ſudden appearance of the enemy on his line of march.

You will obſerve from General Goddard's advices, that the cautious plan of conduct adopted by the enemy put it totally out of his power to effect any thing deciſive this campaign; and rendered it neceſſary, in his opinion, to defer the attack of Baſſein, the reduction of which we are very anxious may become an early object of his operations.

The extent of country acquired by the treaty with Futty Sing, and the Maratta Pergunnahs that have been reduced, neceſſarily requiring an augmentation of our military eſtabliſhment for their defence, we conſulted General Goddard on this point, who accordingly ſent us a plan for the augmentation and regulation of the army in all its branches; a copy of which is encloſed. He therein ſtrongly recommended, that a Major and two companies ſhould be added to the battalion of artillery, and gave his opinion, that the European infantry ſhould be completed to two battalions as ſoon as poſſible; and that the Sepoy eſtabliſhment ſhould forthwith be increaſed to fifteen battalions, excluſive of marines, and all irregulars and locals diſcharged. Theſe fifteen battalions, he propoſed, ſhould be divided into three brigades, with a Major to each; and a Lieutenant Colonel to command the whole.

When the plan came under conſideration, the Preſident laid before us a minute on the ſubject (a copy of which we think it neceſſary to tranſmit to you); and we agreed with him in opinion, that the ſtate of our European eſtabliſhments could not for the preſent admit of our carrying into execution the alterations propoſed by the General in reſpect to them, in any manner that would prove of advantage adequate to the great expence that would be incurred thereby; and as we may with reaſon expect to hear ſhortly from the Honourable Company, in reply to our repreſentations laſt year on the ſtate of our army, and may conclude, they have taken meaſures for ſupplying us with field officers of experience and ability, we further agreed with the Preſident, to make no immediate promotions to that rank, and not to determine on any general arrangements which might render ſuch promotions neceſſary. Appendix. No. 275.

We accordingly reſolved for the preſent to carry into execution no more of General Goddard's plan than raiſing ſeven new battalions of Sepoys, and modelling thoſe now in the ſervice according to the ſtrength propoſed by him, but without forming them into brigades. The new battalions will be formed at Bombay, Saſſette, Surat, and Broach, and the large bodies of irregulars at the two latter ſettlements incorporated into them. Major Fullerton has alſo been directed to entertain recruits at Ahmedabad, and levies had been made at Bombay in preparation for this increaſe; ſo that the new battalions will ſoon be in great forwardneſs.

With this ſtrength once completed, we hope to be able to maintain all our new acquiſitions in Guzerat as well as Baſſein, when reduced; and we judge it to be no more than really neceſſary for that purpoſe, as we have not yet been in condition to take poſſeſſion of the valuable ceſſions made by Futty Sing, adjacent to Surat, for want of a ſufficient force.

General Goddard gives his opinion, that the propoſed eſtabliſhment will admit of a very eligible army being drawn together; and will provide for the ſecurity of our poſſeſſions, the defence of which muſt in the end devolve upon us; and we were clearly of opinion, it was highly expedient to carry this meaſure into execution, without delay; as, if the war is continued upon an extenſive plan, General Goddard will not be able to ſpare any part of the force under his command to garriſon the new acquiſitions; the benefit of which muſt conſequently be loſt to the Company: or if an accommodation takes place, we ought to have a proper force in readineſs for their defence; as our firſt wiſh would be to ſend back the Bengal and Madras troops, in order to relieve the Company from the moſt heavy expence which muſt be incurred by their ſervice on this coaſt; but which cannot be done, until we put ourſelves in a condition to defend our poſſeſſions without their aſſiſtance.

We cannot pretend to ſay, to what extent you may carry your views in this war, which perhaps may depend on the efforts the French may make in India; but in our opinion, after Baſſein is added to our other acquiſitions, the Company's views in point of territory ſhould be terminated, as we ſhall then be maſters of a revenue equal to the expences of this Preſidency, and our military operations become defenſive; that is, ſhould have no further object than to eſtabliſh and confirm us in our poſſeſſions: you muſt be the beſt judges of your ability to ſupport the expence of the army under General Goddard; and whether you have any other object in view adequate thereto. But if you ſhould reſolve on any meaſures to relieve the Company from this heavy burthen, we are preparing with the utmoſt expedition to put our own army on ſuch a footing as will render them practicable, ſo far at leaſt as depends on us. Our greateſt difficulty will be, the deficiency in our European corps, which we particularly requeſt you will attend to in your arrangements; and we hope the reinforcements received this ſeaſon at Bengal and Madras, will enable you to ſupply even this deficiency; the moſt ready method of doing which will be, to tranſfer the private and non-commiſſion officers of the Madras detachment, now with General Goddard, to this eſtabliſhment; which we hope that Government will now be in a condition to ſpare.

We have ſtrongly recommended to General Goddard, to take meaſures for the protection of the northern diſtricts, during the approaching monſoon, as the reſources we may expect from them the enſuing ſeaſon will entirely depend on the degree of protection he can afford to them. We have for ſome time paſt experienced conſiderable difficulties for want of money, when the ſupplies from Bengal, by the Britannia and Betborough, arrived very ſeaſonably to our relief; which we ſhall manage nage with the utmoſt care, as at this time of the year we have no other reſource; and until affairs are in ſome manner ſettled, we muſt ſtill look to you for further aſſiſtance. We are therefore under the neceſſity of requeſting, that you will continue making us remittances as ſoon as poſſible, to at leaſt the uſual annual amount, as our revenue receipts muſt be conſidered in ſome meaſure as precarious; and we have, as above-mentioned, thought it for the general intereſt to increaſe our own immediate military expences.

We have thought it neceſſary to take poſſeſſion of ſome places in the Conkan, adjacent to Bombay and Salſette, to prevent the enemy from ſtraightening our iſlands too much for ſupplies of grain. We are now maſters of the forts of Bellapore and Perſick, and the town of Callian, which command a conſiderable tract of country in the diſtrict of Baſſein; but in the courſe of this ſervice, one of our poſts was forced, with the loſs of three pieces of cannon. On the return of the Bombay detachment, which, you will find by the encloſed correſpondence, we judged it proper to recal from the army before the rains, we ſent over Colonel Hartley with a more conſiderable force, who attacked and routed the enemy in their camp, and obliged them to retire ſome coſs.

In order to prevent as far as we can an apprehended ſcarcity of grain, we have ſent round two of the Company's ſhips to Madras, for cargoes of rice; and we requeſt you will encourage the exportation of that article from Bengal for the ſervice of this Preſidency.

We have the honour to be, &c.

APPENDIX, No. 276.

Extract of Bengal Secret Conſultations, 24th July 1780.

RECEIVED a letter as follows from General Goddard:

Gentlemen,

I have the honour to acknowledge your two letters of the 24th January and 23d March.

A period of more than three months has elapſed ſince I addreſſed you in a letter dated February 17th, upon the ſubject of the allowance granted to Ragoba, ſetting forth the reaſons which induced me to conceive it for the intereſt of the Company, and even neceſſary to the future ſucceſs of our conteſt with the Maratta State that Ragoba ſhould be ſupported by us until the final ſettlement of the preſent diſpute.

I have waited with the utmoſt anxiety for your reply to that letter, in hopes it might arrive before the concluſion of this campaign, when alone I conſidered it would be adviſable to withdraw the allowance from Ragoba, by which his troops then actually in ſervice with me were ſubſiſted; but finding by the earneſtneſs expreſſed in your letter of 24th January, that your ſentiments regarding Ragoba were not in any reſpect altered, I thought it adviſable, in order to comply with your wiſhes, and at the ſame time to act in a point of ſo much importance to the Company with as much regard to their true intereſts as poſſible, to communicate the whole of the circumſtances to the Honourable Select Committee of Bombay, and conſult with them upon the meaſures proper to be adopted in the preſent ſtate of our affairs here. They have in anſwer concurred in the expediency and neceſſity of attaching Ragoba to us during the war, and the impracticability of doing ſo, without allowing him a maintenance; but they have recommended that it ſhould be reduced. This plan of reduction in its fulleſt poſſible extent I meant accordingly to have followed; but receiving a confirmation of your fixed intentions that this allowance ſhould be entirely withdrawn, by the reference made in your letter of the 23d March to the inſtructions formerly ſent me on the ſubject, I have determined implicitly to obey them, and ſhall not advance Ragoba a ſingle rupee beyond the preſent month, for which he has already received.

With reſpect to Ragoba, in the conditions propoſed to be ſtipulated in his favour, I adhered literally to the terms made by Lieutenant Colonel Upton, except adding that his perſonal ſafety ſhould be effectually ſecured, and that he ſhould be at liberty to reſide in whatever place he might chuſe, the Company becoming guarantees for his pacific behaviour, and engaging not to afford him any aſſiſtance, or even protection, ſhould he attempt to raiſe diſturbances in the Maratta State.

I come now to reply to your letter of the 23d March; and it is not without the moſt ſenſible pleaſure and ſatisfaction I perceive the approbation you are pleaſed to declare of the treaty concluded with Futty Sing Guicawar, which the tenor of my paſt letters, and the preſent ſituation of our affairs in this quarter, will have already pointed out, and now proves to have been productive of all the good conſequences I promiſed to the Company in concluding it; and which I have already fully explained to you. I have communicated to Futty Sing your favourable ſentiments regarding him, for which he is exceedingly grateful, and anxiouſly looks for the arrival of the letter you mentioned would be written him by the Honourable Governor General, but which I fear may have met with ſome accident on the road, as it is not yet come to hand.

My former letters will have apprized you of the expectations formed from the diviſions ſuppoſed to ſubſiſt among the Maratta Chiefs engroſſing their attention too much to allow them leiſure to offer any oppoſition in the courſe of the preſent campaign, having proved deceitful; Scindia has, I am convinced, always acted in concert with, and under the influence of Nana Furneſſe, and there is reaſon to believe, will continue to do ſo; ſenſible from the beginning of his inſufficiency to contend with our arms, his aim ſeems to have been, the preventing us from extending our conqueſts into any other part of the Maratta dominions. In this he has ſucceeded ſo far, that although it was an object I had much at heart, to reduce Baſſein before the commencement of the rains I have found it abſolutely neceſſary to confine my operations this campaign to the defence and ſecurity of the Company's new acquired poſſeſſions in Guzerat, and the entire excluſion of the Marattas from all ſhare or participation of its revenue.

I have now the happineſs to acquaint you, that my endeavours for the purpoſe are fortunately accompliſhed; and that Scindia, unable to make any impreſſion upon the country, remains quiet in the neighbourhood of Pawan Ghur; and by the beſt intelligence I can learn, means ſhortly to relinquiſh it entirely. Whether he intends to direct his courſe to Ugein, or return to the Decan, I cannot poſitively aſſert; various reports are circulated; and though I am myſelf of opinion that he will find his preſence requiſite at Poonah, where the Miniſter muſt feel his authority in rather a tottering and precarious ſtate, having lately diſcovered a confederacy, formed by many principal men in favour of Siccaram Pundit, and ſeized upon ſome of the ringleaders, yet I believe he will detach a ſtrong force towards Ugein, in order to oppoſe the progreſs of our troops, who in conjunction with the Rajah of Ghode, have, it is reported, entered the northern parts of the Malva province. A ſhort period will now determine his deſign. At preſent I am well aſſured, he will not in any material degree moleſt us in the poſſeſſion of our new conqueſts. It is however probable, and my intelligence gives me cauſe to apprehend, he may leave a body of horſe upon the confines of the province, to make inroads into the diſtricts of Broach, Jamboſeer, Zinnore, &c. and interrupt the Ryots in the cultivation of their lands. This evil I ſhall be able eaſily to remedy, by ſtationing a ſmall force for their protection.

I beg now to give you a ſhort detail of the military operations ſince my laſt: finding every effort ineffectual to bring Scindia's army to an action, and judging it improper to expoſe the troops to unneceſſary hardſhips and difficulties, by remaining in a country where not only forage was to be procured with great hazard and trouble, but there was even a ſcarcity of water, I marched back to Baroda on the 5th inſtant, at which place I might form my future plan at leiſure; and on the 8th, in compliance with a requiſition from the Government of Bombay, I detached the reinforcements from that Preſidency, who arrived at Surat, and embarked for Bombay the 15th inſtant.

I alſo put the whole army in motion on the ſame day, and on the 9th, proceeded to Carwan on the road to this place, when I received intelligence of Scindia with his whole force having advanced to the neighbourhood of Dubhoy: I therefore thought it neceſſary to check his career, and once more drive him from the country, and accordingly marched back to the Dahder Nuddy, upon the oppoſite bank of which Scindia lay. He retreated to his former encampment the ſame day, and not thinking it neceſſary or proper to purſue him, I continued upon the ground he had quitted, till the 14th, when I moved towards the Nerbudda.

The enemy's troops have now entirely evacuated the diſtricts belonging to the Company, and it is with the greateſt pleaſure I can communicate to you two ſucceſsful enterprizes, which cloſed the ſcene of our operations in the field, and have been attended by the moſt beneficial conſequences to the Company, particularly the latter, both by the ſplendor of the action, and the peaceful ſecurity it has given to the new acquired Pergunnahs.

A body of about 6,000 horſe, under the command of Boghretty Scindia, and Parajee Punt, two principal Maratta officers, had advanced to the Nerbubba, within ſix or ſeven miles of Zinnore, which is four miles above my camp, and where I had before ſtationed Major Forbes, with two battalions of Sepoys, for its defence and protection, being the principal town of the diſtrict of that name. The deſign of this force in coming ſo near, was merely to watch my motions, and plunder and deſtroy the country. Circumſtances appearing favourable, I ordered Major Forbes, on the 22d inſtant, to march and ſurprize them; which ſervice he effected, coming upon them at day-break in the morning. The enemy had little or no baggage of any kind; what they had, together with a few horſes and ſome grain (the fruits of their rapine) fell into our hands. A few only were killed, as they precipitately made off, and ſoon after they joined their main body under Scindia, where they have ever ſince continued.

The ſecond action above alluded to was performed by Lieutenant Welch, whom on the 17th inſtant I detached from this place, with the regiment of cavalry, the Candahar horſe, and the ſeventh battalion of Sepoys, towards Surat, in order to drive Gunneſſe Punt, an officer belonging to the miniſterialiſts, who with a body of about 4,000 horſe, 300 foot, and three field pieces, was then encamped at a place called Badouly, out of the Pergunnahs of Surat Atareeſſy, which he had for ſome time paſt kept in awe, and greatly infeſted.

On the 22d at night, Lieutenant Welch moved from the village of Cuttore, near the ground where the army was encamped laſt rains, in the neighbourhood of Surat, in order to ſurprize Gunneſſe Punt; and proceeded with his detachment till half paſt two in the morning, when, calculating the remaining diſtance, he found it would be impoſſible to reach the enemy's camp with the whole till after day-light; in which time they would take the alarm, and eſcape. He therefore came to the ſpirited and enterprizing reſolution of puſhing forward with the cavalry only; and at four o'clock entered the camp almoſt undiſcovered. The enemy fled in the beſt manner they could, and in their hurry could carry nothing off. The guns, from which they had been able to fire only one diſcharge, their tents, bazars, and every thing they had, fell into our hands. One hundred of the enemy were found killed upon the ſpot, and near twenty wounded; beſides more, which, when Lieutenant Welch diſpatched his letter ſoon after the action, he ſuppoſed muſt have ſuffered from their own guns having been turned and fired upon them in their flight. Appendix No. 278.

On our ſide, one Duffadar of cavalry, and one Candahar were killed, and two troopers wounded.

I have ſince certainly learnt, that Gunneſſe Punt died a day or two after, of the wounds he received; and that three other principal men ſuffered with him.

This action has been as deciſive as it was poſſible to be; and I beg to expreſs my entire ſatisfaction with, and approbation of the ſpirited and well-judged conduct of Lieutenant Welch, together with the undaunted bravery and firmneſs of the troops, of which only the cavalry were engaged, and who have, on this occaſion, rendered moſt eſſential and important ſervices.

The conſtant and uniform ſucceſs our arms have met with during this campaign, and the diſappointment the Marattas have experienced in their endeavours to make any impreſſion upon, or wreſt from us our new conqueſts, cannot but convince them of the unprofitable and ruinous conteſt in which they are engaged, and incline them to wiſh to put an end to it; but however much they may deſire peace, I fear they are not ſufficiently humbled to grant it upon terms ſo honourable and advantageous as we have a right to expect.

Knowing the earneſt wiſh you have to bring the war to a ſpeedy concluſion, I ſhall readily liſten to and encourage every overture the Maratta Government may make for that deſirable end; and I beg to aſſure you, that no effort ſhall be wanting on my part to accompliſh your views on this occaſion.

I have the honour to be, &c.

APPENDIX, No. 278.

Bengal Secret Conſultations, 23d March 1780.

RESOLVED, That the following reply be written to Brigadier General Goddard:

Sir,

In our laſt letter to you, dated the 24th January, we informed you of the receipt of your's of the 10th of December, without the enclоſures which it referred to for our information. The original, containing thoſe enclоſures, has never come to hand; but their place has been ſupplied by advices from the Preſident and Select Committee of Bombay, from whom we received copies of your inſtructions, and of the previous correſpondence between you which had led to them.

We entirely approve of the plan which has been adopted for conducting your operations in the Guzerat country. This meaſure appears to us the more judicious, becauſe it not only promiſes immediate advantage to the Company and credit to their arms, but ſeems the moſt likely method to lead to a ſpeedy and advantageous peace.

We have now before us your letters of the 1ſt and 29th of January, with a copy of the articles of agreement concluded with Futty Sing Guicawar, the conditions of which meet with our entire approbation and concurrence, and ſhall be ratified in courſe, when the treaty which you give us to expect from the Preſident and Select Committee of Bombay, ſhall be tranſmitted to us in form for that purpoſe. In the mean time, the letter which will be written by the Governor General to Futty Sing, will be ſufficient to ſatisfy him of our ſentiments with reſpect to the treaty.

As we underſtand from different quarters that the troops of the Maratta Chiefs had not quitted their capital at the date of the lateſt advices from thence, and that the differences which had taken place amongſt the Miniſters were likely to engroſs all their attention for ſome time to come, we think it improbable that you will meet with any oppoſition in the courſe of your preſent campaign; and there appears to us to be no difficulty in ſecuring the peaceable collections of the revenue ariſing from your new acquiſitions, during this and the ſeaſon of the rains; but we expect that every effort will be exerted to recover them in the enſuing campaign; and we hope, that you will not only be prepared to make the moſt effectual reſiſtance in ſuch caſe to the attempts of the Marattas, but that you will do all in your power to ſecure the quiet poſſeſſion of theſe countries in perpetuity to the Company, adviſing us of the meaſures which you may judge it neceſſary to adopt for that purpoſe.

By our laſt letter you will have been furniſhed with our directions reſpecting the penſion which you had granted to Ragoba: for the reſt, we obſerve with pleaſure, that you have anticipated our wiſhes, in your conduct towards that chief. We are more confirmed by your advices, and by every other circumſtance which has come to our knowledge, in our opinion, that no real advantage or ſupport can be derived from an open connection with Ragoba. We therefore repeat our injunctions, that you enter into no engagements whatſoever with him.

We have already forbid you to take any part in the family diſputes which ſubſiſt between Futty Sing and his brother, except as a mediator. We obſerve, that you have taken this line for your conduct; and approve of your purſuing it, if you ſhall ſee a probability of reſtoring them to harmony; but by no means to uſe any kind of authority to effect it.

Fort William, 23d March 1780. We are, &c.

Meſſrs. Francis and Wheler.

Mr. Francis—I acquieſce in this letter, deeming it conformable to the plan of meaſures heretofore reſolved on, and now in execution; but without taking any ſhare in the reſponſibility that may belong to thoſe meaſures.

(Signed) Philip Francis, Edward Wheler.

APPENDIX, No. 279.

Extract of Bengal Secret Conſultations, the 29th April 1780.—Preſent, the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Governor General, Preſident; Philip Francis, Edward Wheler, Eſquires.

READ the following letter from General Goddard.

To the Governor General and Supreme Council.

Gentlemen,

Since my laſt, which I had the honour to addreſs you on the 29th ultimo, encloſing a copy of the treaty concluded with Futty Sing Guicawar, I have marched to Ahmedabad the capital of Guzerat, where I arrived the 10th inſtant, in the morning. The Governor on the part of the Poonah Government, refuſing to obey the ſummons I ſent him to deliver up the place to the Britiſh arms, I was conſtrained to lay ſiege to it; and on the 12th, at ten o'clock P. M. opened the batteries againſt the walls, which were ſufficiently breached the 13th in the evening, to have ſtormed next day; but from a wiſh, dictated by motives of humanity, that the enemy, ſeeing the folly of reſiſtance, might have ſubmitted upon honourable terms, and prevented that ſcene of ruin to the inhabitants, which I had too much reaſon to apprehend, by carrying ſo large and populous a city by ſtorm, I put off the attack: in this hope I was however diſappointed, and finding that the enemy only meant to amuſe me by ſubterfuges and excuſes, till the ſuccours they expected from Poonah might arrive; and indeed confiding in their own numbers, and the frequent repulſes which powerful Chiefs and armies had received before the place, to imagine themſelves invincible by our force, I gave the orders for ſtorming on the 15th in the morning; which I have the happineſs to acquaint you, ſucceeded to my wiſh in every point. A number of the enemy fell in the aſſault, few of our own men ſuffered, when compared with the reſiſtance they met with, and the difficulties they had to ſurmount; and to their chief honour, the victory was not ſtained with any act of cruelty to the inoffenſive unarmed inhabitants; but on the contrary, many of thoſe who were actually in arms, had their lives ſpared, upon ſubmitting themſelves to mercy. I have laid before the Commander in Chief, the particulars of the troops good behaviour, and have alſo tranſmitted him a return of the killed and wounded.

Permit me to congratulate you upon this ſucceſs of your arms, which cannot fail to ſtrike a terror into the enemy, equal with the confidence with which it has inſpired our own men, and be attended with the moſt eminent advantages in the proſecution of the war with the Maratta State.

By the lateſt advices, I underſtand they have at laſt put their forces in motion; a body of ten thouſand horſe are reported to be on their way from Poonah, to enter the country lying to the ſouthward, by one route, and Scindia and Holcar, with about two thouſand horſe, had actually, the 5th inſtant, three days marched from the gaut of Coſſerbory into the Kandeiſh province, and were advancing through part of the Malava diſtrict, by the fort of Pawengheer, towards Ahmedabad. It is probable, the accounts of the reduction of this place may induce them to alter their intended route, and remain within the limits of Malava, to look after their own Jaghiers, which lie moſtly in that province: this indeed may have been originally the chief motive of their march from the Decan; for although it now plainly appears, the ſuppoſed animoſity between the Miniſter and Scindia is of a leſs violent and irreconcileable nature than it was once ſuſpected to be, the latter has not, I am certain, received full ſatisfaction for the demands he formerly made; and will in all probability be ready to adopt ſuch a line of conduct as he may think beſt calculated to ſerve his intereſts. Should I be able, by encouraging any diſpoſition of this nature in him, to improve it to the advancement of Ragoba's cauſe, I ſhall gladly embrace the opportunity; but at preſent I ſee no grounds to found ſuch a hope, and only mention it as a circumſtance that may happen, and which I mean to make every poſſible uſe of.

While employed in the ſiege of this place, I was honoured with your letter of the 29th of November; and cannot find words to expreſs the concern I feel at the diſapprobation of my conduct in the ſtrictures you have paſſed upon the meaſures I ventured to adopt regarding Ragonaut Row, in giving him a monthly allowance for his ſupport, as I am conſcious of having conſulted, to the beſt of my judgement, the intereſts of the Company on that occaſion; and although I had not received your expreſs directions and authority for what I did, of having acted in a manner I conceived ſtrictly conſiſtent with the ſpirit and meaning of the orders which you had given me; I will intrude upon your indulgence and patience, by explaining the motives by which I was influenced.

In your firſt inſtructions, dated the 3d of April, you were pleaſed to direct, that in the treaty I was empowered to conclude with the Maratta Government, the ſafety of Ragonaut Row ſhould be made an indiſpenſable engagement; and further recommended, that I ſhould endeavour to obtain a ſuitable proviſion for his ſubſiſtence.

ence. Theſe were your ſentiments at a time when Ragoba was in the hands of his enemies; and the very perſons with whom you had empowered me to treat were delivered from the principal object of their fears, in poſſeſſing that inſtrument ſo dangerous to their own exiſtence, while under our protection; but whoſe fate they would then diſpoſe of as they pleaſed. Under theſe circumſtances, the difficulty of obtaining any conceſſions in his favour muſt have roſe in proportion to the ſecurity in which the Miniſters found themſelves placed, from any attempts he could make to ſubvert their authority: this I conſidered; and at the ſame time reflected, that if the Maratta Durbar was ſincere in his wiſh for peace, the proviſion you had authorized me to require in favour of Ragoba would be agreed to without any difficulty; after promiſing his perſon ſhould remain ſafe from violation, the charge of his maintenance became a neceſſary duty incumbent upon their own Government, and one which it was probable they would cheerfully take upon themſelves.

When Ragoba therefore was ſo fortunate as to eſcape from the hands of the Miniſters, and once more find a ſecure and certain aſylum with the Engliſh, I had every reaſon to hope, that the propoſals I had before made in his favour, and in which no alteration became neceſſary, except that he might be at liberty to reſide where he thought proper, would have found a ready acceptance with the Court of Poonah: I accordingly, moved to it by his diſtreſs and needy ſituation, as well as the conviction that by ſo doing I proceeded upon ſure political grounds, made him an allowance for his ſupport, till I could receive your further inſtructions, If I exceeded in the ſum fixed upon, it fell infinitely ſhort of what Ragoba himſelf ſolicited, and was only half of what the Maratta Government did agree to allow him when in their hands; ſo that I made no doubt, upon the ſettlement of peace, they would have readily conſented to reimburſe the expence. Upon the whole, my inducements for granting this allowance to Ragoba may be comprized in the following:

Firſt, The ſtate of diſtreſs in which he implored it, for the ſubſiſtence of himſelf and family.

Second, The ſtrong claims he poſſeſſed upon the Company, from the connections and friendſhip ſo long ſubſiſting between them.

Third, The conſideration, that if a peace with the Maratta State was practicable, a reimburſement of this charge became a natural and certain conſequence.

Fourth, If the negociation proved ineffectual, the preſence of Ragoba with us muſt become of the greateſt political benefit, either in improving the advantages which the ſucceſsful operations of war might offer, or in ſtipulating the future conditions of a peace with the Maratta State.

Previous to the receipt of your letter, I had made the advance for this month. I have communicated to you many circumſtances ſince your letter dated November 29th, which may probably have effected ſome alteration in your ſentiments from what they were at the time you wrote; and we may hope hourly for an anſwer to my advices of the war, the plan propoſed to be followed, and the meaſures that were already taken for its proſecution; all which is moſt particularly explained in my letter of the 1ſt of January. I expect to know your final pleaſure regarding Ragoba, before it becomes neceſſary to make him any further advances; or that at moſt, he can receive only one month's payment more, till I am honoured with your particular commands. I have thus candidly, and without reſerve, explained to you the motives of my conduct, on this occaſion; and I truſt they will meet with your indulgent conſideration and approbation. I ſhall write to you in a few days, reſpecting Scindia's motions, and whatever elſe material may occur.

Letter from Ragonath Row; received the 30th April, 1780.

Knowing it to be incumbent on our friendſhip, to inform one another of all occurrences which happen on either ſide, and to communicate any advice and counſel which may appear to us to be moſt conſiſtent with the preſent circumſtances, I now write to you, that as I am conſcious all increaſe of dignity and power in the Engliſh, adds equally to my honour and diſtinction, I therefore adviſed General Goddard, as the circumſtances demanded it, to gain over to himſelf the cavalry of thoſe chiefs whoſe friendſhip I could depend upon, having been ſtrictly united with them before the breaking out of the war; that a ſmall ſum would perſuade them to come over with their whole force; that if he ſhould not approve of this advice, it would be neceſſary for him to raiſe more or leſs horſe himſelf. I have explained this by word of mouth to the General, and alſo by letters; but he has not as yet raiſed any cavalry, the whole ſtrength however is on his ſide. He has now, on his way to Gojeraut, entered into a ſtrict alliance with Futtah Sing Row Gackwar to join armies with him, and has taken the town of Ahmedabad. All particulars of this you will learn from the General's letters; I am totally unacquainted with the negociations and articles which have paſſed between him and Row Gackwar. At this time Sindeah, Holcar, and other chiefs, are marched from the diſtance of eleven or twelve coſs from Surat, towards Ahmedabad. By the bleſſing of God, and the good auſpices of the Company, no neglect will happen on the part of the General, in the proſecution of the war. I am daily praying to the Almighty, that in the time of hoſtilities, the want of horſe may not be attended with bad conſequences. The courage of the Engliſh is ſuch, that they are certain of being victorious. I have written to Rajah Ram Winkar and Turnetk Dadajee the particulars of the march and victory of my horſes, which they will make you acquainted with.

Bengal Secret Conſultations, 20th April 1780.

AGREED, That the following anſwers be written to General Goddard:

Sir,

We have had the pleaſure of receiving yours of the 17th February, and the Commander in Chief has tranſmitted to us a copy of yours to him, of the ſame date, both containing an account of the reduction of Ahmedabad.

This ſucceſs has equalled the hopes which he had conceived from the former and uniform experience of your activity and good conduct. We deſire you to accept our thanks, and to offer them in our name in public orders, to the officers and men of the ſeveral corps which compoſed your army at the ſiege of Ahmedabad, for the firmneſs and gallantry which they diſplayed during the ſiege, and in the ſtorm of that city; particularly to thoſe officers whom you have mentioned in your letter to the Commander in Chief, as having in a more remarkable manner diſtinguiſhed themſelves on this occaſion. The opinion which we have ever entertained of the bravery of our own troops required no new inſtance to ſupport or increaſe it; but we obſerve with an uncommon ſatisfaction, the part which you had aſſigned to thoſe of the Bombay eſtabliſhment, and the ſpirit with which they performed it; a circumſtance which of itſelf cannot fail to retrieve our national character, and to prove, that there is no ſervice of which the diſcipline and courage of our forces is not capable, with the advantage of an able commander.

We

Appendix. Nos. 281 & 282.

We hope that the enemy will be now convinced of the decided ſuperiority of our arms, and that you will be able to accompliſh the object which we have invariably in view, an honourable and advantageous peace; ſuch a ſervice, we ſhall eſteem of more importance, nor leſs honourable to you, than the moſt ſplendid operations in the field. We authorize you to accept of any propoſals which may be made to you for that purpoſe, which may be conſonant to our former inſtructions, and warranted by the preſent ſtate of the war; and even to make overtures for peace on ſuch conditions, if you ſhall have any reaſonable grounds to believe that they will be immediately accepted, and not employed to amuſe and deceive; in the mean time, we rely on your activity for the proſecution and improvement of the advantages with which your campaign has been ſo happily begun. We reſerve the other ſubjects of your letter for a ſeparate reply.

We are, &c.

Fort-William,
20th April 1780.

Sir,

We now tranſmit you our ſentiments on the ſubject of your letters of the 29th January and 17th February, which have not been replied to. We are much concerned to obſerve that your conduct, which has been ſo deſerving in general of our warmeſt approbation, ſhould, in ſome inſtances be leſs ſatisfactory to us. Our orders concerning the penſion you had granted to Ragoba, were poſitive and peremptory, and we expected you would literally have obeyed them; but we are concerned to find by your letter of the 17th of February, that you even intended to advance him 50,000 rupees for the month of March. We now therefore repeat our orders, and poſitively direct, that not a rupee ſhall be advanced in future from your treaſury for the ſupply of Ragoba. We informed you in our letter of the 24th November 1779, that it was with the utmoſt difficulty we were enabled to furniſh ſupplies for your neceſſary and unavoidable expences; and we ſtill hope, that on re-conſidering this part of our letter, you have determined to pay a ſtrict obedience to our orders.

We are pleaſed to obſerve that you have propoſed to make certain regulations for the diminution of your expences; your example and determined reſolution to check every unneceſſary charge, will, we hope, produce the deſired effect.

Our reſources are no longer equal to the payment of your army without draining Bengal entirely of its ſpecie; nor can any acquiſition on the other ſide of India compenſate for the diſtreſs which a continuance of the war, at the preſent expence, would bring upon the Company: we therefore moſt earneſtly recommend to you to obſerve the ſtricteſt economy in your future diſburſements; and we ſhall point out to you ſuch ſavings as we think may be made without injury to the ſervice. The firſt regiment of cavalry is kept up at a very heavy expence; which, we think, has not been compenſated by any ſervices which it has performed, or to be expected from it in future: we therefore authorize, and poſitively direct you, to reduce this regiment.

The Commander in Chief has communicated to us your letter of the 4th March, by which we find that Major Fullerton, with eight companies of Sepoys, was in garriſon at Ahmedabad: we direct, if this has not been already done, that Futty Sing be called upon to fix a ſubſidy for the full expence of theſe troops, and of any other of our forces which may be detached for the defence of the countries ceded to him, independent of the general plan of the campaign. We wiſh you to return a part or the whole of the Fort St. George detachment, as ſoon as the ſeaſon will permit and you can diſpenſe with their ſervices, as the whole expence of theſe different corps will fall upon this Government, which is (as we muſt repeat) unequal to ſo accumulated a charge.

We are, &c.

As the ſucceſſes which have attended the operations of the army under the command of General Goddard, now afford us a better grounded expectation than we have entertained, of being able to terminate the war by an honourable and advantageous peace; or in the event of its continuance, of proſecuting it with advantage to the Company, by ſuch an extenſion of territory as may either compenſate for the paſt expence, or furniſh the means of a future negociation; and as it is neceſſary, both with reſpect to the length of time which will be required for the operation of any plan which we may concert for either of the above ends, that we ſhall enter upon the conſideration of it as early as poſſible, even before the cloſe of the preſent ſeaſon; Reſolved, That we addreſs the Commander in Chief, and requeſt to be favoured with his preſence and aſſiſtance, informing him that we ſhall ſuſpend further operations on this ſubject, till his arrival.

Sir,

As the ſucceſſes which have attended the operations of the army under the command of General Goddard, now afford us a better grounded expectation than we have hitherto entertained, of being able to terminate the war by an honourable and advantageous peace; or in the event of its continuance, of proſecuting it with advantage to the Company, by ſuch an extenſion of territory as may either compenſate for the paſt expences, or furniſh the means of a future negociation; and as it is neceſſary, both with reſpect to the length of time which will be required for the operation of any plan we may concert for either of the above ends, that we ſhould enter upon the conſideration of it as early as poſſible, even before the cloſe of the preſent ſeaſon, we requeſt to be favoured with your preſence and aſſiſtance at our Councils; and at the ſame time beg leave to inform you, that we ſhall ſuſpend our deliberations on this ſubject until your arrival.

Bengal Secret Conſultations, the 29th May 1780.

At a Council;—Preſent, the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Governor General, Preſident; Philip Francis, Edward Wheler, Eſquires. (Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote abſent on a viſit to the different ſtations of the army.)

READ the following letter and encloſure from Sir Eyre Coote.

Gentlemen,

I have the honour to encloſe you an extract of the laſt letter I have received from General Goddard, which I take the liberty of laying before you as it contains ſentiments entirely conformable to what I have already ſtated to you, regarding the mode of carrying on the preſent war; though I did not want ſuch a confirmation of my former ideas upon this ſubject.

General Goddard, now declares himſelf confined to the defence of the territory newly acquired, which, as I foretold, was a neceſſary conſequence of the plan adopted. I cannot

cannot, therefore avoid reiterating my propoſals of ſome vigorous meaſures being taken from theſe quarters, as ſoon as the ſeaſon will admit. This appears to me the more preſſing, as I find ſince I have left the Board, that we are become principals in the war, and the preſent plan promiſes nothing but an endleſs, ruinous expence.

I therefore beg leave to repeat, that while I recommend the moſt vigorous exertions, it is only with a view to accelerate a peace; which, in the preſent ſtate of politics at home, would be, in my opinion, the happieſt event that could happen to us.

I have the honour to be, &c.

Lucknow, 5th May 1780. (Signed) Eyre Coote.

Extract of a Letter from Brigadier General Goddard, dated 28th March 1780.

My laſt gave you a very particular information of the ſituation of Scindia's forces, which he was then collecting from all parts of his country to accompany him into Guzerat; ſince which time he has been joined by 5,000 horſe from Eugein, and it is reported that another conſiderable body is on its march towards him; ſo that the northern provinces of the Maratta State, which are moſtly belonging to himſelf and Holkar, muſt be now greatly expoſed, and open to invaſions from our upper provinces, by the way of Gohud and the extenſive provinces of Ajmere, the principal Rajah of which, the Marwar Rajah, is I believe, by no means well diſpoſed to the intereſts of Scindia. I have no poſitive proof of this being the caſe; having had no correſpondence or other communication with him whatever, ſince my arrival on this ſide of India; but it is a circumſtance generally believed, and has its foundation in former diſputes and animoſities, and I mention it to you, among other incidents, to give you an opportunity of judging how far it may be practicable; as it would certainly be of advantage to the operations of the war on this ſide, to cauſe a powerful diverſion to be made on the other, which could not fail to diſtreſs and divide their attention exceedingly.

Having no object to induce me to penetrate into Malwa, but on the contrary, riſking the moſt material intereſts of the Company, by leaving the province of Guzerat and the ſea coaſt to the inroads either of an European or Indian enemy; I can only at preſent watch the motions of Scindia, to prevent him from overrunning and deſtroying the country; and, if poſſible, ſeize ſome favourable opportunity of attacking him; which, as it is his only care to avoid, I ſhall find ſome difficulty to effect.

A true extract,

Secretary to the Commander in Chief.

Ordered, That it lie for conſideration.

Read another letter as follows, from the Commander in Chief:

Gentlemen, Lucknow, 11th May 1780.

1ſt. I have been honoured with your letters of the 20th April.

2d. Previouſly to the receipt of them, I was making every diſpoſition and preparation to avail myſelf of the firſt ſwelling of the waters, to leave this place; the intenſe heat of the ſeaſon not permitting any other mode of travelling, however deſirous I may be of ſetting out. Indeed, were I to attempt it during the droughts, it would not at all haſten my arrival at the Preſidency, as at preſent many places of the river are not navigable for my boats: I ſhall therefore anxiouſly await the commencement of the rains, to embark.

3d. With regard to my opinion upon any preſent plan to be adopted for the proſecution or termination of the Maratta war, my idea remains invariably the ſame, that it is our intereſt to procure, as ſoon as poſſible, an honourable peace. But as things ſeem to be now circumſtanced, I ſhould think it can only be attainable by proſecuting the war with vigour, ſupported by every poſſible exertion from theſe quarters. But ſhould there in the mean time between this and my arrival, any new circumſtance occur, unknown to me neceſſarily prompting other meaſures, my opinion can without delay be required; and will certainly be given with that impartiality and candour which I truſt ever has and ever will accompany it. Appendix No. 282.

4th. I muſt at the ſame time obſerve, that whatever reſolutions you may deem proper, or find to be neceſſary, no military movements can be made from the frontier ſtations until ſome of the deficiencies in ſtores are ſupplied, and thoſe repairs completed which I informed you in my letter of the 21ſt of March our artillery ſtood ſo abſolutely in need of. This I beg leave once more to recommend, as an object of the firſt attention; and with the ſpeedieſt orders given for that purpoſe, and all the diligence which can be uſed in executing them, I do not imagine it can be rendered fit for ſervice before the commencement of the next ſeaſon, proper for opening a campaign.

5th. In reply to the opinion you require, upon diſbanding the cavalry, I can only ſay, that after having, with much trouble and great expence, brought them to a degree of perfection, I muſt think it would be an imprudent meaſure to deprive ourſelves of their ſervices, at a time when they may be moſt eſſentially neceſſary to us. And my opinion of their uſefulneſs at this time is ſuch, that I had rather reduce the eſtabliſhment of Sepoys, to furniſh the means of increaſing their numbers, than be enabled to raiſe more Sepoys by their diſmiſſion. The inference drawn in their diſfavour, from what has occurred in General Goddard's army, cannot properly affect their credit; as when that ſervice was undertaken the corps were but juſt raiſed, were ill appointed, and ſtill worſe mounted; ſo that no immediate benefit could be expected from them. The Candahar horſe, on the contrary, were old ſoldiers, thoroughly diſciplined, and well mounted. In reſpect to the preſent inability of the Nabob's finances to ſupport the expence, it might perhaps be worthy of your conſideration, whether it would not be a more ſalutary meaſure to inquire into the cauſe of thoſe deficiencies, and apply proper remedies to the evil, than to give up uſeful eſtabliſhments upon a ſuppoſed want of power to maintain them? For if, with an immenſe addition to his revenue, he is unable to keep up a much ſmaller number of troops, upon leſs and better regulated pay than his predeceſſor did with much fewer reſources, there muſt be improper management ſomewhere.

6th. I ſome time ago wrote to Colonel Pearſe upon the propriety of forming the volunteers into a ſeparate company in the artillery, to remain under his management, that he might be enabled to judge of their merits before they were finally diſpoſed of. I find Colonel Pearſe had not received that letter before he made his report to the Board, which you have referred to me; and from that circumſtance, I take it for granted you will agree to the plan.

7th. I am juſt informed of the death of Mr. Kirkman, paymaſter to the ſecond brigade. I therefore beg leave, gentlemen, to recommend Mr. Tierney to ſucceed to that poſt, whoſe integrity and abilities I know, and can anſwer for; and ſhould my requeſt meet with your concurrence, I am perſuaded he will fill it with honour to himſelf and ſatisfaction to the public.

8th. Was I inclined to enter into diſagreeable diſcuſſions, ſome points in your letter would afford me ſufficient matter for them; but as they can only tend to diſſipate the time and attention due to the public welfare, it is by no means my intention to touch upon them. And allow me once more to aſſure you, gentlemen, that it is not my wiſh to arrogate, as to myſelf, any powers inconſiſtent with the double offices I hold, as member of the Board and Commander in Chief, or which do not come pointedly within the Act of Parliament and orders of the Company. The utmoſt of my ambition is to co-operate with you in every measure of public benefit, and to be enabled by that means successfully to support the honour and interest of the nation in this part of the world, at a time when the event of affairs at home may render these possessions of still more essential consequence to us, than we have yet had occasion, valuable as they really are, to estimate them at.

I have the honour to be, &c.

APPENDIX, No. 283.

Bengal Secret Consultations, 20th April 1780.

Letter from the Commander in Chief to Captain Popham.

Sir,

THE Honourable Governor General and Supreme Council having entered into a treaty with the Rhanah of Ghohud, he has in consequence thereof demanded from me a body of troops to be sent to his assistance against the Marattas. I therefore order you to march with the whole detachment under your command to Etawd, there to remain for the present agreeable to the following instructions.

I have explained to the Rhanah of Ghohud the necessity there is, from intelligence I have received relative to the strength of the enemy, for his ordering 10,000 cavalry to join you immediately on your crossing the Jumma; but should the Rhanah not be able to send so large a body of cavalry, and that you think from the intelligence which you receive, a less number may suffice, so that the Marattas, against whom we are now supposed to have commenced hostilities, cannot impede your joining the Rhanah's army, you will then use your own discretion in effecting the proposed junction, supported even by a less number of cavalry than the ten thousand which I have required to join you.

As you are placed by the treaty under the command of the Rhanah of Ghohud, I can give you no instructions how to act; further than that you will support the dignity of the service to the utmost of your power; and for your guidance, I think it necessary to give you a copy of the treaty entered into with the Rhanah of Ghohud: I herewith enclose it. My instructions are, that you do not on any account cross the Jumma till the Rhanah has sent the ten thousand horse, or such a number as you think sufficient to cover the junction of your detachment with the Rhanah's army.

You must be certain that a sufficient force is ready to join you on the other side of the Jumma, previous to your crossing your detachment.

Lucknow, February 10th 1780. I am, &c.

To Captain Popham,
Commanding a detachment of the army,

Ordered, That the Paymaster General do transmit to the Paymaster of Captain Popham's detachment, the necessary instructions for adjusting the subsidy to be paid by the Rhanah of Ghohud, to the proportion that the estimated expence of that detachment bears to that specified in the treaty.

Agreed, That the following letter be written to Captain Popham.

Sir,

We have received your letter of the 12th February. It is our orders, that you demand from the Rhanah the regular and punctual payment of the subsidy at every period at which it shall become due; and as the corps which compose your detachment differ considerably in their strength and form from regular battalions, we have directed the Military Paymaster General to transmit the necessary instructions to the Paymaster of your detachment, for adjusting the amount of the subsidy accordingly, of which you will apprize the Rhanah, to prevent his entertaining any improper suspicions on this account.

APPENDIX, No. 284.

Bengal Secret Consultations, 15th May 1780.

READ the following letter from the Commander in Chief.

Gentlemen,

In consequence of information received this day from Captain Popham, respecting the detachment under his command, its situation, and the alarming probability of our arms being disgraced, by not being able to carry the point undertaken, I think it necessary to make you acquainted immediately with the circumstance. The Rana of Ghod by virtue of those extensive powers vested in him over our troops by treaty, has carried our arms across the Scind into the Maratta district of Cutchoowagaar, and by false information held out to Captain Popham, of the strength of Lahaar, induced him to appear before and attack that strong hold.

The detachment was not equipped for sieges. Four battalions and their guns was the extent of the Rana's requisition, to drive the Marattas out of his districts, where they were found extending the ravages of war, both by fire and sword. Captain Popham's detachment, formed of cavalry, European artillery, and Sepoys, answered in force superior to his the Rana's demands; and the Marattas quitting Ghod on their approach, evinced they were equal to the original service meant to be performed.

It is of the greatest moment to us in this country, not to suffer even our own ambitious views to lead us to undertake any military measure but what we are almost sure of carrying. Our acknowledged superiority is to be preserved only by adopting well-digested plans, executed with invincible force and rapidity. We should not attempt offensive enterprizes, but when found political interest dictates the measure, and where success is certain. If our enemies are accustomed to see the crown of victory disputed, doubtful where to fix the fatal error, will some day or other leave us to lament the sad consequences of our weak ambition; and in searching for universal power, we shall risk disadvantageously the extensive possessions we are now so happily masters of. The being obliged to abandon a service in which we are once embarked, is a defeat in the fullest extent of the word. In the present instance, we have been reduced to the disagreeable alternative of either forfeiting our honour by a breach of treaty, or by subscribing to the Rana's ill judged plans, risk a disgrace to our arms; a circumstance which must necessarily place the military officer commanding on service of the kind, in a situation truly distressing; and shew us to the different Powers in the East, in colours which we have been unaccustomed to appear in.

It is not sending a small detachment to Ghod, to cover that alien district from desolation, will bring the Maratta war to a conclusion. If an offensive and decided war is to be carried on with the Marattas, a more general and extensive scale of action should be pursued.

What are the plans of Government on this most interesting point, I am ignorant of; or how our country will approve the want of confidence, (to call it by no harsher epithet) of your Government towards their military litary Commander in Chief, in this time of danger, I know not; but certain it is, I have not been acquainted with either the deſigns of Government, or my opinion aſked on the military operations to be purſued.

My letter of the 6th of January, addreſſed to your Board, ſtated queries, deſiring information of what was meant to be the adopted line; the reaſonableneſs of the requeſt led me to ſuppoſe that the neceſſary information would not have been withheld from me; but to my aſtoniſhment the ſubject is unanſwered.

On the 13th inſtant I received a letter from the Rana, purporting that he has left his own country to be plundered by the Marattas, gone into that of our enemy's, and deſiring that an indent forwarded from Captain Popham for a field battering train, might be complied with. The buſineſs mentioned which the ſupply of ſtores was deſigned to aſſiſt, is the ſiege, or rather blockade of Gwalior during the enſuing rain.

The attacking Gwalior with that detachment, is totally repugnant to my military ideas, for many reaſons. It is reported to be a place of conſiderable ſtrength; and for that detachment, or any other, to attack it while the Marattas are in force and unbeaten in the field, would be abſolutely madneſs: a covering army, would be indiſpenſably neceſſary to keep the communication for ſupplies open to our troops before the place, and to awe and hinder the Marattas from haraſſing and impeding the beſiegers: theſe are conſiderations that ought to militate againſt attempting, with ſo weak an armament, either the attack of Gwalior, or penetrating too far into the enemy's diſtricts. The difficulties before the mud fort of Lahaar are convincing arguments of the folly, under the preſent circumſtance, of attacking Gwalior. But I was obliged to refuſe complying with the Rana's deſires, and Captain Popham's indent alſo, on other inſurmountable grounds: our inability rendered it impoſſible to furniſh the material article of ſtores expreſſed in the indent; viz. two eighteen pounders and one mortar of ten or eight inches. There is not a gun of that calibre, or mortar of ſize, either at Futty Ghur or Cawnpore; nor could I have ordered them from Chunar, without diſmantling the garriſon; the ſituation there is much below the common exigencies of that garriſon, and the contin e nt wants to be guarded againſt at the brigade field ſtations.

The ſituation of our ſtores I have explained to you fully in my letter of the 21ſt ultimo. Though this is a ſubject of the firſt conſequence, I have not received any anſwer to that letter.

My public accounts ſay, that the Rana is ſo beſet with black chiefs and Sirdars, whoſe opinions are hoſtile to our intereſts, and that they work ſo powerfully on the Rana's mind, that he is both puſillanimous in his own councils, and irreſolute in executing what is recommended him by us.

I foreſee the buſineſs of Ghod to be beſet with diſgraceful difficulties: but ſincerely hope I ſhall be miſtaken in the conſequences I have at preſent reaſon to apprehend.

Captain Popham's account that Gongador of Culpee, Luchmun Pundit of Jaaſie, with the Dettiah Rajah, are expected to join the Marattas againſt us with about ten thouſand horſe and ſome guns, is to be conſidered; his repreſentation of the utility of ordering ſome of our battalions to the aſſiſtance of the Sumpter Rajah, I do not think myſelf authorized by any means to attend to. Any reinforcement for the immediate aſſiſtance of the Ranah, required by him, I ſhould comply with, in conſequence of the ſpirit of the treaty; but as to ordering other detachments to ſecond his objects, by making a diverſion in another quarter, I muſt wave entering ſo deeply into his politics, without the poſitive order of Government; nor can I ſuppoſe it to be your ideas, that the Company's troops are to be divided and ſubdivided into ſmall detachments ſent to protect the territories and fight the battles of the petty Rajahs of Indoſtan. Had it been thought adviſable by Government to have ordered a reſpectable army to have croſſed the Jumma, and penetrated into the enemy's dominions, during the laſt cold ſeaſon, I may venture to affirm that the war would at this minute have borne a more favourable aſpect than it now preſents; and that the expence of the armament could have been ſecured from the enemy's country, with many other advantages obtained, both for the credit and emolument of the Company. Appendix No. 285.

Uninformed of your plan of politics, and no latitude given me to execute what might appear to me proper at a time of exigency, I ſhall, while up the country, confine myſelf to guarding our own diſtricts from inſult and invaſion. As to the ſcene on the other ſide of the Jumma, your poſitive orders and the Rana of Ghod's demands for troops and ſtores that can be procured and ſpared, ſhall alſo be attended to without delay; though the plan of action ſeems to me very unequal to the critical ſituation of affairs, or to the dignity of that character which the Britiſh arms have ſupported in India, with ſo much ſplendor and reputation, to the preſent period.

Permit me the honour, &c.

Bengal Secret Conſultations, 15th May 1780.

READ another letter as follows, from the Commander in Chief.

Gentlemen,

I have the pleaſure of confirming the account of the capture of Lahaar, which I mentioned to you in my letter of the 1ſt inſtant. That fort, by advices this day received from Captain Popham, I am informed was carried by aſſault on the 21ſt ultimo. I encloſe you a copy of Captain Popham's letter, alſo one from Captain Palmer of the ſame date. Sir Eyre Coote, 3d May.

The exemplary behaviour of both officers and men, who performed this piece of ſpirited ſervice, I have the greateſt pleaſure in communicating to your Board, and in recommending Captain Popham and his deſerving detachment to your countenance and notice. But though I have the higheſt ſenſe of the military conduct of Captain Popham, during the whole of the expedition, and of the intrepid coolneſs of all the officers and men who have been employed under him; yet I muſt remark, that nothing could warrant the deſperate attack obliged to be made on the fort of Lahaar, where ſo many brave men have ſuffered, but the diſgraceful alternative that preſented itſelf, the being reduced to abandon a ſervice in which they were embarked, and on the ſucceſs of which, once begun, the credit of our arms in a great meaſure depended.

They were obliged to ſtorm the fort, without having it in their power to take off its defences. I ſincerely hope we ſhall in future know the value of ſuch troops too well, to permit them to be oppoſed to forts under ſuch diſadvantages.

I lament the loſs of two very promiſing officers, who led the forlorn hope, and I recommend Mr. Odell (the volunteer ſo particularly mentioned, who had juſt joined the detachment by permiſſion from me) to be appointed Cornet of cavalry in the room of Cornet Gardiner, killed on the breach, and whoſe poſt Mr. Odell is reported to have filled on the ſpot with ſuch gallant propriety.

I have the honour, &c.

Gentlemen,

Appendix. No. 285.

Gentlemen,

It is with great pleaſure I have now to congratulate you on the capture of Lahaar fort, the capital of Cutchoogur, which was taken yeſterday forenoon by ſtorm. At eight o'clock the ſpringing of one of our mines threw down a great part of the curtin, and at ten the fire of our batteries made as practicable a breach as the weight of our field pieces could effect; on which a detachment under the command of Captain M'Lary advanced to the aſſault. The two leading officers fell, Lieutenant Logan and Cornet Gardiner, before they got to the top of the breach; the aſſailants however puſhed up through an extreme heavy fire, and drove the enemy from the outer rampart to the citadel, a ſtrong poſt ſurrounded by a wall flanked with towers; ſome of our troops followed through the gateway, ſome mounted the wall, and after a great ſlaughter, the remains of the garriſon (which had conſiſted of upwards of five hundred fighting men) reduced to the Kelladar and a few dependants, intreated for quarter, which was granted.

The intrepidity and ſteadineſs of the troops gave me entire ſatisfaction, but as theſe were moſt eſſentially promoted by the conduct and activity of Captain Mayaffre, commanding officer of artillery, Lieutenant Cameron, field engineer, and Captain M'Lary, it is my indiſpenſable duty to recommend the merit of theſe officers to your notice. I muſt alſo further preſume to point out that Mr. William Odell, a volunteer in this detachment, ſignalized himſelf at the head of the ſtorming party, in a manner which proved him highly deſerving of immediate admiſſion into the ſervice, and any other mark of your favour conſiſtent with his ſituation. Permit me now, gentlemen, to ſolicit once more the benefit of your inſtructions for my conduct in general, wherein it may be imperfectly pointed out, or totally neglected in the treaty, at preſent its ſole guide; but particularly reſpecting conqueſts that may be made by the troops under my command.

Pardon me if I ſeem pointedly urgent in this requeſt, which can only flow from an animated deſire of executing the ſervice with the charge of which I have been honoured, in a manner invariably conſiſtent with your intentions.

I have the honour to be, &c.

Camp, Lahaar, 29th April 1780. (Signed) W^m Popham.

The Governor General lays before the Board a return of the killed and wounded of Captain Popham's detachment at the ſtorm of fort Lahaar:

Ordered, That it be entered after the conſultation.

Reſolved, That the following letter be written to the Commander in Chief:

Sir,

We have now to acknowledge the receipt of your letters to us in this department of the 21ſt ultimo, and 3d inſtant.

21ſt April. The firſt of theſe letters requires a minute and particular reply. Beſides its general tendency, and, as it appears to us, its ſtudied object, to depreciate the alliance which we have lately concluded with the Rana of Gohud, we find two charges contained in it, ſo ſerious in their nature, and ſo pointed in their appeal, that as we feel ſo we cannot help expreſſing the deepeſt concern, nor leſs ſurprize that you ſhould have thought yourſelf warranted to produce them before you were certain of the grounds on which they were formed. The charges themſelves we ſhall reduce to ſtated propoſitions, and ſeparately reply to them.

The firſt is, that we have engaged Captain Popham's detachment in a ſervice to which it is unequal.

The ſecond, that we have wholly withheld from you the information of our plans for the conduct of the Maratta war; and in particular, that we have neglected to anſwer a letter addreſſed by you to us, dated the 6th January laſt, "deſiring" as you term it "information "of what was meant to be the adopted line."—The firſt of theſe charges is not directly expreſſed, but too ſtrongly and evidently implied by the whole tenor of your letter, to admit of our putting any other conſtruction on the expreſſions which mark it with that tendency.

You ſtate the inequality of the detachment to the ſervice on which it has been employed, as the conſequence of the extenſive powers veſted in the Rana of Ghod by the treaty, "in virtue of which he has carried our arms "acroſs the Scind into the Maratta diſtricts, and by "falſe information held out to Captain Popham, of the "ſtrength of Lahaar, induced him to appear before "and attack that ſtrong hold;" which you repreſent in other parts of your letter as impracticable, and thereby likely to prove the occaſion of our immediate diſgrace, and in its conſequences, of our utter ruin. You ſtate, that the detachment was not equipped for ſieges, though conformable to the requiſition made by the Rana, and equal to the original ſervice expreſſed in it. We will repeat your words, that we may not unintentionally miſrepreſent them.

"Four battalions and their guns was the extent of the "Rana's requiſition, to drive the Marattas out of his "diſtricts, where they were found extending the ravages "of war both by fire and ſword."

"Captain Popham's detachment formed of cavalry, "European artillery, and Sepoys, anſwered in force ſu"perior to his the Rana's demands; and the Marattas "quitting Gohud, on their approach, evinced they were "equal to the original ſervice meant to be performed."

Hence it appears that you have conſidered the Rana as inveſted with the power of preſcribing the ſtrength of the party required for his aſſiſtance, as well as the ſervice to be performed by it; that you conformed to the ſubſtance, though not to the letter of his requiſition; that you appointed a detachment more than equal to the ſtrength preſcribed, and equal to the literal terms of the ſervice aſſigned to it, but unequal to the ſervice on which he did employ it; this you impute to the extenſive powers veſted in him by the treaty, or in other words (for the inference is inevitable) to the Board who made the treaty.

We entirely agree with you in opinion, that the detachment is not equal to ſuch ſervices as that on which it has lately been employed, though ſucceſsfully; but cannot admit this as a conſequence imputable in any reſpect to the treaty concluded with the Rana of Gohud.

By the 2d article of the treaty, it is ſtipulated, that "if the Rana ſhall require an Engliſh force, from the "Company, for the defence of his country, or for the "acquiſition of territory, ſuch a force, proportioned to "the exigency of the ſervice, ſhall be immediately ſent on "his requiſition made in writing to the commanding "officer of the neareſt ſtation of the Company's troops." And the 3d article declares, that "this force ſhall be "employed for the defence of the Rana's dominions "againſt all foreign or domeſtic enemies, and for the "enlargement of his dominions by conqueſt on the "Marattas."

It was far from our intention to allow the Rana a right to determine the ſtrength of the detachment that ſhould be ſent to his aſſiſtance; and it was as far from our conception, that he could be a competent judge of ſuch a ſubject; this was the proper conſideration and province of the officer to whom the requiſition was made: ſuch is the neceſſary conſtruction of the treaty itſelf; or if it could have admitted a doubt, our letter to you of the 6th of December, which conveyed to you the firſt information of the treaty, and our ſubſequent letter of the 17th of February, contain ſo clear and decided an explanation of it, that we cannot help expreſſing our ſurpriſe, that you ſhould ſtill miſunderſtand it; we will quote both paſſages at large.

"In the mean time, ſhould the Rana make any ap- 6th December.
"plication to you for a detachment of the Company's "forces

forces to act againſt the Marattas, we requeſt that you "will comply with his requiſition, proportioning the num- "ber of troops to the exigency of the ſervice on which they "are ſent."

11th Feb. "We do not know whether the Rana has yet made "any application to you, for a detachment of our "troops to aſſiſt him; but if he ſhall, we think it pro- "per to repeat our injunctions, that ſuch a portion as "you ſhall deem ſufficient to perform the ſervice propoſed, be "immediately granted; and we hope, if any requiſition "has already been made to you for this purpoſe, that "you will have complied with it previous to the receipt "of this letter."

We have marked in the above quotations, the words which expreſsly refer to your judgment, the relative ſtrength of the detachment to the ſervices which it was to perform; nor in whatever terms the Rana's application was worded, could that warrant a deviation from ſuch clear injunctions, and from the rights and obligations of a formal treaty.

It is true that the Rana's demand, as you have ſtated it, preſcribes the expulſion of the Marattas from his country, as the only ſervice to be performed by the detachment; and to this you aſſert it to have been equal, though not equipped for ſieges. But we underſtand that the territory of Gohud contains a multitude of fortreſſes, ſome of which were, or might be in the poſſeſſion of the Marattas; and therefore required that the detachment ſhould have been equipped for ſieges, to enable it to perform the ſervices aſſigned to it, the expulſion of the Marattas from that country; and your inſtructions to Captain Popham, by enjoining his obedience to ſuch further demands as the Rana might make in virtue of the treaty, did in effect extend the operations of the detachment beyond the line to which you underſtand it to have been limited; even to remote and offenſive hoſtilities, if the Rana required them, and the ſtrength of the detachment was equal to them.

You will permit us therefore to remark, either that the operations of the detachment ſhould have been reſtricted to its original and profeſſed deſign, until it ſhould have been fitted for more difficult ſervices, or it ſhould have been immediately qualified for them. We mean not to retort, but to repel the cenſures which have been caſt upon us. In deference to your ſtation and profeſſional knowledge, we contented ourſelves with requiring your conformity to the treaty, leaving the mode and detail wholly to your choice and direction; and we ſo cautiouſly avoided every act which might be deemed an encroachment on your department, that we have not even to this date conveyed any inſtructions to Captain Popham for his military conduct, little expecting to be reproached by you with the inſufficiency of your own meaſures, in the proſecution of the ſervice which we had thus generally and liberally entruſted to your charge.

We now proceed to your ſecond charge, to which our reply ſhall be as ſhort as concluſive.

The plans formed by this Government for the conduct of the war, in which we might eventually be, and in which we have ſince been actually engaged, with the Marattas, were debated and concluded by the members of this Government, aſſiſted by yourſelf in perſon, nor have ſince undergone any alteration or addition, except in the treaty of alliance formed with the Rana of Gohud, with which you have been duly and fully acquainted. We have not therefore withheld from you the information of our plan for the conduct of the Maratta war. And to your letter of the 6th January we returned a full and explicit anſwer, in ours of the 24th of the ſame month. As a proof of this aſſertion, we ſhall here ſubjoin copies both of your letter to us, and ours to you, of the preceding dates; and with them cloſe the ſubject; expreſſing our regret that we have been reduced to the neceſſity of ſaying ſo much upon arguments of a tendency ſo foreign from the intereſts of the ſervice, the duties of our ſtations, or the reſpect to which we are entitled by them, whether as equal members of the ſame Adminiſtration, or as your ſuperiors in the actual relation which ſubſiſts between us.

Copy of a Letter from Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote, dated the 6th, and received the 20th January 1780.

Gentlemen,

I am juſt honoured with your letter of the 23d ultimo, encloſing to me a copy of Brigadier General Goddard's letter of the 28th October, and giving me diſcretional powers for ordering the march of Captain Popham's detachment.

It appears to me, by General Goddard's letter, (the contents of which I own I feel myſelf diſappointed in, as by his correſpondence with me I had been led to a very different expectation) that a war with the Marattas is inevitable, unleſs you chuſe to comply with the terms upon which they offer you peace.

In this ſituation of affairs I cannot but expreſs ſome uneaſineſs, that the information you give me, is not accompanied by your reſolutions in what manner we are to proceed; whether you hold it beſt to accede to their propoſitions for peace, to commence an active and vigorous war, or to ſtand merely on the defenſive againſt them:

The firſt or ſecond of theſe require the moſt ſpeedy determination, leſt the appearance of a French force, which we have much reaſon to expect, ſhould heighten their demands in the one caſe, or add ſtrength to the union already formed among themſelves in the other.

I hardly need obſerve to you, gentlemen, that the circumſtances we are in, both at home and here, require from us the moſt immediate, decided, and united meaſures; and that in a correſpondence carried on at this diſtance from the Preſidency, it is abſolutely neceſſary, if we would avoid delays which may prove fatal to our affairs, that I ſhould receive your opinions upon events of importance as ſpeedily as the information itſelf.

For want of it in the preſent critical moment, I can do no more than endeavour to procure from the Vizier, and to collect

Copy of a Letter to Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote, dated the 24th January 1780.

Sir,

We have been favoured with your letters, dated the 2d, 3d, and 6th inſtant.

When we tranſmitted you a copy of General Goddard's letter to us, under date the 28th of October, we ſhould alſo have imparted to you our reſolutions upon it, had we formed any; but a preciſe line of conduct having been already laid down for General Goddard, in our inſtructions to him, which provided for the event of hoſtilities, General Goddard having informed us, when he ſaw a war was unavoidable, that he was going to Bombay to concert the means of carrying it on to advantage; and as the plan of his operations, whatever it might be, muſt be governed in a great meaſure by local and incidental circumſtances, which we could neither foreſee nor have any timely acquaintance with, we thought it unneceſſary to take any further ſteps upon the occaſion of his letter.

We have now received a further letter from General Goddard, dated 10th December, informing us of his return to Surat, after having ſettled the plan of his future operations; for the particulars of which he refers us to papers omitted to be encloſed in this letter, which is a duplicate. Our Secretary informs us, that he has forwarded a copy of it to you, and in order to complete your information, we now tranſmit you a draft of our intended reply.

together what little of heavy artillery is to be met with in these quarters. Our army here is wholly unprovided with them, as well as almost every other military store.

Captain Popham's detachment is ready to march. The undertaking will now be a hazardous one, and cannot be effected without moving an army across the Jumna, to cover and screen his motions, by calling off the powers and attention of the enemy; and it may at the same time prove a check to them in collecting the large sums they are actually employed in raising among the tributary princes there, the amount of which I shall very soon obtain exact information of.

This, together with a well-timed co-operation on General Goddard's part, to accelerate and facilitate their junction, can alone give hopes of their making good our aim; but neither this nor any thing else can be attempted, until your definitive resolutions are given, as to peace, a vigorous war, or a defensive one.

General Goddard's request, at the close of his letter, I must pointedly object to, as the granting it will undoubtedly increase that confusion in the army which I have been endeavouring to the utmost to relieve them from.

I enclose a return of the army under General Goddard, upon a supposition that the Madras detachment may have joined him.

Fort William,
the 15th May 1780.

Minutes on the letter to Sir Eyre Coote.

Mr. Francis—On the principles of the treaty concluded with the Rana of Gohud, I think the observations contained in the former part of this letter are just.

In the latter part, containing a reply to the second charge brought against the Board by the Commander in Chief, I entirely concur. Supposing the Board to place the most implicit confidence in the Commander in Chief, and to be ever so desirous of availing themselves of his advice, I do not see how it is possible to concert political measures, or plans of military operations, which in their nature require secrecy as well as discussion, at so great a distance as that of Calcutta from Lucknow.

Mr. Wheler—I approve of the above letter to the Commander in Chief, as far as it may not appear in any part of it to contradict the opinions which I have before delivered on the treaty concluded with the Rana of Gohud.

Agreed, that another letter be also written to Sir Eyre Coote, as follows:—

To Sir Eyre Coote.

Sir,

We cannot but exceedingly lament the loss of those brave officers, whose example animated the advancing party at the attack of the fort of Lahaar, and of the men who fell on that occasion. We attribute these losses solely to the circumstance of Captain Popham's detachment not being provided with battering cannon, to destroy the defences of the fort; and must therefore request that you will order under a proper escort two eighteen pounders from Chuna Ghur, with their proportion of ammunition and stores, to join Captain Popham, whenever you shall receive advice from him, that he is required by the Rana of Gohud to perform any service which shall render them necessary.

Fort William, We are, &c.
15th May 1780.

Agreed, That the following letter be written to Captain Popham:—

To Captain Popham.

Sir,

We have received your letter of the 29th April, informing us of the capture of the fort of Lahaar by storm, on the 28th of the same month.

We with pleasure assure you of our entire approbation of your conduct, and desire that you will in public orders return our thanks to the officers under your command, and in particular, to Captains M'Clarey and Mayaffre, and to Lieutenant Cameron, for their gallant behaviour in this service, and to the troops in general, for their spirited, steady, and soldier-like conduct, both on this occasion, and during the whole course of the present expedition.

The Commander in Chief has transmitted to us an account of the successful attack which was made by Captain Bruce on the enemy's camp, on the morning of the 16th of April; the regularity and spirit with which this enterprize appears to have been conducted, has impressed us with a high opinion of Captain Bruce's abilities as an officer, and of the discipline as well as bravery of the troops which he commanded. We desire that you will express to Captain Bruce our approbation of his services, and return our thanks to him and his party, in public orders, for their gallant behaviour on this occasion.

We have read with pleasure your report of Mr. Odell's good behaviour, and as a reward to his merit, we have appointed him a cornet of cavalry, in the room of Mr. Gardiner, to rank as an ensign in the general line of the army, from the 28th ultimo.

Much as we are pleased with the gallantry of our troops at the assault of the fort of Lahaar, we cannot but exceedingly regret the loss of those brave officers, whose example animated the advancing party, and of the men who fell on that occasion. We attribute these losses solely to the circumstance of your not being provided with battering cannon, to destroy the defences of the fort, and we have therefore requested the Commander in Chief to order two eighteen pounders, with their proportion of ammunition and stores, to join your detachment under a proper escort, whenever he shall receive advice from you, of your being required by the Rana of Gohud to perform any service which shall render them necessary.

We desire that you will deliver over to the Rana the fort of Lahaar, with the possession of the duties of Cutchoocagaar dependant on it, and that you will appoint a person duly qualified in conjunction with one nominated by him for the same purpose, to ascertain the amount of the revenues yielded by the district of Cutchoocagaar, from the accounts of the actual collections, employing such checks as your own judgment shall dictate, to prevent any collusion in this inquiry; and for this purpose also, we desire that you will cause exact copies to be taken of the original accounts, and transmit them to us, with your report of the amount deduced from them.

Fort William, We are, &c. &c.
the 15th May 1780.

We are of opinion, that the season is too far advanced to admit of a junction between Captain Popham's detachment and the forces commanded by General Goddard, and that the march of this detachment to the other side of India is therefore no longer advisable. But we think that it may be useful on the western frontier of the Vizier's dominions, either to repel an invasion from the Marattas, if they should attempt to enter at that quarter, or to proceed against them on the western side of the Jumna, if it should be found expedient to send a force for that purpose. We therefore recommend its continuing still embodied.

We are, &c.

(Signed) Wm. Popham, Capt^n^ Commanding.

Received the following letter from Sir Eyre Coote:—

Gentlemen,

I have before me your three ſeparate letters, of date the 15th May. That which is in anſwer to my letters of the 21ſt March, 26th April, and 1ſt May, it ſeems neceſſary only to acknowledge the receipt of; but as the other two can be conſidered in no other light than as an abſolute attack on me in my military character, I think it neceſſary to reply to them minutely, under different heads.

I flatter myſelf the whole tenor of your charges will be ſo eaſily confuted, that I ſhall have only to refer to your former orders, to the treaty with the Ranah of Ghode, and his requiſition for troops in conſequence of the ſaid treaty, to prove that I acted up to the ſpirit, as well as to the letter of the mandates of Government.

In order to be more diſtinct, I ſhall firſt take up the ſubject of that letter, which is in anſwer to mine of the 21ſt April. Notwithſtanding the deep concern and ſurprize you are pleaſed to expreſs at my venturing to produce before your Board thoſe ſentiments, which as they are to be found in the letter alluded to, it becomes unneceſſary here to repeat; yet I moſt undoubtedly think, that I am warranted, not only to make you acquainted with my ideas on the paſt and preſent, but alſo with my opinion on what is likely to happen. If a member of Government, who is at the head of the Company's army, is to be denied this moſt neceſſary mode of contributing his exertions for the good of his employers, the advantages they can derive from his ſervices are limited indeed.

Your firſt argument is thus expreſsly worded:—"That I have accuſed the Board of having engaged Captain Popham's detachment in a ſervice to which it was unequal." Acknowledging however, that I have not directly expreſſed the charge, but that it is too ſtrongly and evidently implied by the whole tenor of my letter, to admit of your putting any other conſtruction on the expreſſions which mark it with that tendency; ſuch concluſions drawn from what I have not ſaid, but what you ſuppoſe my meaning, I ſhall wave a reply to. My other real avocations oblige me to avoid entering on ſuch an ideal detail. I did and do again ſtate, that the detachment was not equipt for ſieges; and that the Ranah of Gohud never even hinted by requiſition or otherwiſe, to me, that they were meant to be employed on ſuch undertakings. No mention was made of attacking forts, or the neceſſity of a battering train declared, till the 11th of April, at which period the detachment had for ſome days inveſted Lahaar.

It was impoſſible to ſuppoſe that the Ranah requiring heavy cannon on the 11th April, could mean them for the reduction of Lahaar, an enterprize already begun; the concluſion would have been too ridiculous, when it is explained that the neareſt heavy guns to that fortreſs could not have reached the detachment in leſs than two months (and for the truth of this, permit me to appeal to your own knowledge, that there is not a ſingle piece of battering cannon with the field brigades.) No, his declared object in demanding a battering train then, was to attempt Gwalior during the enſuing rains: that requiſition of the Ranah's I immediately informed you of; and as I have now only received your inſtructions in conſequence of it, no time has been loſt on my part.

Appendix. No. 285.

The purport of the Ranah's letter to me, previous to my ordering Captain Popham on that ſervice, were, that his country was over run with the Marattas; not a word mentioned of their being poſſeſſed of any of his ſtrong holds, but deſcribing them as a body of horſe, plundering and laying waſte his diſtricts. The ſoldier on ſuch an application naturally equips the force to repel ſuch an enemy as lightly as poſſible; and does not burthen them with a battering train, which would inevitable counteract their very deſign, diſpatch and celerity of march in the field.

The Ranah's idea of quitting his Ghode diſtrict, croſſing the Scind, and appearing before Lahaar, was ſudden; and the public intelligence that ſuch was his intention, was immediately followed by accounts, that the army was before the place.

The Ranah did deceive Captain Popham, and the fort was found much ſtronger than reported, otherwiſe it is impoſſible to ſuppoſe an officer of character could have depended on ſix pounders, for taking off the defences, or breaching ſuch walls. Another ſtrong reaſon might alſo before have been given for my not encumbering the detachment with any thing but light field artillery, even had it been in my power to do it; I could not imagine that the Ranah was ſo totally defenceleſs in ordnance, but that his forts and ſtrong holds could have ſupplied a few pieces of battering cannon.

I mean not to make any remarks on the treaty with the Ranah of Gohud, but it is abſolutely neceſſary to point out what ſeems required by you, gentlemen, for my juſtification. In order to prove that I have complied as far as reſted with me, both with the letter and ſpirit of it, I need no other evidences than the ſecond article of the treaty which you quote; your explanation of what was your intention and meaning, apparent or concluſive, in ſuch ſecond article; and your own orders, by letters dated 6th December and 17th February, to ſhew, that I complied in full with the word and ſpirit of all and every act of Government laid down for my guidance. The Ranah made his demand for troops on the 5th February, and explained what ſervice the troops were deſigned for; I accordingly uſed my judgment, in ſending ſuch a detachment immediately as I thought ſufficient to perform the ſervice propoſed. But the Ranah's hidden plans which he meant to adopt after the junction of our detachment with him, I could neither foreſee or am anſwerable for. My orders to Captain Popham were diſcretionary, with a copy of the treaty for his guidance; all others that I could have given him muſt have impeded rather than furthered the ſervice. I muſt obſerve, that when any force demanded by the Ranah, and ordered by the Commander in Chief, has at length joined the army of the former, the Commander in Chief, at a diſtance from their operations, cannot be anſwerable for the mode of carrying on that ſervice; nor can the term of the Company's commanding officer, ſo often made uſe of in the treaty, have in like inſtances any reference to the Commander in Chief of the forces; the ſenſe will not admit being ſtrained to ſuch a meaning. The explanation of the Company's commander officer then, is the officer who abſolutely heads the detachment; for on ſervice to be performed againſt an enemy, who are there to-day and gone to-morrow, it would ſeem ſtrangely inconſiſtent in me, to tie up their operations, by making them wait my authority for their different movements; I might with equal expectation of ſucceſs, iſſue my orders from Calcutta as from hence, ſince it takes ten days at leaſt to get an anſwer to a letter from them.

You ſay that "the operations of the detachment "ſhould have been reſtricted to its original and profeſſed "deſign, until it ſhould have been fitted for more diffi- "cult ſervices, or, it ſhould have been immediately "qualified for them." I repeat again, that the firſt intimation I had of the intended attack of Lahaar, was immediately followed by a ſecond, that the troops were before the fort; and would you have adviſed, after the place had been inveſted and attacked ten days (the neceſſary time for my orders reaching them, in conſequence of the information received) that the ſiege ſhould have been raiſed, and the troops ordered to retire? The ſervice, hazardous and precarious as it was, appeared preferable to ſuch meaſures. The Ranah, I muſt own, has been very moderate in his demands of aſſiſtance, when his powers, by treaty, are conſidered. And in anſwer to your inference drawn on the quotation of my letter, that I ſeem to have miſtaken the ſenſe of the 2d article: and that I ſuppoſe the Ranah is inveſted with the power of preſcribing the ſtrength of the party required for his aſſiſtance; you muſt permit me to ſay, thoſe are by no means my ideas; that part of the 2d article which is in point, will not admit of two conſtructions; but that I may be thoroughly underſtood, the ſenſe and meaning of the article alluded to I take to be as follows: that let the Ranah's views and deſigns be ever ſo unlimited, if he makes a demand for troops, artillery, &c. and ſpecifies the ſervice meant to be performed, and the Commander in Chief is of opinion, that the operations mentioned cannot with advantage be carried on without even our whole force in theſe parts, every man and ſtore ought, by faith of treaty, inſtantly to move at the requiſition of the Ranah of Ghode. The ſervice to be attempted depends upon the Ranah's will, muſt be particularly ſpecified by him, and the troops capable of undertaking ſuch ſervice with advantage, is the Commander in Chief's detail.

To your candour I ſubmit the above, and expect from your juſtice, that you exonerate me from that reproach ſo unmeritedly caſt on me.

The truth is, the Ranah of Ghode appears veſted with powers which he has already miſapplied, in withholding, his real deſign from the Commander in Chief, and demanding troops for one ſervice when it is evident he meant them for another.

Your reply to what you term my ſecond charge againſt you, viz. That you have withheld from me the information of your plans for the conduct of the Maratta war, and that you have not anſwered in full my letter to you of the 6th of December ſtates, that there has been no alteration or addition to what paſſed in Council on that ſubject when I was preſent at the Board, except the treaty with the Ranah of Ghode; and that your anſwer of the 24th January, was a full one to mine of the 6th December. To the firſt part I undoubtedly ſubſcribe, that if no alteration had taken place you conſequently could not inform me of any; I ſhall only obſerve, that when I left the Board, a treaty of peace with the Marattas was in agitation, and looked forward to as likely to be effected, though the neceſſary preparations for war were ſtill carrying on; but when I had the honour to addreſs you on the 6th December, the proſpect of peace, from the terms demanded of us, ſeemed to be thrown to a diſtance, and in conſequence of that material change in our ſituation, it was, that I put to the Board thoſe eſſential and reaſonable queſtions, Whether your Supreme Board meant to purſue the line of peace or war? and if the latter, whether it was to extend to the operations of a vigorous one, or the more confined ſcale of defences? And in reſpect to your aſſertion, that theſe were fully anſwered in your letter of the 24th January, I muſt beg leave to differ with you in opinion; at leaſt I cannot ſee it in that light.

To your third letter, wherein you attribute our loſſes before Lahaar ſolely to the circumſtance of Captain Popham's detachment not being provided with battering cannon, to take off the defences of the fort, I ſhould think it neceſſary to anſwer moſt circumſtantially, had I not already ſpoken fully, and I hope ſatisfactorily upon it, in my reply to your ſecond letter; and as I am clear, from what I have already ſaid, that our ſuperiors will allow the force of the reaſons advanced by me, and exculpate me from all blame on that head; ſo alſo am I induced to believe, that your Board will no longer hold me chargeable with either miſinterpretation of orders, or any omiſſion in the equipment of the detachment required and ſent for the aſſiſtance of the Ranah of Ghode.

I am ſorry I have been obliged to be ſo prolix upon the above ſubjects; but what I owe my own military character, which is dearer to me than life itſelf, rendered it neceſſary that I ſhould not ſubmit to undeſerved accuſations, or permit avowed charges to remain unanſwered.

I have ſent the neceſſary order to the commandant of the garriſon of Chunar to hold two eighteen pounders, their ammunition and ſtores, in readineſs to proceed, whenever Captain Popham ſhall acquaint me that he is required by the Rana of Ghode to perform any ſervice that ſhall render them neceſſary.

Ordered, That this letter lie for conſideration.

APPENDIX, No. 286.

Bengal Secret Conſultations, 29th May 1780.

THE Governor General delivers in the following minute and propoſitions:

No 3, in Mr. Francis's packet

The Governor General.—The Commander in Chief has repeatedly declared, that the detachment now at Ghode, under the command of Captain Popham, is unequal to the ſervices in which it has been employed, and of courſe much more unequal to that in which the Rana is deſirous of engaging it. Such has alſo been the declared opinion of the Board; it is in its preſent form, as has already been obſerved, irreconcileable with the treaty concluded with the Rana of Ghode, which apportions the rate of ſubſidy which he is to pay for ſuch military aid as is afforded him by this Government to battalions of Sepoys on their preſent eſtabliſhment.

It will be recollected, that Captain Popham's detachment was formed for a very different ſervice from that in which it is now employed; conſiſting of 2000 drafts, 40 European artillery, a ſmall party of horſe, with four light ſix pounders and a howitzer; this force was extremely well calculated for the ſervice originally intended to have been performed by it, and as ill calculated for the preſent. Inſtead of four regular battalions of 800 rank and file each, with eight guns, the Rana has been furniſhed with four weak corps of 600 men each, four guns and a howitzer, and a body of horſe, which he neither wanted nor applied for, and which he will probably object to admit into the account of his ſubſidy.

On the requiſition from the four Captains who command the drafts in Gohud, to be permitted to increaſe their preſent corps to battalions, the General obſerves to us, "that thoſe Sepoy drafts are ſupernumerary to the "eſtabliſhment; and preſumes Government has do idea "of augmenting their number, by completing them to "the ſtrength of four regular battalions." For theſe reaſons, and from a deſire to contract our expences by every reaſonable means, I ſubmit to the Board the following propoſitions:

1ſt. That Captain Popham's detachment be relieved by four regular battalions of Sepoys, with their guns, &c. Three battalions from Cawnpore, and the battalion of light infantry at Chackye.

2d. That Captain Popham when relieved ſhall march to Cawnpore: the Sepoys to be incorporated into ſuch of our battalions as may be in want of men, the cavalry to join their corps; the artillery to be diſpoſed of as the Commander in Chief ſhall judge proper; and the officers belonging to the army in Guzerat to join it by ſuch routes as they ſhall judge moſt practicable.

3d. That the ſtaff officers of Captain Popham's detachment ſhall be ordered to do duty, and to hold their preſent appointments, in the detachment which ſhall relieve them. Appendix No. 286.

4th. That the battalion of light infantry, commanded by Captain James Browne, be ordered to march immediately to Gohud.

5th. That Major Camac be ordered to proceed immediately to Gohud, or whereſoever the detachment may be which is to relieve Captain Popham, and to take the command of it.

6th. That the bullocks attached to the guns of the battalion and ſtores, and the eighteen pounders ordered to join Captain Popham's detachment, be furniſhed by the contractor, from his preſent eſtabliſhment.

7th. That as a conſiderable time will be loſt, if the reſolutions of the Board reſpecting Major Camac, and the battalion of light infantry, are carried into effect through the official channel of the Commander in Chief, who did not propoſe leaving Lucknow, until the commencement of the rains;

Agreed, That the orders to Major Camac and Captain Browne be immediately ſent from the Board, and iſſued in general orders.

8th. That a copy of theſe reſolutions be immediately tranſmitted to the Commander in Chief; and that he be requeſted to iſſue the neceſſary orders for forming the detachment at Cawnpore, which is to relieve Captain Popham's.

I ſhall now beg leave to offer a few remarks on theſe propoſitions.

By relieving Captain Popham's detachment with four regular battalions, we ſtrictly comply with the terms of the treaty, and the Rana's requiſition. It will prove a reduction of our expences, as the battalions now propoſed for this ſervice are at preſent upon a war eſtabliſhment, and the ſubſidy will, or ought to defray every expence of the detachment.

By employing Captain Browne's battalion on this ſervice, we render a corps formed for active ſervice of real uſe: at preſent it is in cantonment, as the purpoſes for which it was originally raiſed have been long ſince accompliſhed, and the diſtricts to which it principally appertained, have been placed under the controul of the collector of Boglepore. Captain Crawford's corps, which by the regulations is to be completed to the ſtrength of a battalion, (which it may by a part of the drafts ordered now to be relieved from Gohud) will be fully ſufficient for the protection of Ramgur, and the Jungulterry of Chackye.

With reſpect to Major Camac, I ſhall briefly obſerve, that I have recommended him for the command of the detachment which is to be employed in Gohud, becauſe he belongs to the brigade which is to furniſh the principal force of which it will conſiſt; becauſe I know him to be peculiarly qualified for a ſervice of this nature, to which ſuch requiſites are eſſential, and becauſe I believe that the other members of the Board entertain a ſimilar opinion of him.

Agreed to the propoſitions recommended by the Governor General; and that the following letter be written the Commander in Chief;

To Sir Eyre Coote.

Sir,

We have received your letters of the 5th, 11th, and 15th inſtant.

We agree with you in opinion, that the detachment now at Gohud, under the command of Captain Popham, is not equal to the ſervice on which it has been employed, and yet leſs to that in which the Rana is deſirous of engaging it.

For theſe reaſons, and from a deſire to contract our expences as much as poſſible, we have reſolved, firſt, that Captain Popham's detachment be relieved by four regular battalions of Sepoys, with their guns, &c. viz. three battalions from Cawnpore, and the battalion of light infantry at Chackye.

Second. That Captain Popham when relieved, ſhall march to Cawnpore; the Sepoys to be incorporated into ſuch of our battalions as may be in want of men; the cavalry to join their corps; the artillery to be diſpoſed of as the Commander in Chief ſhall judge proper; and the officers belonging to the army in Guzerat to join it by ſuch routes as they ſhall judge moſt practicable.

Third. That the ſtaff officers of Captain Popham's detachment ſhall be ordered to do duty, and to hold their preſent appointments, in the detachment which ſhall relieve them.

Fourth. That the battalion of light infantry commanded by Captain James Browne be ordered to march immediately to Gohud.

Fifth. That Major Camac be ordered to proceed immediately to Gohud, or wherefoever the detachment may be which is to relieve Captain Popham, and to take the command of it.

Sixth. That the bullocks attached to the guns of the battalions and ſtores, and to the 18 pounders ordered to join Captain Popham's detachment, be furniſhed by the contractor from his preſent eſtabliſhment.

And we deſire that you will be pleaſed to give the neceſſary inſtructions for carrying theſe our reſolutions into immediate effect; but as a conſiderable time would be loſt were the orders to Major Camac, and to Captain Browne commanding the battalion of light infantry, to paſs through you, we have directed our Secretary to communicate them immediately to thoſe officers.

Extract of Bengal Secret Conſultations, 12th June 1780.

Extract of the Governor General's Minute.

By the propoſed plan of operations, the ſubſidy which we have hitherto received from the Rana of Gohud, will ceaſe: all that we can require of him will be to join our forces with the quota of his troops ſtipulated by the treaty; it will therefore become neceſſary to provide a military fund for the payment of this detachment. I propoſe to the Board, that as the ſeaſon is now approaching in which our demand upon Rajah Cheyt Sing, for the payment of his annual contribution towards the expences of the war, ſhould be made, we do immediately inſtruct our Reſident of Benares to apply to him for the ſum of five lacks of rupees, which ſum I propoſe ſhall be appropriated ſolely to the payment of Major Camac's detachment.

If the Board agree to this plan, it will be neceſſary to make ſome alterations in our late orders, and theſe I ſhall reduce to diſtinct propoſitions.

1ſt. That the order for the return of Captain Popham's detachment be countermanded.

2d. That the Sepoy drafts of that detachment be immediately formed into three regular battalions.

3d. That the three ſenior Captains now with the detachment, be appointed to the command of theſe battalions; and that the Commander in Chief be requeſted to iſſue the neceſſary orders for completing them with ſubaltern and native officers.

4th. That to complete theſe battalions with their proportion of ordnance, two ſix pounders be added to the guns now with Captain Popham's detachment.

5th. That theſe battalions be added to the detachment already ordered to be put under the command of Major Camac, and the whole formed into a ſeparate corps during the continuance of the preſent ſervice.

6th. That in addition to the guns attached by the regulations to each battalion of Sepoys upon ſervice, two twelve pounders, the howitzer now with Captain Popham's detachment, and two cohorns, be ordered to join Major Camac's detachment.

7th. That the Board of Ordnance be requeſted to iſſue orders for ſupplying Major Camac's detachment with the above mentioned ordnance, and the proportion of ammunition and ſtores agreeable to the eſtabliſhment, either from Cawnpore, or either of the military ſtations contiguous to it.

8th. That a Brigade Major and an Aid de Camp be added to the ſtaff of Major Camac's detachment, in conſequence of the additional ſtrength of it.

9th. That the Secretary be directed to draw out inſtructions for Major Camac from the preceding minute.

I entreat the Board to give me their ſupport in the proſecution of this plan. If they have been from its commencement averſe to the war; let them join with me in proſecuting it with vigour to its ſpeedy termination. If they conſider themſelves as free from the reſponſibility of it, let them allow me to acquit myſelf of mine. I wiſh I could venture my life upon the conſequences: I know the man who is to conduct it; and am certain that if the deſign is practicable, he will execute it to its fulleſt effect; nor am I fearful of the inference which this declaration may draw upon me for the future event of it.

Ordered, That the opinions of the different members of the Board be taken upon this ſubject in circulation.

Bengal Secret Conſultations, the 19th June 1780.

At a Council;—preſent, the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Governor General, Preſident; Philip Francis, Edward Wheler, Eſquires.—(Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote abſent.)

READ, and approved the proceedings of the 12th inſtant.

Meſſrs. Francis and Wheler having delivered in the minute which follows on the 15th inſtant, it was immediately ſent to the Governor General.

Minute from Mr. Francis and Mr. Wheler.

15th June 1780.

Mr. Francis packs.

Convinced as we are of the indiſpenſable neceſſity of bringing the preſent war, if poſſible, to a ſpeedy concluſion, we ſhall heartily join in the ſupport of every meaſure which appears to have peace for its object, and which carries with it any reaſonable proſpect of ſucceſs. On this principle, we agree with the Governor General, that it may be adviſable to avail ourſelves of the favourable diſpoſition of the Berar Government, and to invite the the Rajah's Dewan to come for that purpoſe to Calcutta. The motives aſſigned for his late conduct, and for the march of a body of his troops to Cuttack, are plauſible at leaſt, and appear to be confirmed by the delays with which it has been attended, and by their preſent inactivity. The deſire he profeſſes of becoming the mediator of peace between us and the Marattas ſeems likely to be ſincere, becauſe we believe it to be founded in the conſideration of his own intereſt, and becauſe it is conformable to the language which he has uniformly held to us. We do not mean to ſay, that evidence of this nature is to be implicitly depended upon; but it is now ſo eſſentially our intereſt to ſecure the friendſhip of Moodajee Booſla, or at leaſt to prevent his acting againſt us, that we ſhould think it imprudent to diſcover any doubt of his ſincerity. It cannot be very difficult to maintain the appearances of the moſt perfect confidence in his good faith, without ſuffering it to miſlead us, or neglecting any of thoſe precautions which our ſituation dictates, and which are never more neceſſary perhaps than in the midſt of ſecurity.

We

We therefore agree wth the Governor General in this part of his minute: but we find with extreme concern, that it is impoſſible for us to give our aſſent to the ſubſequent propoſition. The reaſons for which we object to it, ſhall be ſtated briefly, without reviving former arguments, or reflecting on any thing that is paſt. Taking our ſituation as it ſtands, we declare it to be our moſt deliberate opinion, that a peace is indiſpenſably neceſſary to ſave the India Company and every intereſt connected with theirs, from the greateſt diſtreſs, if not from certain ruin; and that at whatever diſtance this object may be, it is not practicable for us to continue the war on any terms, without a very conſiderable reduction in the expence of conducting it. In the former of theſe opinions we have never varied; in the latter, we are aſſured of the Governor General's concurrence. On this general ground, we object to the propoſed meaſure.

1ſt. Becauſe it reverſes a reſolution very lately paſſed with the unanimous approbation of the Board, for recalling and reducing Captain Popham's detachment; the extra expences of which, beyond our regular eſtabliſhment, amounting to CR^{s} 91,332 a month would be ſaved, and their place ſupplied by four regular battalions.

2d. Becauſe by the propoſed plan of operations, the ſubſidy to be paid by the Rana of Gohud, and of which we believe no part has hitherto been received, is to ceaſe; and our reſources ſo far forth diminiſhed.

3d. Becauſe at a time, when it is admitted that the war cannot be continued without a very conſiderable reduction of expence, we cannot, conſiſtently with that principle, engage in a meaſure which ſuppoſes the contrary to be true; and which in our judgment leads to an addition of expence, which we cannot limit when once it is begun, and which we are very ſure this Government is not in a condition to ſupport. We have ſeen into what enormous charges we have been drawn by the detachment under General Goddard, the ſtrength of which does not exceed that propoſed to be placed under Major Camac: we have ſeen the expence of a detachment of only two thouſand draſts under Captain Popham, ſwelled to more than ninety-one thouſand rupees a month; and we firmly believe it to be an evil inſeparable from diſtant military operations in this country, that the charge of them can neither be limited nor controlled. We do not mean to diſpute the propriety of the Governor's perſonal confidence in Major Camac; but in our minds, ſuch implicit confidence cannot exiſt without experience, much leſs in oppoſition to that with which the conduct of ſimilar expeditions has already furniſhed us. In this obſervation we allude only to the expence that attends them. Appendix. No. 286.

4th. Becauſe the propoſed anticipation of the demand of five lacks from the Rajah of Benares, and the ſole appropriation of it to this ſervice, is no relief of expence, or increaſe of reſource, ſince the above five lacks make part of our general eſtimate of reſources for the ſervice of the current year; and if applied to any ſervice not provided for in the ſame eſtimate, will leave a deficiency which muſt be made good out of ſome other fund.

5th. Becauſe it appears to us, that the ſtate of our treaſury is not in any degree equal to the exiſting and increaſing demands which preſs upon this Government: The apparent balance on Monday laſt, including the depoſit in the New Fort, without which we ſhould conſider ourſelves as totally unprovided for meaſures of immediate defence, if ſuch ſhould become neceſſary, amounted to no more than current rupees 42,69,453. Deduct the depoſit in the New Fort, and let the account be ſtated as it will then ſtand, and as it ought to ſtand:

Remainder, after deducting the ſum in the New Fort	6,13,453
Balance or actual debt againſt the Treaſury	31,35,453
	37,48,906

Dr.	CR^{s}.
Depoſits of private property	14,87,958
Amount of orders unpaid	20,86,949
Bills drawn by General Goddard unpaid	1,73,999
	37,48,906

This view of our ſituation undoubtedly leads to other important concluſions: that to which we mean to confine it at preſent is, that we are in no condition to undertake new expences; nor if our treaſury were better ſupplied than it is ſhould be think it prudent to expoſe ourſelves to the demands of another expedition, in the plan of which we ſee no eſſential difference from that which ſtill exiſts under General Goddard.

6th. Becauſe, admitting that all the preceding objections on the head of expence could be anſwered or removed, we are not ſatisfied that the plan itſelf would either end where it profeſſes to be directed, or that this is the ſeaſon in which it ought to be attempted on its own avowed principles. The declared purpoſe of the expedition is to invade Mhadjee Scindia's country, and to attack his capital, Ugein, in order to divert him from the war in Guzerat to the defence of his own territories. We underſtand and admit the force of this argument; though in our judgment overbalanced by other conſiderations, independent of which we ſhould only object to the time choſen for the expedition, and to the unneceſſary charge of keeping up Captain Popham's detachment. If it be meant to withdraw Mhadjee Scindia from the War in Guzerat, and to diſtract his force and attention from that country to his own, it ſeems to us that the attempt ſhould be made as ſoon as poſſible after October when General Goddard might be at liberty to co-operate with it, and to favour its ſucceſs by a ſimilar diverſion on his ſide; not in the midſt of the rains, when General Goddard's army is in cantonments, and unable to take the field. The manifeſt advantage of having the two armies acting in concert, and dividing the attention of the enemy between them, would be loſt, if they were not both in the field at the ſame time. But this and every other objection to the meaſure, is in fact removed by the inſtructions which immediately follow it; and which, in our opinion, are wholly inconſiſtent with the firſt propoſed object. Major Camac is to be entruſted with "a diſcretionary power to remove the force which the Maratta Government poſſeſſes in Culpee or Bundelcund (and which is ſaid to be the only obſtacle to the main deſign) by any means, either by negociation or force." If it be true, as we are ſure it is, "That the Maratta power in that country is not very conſiderable, and that they who poſſeſs it are diſaffected to the Government on which they depend," ſuch a power can form no obſtacle to the execution of the main deſign; nor can we ever admit of the validity of ſuch a pretence for invading Bundelcund, which we conclude would be the firſt, if not the only effect of the expedition. At all events, the latitude given to Major Camac leaves him at liberty to purſue whatever plan he thinks proper; but if, inſtead of proceeding towards Mhadjee Scindia, the march of this detachment detachment ſhould once be directed by the oppoſite route to the capital of Bundelcund, he will naturally conclude, that the poſſeſſion of this country is our true and only object; of courſe he will have no apprehenſions for the ſafety of his own.

For theſe reaſons we are of opinion, that the reſolution of the Board of the 29th May, for the recal and reduction of Captain Popham's detachment, &c. ſhould not be ſuſpended.

The Minute which follows having been ſent by the Governor General to the Secretary on Saturday, and having been circulated and agreed to, the propoſed orders were accordingly iſſued.

Governor General's Minute.

No. 5, in Mr. Francis's packet.

The Governor General—The majority of the Board having rejected all the propoſitions which were contained in my minute of the 12th inſtant, excepting the ſixth and ſeventh, which do not appear to have been included in their exception to the general propoſitions, I now beg leave to repeat them; and as it appears from the accompanying letter from Captain Browne, that he has left his field pieces and tumbrils behind him, I ſhall propoſe,

1. That Captain Browne's battalion, on its arrival at Cawnpore, be completed with its proportion of field pieces, ammunition and ſtores, from the ordnance at that ſtation.

2d. That in addition to the guns attached to the battalions of Major Camac's detachment by the regulations, two twelve pounders, the howitzer with Captain Popham's detachment, and two cohorns, be ordered to join it.

3d. That the Board of Ordnance be requeſted to iſſue orders for ſupplying Major Camac's detachment with the above-mentioned ordnance and their proportion of European artillery and Laſcars, ammunition and ſtores, agreeable to the eſtabliſhment, either from Cawnpore or the military ſtations contiguous to it.

(Signed) Warren Haſtings,

Agreed.

(Signed) E. Wheler,

No. 6, in Mr. Francis's packet.

The Governor General lays before the Board the following draft of inſtructions, which he propoſes to be given to Major Camac.

Inſtructions to Major Camac.

1ſt. Having appointed you to the command of a detachment, ordered to be formed of four battalions of Sepoys, three of which are to be furniſhed from the army ſtationed at Cawnpore, and the fourth, the battalion of light infantry, commanded by Captain James Browne; we direct you to proceed to Cawnpore, or to the ſtation of that detachment, wherever it may be, and to conduct it without loſs of time into the dominions of the Rana of Gohud, there to relieve the corps now under the command of Captain Popham, in that quarter.

2d. The Rana of Gohud having, in virtue of a treaty lately concluded between him and this Government, required the aid of a military force, on the part of this Government, for the defence of his country againſt the Marattas, who had invaded it, Captain Popham was appointed to this ſervice; and to this you now ſucceed. We therefore direct that you comply with ſuch requiſitions as ſhall be made to you by the Rana, for this and for ſuch other conditions as he is entitled to demand by the treaty, and ſhall be practicable with the force under your command.

3d. Whenever the Rana ſhall have no further ſervice for the detachment, and ſhall diſmiſs it in the manner preſcribed by the treaty, and no occaſion ſhall preſent itſelf for the employment of the detachment, in promoting the general ſucceſs of the war in which we are engaged with the Maratta State, you are forthwith to return with it into the dominions of the Nabob of Oude, and there wait for further orders; and if before you march into Gohud, you ſhall receive an intimation from him in writing, that he ſhall not require the aſſiſtance of your detachment, you will in like manner ſuſpend your march, and wait for further orders.

4th. But as the firſt deſign of this Government in the alliance lately formed with the Rana of Gohud, was to diſtreſs the Maratta State, by a diminution of their power, revenue and influence, and by uniting with other Powers in enmity with them, to divert and weaken their operations; and as the Maratta dominions which lie contiguous to Gohud, appertain to Mhadjee Scindia, and Tuccojee Holcar, the two principal rulers of that State, and the leaders of the army, employed to oppoſe General Goddard; we authorize and inſtruct you, in caſe you ſhall deem it practicable and expedient, to carry the war immediately into that quarter; requiring from the Rana the proportion of cavalry ſtipulated by the treaty to be furniſhed by him for ſuch a ſervice, or in caſe of his inability, whether from the ſeaſon of the year or from whatever other cauſe, to fulfil this condition in its complete extent, to require and accept from him ſuch other aid in furniſhing proviſions, and in forming magazines of grain, and other means of ſubſiſtence and communication, as you ſhall judge equivalent to it.

5th. For your guidance in maintaining the relation of your command to the Rana of Gohud, we herewith deliver to you a copy of the treaty executed with him; and we require and enjoin you to conform to it with the moſt ſcrupulous and literal exactneſs.

6th. If any caſe ſhall occur, for which we have not provided by theſe inſtructions, and which ſhall not be contrary to them, we empower you to act therein according to your own judgment; in all other, theſe inſtructions are poſitive, and muſt be implicitly obeyed.

Ordered, That theſe inſtructions lie for conſideration.

Warren Haſtings,
P. Francis,
Edw^d Wheler.

22d June, 1780.

Read the following minute from Meſſrs. Francis and Wheler, in reply to the propoſitions made by the Governor General, and entered in the laſt conſultation, containing inſtructions to Major Camac.

Minute from Meſſrs. Francis and Wheler.

The firſt, ſecond, and third paragraphs of the propoſed inſtructions to Major Camac, being conformable to the treaty concluded with the Rana of Gohud, we acquieſce therein. But we think it ſhould be added, that before our troops depart from the Rana's country, the full account of the ſubſidy due for their pay, ſhould be demanded and received.

But we cannot conſent to veſt Major Camac with the powers mentioned in the 4th paragraph, viz. "to carry "the war immediately into the dominions of Tuccojee "and Scindia, if he ſhall judge it practicable and expe- "dient; and to accept of ſuch other aid from the Rana "of Gohud, as he ſhall judge equivalent to the body of "ten thouſand horſe, which the Rana is obliged by the "treaty to furniſh." The latitude given in the firſt article, leaves it in effect to Major Camac, to carry the Company's arms wherever he thinks proper. The ſecond empowers him to annul the moſt important, and apparently the moſt uſeful article of the treaty. In both inſtances, the Government relinquiſhes its controul over a meaſure, which may lead us much farther than we are aware of; and be attended with the moſt ſerious conſequences. We have already obſerved, that an attempt to invade Scindia's country, if adviſable, ſhould be made at a time when General Goddard can co-operate with it, and ſupport it: this cannot be done till towards the concluſion cluſion of the rains, conſequently there is time ſufficient to concert a plan of operations with the Rana of Gohud, and to aſcertain what aſſiſtance may be depended on from him. The Board will then have proper materials before them, to enable themſelves to judge, how far it may be ſafe or expedient, to embark in the meaſure, ſuppoſing that a peace, which is our firſt object, ſhould not be effected in the interim.

For theſe reaſons, we cannot aſſent to the propoſitions contained in the 4th paragraph. We acquieſce in the 5th.

The powers mentioned in the 6th ſeem to fall under the ſame obſervations which have occurred to us on thoſe contained in the 4th.

No. 9. Mr. Francis's packet.

The Governor General lays before the Board the following Minute.

Governor General—Two minutes have been lately delivered by Meſſrs. Francis and Wheler, bearing their joint ſignatures, in anſwer to propoſitions made by me to the Board.

It is not my intention to follow theſe minutes through every aſſertion of facts, and every deduction of argument; I ſhall only reply to ſuch points as have a relation to my preſent purpoſe, which is ſtill to inſiſt on the neceſſity of carrying the war into the diſtricts appertaining to Mahdajee Scindia, and to this I entreat the Board to give me their attention.

Except the article of expence, I can ſcarcely collect the objections which are made to it.

It never was my intention to employ Major Camac in an invaſion of Bundlecund, nor ſuffer, if it were attempted on the grounds of his inſtructions, ſuch a waſte of the time required for the firſt and eſſential object of his operations.

The ends propoſed by this expedition are two immediate. 1ſt. To divide the Maratta ſtrength, and divert it from General Goddard; 2d. to make the principal agent of the war, the principal ſufferer by it. And one ultimately peace. To this it is objected, that "the manifeſt advantage of having two armies acting in concert, and dividing the attention of the enemy between them, would be loſt if they were not both in the field at the ſame time." This is by no means a fair concluſion, becauſe it ſuppoſes the enemy to keep the field, and our principal army to be inactive: the reverſe is the moſt probable; and my purpoſe will be equally anſwered, whether both remain in quarters, and Major Camac be ſuffered to proſecute the plan aſſigned him without oppoſition; or whether the whole force of the enemy be directed againſt him, and General Goddard left at liberty to act in the proſecution of his. The rainy ſeaſon is no impediment to our troops, but a great one to the Maratta, which conſiſt only of cavalry, and if the meaſure which I have propoſed, be even now agreed to, I ſhould hope to bound it with that ſeaſon, or to effect every material purpoſe of it within the rains.

The deſign of the propoſed inſtructions to Major Camac, has been miſunderſtood, and the intended ſenſe of it inverted. It is not meant "to give Major Camac "a latitude to carry the Company's arms wherever he "thinks proper;" but to order him to carry the Company's arms to a preſcribed ſcene of action, unleſs he thinks it improper.

The objection made to the expence is a material one; but a vigorous exertion cannot be made without expence, nor can the war be either concluded honourably, or proſecuted ſucceſsfully, without ſuch an exertion.—Feeble meaſures and advances for peace will but add to the ſtrength and preſumption of our adverſaries, diſcourage our friends, and perhaps induce them to become parties againſt us. The reſources of this Government, exhauſted as they are, and withheld from it by its internal imbecility, are yet equal to every probable contingency of the preſent war, if it is conducted on a conſiſtent plan, and that not varied by deſultory votes of Council, on every meaſure required for its proſecution. Appendix. No. 286.

I muſt here take notice, that the expence of Captain Popham's detachment has been greatly over-rated. It is aſſerted, that the expence of a detachment of only 2000 drafts under Captain Popham, has been ſwelled to more than 91,000 rupees a month, and in another place, this ſum is ſtated as a fixed amount. The truth is, that the expence of this detachment has exceeded its due bounds; yet not in the degree imputed to it, which would be indeed enormous. The detachment beſides the two thouſand drafts (they are in fact 2,400) conſiſts of artillery and cavalry. The monthly expence of the whole was on a medium about 82,000 rupees; of this ſum

the cavalry alone produce	12,811
and the artillery - -	8,300
making both together -	21,111

And this ſum deducted from the total, leaves 61,000 rupees for the drafts, including the ſtaff and contingencies of four battalions into which they were formed, though their number was equal only to three.

The part which this Government has hitherto borne in the war, is mine, and has been made excluſively mine, the other members having repeatedly diſclaimed their ſhare in the reſponſibility attending it. It is hard, that while they load me with the weight of ſuch a charge, they ſhould bind my hands, and deny me the means of ſupporting it.

If Mr. Francis (I am compelled to ſpeak thus plainly) thinks that he can better and more effectually conduct the war, to the termination of which we both profeſs to aim at; and that he can in honour deprive me of the right which I claim to dictate the means of accompliſhing it, let him avowedly take the lead; but if I am to be charged with the conſequences of it, or if the right which I claim be juſtly mine, let him allow me to poſſeſs and exerciſe it. It is impoſſible to combine the principles of enterprize and inaction in the ſame general meaſure, and as impoſſible for his ſentiments and mine to be brought into agreement on the ſubject of the Maratta war. I have in vain laboured to accommodate them by a ſtudied attention to his opinions in every meaſure which I have ventured to propoſe in the courſe of the laſt fifteen months, and have reſtrained myſelf from urging others, which however proper and neceſſary for the occaſion, extenſively conſidered, were inconſiſtent with the actual ſtate and temper of this Government.

I now revert to my propoſition, and requeſt the Board to re-conſider their objections to the inſtructions which I have propoſed to be given to Major Camac. I have not the preſumption to expect that they will be influenced by any reaſonings which I have uſed, having had too much experience of the inſufficiency of official argument, to overcome a decided, and much leſs a confederate oppoſition. But as the expence which will attend the meaſure which I have recommended is the only formal objection made to it, I hope I may be allowed to remove it, by offering to exonerate the Company from it, and to take it upon myſelf. That this propoſition may not be miſunderſtood, and that I may not bind myſelf by engagements which may exceed my power to fulfil them, I will explain myſelf.

The regular pay and batta of the troops which are to form Major Camac's detachment conſtitute no part of the expence of it, ſince theſe would be the ſame in their amount although the battalions remained in their original quarters. Neither ought the ſuſpenſion of the ſubſidy to be charged to the expedition, ſince it is probable, and I regard it as certain, that the Ranah having no further call for our aid within his country, for the ſole defence of it, will be glad to be relieved from the expence attending it; and becauſe it is propoſed in the laſt of the the minutes of Meſſrs. Francis and Wheler, to withdraw it. The contingencies of the detachment are therefore the only expence that can be reaſonably charged to the expedition: theſe I rate far below two lacks of rupees; that ſum I offer to contribute to this diſburſement. I have already depoſited it within a ſmall amount in the hands of the Sub-treaſurer, and I beg that the Board will permit it to be accepted for that ſervice.

Thurſday.

At a Council;—preſent, the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Governor General, Preſident; Philip Francis, Edward Wheler, Eſquires.—(Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote abſent.)

The Governor General—In my minute of the 19th inſtant, I propoſed that a Major of Brigade and an Aid de Camp ſhould be added to the ſtaff of Major Camac's detachment, then propoſed to conſiſt of ſeven battalions. Although it has been ordered by the Board, that it ſhall conſiſt of only four battalions, and it ſeems to be the determination of the Board to confine its operations to a very limited ſcene, ſtill it has been repreſented to me by Major Camac, as indiſpenſably neceſſary to enable him to execute with proper effect the functions of his command, that he be allowed a Brigade Major and Aid de Camp; and I move, that they be allowed; and that Lieutenant Hicks be appointed to the former ſtation, and Lieutenant Kennon to the latter.

Agreed to.

The minute which follows having been ſent to the Secretary on the 27th inſtant, it was immediately forwarded to the Governor General.

Minute from Meſſieurs Francis and Wheler.

No. 10. Mr. Francis's packet.

After an attentive conſideration of the Governor General's Minute delivered in to the Board yeſterday, we adhere to the reaſons which have induced us to withhold our conſent to the propoſed expedition into Malva. To this, for the preſent, we ſhall only add the following ſhort remarks, in reply to ſome aſſertions in the Governor General's minute, which appear to us to be gratuitous.

1ſt. The actual expence of Captain Popham's detachment for the months of November, December, and January laſt, is ſtated by the Commiſſary General at current rupees 2,73,996; (vide his letter recorded on the 1ſt of May) and we have no reaſon to think that the expence has decreaſed ſince the detachment has been on ſervice.

2d. We know not to what paſſage in either of our minutes the Governor General alludes, when he ſays, "That it is propoſed in the laſt of the minutes of Meſſieurs Francis and Wheler to withdraw the aid granted "to the Rana of Gohud." Notwithſtanding our original diſapprobation of the treaty, and though none of the good effects which were promiſed from it appear to us to have been accompliſhed, we have not propoſed to depart from the conditions by which this Government has been bound to the Rana. All we inſiſt on is, that the ſubſidy ſhould be paid. The Governor General has not informed us, whether any part of it has been diſcharged. It is ſaid, that the rainy ſeaſon is no impediment to our troops, though a great one to the Marattas. The ſame opinion was inſiſted on at the time when Colonel Leſlie marched, and when the Governor's confidence in him was not inferior to that which he now repoſes in Major Camac, and which we do not mean to ſay is ill founded. But Colonel Leſlie's letters contain repeated declarations of the impoſſibility of marching amidſt the torrents of rain with which the country was deluged. On this point our conviction remains unaltered. They who have not ſeen the rains of India can have no idea of their violence, nor how entirely the whole ſurface of the country is changed by them.

In a few days we mean to record our ſentiments more at large on the remainder of the Governor's minute, and on the general ſituation of this Government. We could have wiſhed indeed, that the Governor's plan had been more completely before us than it is, that we might have been able to compare the whole of the object with the whole of the means. Peace, he declares, is his ultimate object; but he has not given us even a general idea of the terms on which he would make it; he has not intimated to us what would be the final extent of his demands on the Marattas, or what conceſſions he would make to them. Before this point is fixed, we have no ſolid baſis, either for action or deliberation: the firſt may be indefinite and unconnected, as it hitherto has been; the ſecond muſt be guided from day to day by events. In this uncertainty we cannot preſume to decide whether his object be or be not attainable; but we promiſe to enter into the conſideration of it with the utmoſt candour, and with all the attention which ſuch a ſubject deſerves when it is laid before us.

Ordered, That the above minute lie for conſideration; and that the Secretary be directed to prepare a draft of inſtructions to Major Camac, in conformity to the different minutes of the members of the Board recorded on this ſubject.

Bengal Secret Conſultations, the 13th July 1780.

At a Council;—preſent, the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Governor General, Preſident; Edward Wheler, Eſquire.—(Mr. Francis, indiſpoſed. Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote abſent on a viſit to the different ſtations of the army.)

The Secretary begs leave to lay before the Board the following minute from Meſſrs. Francis and Wheler, delivered to him on Tueſday the 4th inſtant, which he immediately circulated to the Governor General.

Minute from Meſſrs. Francis and Wheler, 29th June 1780.

No. 11. Mr. Francis's packet.

In our minute of the 27th, we meant only to give an immediate anſwer to the propoſition before us. We ſhall now enter more particularly into the reaſonings and aſſertions with which it was introduced. The terms and tendency of the Governor General's minute make this taſk, however painful it may be, eſſentially neceſſary for the information of thoſe who are to judge of our conduct, and of courſe, to our own reputation and ſafety.

The Governor General ſays, that, "except the article of expence, he can ſcarcely collect the objections made to the meaſure:" And again, "that the expence is the only formal objection to it." Yet ſome pains are taken to anſwer another, which attacks the meaſure on its own principles, and which undoubtedly muſt have been felt by the Governor General, or he would not have attempted to remove it, by ſuppoſing a fact ſo material to the queſtion, as that our principal army is not in cantonments and inactive; and that it muſt not continue ſo to the end of the rains. The truth is, that General Goddard's army, or the major part of it, is actually in cantonments at Surat; and we hear that he himſelf is at Bombay. Laſt year he did not take the field until December; perhaps he now might move a month ſooner; but we are ſatisfied, as well by his own letters, as by every information we have been able to obtain, that it is impoſſible for him to act before November. That the rains would be no impediment to our infantry, incumbered with baggage, tents, ſtores, ammunition, and a train of artillery; but that it would be a great one to a body of Maratta cavalry; ſeems to us a moſt extraordinary propoſition. Hitherto it has been contradicted by experience, and we find no arguments advanced to ſupport it. If one of the objects of the expedition be to divide the Maratta ſtrength, and to divert it from General Goddard, it is eſſential to that object that General Goddard's army ſhould be at the ſame time in the field, otherwiſe the Maratta force is not divided; nor can there be a diverſion on one ſide, unleſs ſome operations exiſt on the other, in favour of which the diverſion is to be made. But we ſay that General Goddard's army is in cantonments, and muſt remain inactive till November; conſequently the undivided force and attention of the Marattas, if they think it neceſſary, may be turned entirely to Major Camac.

The ſecond object is ſaid to be to make Madajee Scindia, "the principal agent of the war, the principal ſufferer by it." Hitherto we have been told that Nana Furneſe was the chief, moſt attached to the French intereſt, and moſt hoſtile to ours; and that Scindia was diſpoſed to cultivate our friendſhip; and it muſt be confeſſed he gave us a proof of it, which ought not to be forgotten, when he ſuffered the Bombay army to retire from Worgaum. Admitting nevertheleſs, that we ought now to conſider Scindia as our principal opponent, it does not follow that this expedition, in the way it is planned, will be the cauſe of much diſtreſs to him, if any. In our opinion, we are much more likely to ſuffer by it than he is. If every material purpoſe of it is to be effected within the rains, what can they be, but to make a haſty incurſion into his country, to plunder it, and to leave it? If General Goddard were in motion at the ſame time, we ſee a poſſibility, in ſpeculation at leaſt, that Scindia might be diſtracted between them, and prevented from turning his whole force, or the principal part of it, to the defence of his dominions. As this is not the caſe, Major Camac muſt act without the ſupport of a diverſion on the other ſide, againſt whatever force Scindia may think fit to bring againſt him. They who are unacquainted with the geography of India, can know nothing even of the diſtance from our frontier to Eugene, the capital of Malwa, much leſs of the difficulties that are likely to attend ſuch a march. The diſtance, however, is evidently ſo great, that in caſe of a check we ſee no likelihood of ſecuring a retreat. But if, whether with or without an immediate repulſe, the retreat of the detachment ſhould be cut off, we know what the conſequence muſt be; another body of troops will be called for, and the neceſſity of ſending them inſiſted on, to ſupport the firſt meaſure, or to diſengage us from the effects of it. No man can ſay to what diſtreſs and difficulties a ſeries of ſuch ſteps may finally lead us. It may happen, that while we are ſtripping Bengal of the force which ought to be reſerved for its defence; while we are ſending our beſt troops, and our beſt officers, on theſe diſtant expeditions, theſe provinces may be invaded from different quarters, and our eſtabliſhment hazarded where it ought to be our principal care to render it ſecure. In our opinion, nothing eſſential to the intereſts of the Company and of the nation in India can be loſt, as long as Bengal is ſafe; but if this country ſhould once be in danger, or if, by the loſs or waſte of its reſources, it ſhould no longer be able to ſupport itſelf, and to return a regular tribute to Great Britain, no conqueſts or acquiſitions in any other part of India will ever compenſate, in the ſmalleſt degree, for the diſtreſs to which Bengal may be reduced, and for the conſequences that muſt attend it at home. The ſuppoſition of ſuch a caſe will not appear wild or unwarrantable to thoſe who have a perfect view of our ſituation. We are much afraid that it is little known, and leſs underſtood in England.

The war with the Marattas, at more than two years after its commencement, and after every rupee we had reſerved in the treaſury, or have ſince been able to collect, has been ſpent in the ſupport of it, is at this day as far from a concluſion as ever. New expectations are propoſed to anſwer the ſame effects which were promiſed from former meaſures of the ſame nature, and as it appears to us with no better proſpect of ſucceſs; of ſuch ſucceſs at leaſt as would be likely to make any further efforts unneceſſary. Appendix No. 286.

The Governor General talks of friends who may be diſcouraged, and who perhaps may be induced to become parties againſt us; we wiſh that the names of theſe friends had been mentioned. We do not know that this Government has a ſingle friend or ally in India, in the true ſenſe of friendſhip and alliance, which ſuppoſes the power of giving aſſiſtance, and a diſpoſition to give it.

The condition to which we have reduced the Vizier's country, makes that connection rather a burthen than advantage to this State. We have now to defend the extended frontier of a ruined country, which at preſent barely pays the troops that defend it; and which according to all appearance, will not do even that much longer. As for the Vizier himſelf, he is a cypher, and has no choice.

The Rana of Gohud is too inconſiderable to be mentioned; and if he were more powerful than he is, it is plain enough that either his original purpoſe is anſwered, or that he has other reaſons for being weary of the preſence of our army. Though the Board have not heard from Captain Popham, we conjecture from what the Governor General has let fall, that the Rana intends to diſmiſs Captain Popham, and that he will not require Major Camac to come into his country.

On the other hand, we ſee the principal Powers of India, either armed, or ready to arm againſt us. The Marattas have united, as we foreſaw they would do, in the common defence of their country. Hyder Ally, their natural enemy, has concluded an alliance with them, the effects of which, though hitherto ſuſpended, are not averted. We know, by many proofs, what his diſpoſition is towards us; and we ought to conclude, ſince it is a caſe againſt which we ought to be provided, that he means to act againſt us at the firſt favourable moment; that is, when our arms may have ſuffered another check, or when our ſtrength and reſources may be exhauſted by a continuance of the preſent war.

It is true, our endeavours have hitherto ſucceeded in preventing the Nizam from taking an open part with our enemies. It depends on the gentlemen at Madras, whether the conceſſion we have thought proper to make him ſhall take effect or not; if it ſhould, we have ſtill no poſitive ſecurity that he will be contented with it, or that his other claims upon the Company will not furniſh him with a pretence for joining our enemies, whenever he ſees an opportunity of doing it to advantage. His diſpoſition towards us, and the confidence he repoſes in his own ſtrength, may be plainly collected from his declarations to Mr. Hollond.

The Rajah of Berar ſeems lately, if not originally, to have adopted that ſort of policy which leaves it open to him to be guided by events, and to purſue any courſe he thinks proper. We have no ſecurity that it will be favourable to this Government. He profeſſes to wiſh for an accommodation between us and the Peiſhwa: he offers his mediation, and apparently to ſupport his offers, he ſends a conſiderable army to the frontier of theſe provinces. The ſtrength of this army is unknown to the Board; various reports ſtate it from 20 to 30,000 horſe. Againſt their future operations we ought to be as carefully provided as if we had no dependance on their friendſhip. We ought to treat them as friends, but we ought to be prepared againſt them as enemies:

In this ſituation we can never admit, that the reſources of this Government, exhauſted as they are, and withheld from it by its internal imbecility, are yet equal to every probable contingency of the preſent war; on the contrary, we think that that the preſent war, in whatever manner it may be conducted, is liable to contingencies, to which all our reſources, if they were yet unimpaired, would not be equal, and that in our preſent circumſtances we have no choice.

We deny that this war has hitherto been conducted on a conſiſtent plan, or any plan at all; of which we need not give a more deciſive and ſtriking proof, than that the expedition under Colonel Goddard did not co-operate with that from Bombay againſt Poonah; that the authority formerly given to the Preſidency of Bombay, over that army, was withdrawn in favour of another meaſure, of which they had no information; and that General Goddard's final march to Surat, was merely matter of accident, and abſolutely contrary to the Governor General's wiſhes and intentions.

On the 4th March 1779, he declared, "he wiſhed "equally with Mr. Francis, for the return of the detach- "ment to Berar, and equally dreaded to hear of its pro- "ceeding to the other coaſt."

But if the reverſe were true, and if the war had really been conducted on a conſiſtent plan, we deny that it has been varied by deſultory votes of Council on every meaſure required for its proſecution. We do not know, or believe, that there is a ſingle inſtance of any queſtion concerning the war being carried againſt the opinion of the Governor General, except that now immediately before us; and even this we preſume was not in contemplation with the Governor a month ago, when the reſolution was taken for recalling and reducing Captain Popham's detachment with common conſent, and as we thought with the Governor's entire ſatisfaction.

It is not denied, "that feeble meaſures, and advances "for peace may give ſtrength and preſumption to our ad- "verſaries, and diſcourage our friends; or that the prin- "ciples of enterprize and inaction are not to be com- "bined in the ſame general meaſure." But we do not admit that theſe general propoſitions are applicable to our ſituation. Our opinion is that we are in no condition to continue the war on any terms which ſuppoſe the continuance of the preſent expence, or even with a conſiderable diminution of it. Whether our reſources be exhauſted, or whether they be withheld from us, it is equally true that there is no money in our treaſury. We hope, that in ſuch critical circumſtances, it will not be propoſed to take the depoſit out of the New Fort. We know not how near we are to the extremity for which it was provided; but, even ſuppoſing our immediate wants were relieved by that little ſupply, let us conſider where it would leave us, after diſcharging the inſtant demands upon the treaſury. Our former ſtatements ſhew what a very inconſiderable portion of it would remain in our hands, while the credit and advantage of poſſeſſing ſuch a reſerve in ſpecie, againſt an extraordinary emergency, would be loſt: in effect, we ſhould publicly avow, that the diſtreſs, againſt which the depoſit was reſerved, had actually fallen upon us.

We never meant to propoſe feeble meaſures, which neceſſarily defeat themſelves; nor yet do we approve of vigorous meaſures in the ſenſe in which vigour has been hitherto underſtood, becauſe we are convinced that this Government is unable to ſupport them; and that, if they could be ſupported a ſhort time longer, they would not bring us nearer to our object. Before the commencement of the war, we foreſaw and foretold the principal conſequences that would attend it; we now judge of it by its effects, which we hope will be conſidered, though every other ſort of argument ſhould continue to be diſregarded: we have ſeen the event of two years military operations, and of a ſucceſſion of enterprizes, which in point of effort and expence, were as vigorous as any thing we could now undertake.

The expedition to Poonah ended in a diſgrace, which, but for the generoſity or forbearance of the Marattas, might have left Bombay defenceleſs. We know not the expence of this meaſure, but we believe the Company will find it enormous.

The march of the army under Colonel Leſlie had all the appearances of an active and vigorous reſolution; and has produced as much ſucceſs as could reaſonably be expected: it has conquered an open country, which at ſome future day, and if ever the promiſed collections from it ſhould be made, is to return thirty lacks a year to the Company. Againſt this acquiſition, the permanent expence of an increaſe of eſtabliſhments to regulate and defend it muſt be placed, and the value of the remainder compared with the charge of the expedition. The Company will then know, at what price they have acquired a new territory on the Malabar coaſt. At the end of February laſt, the ſums remitted to this detachment alone, amounted to almoſt ſeventy-ſix lacks of current rupees, and we are convinced, that we are much within bounds in computing, that a crore of rupees will not clear it to the end of October.

The march of a detachment from the coaſt, and of another from Bombay, to ſtrengthen General Goddard, has yet produced no effect that we know of, but to raiſe their pay on a level with that of the Bengal troops, which of itſelf is no ſlight inconvenience.

The detachment under Major Camac, which was ordered about the beginning of laſt year to join Colonel Goddard, after coſting the Company CR^s. 4,36,793, returned without effect.

Many advantages were promiſed from the treaty with the Ranna of Ghode, particularly that of dividing the ſtrength and attention of the Marattas. If it has really produced that or any other effect, that deſerves the name of an advantage, or that can be placed in compariſon with the expence of this meaſure, we wiſh to ſee it ſtated. We are informed by the Commiſſary General, that the total expence of Captain Popham's detachment to the end of April laſt, amounted to CR^s. 5,55,953; at this rate the preſent expence muſt amount to CR^s. 7,41,271.

With theſe diſcouraging experiments in our view, we are called upon to embark in another enterprize, for the avowed purpoſe of ſupporting that of General Goddard. Yet the Governor's expectations of ſucceſs from this new effort, cannot be greater than thoſe which he profeſſed to entertain of the former. Even after the delay in Bundlecund,* he always conſidered Colonel Leſlie's detachment as capable of accompliſhing the ends of its formation, and profeſſed the ſtrongeſt conviction that under a proper conduct, the effects would ſtill anſwer his moſt ſanguine hopes.

* Vide Secret Conſultations, 12 Oct. 1778.

It is true, that the part which this Government has hitherto borne in the war, belongs to the Governor, and that we have no ſhare in the reſponſibility attending it; but it is equally true that in the future meaſures of this Government, we muſt take our part. We cannot transfer the reſponſibility, though we might relinquiſh the powers incident to our ſtations; in many caſes, we may find ourſelves compelled not to interrupt the operation of acts already reſolved on againſt our opinion, eſpecially when the Government or its repreſentatives, are once engaged in the execution of them. In ſuch circumſtances we have no choice; but a defence of this ſort will not apply to new meaſures or new plans, which cannot be reſolved on without our conſent; for theſe and their conſequences, we muſt of neceſſity be anſwerable, jointly with the Governor, therefore cannot diveſt ourſelves of the right of judging of both. If on the preſent occaſion, we are miſtaken in our judgment, it will not add to the load with which the Governor General may be charged; we rather think he derives a viſible advantage, from the part we are forced to take in this queſtion: there is no difficulty in diſplaying the poſſible benefits which might have reſulted from a meaſure untried, while the burthen of proving that ſuch benefits were unattainable, together with the ideal loſs of them, will be thrown upon the oppoſite party.

We have as little faith as the Governor can have, in the ſufficiency of official argument, to overcome decided opinions; what we have ſaid, is meant to ſtand for our vindication at home: we heartily wiſh it might have more weight than we fear it will have in this place; we wiſh to co-operate heartily and ſincerely with the Governor General in effecting a peace on reaſonable terms; means of negociation are in his power, which are not within ours; to accompliſh a peace ourſelves, againſt his inclinations, we know to be impoſſible, till our hopes very nearly amounted to conviction, that we were all agreed on this point, and that the ſeaſons of the rains, in which hoſtilities muſt ceaſe on both ſides would have been employed in effecting a pacification. On this principle we conſented to the propoſition for accepting the mediation of Moodajee Booſla. We wiſh to know if any and what ſteps have been taken in conſequence. As this meaſure has no connection with the propoſed expedition, we hope it will not be deſerted. Without making improper advances to the Marattas, other means might be taken to the ſame end; but we are perfectly ſenſible that none can ſucceed in which the Governor General will not take an active part. If after all, a formal peace is not to be obtained, we do not think it follows, that a defenſive war muſt neceſſarily be continued. A general outline of the plan we allude to, has been ſuggeſted to the Governor General: we do not think it adviſable to enter into it in this place, but we are ready to ſubmit our thoughts to him on the ſubject, whenever he thinks proper.

(Signed) { Philip Francis, Edward Wheler.

Mr. Francis—I beg leave to add a few words to the preceding minute, in reply to the perſonal appeal made to me, by the Governor General; I perſuade myſelf he would not propoſe an alternative to me, which he thought I could not accept of with honour, but as I underſtand it, there is no point of honour in queſtion; I think it belongs to the Governor General to propoſe and recommend ſuch meaſures as he thinks fit, to the approbation of the Board, and circumſtanced as we now are, it muſt be ſome very eſſential conſideration that can induce me to oppoſe him; I would neither attempt to take that lead out of his hands, nor yet engage implicitly to ſubmit to his opinions. Every view to my own eaſe and happineſs would incline me to wiſh, that the conſtitution of the Government permitted him to dictate, or to reſolve and act without me; but I am veſted with a public truſt, from the duties of which I cannot be exempted, while I hold the ſtation that creates it.

I believe the Governor General yielded to my opinion, in reſolving to recal and reduce Captain Popham's detachment; but this was a conceſſion to which he did not adhere: "That he ſhould have laboured to accommo-"date his ſentiments to mine, by a ſtudied attention to "my opinions, in every meaſure which he had ventured "to propoſe, in the courſe of the laſt fifteen months," is a fact with which I declare moſt ſolemnly I was utterly unacquainted.

(Signed) Philip Francis.

The Secretary having prepared a draft of inſtructions for Major Camac, drawn up from the minutes of the Board, and circulated by order of the Governor General to the other members, for their approbation, as he thought it irregular in him to take any part in them, they were returned ſigned.

Agreed. Edwd Wheler.

Mr. Francis—I have already agreed to ſuch of the inſtructions to Major Camac, propoſed by the Governor General, as were conformable to the treaty with the Rana of Gohud, and to the unanimous reſolution of the Board of the 29th May; the draft now in circulation appears to me to correſpond therewith, and I therefore agree to it.

(Signed) Philip Francis.

The inſtructions being agreed to by Meſſrs. Francis and Wheler, they were copied fair, ſigned, and diſpatched as follows:

Appendix. No. 286.

To Major Camac.

No. 7. Mr. Francis's picket.

Sir,

Our Secretary has already notified to you your appointment to the command of a detachment, ordered on ſervice with the Rana of Gohud; this detachment is to be formed of three battalions of Sepoys from the ſecond brigade, ſtationed at Cawnpore; the battalion of light infantry commanded by Captain James Browne, and a party of artillery, to conſiſt of half a company of Europeans, and half a battalion of Laſcars.

In addition to the guns attached to the above battalion, by the regulations of the army, we have ordered that your detachment ſhould be ſupplied with two twelve pounders, a howitzer, two cohorns, and a proper quantity of ammunition and ſtores.

We direct that you immediately proceed to Cawnpore, or to the detachment, wherever it may be, and forthwith conduct it into the dominions of the Rana of Gohud, there to relieve the corps under the command of Captain Popham in that quarter.

The Rana of Gohud having in virtue of a treaty lately concluded between him and this Government, required the aid of a military force on our part, for the defence of his country againſt the Marattas who had invaded it, Captain Popham was appointed to this ſervice, and to this you now ſucceed; we therefore direct that you comply with ſuch requiſitions as ſhall be made to you by the Rana, for this and for ſuch other conditions as he is entitled to demand by the treaty, and you ſhall deem practicable with the force under your command.

Whenever the Rana ſhall notify to you, that he has no farther ſervice for the detachment under your command, and ſhall diſmiſs it in the manner preſcribed by treaty, and no occaſion ſhall preſent itſelf for the employment of it, in promoting the general ſucceſs of the war in which we are engaged with the Maratta State, you are to ſignify to him in writing your intentions to depart from his country, demanding the full amount of the ſubſidy that may be due; which having received; you will immediately return with your detachment, into the territories of the Nabob of Oude, and there wait for further orders; but in caſe of a refuſal on his part to diſcharge the ſubſidy, agreeable to the terms of the treaty, we deſire that you will immediately ſignify the ſame to us, and not depart until you receive our anſwer.

If before your march into Gohud you ſhall receive an intimation from the Rana that he ſhall not require the aſſiſtance of your detachment, you will in like manner ſuſpend your march, and wait our inſtructions.

For your guidance in maintaining the relation of your command to the Rana of Gohud, we herewith deliver to you a copy of the treaty executed with him, and we require and enjoin you to conform to it with the moſt ſcrupulous and literal exactneſs.

The Commiſſary General having drawn out an eſtabliſhment for your detachment, which meets with our approbation, we tranſmit it to you; deſiring at the ſame time that you do not, on any account, ſuffer the ſmalleſt alteration or deviation to be made in it.

We are, &c.

Fort William,

Bengal Secret Conſultations, 20th July 1780.

At a Council;—preſent, the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Governor General, Preſident, Edward Wheler, Eſquire. (Mr. Francis indiſpoſed. Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote abſent.)

The Governor General—On Monday the 13th inſtant I had prepared a minute on the ſubject of the late debates relative to the detachment ordered on ſervice under

Appendix. No. 286.

Major Camac; but was induced to withhold the delivery of it, by the proſpect which was then held out to me of an accommodation of our differences; and did underſtand that an agreement had taken place, that all the minutes which had paſſed on this ſubject ſince the 19th of June ſhould be withdrawn: I am ſince informed that this is diſavowed by Mr. Francis. I am obliged to mention this circumſtance, otherwiſe unneceſſary for public record, to account for the late delivery of my minute, for which I deſire that a place may be left on this conſultation, as it might perhaps be deemed improper to introduce it in the temporary abſence of the perſon whom it immediately concerns.

The Governor General—Notwithſtanding the ill ſucceſs which my former motions have met with relative to Major Camac's detachment, I muſt again revert to the propoſition made by me to the Board on the 19th ultimo, for the extenſion of the powers to be given to Major Camac, in the manner expreſſed in my propoſed draft of his inſtructions, delivered in on that day: and I accordingly now move, that thoſe inſtructions be granted to him.

I have little to ſay in addition to the former arguments which I have urged in ſupport of the principal meaſure preſented in them, but that it appears to me more neceſſary at this time to create ſuch a diverſion by the declaration lately made by Hyder Ally Cawn, or at leaſt too ſtrongly implied to admit of a doubt of its intended conſtruction, in his letter recorded in the laſt conſultation. Every accumulation of difficulty requires an additional exertion. For the ſame reaſon I move, that the order for reducing Captain Popham's detachment be repealed; and that it be formed into three regular battalions, to be commanded by the three ſenior Captains now with that corps: but as I underſtand the Commander in Chief left Lucknow on the 6th inſtant, and is proceeding with all poſſible expedition to the Preſidency, I do not think it neceſſary to follow this motion with any propoſal for the diſpoſition of this corps until his arrival.

Mr. Wheler—No arguments are uſed by the Governor General in his late propoſition, in addition to thoſe ſtated in his former minutes upon this ſubject, to induce me to alter my opinion reſpecting the firſt inſtructions to Major Camac: I muſt therefore adhere to it. I confeſs the Governor General's ſecond propoſition is accompanied with a forcible argument. Times of war and public calamity are certainly not the times for diminiſhing our military force; more eſpecially as we have every reaſon to believe (both from the late declarations which Hyder Ally has made to this Government, and alſo from the particular meaſures which that Chief has lately purſued in relation to us) that an open rupture betwixt him and the Company is not very diſtant.

I therefore readily coincide with the Governor General in repealing the order for the reduction of Captain Popham's detachment, and that it be formed into three regular battalions, to be commanded by the three ſenior Captains now with that corps.

The above propoſitions being reſolved in the affirmative, the following inſtructions are iſſued to Major Camac:

To Major Jacob Camac.

Sir,

Having appointed you to the command of a detachment ordered to be formed of four battalions of Sepoys; three of which are to be furniſhed from the army ſtationed at Cawnpore, and the fourth the battalion of light infantry commanded by Captain James Browne, we direct you to proceed to Cawnpore, or to the ſtation of that detachment, wherever it may be, and to conduct it without loſs of time into the dominions of the Ranah of Gohud, there to relieve the corps now under the command of Captain Popham in that quarter.

The Ranah of Gohud having in virtue of a treaty lately concluded between him and this Government, required the aid of a military force, on the part of this Government, for the defence of his country againſt the Marattas, who had invaded it, Captain Popham was appointed to this ſervice; and to this you now ſucceed. We therefore direct that you comply with ſuch requiſition as ſhall be made to you by the Rana for this and for ſuch other conditions as he is entitled to demand by the treaty, and ſhall be practicable with the force under your command.

Whenever the Rana ſhall have no further ſervice for the detachment, and ſhall diſmiſs it in the manner preſcribed by the treaty, and no occaſion ſhall preſent itſelf for the employment of the detachment in promoting the general ſucceſs of the war in which we are engaged with the Maratta State, you are forthwith to return with it into the dominions of the Nabob of Oude, and there wait for further orders. And if before your march into Gohud you ſhall receive an intimation from him in writing, that he ſhall not require the aſſiſtance of your detachment, you will in like manner ſuſpend your march, and wait for further orders.

But as the firſt deſign of this Government in the alliance lately formed with the Rana of Gohud, was to diſtreſs the Maratta State by a diminution of their power, revenue and influence, and by uniting with other powers in enmity with them to divert and weaken their operations; and as the Maratta dominions which lie contiguous to Gohud appertain to Madajee Scindia and Tuccoojee Holcar, the two principal rulers of that State and the leaders of the army employed to oppoſe General Goddard, we authorize and inſtruct you, in caſe you ſhall judge it practicable and expedient, to carry the war immediately into that quarter, requiring from the Rana the proportion of cavalry ſtipulated by the treaty to be furniſhed by him for ſuch a ſervice; or in caſe of his inability, whether from the ſeaſon of the year, or from whatever other cauſe, to fulfil this condition in its complete extent, to require and accept from him ſuch other aid in furniſhing proviſions and in forming magazines of grain and other means of ſubſiſtence and communication, as you ſhall judge equivalent to it.

For your guidance in maintaining the relation of your command to the Rana of Gohud, we herewith deliver to you a copy of the treaty executed with him; and we require and enjoin you to conform to it with the moſt ſcrupulous and literal exactneſs.

If any caſe ſhall occur for which we have not provided by theſe inſtructions, and which ſhall not be contrary to them, we empower you to act therein according to your own judgment. In all others theſe inſtructions are poſitive, and muſt be implicitly obeyed.

The Commiſſary General having drawn out an eſtabliſhment for your detachment, which meets with our approbation, we tranſmit it to you, deſiring at the ſame time that you do not on any account ſuffer the ſmalleſt alteration or deviation to be made in it.

Fort William, 20th July 1780. We are, &c.

Reſolved, in the terms of the propoſition, viz. That the Sepoy drafts, compoſing the detachment under the command of Captain Popham, be formed immediately into three regular battalions, of the ſame ſtrength as thoſe attached to the brigades; and that the three ſenior Captains now ſerving in that detachment be appointed to the command of them.

Reſolved alſo, That the Commander in Chief be requeſted to iſſue the neceſſary orders for carrying into immediate execution the above reſolution.

The Governor General—Not having yet received any poſitive advices tending to aſcertain the deſtination of the Maratta army lately ſent from Naigpore, and now at Cuttack, and deeming it neceſſary to make ſome early proviſion for guarding againſt their incurſions into theſe provinces, from which they are only diſtant a few days march, I move, that the firſt battalion of Sepoys for duty at the Preſidency be ordered to proceed to Jellaſore, or to ſuch place as the commanding officer may deem moſt eligible for the purpoſe of ſecuring the boats on the Souban Rika, ſhould they attempt to croſs that river; and to watch their motions. I do not mean this as a force ſufficient to repel any attempts that may be made by this army, but a neceſſary and ſufficient precaution for the preſent.

The above propoſition being agreed to, it is,

Reſolved, That the battalion firſt for duty at the Preſidency be ordered to be held in readineſs to march at a moment's warning; and that the commanding officer of the firſt brigade be directed to iſſue the neceſſary inſtructions to the officer commanding it, to march to Jellaſore, or to ſuch ſtation as may be deemed moſt eligible for the purpoſe of watching the motions of the Marattas, and of ſecuring the boats on the Souban Rika, ſhould they attempt to croſs that river.

APPENDIX, No. 287.

Bengal Secret Conſultations, the 7th September 1780;—preſent, the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Eſquire, Governor General, Preſident; Edward Wheler, Eſquire, and Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote, K. B. (Mr. Francis indiſpoſed.)

THE Commander in Chief delivers in the following minute:

Sir Eyre Coote—In my minute of the 4th inſtant, I remarked that accounts received from Brigadier General Goddard mentioned he ſhould, on opening the enſuing campaign, find his army ſufficient in force, with the aſſiſtance he was led to expect from the Preſidency of Bombay, to undertake advantageouſly thoſe operations that ſeemed neceſſary to be attempted on that ſide of India, provided we made a diverſion from our upper ſtations, favourable to his movements, in order to call off the force of the Maratta Chiefs, who have hitherto oppoſed him.

One of my principal objects is, to act from this country, in ſuch a manner as will anſwer the above purpoſe, and that upon a plan which will be attended with the leaſt expence to the Company.

I recommend therefore, the keeping up for the preſent the corps of drafts that have acted with ſo much ſpirit under Major Popham, and who, from their ſervices during their late campaign, may be juſtly ſtyled approved troops; and upon conſideration of the ſubject, I propoſe to the Board the following query: Whether, inſtead of being ordered to join Brigadier General Goddard, to whom by our laſt intelligence ſuch a reinforcement is no longer neceſſary, provided we act with vigour from hence, Major Popham may not, with the troops now under his command, be more advantageouſly employed, in conjunction with Major Camac's detachment on this ſide of India?

By attacking the poſſeſſions of Moodajee Scindia, and Tookajee Holkar, two of the moſt powerful Chiefs, now oppoſed to Brigadier General Goddard, which have hitherto been left unmoleſted, and from whence they have obtained their principal money reſources, we ſhould oblige them to withdraw their forces from the Malabar ſide, to the protection of their own territories.

Major Camac's and Popham's detachments conjunctively will, I ſhould ſuppoſe, be equal to this ſervice, as well as to any further offenſive operations in ſuch diſtricts, as it may be thought proper to employ them: but when ſeparate, Major Camac's corps cannot be ſufficient to anſwer theſe purpoſes, as a ſtrong garriſon from it muſt be left in Gwalior, for the defence of that fortreſs; after which there will remain with him at moſt only three battalions.

In keeping up Major Popham's corps, I would not recommend the burthening the eſtabliſhment with an addition of European officers, but adviſe the letting them continue in the form of battalions of drafts, not as regular battalions on the eſtabliſhment; appointing ſome additional officers to thoſe already with them, to act only for the preſent, and who may be taken from ſome of the brigade ſtations, where their ſervices can be beſt diſpenſed with.

The three captains with Major Popham's corps, to remain, commanding the battalions of drafts they are at the head of. Three captains from the European regiments to be ordered in their ſtead, to act with their battalions under Brigadier General Goddard; and the vacancies of captains occaſioned hereby, not to be filled up in the European regiments. Thus the eſtabliſhment of officers will not be increaſed, (the European battalions in their preſent incomplete ſtate can ſpare officers for the ſervice) Brigadier General Goddard's army will find themſelves very materially affected by co-operation in their favour, and by a force that can from its ſtrength act with great advantage on this ſide of India; and the corps of drafts will thus be rendered, I think, of more real utility, than by carrying into execution the original deſign of that body's joining General Goddard's army.

(Signed) Eyre Coote.

Mr. Wheler—The propoſition now made by the Commander in Chief, bears ſo exact an affinity to that contained in the Governor General's minute of the 12th June, that I ſee no reaſon to depart from the opinion which I have already given, regarding the relief of Major Popham's detachment.

Agreed to the propoſitions made by the Commander in Chief; and,

Reſolved, That the orders of the 20th July laſt, directing the formation of the detachment, under the command of Captain Popham, into three regular battalions, be ſo far reſcinded, that the three battalions compoſing the detachment be conſidered as battalions of drafts, and to act for the preſent as three battalions not upon the eſtabliſhment.

Reſolved, That ſo many additional officers as may be wanted for this corps, be appointed from ſome of the brigade ſtations, to act with it for the preſent.

Ordered, That the detachment under the command of Major Popham do not proceed to Cawnpore, after the arrival of the detachment under the command of Major Camac in the territories of the Rana of Gohud, but make a part of the force under the command of Major Camac.

Reſolved, That the vacancies occaſioned in the command of the Sepoy battalions, ſerving with Brigadier General Goddard in the weſt of India, by the appointment of three of their commanding officers to do duty with Major Camac's detachment, be ſupplied for the preſent, by the appointment of three captains of the European regiments to command the vacant battalions during the abſence of Captains Clode, Maclary and Bruce, upon other ſervice.

Reſolved, That the Commander in Chief be requeſted to iſſue the neceſſary orders for carrying the above reſolutions into immediate execution.

APPENDIX, No. 288.

Bengal Secret Conſultations, the 3d July 1780.

Recorded, 20th July 1780.

Governor General.

WHY Mr. Wheler has thus repeatedly choſen to join his name to Mr. Francis's in the minutes lately delivered by them to the Board, I can neither conjecture, nor ſeek to know. I can eaſily conceive Mr. Francis's intention in obtaining this aſſociation. But as the rectitude of theſe acts in Mr. Francis is to be judged upon very very different principles from thoſe, in which he has a common concern with Mr. Wheler, I ſhall conſider them ſolely as his, and reply to them accordingly: indeed I have no doubt of their being all the entire compoſition of Mr. Francis. They are not the leſs his, by this apparent diviſion of the property; and his name affixed to them gives me the right of regarding them as entirely his.

I did hope that the intimation conveyed in my laſt minute would have awakened in Mr. Francis's breaſt, if it were ſuſceptible of ſuch ſenſations, a conſciouſneſs of the faithleſs part which he was acting towards me; I have been diſappointed, and muſt now aſſume a plainer ſtyle, and a louder tone. In a word, my objections do not lie to the ſpecial matter of his minutes, to which I ſhall ſeparately reply, but to the ſpirit of oppoſition which dictated them. I have lately offered various plans for the operations of the war; theſe have been ſucceſſively rejected. As I have ſucceſſively amended and endeavoured to accommodate them to Mr. Francis's objections, I had a right to his implicit acquieſcence. I have laſtly propoſed a ſervice, requiring immediate execution, and I have freed it from the only objection formally made to it.

In anſwer he ſays, that he adheres to the reaſons which had before induced him to withhold his conſent; and compoſedly invites me to lay before the Board a complete detail of the plan for conducting the war; a comparative ſtate of the whole of the object, with the whole of the means of attaining it; and the final extent of my demands on the Marattas, or what conceſſions I would make to them: and he promiſes to enter into the conſideration of theſe points, with the utmoſt candour. If his deſign in this inquiry was ſimply to gain information, I might refer him to the large and confidential diſcuſſions, in which I have laid all my views open to his, with all the grounds on which they were formed. If his purpoſe was to enable him to form a more clear or competent judgment of the plans which I have propoſed, its object would be loſt in the time required for the deliberation.

But in truth I do not truſt to his promiſe of candour; convinced that he is incapable of it, and that his ſole purpoſe and wiſh are to embarraſs and defeat every meaſure which I may undertake, or which may tend even to promote the public intereſts, if my credit is connected with them. Such has been the tendency, and ſuch the manifeſt ſpirit of all his actions from the beginning: almoſt every meaſure propoſed by me has for that reaſon had his oppoſition to it. When carried againſt his oppoſition, and too far engaged to be withdrawn, yet even then, and in every ſtage of it, his labours to overcome it have been unremitted: every diſappointment and misfortune have been aggravated by him, and every fabricated tale of armies devoted to famine and to maſſacre, have found their firſt and moſt ready way to his office, where it was known they would meet with the moſt welcome reception. To the ſame deſign may be attributed the annual computations of declining finances, and an exhauſted treaſury; computations which though made in the time of abundance, muſt verge to wrath at laſt, from the effect of a diſcordant Government, not a conſtitutional decay. To the ſame deſign ſhall I attribute the policy of accelerating the boded event, and creating an artificial want, by keeping up an uſeleſs hoard of treaſure, and withholding it from a temporary circulation.

I am aware of the anſwer which will be made to theſe imputations, and I will anticipate it. Mr. Francis may ſafely deny them, for they are incapable of poſitive evidence: he may complain of the injuſtice and indecency of aſſuming the interpretation of his thoughts, and aſſigning intentions to him, upon the reality of which he alone can pronounce with certainty: he may claim an equal right to recriminate upon me, and to paſs the ſame free judgment on the motives which have influenced my public actions. Againſt ſuch concluſions, I truſt that my character will be ſufficient to defend me, unleſs ſome known inſtance of it can be produced, as a warrant for them; and ſuch I am certain do not exiſt, either known or unknown.

My authority for the opinions which I have declared concerning Mr. Francis, depends upon facts which have paſſed within my own certain knowledge. I judge of his public conduct by my experience of his private, which I have found to be void of truth and honour. This is a ſevere charge, but temperately and deliberately made, from the firm perſuaſion that I owe this juſtice to the public and to myſelf, as the only redreſs to both, for artifices of which I have been a victim, and which threaten to involve their intereſts with diſgrace and ruin. The only redreſs for a fraud for which the law has made no proviſion, is the expoſure of it. I proceed to the proofs of my allegation.

In the latter end of the month of February laſt Mr. Francis concluded with me an engagement, of which one article alone is neceſſary to the preſent occaſion. It is as follows:

"Mr. Francis will not oppoſe any meaſures which "the Governor General ſhall recommend for the pro- "ſecution of the war in which we are ſuppoſed to be "engaged with the Marattas, or for the general ſupport "of the preſent political ſyſtem of this Government. "Neither will he himſelf either propoſe or vote with any "other member who ſhall propoſe any meaſure which "ſhall be contrary to the Governor General's opinion "on theſe points."

By the ſanction of this engagement, and the liberal profeſſions which accompanied it, I was ſeduced to part with the friend to whoſe generous and honourable ſupport ſtedfaſtly yielded in a courſe of ſix years, I am indebted for the exiſtence of the little power which I have ever poſſeſſed in that long and diſgraceful period, to throw myſelf on the mercy of Mr. Francis, and on the deſperate hazard of his integrity. It was impoſſible to afford a ſtronger demonſtration of the good faith with which I entered into this accommodation, nor of my confidence in his, than thus conſenting to deprive myſelf of the means of breaking the engagement on my part, and of preventing the breach of it on his; and ſurely this difference in our relative ſituations ought to have impreſſed him with a ſenſe of what he owed to the delicacy attending it, and have made him dread even an approach towards the preciſe line of his obligations, by the ſlighteſt advantage taken of my inability to repel it; and how much more ought it to have reſtrained him from the direct tranſgreſſion of it?

I muſt now revert to the article of Mr. Francis's engagement which I have recited above, and to the minutes lately delivered at the Board under the ſignatures of Mr. Francis and Wheler. On theſe I reſt the proofs which I have promiſed of the charge herein preferred againſt Mr. Francis.

If it ſhall appear on a fair compariſon of theſe evidences, that Mr. Francis hath faithfully adhered to his engagements, I have wrongfully accuſed him: if on the contrary, it ſhall appear, that in violation of this engagement, he has oppoſed any meaſures which I have recommended for the proſecution of the war in which we are engaged with the Marattas, or for the general ſupport of the preſent political ſyſtem of this Government; or that he has either himſelf propoſed, or joined with another member in propoſing a meaſure, contrary to my opinion on theſe points, my charge is eſtabliſhed; I wiſh to avoid a repetition of the terms of it.

W. H.

Bengal Secret Conſultations, 11th September 1780;—preſent, the Governor General, Mr. Francis, Mr. Wheler, Sir Eyre Coote.

Mr. Francis—The main queſtion between Mr. Haſtings and me can be referred to no other teſt but the public public opinion of our reſpective characters: I appeal cheerfully to that teſt, and am ready to abide by the event of it. On the point in iſſue, I can only declare, as I do now in the moſt ſolemn manner, that I never was party to the engagement ſtated by Mr. Haſtings, or had a thought of being bound by it. In one of our converſations in February laſt, he deſired me to read a paper of memorandums, among which I preſume this article was inſerted: I returned it to him the moment I had read it, with a declaration that I did not agree to, or hold myſelf bound by the contents of it, or to that effect; from that time I have never ſeen the paper, I never had a copy of it, nor have I a poſitive recollection of any thing it contained. The agreement I meant to enter into with reſpect to the Maratta war was, to proſecute the operations actually exiſting on the Malabar coaſt, which, ſince the campaign was begun, and General Goddard had already taken the field, I thought ſhould be puſhed as vigorouſly as poſſible. I have no direct evidence to produce in ſupport of this declaration; but I imagine it will be ſtrengthened in ſome degree by the following conſiderations: it is not ſaid that the plan of another expedition from the upper country into Malva, or any other part of the Maratta dominions on that ſide of India, had ever been ſuggeſted to me. The reſolutions of the 29th May laſt, formed on the Governor General's own propoſitions, conſtitute as I think a ſtrong preſumption, that up to that period the Governor General had not had that meaſure in contemplation, or that he muſt then have abandoned all thoughts of it. On that day it was unanimouſly reſolved, that Captain Popham's detachment ſhould be recalled and reduced; and that he ſhould be relieved by four battalions under Major Camac. In this arrangement nothing appears to have been in the view of the Board but to diminiſh the public expence without departing from the terms of the treaty with the Rana of Ghode. Our letters of the 20th April to the Preſidency of Bombay, to Brigadier General Goddard, and to the Commander in Chief, expreſs the unanimous opinion of the Board, that our reſources were no longer equal to the payment of General Goddard's army without draining Bengal entirely of its ſpecie; and that no acquiſition on the other ſide of India could compenſate for the diſtreſſes which a continuance of the war at the preſent expence would bring upon the Company. This indeed has been invariably my opinion; but the Governor concurred in it, and drew up the letters himſelf. The evidence I appeal to, is public and authentic. It is not for me to determine how far it ought to be deemed concluſive. The obſervations which I muſt now proceed to offer on ſome paſſages in the Governor General's minute, ſhall be as ſhort and moderate as I can make them. I mean to lead the reflections of others, from fair preſumptions to probable concluſions, which is all that the caſe will admit of; and by no means to engage myſelf or the Governor in any further controverſy.

1. I am not acquainted with the Governor General's plan for carrying on the war, from what funds it is to be ſupported, or on what terms he would make peace. It ſeems to me, that the demand from two members of the Board was regular and in its place. A very few words would have been ſufficient to tell us what were to be the final objects of the war. I would not venture to ſtate the looſe diſcourſes of a private converſation, if I recollected them, on a ſubject of ſuch very great importance; nor can I agree, that the object of the queſtion would be loſt in the time required for deliberation.

2. The Governor General's minute of the 28th of laſt month, and the letter from the Board of Trade of the 22d, are ſufficient to ſhew that my annual computations of declining finances and an exhauſted treaſury were well founded. Every department of the public ſervice is; and has been for ſeveral months, in arrear. As to the depoſit in the new fort, it was placed there at my motion; but long after Colonel Monſon's death, and with the Governor's conſent and approbation. In the ſecret conſultation of the 21ſt of May 1778, he ſpeaks of it as a fund which we have appropriated for our own extraordinary occaſions, and which we ſhall not break in upon for any other ſervice. I cannot conceive that I am hoſtile to Mr. Haſtings in adhering to the opinion which I have conſtantly and uniformly delivered on this ſubject. Appendix No. 288

3. The evidence of the charge againſt me is drawn from a paper written by the Governor himſelf, of which I never had a copy; though from the manner in which the quotation is introduced it might naturally be taken for an article in ſome formal treaty between us. This is ſaid to be the proof of his allegation; that is, the charge and the proof ſtand on the ſame ground. In another place, he admits that his imputations are incapable of poſitive evidence. I ſubmit to judgment, whether it even be preſumptive, except of his own thoughts or intentions, which I do not mean to queſtion. How would he receive, or how would he anſwer an accuſation againſt himſelf no better ſupported than this?

I ſubmit to judgment, whether the engagement, as ſtated by Mr. Haſtings, does not prove too much againſt me. Under the terms of it, I muſt have conſented to the march of every battalion on the Bengal eſtabliſhment to the Malabar coaſt, if Mr. Haſtings had thought fit to propoſe it, or to any other meaſure whatſoever, without exception or limitation, which he might have recommended for the ſupport and continuance of the war, from the date of the agreement. I at once renounce all my former declarations and opinions, and all choice, will, and judgment for the future. Some men perhaps may think me capable of ſuch an act; I hope and believe they are not many: but no man who knows any thing of the world, will think it poſſible that I could ſacrifice myſelf in ſo groſs a manner without ſome ſecret adequate compenſation, if any compenſation could be equal to it. On this head I have no other evidence to appeal to, and I deſire no better than Mr. Haſtings himſelf. If any thing was done or propoſed by me for my advantage, directly or indirectly, or if any thing was done or propoſed for the advantage of any other perſon whatſoever beyond what was publicly known and avowed (I mean the reinſtatement of Mahomet Reza Cawn, Mr. Fowke, and Mr. Briſtow, in conformity to the Company's orders) I call upon him to declare it. That of Mr. Briſtow was the only point of the three which I yielded to ſuſpend until the month of October, or until the firſt advices of the ſeaſon from the Court of Directors. In the actual ſituation of affairs here, and with the alarming and calamitous accounts we had then lately received from England, I thought ſome agreement between Mr. Haſtings, Mr. Wheler, and myſelf, was eſſentially neceſſary to the public ſafety: I therefore met Mr. Haſtings with a ſincere diſpoſition to come to an agreement, and to forward it by every poſſible facility on my part. During the whole courſe of the tranſaction nothing of any moment was ſaid or done without Mr. Wheler's knowledge and participation.

With reſpect to Mr. Barwell's departure, and the inferences drawn from it, it is a ſubject of which no man at home can judge ſo well as they who are on the ſpot, and ſee what paſſes. The little I ſhall ſay of it is offered as matter of opinion, not evidence. I believe it, for inſtance, to be the opinion of many well-informed perſons in this ſettlement, as it is now firmly my own, that Mr. Barwell was determined to go home laſt ſeaſon at all events, and that the Swallow was kept for ſeveral months on purpoſe for him. If ſo, Mr. Haſtings gained ſomething, and could loſe nothing, by his agreement with me. But as Mr. Barwell's going home was never demanded by me, nor ever entered into the agreement, I have no concern in Mr. Haſtings's motives for conſenting to it.

If I deſerved the character attributed to me, I ſhould not acknowledge as I do the force of an argument deduced by Mr. Haſtings from the defenceleſs condition in which he was ſuppoſed to be left by Mr. Barwell's departure. It is ſuch an argument as can only be felt by a man a man of honour. I admit the principle laid down by Mr. Haſtings, as far as it can be urged with any colour of reaſon or juſtice. Whether I have departed from it or not, is a queſtion of fact. Let it only be obſerved, that ſuch a principle is as liable to be abuſed on one ſide, as to be violated on the other. Puſh the inferences from it as far as they will go, and who does not ſee that a tyranny may be created by it over the mind of a man of nice ſenſibility, and fearful of reproach? With ſuch a weapon, ſo exerciſed, Mr. Haſtings would poſſeſs a power which he aſſuredly never had while Mr. Barwell was in the country.

The whole of this unfortunate queſtion between Mr. Haſtings and me, muſt ſome time or other appear before the public. I do not wiſh to prejudice the mind of any man againſt him. My conduct perhaps may be condemned on other ground; but I do not ſee how it can be fairly imputed to baſe or intereſted views. The cauſe which I have hitherto endeavoured to maintain, is not mine; I have no greater perſonal concern in it than any other member of the community. After all, what is it to me more than to any other man, whether there be a Maratta war or not, or in what manner it is conducted?

P. Francis.

Conſultation, September 11th, 1780. Secret Department.

Mr. Wheler—It is not without ſome pain, that, in obedience to the dictates of my judgment I beg leave to refer to the Governor General's minute of the 3d July, in order to offer a few remarks upon the introductory point which alone has relation to me. If the Governor General does not in that part leave it to be imagined that I have profeſſed ſentiments which were not my own, he at leaſt takes it for granted that there is ſomething extraordinary in the junction of my name with Mr. Francis's in the opinions we have delivered reſpecting the Maratta war. To this inference I deem it my duty to object. It is not in my apprehenſion perfectly in accord with that freedom which eſſentially belongs to every gentleman who is entruſted with a ſeat at this Board, namely that of delivering ſuch opinions as he judges proper, and in the manner moſt agreeable to himſelf. The minutes to which I have ſubſcribed were the reſult of my own reflections, and the only opinions I have entertained on the ſubject, of the Maratta war. So long as I deliver opinions thus genuine, it is a queſtion of no moment in what form they are preſented. If my actions or private diſcourſes have been contrary to my public opinions, then and then only is there any ground given for queſtioning the ſincerity, or diminiſhing the credit of them. I have thought alike with Mr. Francis on a particular ſubject, and therefore we have ſubſcribed to the ſame opinions, and I hope that ſo often as I have the pleaſure of agreeing in ſentiment with the Governor General, he will give me credit for following the dictates of my judgment only, believing that I ſhall join in no opinion contrary to my own ſentiments, or inconſiſtent with my own honour. I beg leave to remind the Governor General, that this is no new language with me, having ſpoken clearly to the ſame purport before.

Whatever difference of ſentiment may ariſe between the ſeveral members of this Government, in diſcharge of the great truſt repoſed in them (and differences will ſometimes unavoidably happen) it ſhall always be my ſtudy and endeavour to preſerve candour and moderation in our councils. No other temper I am certain can extricate us from our preſent difficulties, or bring us heartily to unite in one object the good of the public.

E. Wheler.

Bengal Secret Conſultations, 13th November 1780.

Preſent; the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Governor General, Preſident; Philip Francis, Edward Wheler, Eſquires.—(Lieutenant General, Sir Eyre Coote abſent.)

The following minute from the Governor General having been received on the 5th inſtant, it was circulated for the peruſal of the members of the Board:

5th November 1780.

Governor General—I have ſuffered Mr. Francis's minute of the 11th September, to lie thus long unanſwered, becauſe other cares of a ſtronger obligation have required and have engroſſed the whole of my attention; and I now revert to it with reluctance, as to a neceſſary, yet unavailing duty. To paſs in utter ſilence the aſſertions of Mr. Francis, would be implicitly to admit their credit; nor can I enter on their refutation without appearing to claim the public notice to an argument of a private concern, for ſuch it may be deemed in the preſent ſtate of it, though originating from a very different ſource. I ſhall therefore begin by ſtating the original queſtion on its proper ground, and ſhall proceed as briefly as poſſible to free it from the falſe colourings which may have been thrown upon it.

Let it be remembered that I am a ſervant of the Company and of the public, and entruſted with the intereſt of both. In that character I have charged Mr. Francis with having uſed very unjuſtifiable means to deprive me of the power which I poſſeſſed of fulfilling that truſt. My charge is leſs a complaint againſt him, than a vindication of myſelf. This is a general ſtate of the queſtion. The particular inſtance relating to it is, that Mr. Francis has broken an engagement on his part, to allow me the entire and unconditional exerciſe of that truſt, and to ſupport me in it. This I affirm, and he denies.

What that engagement was, I have expreſſed in terms in my minute of the 3d July. Mr. Francis in anſwer declares, and "in the moſt ſolemn manner, that he never "was party to the engagement ſtated by me, or had a "thought of being bound by it."

What can I ſay to ſuch a declaration, but to declare on my part, and in as ſolemn a manner, that Mr. Francis was a party to the engagement which I have ſtated? This I now do moſt ſolemnly declare; and may God be judge between us!

The manner in which it was concluded I will now relate. About the month of January laſt, Sir John Day propoſed to me an accommodation with Mr. Francis, and offered his mediation to effect it, judging himſelf to be the beſt qualified for ſuch an office by the relation in which he ſtood of a common and equal friend to both. I cheerfully accepted the offer; but apprized him that there was one preliminary condition which I ſhould exert as indiſpenſable, namely, that Mr. Francis ſhould agree to depart from his oppoſition to the political meaſures propoſed by me, and allow me, without exception or qualification, to preſcribe the mode of conducting the Maratta war. This point was a long time conteſted by Mr. Francis, but was at length adjuſted finally in this manner: that Mr. Francis ſhould not oppoſe me, nor yet charge himſelf with the reſponſibility of any propoſal made by me, which had any relation to the war; but ſupport it by his vote, as the reſult of a general meaſure which he had originally diſapproved, and which he now left, with the reſponſibility properly annexed to it, to its original contriver.

This point being thus ſettled, I drew it up in writing, on a ſmall piece of paper, in the words which I have already quoted, with other propoſitions, of which ſome had, and others had not received our final and mutual agreement.

This paper, with ſome apology, I ſhewed to Mr. Francis, deſiring him to read it attentively, and to inform me, whether he agreed to the conditions as I had expreſſed them, or to point out his exceptions. To the firſt article, which is that of the preſent queſtion, he replied haſtily, and with every appearance of ſatisfaction, that he entirely agreed to it, adding among other expreſſions, as I well remember, that his meaning plainly was not to avail himſelf of Mr. Barwell's departure from the Council, to oppoſe me in any political point which he could not have carried had Mr. Barwell continued.

The other articles received ſome variations, and were all finally regulated at the ſame meeting. Of theſe, as they do not relate to the queſtion before me, I ſhall take no farther notice. For the truth of this narrative, I appeal to Sir John Day, to whom I daily communicated what paſſed on this buſineſs, and to Mr. Barwell, to whom I in like manner related the daily progreſs of it. They will both atteſt that my relation of it at the time was exactly ſuch as I now repeat it. It is impoſſible to ſuggeſt a motive which I could have had to deceive them at ſuch a time, and on ſuch a ſubject, and as impoſſible that I myſelf ſhould be deceived, when I took ſuch ſure means to aſcertain it. Yet Mr. Francis affirms, "that he "returned the paper to me the moment he had read it, "with a declaration that he did not agree to it, or hold "himſelf bound by the contents of it."

But if I underſtand Mr. Francis's minute in its general tenor, it is intended to convey a total diſavowal of his having entered into any engagement whatever with me. He ſpeaks of "the agreement "which he meant to enter into with reſpect to the Maratta "war." He ſays that "he thought ſome agreement be-"tween Mr. Haſtings, Mr. Wheler, and himſelf, was "eſſentially neceſſary to the public ſafety, he therefore "met Mr. Haſtings, with ſincere diſpoſition to come to "an agreement, and to forward it with every facility on "his part." Yet in no part of the minute, neither in the context of theſe paſſages, where it might be expected, nor in any other place, can I find an expreſſion that indicates an acknowledgment that any agreement did actually take place, although ſuch was his meaning, although he thought it neceſſary to the public ſafety, and met me with ſo ſincere a diſpoſition to forward it by every facility on his part. If Mr. Francis does not deny the agreement, why are theſe qualifying expreſſions uſed to evade it? if he means to deny it, what poſſible reaſon can be aſſigned for its not having been concluded, or for ſuch a repugnance on my part to ſecond a diſpoſition ſo favourable on his, when the conſequence of my ſuffering Mr. Barwell to depart without ſome adjuſtment, would be a total annihilation of my influence and participation in all the acts of this Government?

But that there did exiſt ſome engagement between us, I appeal to Mr. Wheler, "without whoſe knowledge and "participation," Mr. Francis affirms, that "nothing of "any moment was ſaid or done during the whole courſe "of the tranſaction;" I appeal to every individual of the ſettlement for the notoriety of it, which is beyond the conviction of all evidence.

Mr. Francis has attempted to prove, that the agreement which he meant to enter into with reſpect to the Maratta war, was to proſecute the operations actually exiſting on the Malabar coaſt, and no more, by arguments drawn from my own propoſitions. Theſe might prove my ſenſe of an agreement actually concluded, but are no evidence of his intention on a point which was never brought to an iſſue. But in effect they prove nothing. My propoſition of the 29th of May, was the ſubſtitute of one much more extenſive, which I had formed for the relief of Captain Popham's detachment, by four regular battalions under Major Camac, and for the employment of Captain Popham's corps on another ſervice. At Mr. Francis's inſtance I omitted the latter clauſe, and yielded, very reluctantly I own, to recal and reduce Captain Popham's corps. This was by every opinion, judged unfit by its conſtruction and equipment for the ſervice, and I was glad to obtain, almoſt at any rate, the quiet concurrence of the Board to its exchange for a better. It is poſſible that at that time I might not have had in view the immediate proſecution of the expedition againſt Malva, nor is this material, either to the engagement which I affirm Mr. Francis did conclude with me, or to the agreement which he ſays he meant to enter into, ſince the proſecution of the war againſt the Marattas was the general object of both, and the means of courſe included in it. But that I certainly had this plan in contemplation, and that I had conſidered it as a decided meaſure, long before the period of my ſuppoſed coalition with Mr. Francis, will appear from the treaty concluded with the Ranah of Ghode, of which it forms an expreſs and principal ſtipulation. To remove all poſſibility of doubt on this head, I will quote the article itſelf, which relates to it. Appendix. No. 288.

Article 5th. "In caſe it ſhall be adjudged adviſable "to employ the combined forces of the Company and "the Maha Rajah in any hoſtile operations againſt the "Marattas, beyond the borders of the Maha Rajah's do-"minions, on requiſition made to him in writing from "this Government, he ſhall furniſh ten thouſand horſe "for ſuch ſervice, and each party ſhall bear his own ſe-"parate expence; and if upon the return of the Eng-"liſh forces towards their own borders, the Maha Rajah "ſhall have occaſion for their ſervices, and ſhall make a "requiſition to retain them, from the inſtant of ſuch re-"quiſition he ſhall pay their charge in the ſame manner "as ſtipulated in the ſecond article. But it ſhall not be "required of the Maha Rajah, nor be in the power of "this Government, to detach or employ his troops be-"yond the furtheſt borders of Oogein and Indoor without "his ſpecial conſent."

Hence it appears, that the plan for an expedition into Malva, of which Oogein is the capital, did conſtitute a part of the general meaſures adopted and in force for the proſecution of the Maratta war, and muſt have been neceſſarily comprehended, equally in the agreement which Mr. Francis meant to enter into with me, and in that which I underſtood him to have entered into. When I propoſed the execution of it, other circumſtances had recently occurred. General Goddard had ſolicited us to make ſuch a diverſion in his favour, and the Commander in Chief had paſſionately recommended it as the only means of bringing the war to a ſpeedy termination.

That I regretted the expence of the war, that I ſaw no object in the continuance of it that could compenſate for the diſtreſſes of it, and that of courſe I anxiouſly wiſhed to accelerate the concluſion of it, is certain; and this was an additional excitement to me to uſe every exertion for that end, knowing that many lacks effectually diſburſed with ſuch a purpoſe was a ſaving, compared to an indefinite ſeries of defenſive operations, ſpun out by feeble and ſcanty ſupplies.

Having already far exceeded the limits which I had preſcribed to my reply, I ſhall paſs with ſpeed through the remaining and leſs material parts of Mr. Francis's minute.

The engagement, as I have ſtated it, was conformable to my opinion of the obligation of Mr. Francis's public office, independent of any private compact. In his ſituation I ſhould have gone yet further. Having acquitted myſelf of my duty in oppoſing a great public meaſure which I had diſapproved until it had been too far advanced for recal, and would admit of no reſource but in a ſpeedy proſecution of it to its ſpeedy termination, I ſhould have deemed it criminal to continue the oppoſition; I ſhould have deemed it inſufficient even to withhold it by a negative acquieſcence, but ſhould have given as active a ſupport to the meaſure in ſuch a ſtate of it, as if it had my original approbation, leaving the formation of the depending operations, and the reſponſibility of the whole, to the original author. Such was my declaration at the time; perhaps Mr. Francis will remember it; and on ſuch principles my own conduct has been regulated in more than one inſtance of my public life.

Mr. Barwell's departure depended on the iſſue of the negociation between Mr. Francis and me. It was undetermined to the laſt moment of the Swallow's final diſpatch.

This Mr. Francis certainly knew, for I myſelf mentioned it to him, and by the advice of Mr. Barwell. It is a fact which does Mr. Barwell credit, and I have therefore no ſcruple in revealing it.

5th Nov. 1780. (Signed) W. Haſtings.

At Mr. Francis's deſire the following minute, dated the 27th of November, in reply to the preceding from the Governor General, is entered in this place, with the papers annexed to it.

Mr. Francis's minute, dated 27th November.

Mr. Francis—The preceding paper leaves the main queſtion where it ſtood, nor is it to be decided by any human tribunal.

In my former minute I did not appeal, as I might have done, to the teſtimony of ſeveral gentlemen of the firſt rank and credit in this place, for the ſenſe which I uniformly expreſſed to them, of my engagement with Mr. Haſtings reſpecting the Maratta war; partly becauſe ſuch evidence, however it might eſtabliſh my declarations, would not be concluſive to the truth of them; but much more, becauſe I was unwilling to introduce the names of gentlemen whom I reſpect, into the diſcuſſion of ſuch a tranſaction, or to make them parties in any ſhape to a queſtion of this nature. The ſame motives prevail with me ſtill.

Admitting that the means taken by Mr. Haſtings, to aſcertain his ſenſe of what paſſed between us, were proper on his part, and neceſſary to prevent his being deceived, it was equally neceſſary that I alſo ſhould have the ſame ſecurity, and that I ſhould have been furniſhed with a copy of the paper, by which I was ſuppoſed to be bound, otherwiſe one of the contracting parties remains excluſively poſſeſſed of the only exiſting evidence of the terms of the contract. In me it would have been irregular to demand a copy of a paper, by which I did not deem myſelf bound.

No argument or evidence is requiſite to prove what never was diſputed. I neceſſarily admit the exiſtence of an engagement, when I declare the ſenſe in which I made it; by uſing terms that referred particularly to my own meaning or intentions, my purpoſe was to avoid the uſeleſs offenſive language of contradiction, in a public minute, which had no object but to explain and defend my own conduct. This being ſaid, the obſervations founded on the equivocal import of a word, or on a general miſconſtruction of my meaning, require no reply.

From the fifth article of the treaty with the Ranna of Gohud, it can only be inferred that, when the treaty was formed in the beginning of November 1779, the poſſibility of an expedition beyond the borders of his dominions was ſuppoſed, in which the Ranna was to join and aſſiſt, if we required it. This might have been one of the diſtant objects in contemplation, when the treaty was conſtructed. But it ſtill remains a queſtion whether it was, or was not relinquiſhed by Mr. Haſtings, in the interval between that period, and the month of February following.

Reaſoning ſtrictly from the treaty, I was not obliged to conſent to the march of Major Camac's detachment in the form in which it was propoſed. The eventual execution of the project of an expedition beyond the borders of the Ranna's dominions, according to the terms of the treaty, was united with the condition of his furniſhing a body of 10,000 horſe, for ſuch ſervice; but by the inſtructions propoſed to be given to Major Camac, it will appear that this aſſiſtance was not expected from him.

In the third article of the inſtructions, it is ſuppoſed that the Ranna may diſmiſs the detachment, or that before its march into Gohud, the major might receive an intimation in writing, that he did not require its aſſiſtance. In the former caſe Major Camac is to return into Oude; in the latter, he was to ſuſpend his march, and wait for further orders.

By the 4th article, Major Camac is directed "to require from the Ranna his proportion of cavalry ſtipulated by the treaty; or in caſe of his inability, whether "from the ſeaſon of the year, or from whatever other "cauſe to fulfil the condition in its complete extent, to "require and accept from him ſuch other aid in furniſhing proviſions and in forming magazines of grain, and "other means of ſubſiſtence and communication, as "Major Camac ſhall judge equivalent to it."

Admitting therefore that according to the treaty, an expedition into Malva had conſtituted a part of the general meaſures adopted and in force for the proſecution of the Maratta war; my aſſent to it could not be ſeparated from the condition expreſſed in the treaty itſelf, viz. that the Ranna ſhould furniſh 10,000 horſe for that ſervice; but by the plan of Major Camac's inſtructions, this condition is relinquiſhed, and ſome other demands propoſed in the place of it, from which I imagine no great advantage was expected.

I have not ſeen any letter from General Goddard, in which he ſolicits the Board to make a diverſion in his favour. The only one in which he takes notice of the advantages to be obtained by a diverſion to the northward, was dated the 20th June, and received the 24th Auguſt laſt, conſequently could make no part of an argument in ſupport of a meaſure, propoſed and debated here in the beginning of June; nor was it ever mentioned that I know of, before this time, as it naturally ſhould have been when the meaſure was under deliberation. An extract of that part of his letter is annexed. No. 1.

In an agreement of this kind, the ſtricteſt preciſion of dates ſhould be obſerved, and the facts ſtated in the order in which they happened. On this principle I join iſſue with the Governor General, and affirm, in his own terms, that when he propoſed the execution of the meaſure (that is on the 12th of June laſt) General Goddard had not ſolicited us to make ſuch a diverſion in his favour. The fact, if it exiſts, is capable of immediate and direct proof.

But let it be admitted, that he had done ſo; that his opinion or requeſt had been before us on the 12th of June, and that it ought to have had a conſiderable weight in the choice of meaſures neceſſary to ſupport him, ſtill it could only have weight at the time when we received it. It is undoubtedly juſt, and not natural, that General Goddard's advice and recommendation on ſuch a point, ſhould have influenced Mr. Haſtings's judgment. On this principle I have a right to conclude, that in January and February laſt, when I converſed and engaged with Mr. Haſtings on this ſubject, he had no idea of another expedition from the upper country to ſupport General Goddard, becauſe he could not then have entertained ſuch an idea, without contradicting the expreſs opinion of General Goddard, as it ſtood before us. I appeal to General Goddard's letter to the Preſident and Council of Bombay, dated 3d of November 1779, and recorded in our conſultation of the 24th of February, and to his letter to us of the 10th of December 1779, received here the 20th of January laſt, from which the extracts annexed to this minute are literally taken No. 2.

With this knowledge of General Goddard's ſentiments it now remains to be accounted for on any probable ground, why Mr. Haſtings at the latter end of February ſhould have entertained a thought of ſupporting General Goddard's operations by another expedition from hence, when he had it from General Goddard himſelf, that the troops under his command muſt be ſuperior to any ſervice that could poſſibly be required of them, and equal to the moſt complete and abſolute ſucceſs. No. 3.

Whatever plan of operations the Commander in Chief might have recommended from Lucknow, it certainly did not meet with the Governor General's concurrence; whether Sir Eyre Coote approved of that which was adopted, is a point on which I am not ſufficiently informed, to ſpeak with certainty, but I am entitled to conclude generally, from the ſtrong and pointed term of his proteſt againſt the treaty with the Rana of Gohud, that no meaſures built on that foundation were likely to meet with his approbation. The following paſſage is in point, as it expreſſes his opinion of an expedition into Mahé

Mahé, in conjunction with the Rana, on the principles of the treaty. "Again, by the 5th article, when the "combined troops may have marched to Oogein, or "Indoor, to ſeek the enemy and to deliver battle, the "Rana may, agreeably to treaty, leave us to ſtand the "brunt alone—a point of partial convenience to him, "by which, without ſuppoſing him to betray us (which "he may alſo do agreeably to treaty) our whole army "may be loſt."

Other obſervations on the Governor General's minute occur to me, but as the remainder of it is not eſſential to the main queſtion, they may better be omitted.

(Signed) P. Francis.

Extract of a Letter from Brigadier General Goddard to the Governor General and Council, dated 20th June 1780. Received 24th Auguſt.

If Scindia continues at Ugein till the cloſe of the rains, which I now conceive will be the caſe, a powerful diverſion might be made in that quarter, to prevent his paſſing to the ſouthward of the Nerbeddah to ſuccour Nana Furneſſe; and I would venture to pronounce, as far as human probability and reaſon may preſume, that without Scindia's aid the Miniſter would be immediately compelled to terms, and enter into any engagements that might be required of him. This is no chimerical idea; for beſides Scindia and Holcar, there remain only two chiefs of conſequence in the State, Nana, and Hurry Punt Fakier; and I do not believe that any foreign Power will draw upon himſelf the future enmity of the Engliſh, by openly declaring his party, and marching to their aſſiſtance.

In the event of ſuch powerful diverſion being made to the northward, Scindia will find too much employment at home to have leiſure to raiſe any diſturbance in Guzerat; and indeed the Sepoy force which may very well be ſpared in that province, acting with the troops of Futty Sing, which it may not perhaps be convenient to carry with me to the ſouthward, will prove ſufficient for its ſecurity and defence againſt a very large body of the enemy ſhould any conſiderable army (which in the plan above-mentioned appears ſcarcely practicable) be ordered to enter it.

Extract of a Letter from Brigadier General Goddard to the Preſident and Council of Bombay, dated the 3d November 1779.

The trifling and unequal force the French at preſent have in India, and the certain accounts we have from Europe to make us believe they cannot now be reinforced, ſecure us from any apprehenſions of being interrupted in our operations by them this ſeaſon; and ſeems indeed to furniſh one very principal reaſon why we ought to loſe no time in ſtrengthening, and firmly eſtabliſhing ourſelves during the courſe of it. The troops which will ſoon be collected at Surat, muſt be ſuperior to any ſervice that can poſſibly be required of them, and equal to the moſt complete and abſolute ſucceſs. But the Bengal army, together with the detachment under Colonel Braithwaite at Mahé, and ſuch proportion of troops from this ſettlement as you may judge it expedient and conſiſtent with the mere ſafety of the iſland to detach, will be found able to execute any plan of operations that may be immediately reſolved upon, and againſt the whole force of the Maratta empire.

Extract of a Letter from Brigadier General Goddard to the Governor General and Council, dated 10th December 1779. Received 20th January 1780.

I have been thus particular in deſcribing this detachment, that you may know the exact force I ſhall have under my command, and how fully ſufficient to anſwer any ſervice that may be required of them.

With reſpect to the troops from Mahé, for the remaining quota to be furniſhed by the Madras Preſidency I have yet received no intelligence; I do not expect even to be joined by any part of them previous to the commencement of operations; at leaſt their junction is ſo uncertain, that no account can at preſent be made of the acceſſion of their force; nor indeed will this circumſtance be of any material conſequence for ſome time, as the ſtrength of the army now under me is ſufficient to accompliſh the ſcheme of conqueſt at preſent propoſed, and the Madras reinforcements, if ſent, muſt arive ſoon enough to aſſiſt in proſecuting any more important views that may be hereafter found convenient and practicable. Appendix. No. 288.

The following Minute from the Governor General was delivered in Reply to the above from Mr. Francis.

Governor General—I muſt be careful not to ſuffer myſelf to be drawn from the point which is directly in queſtion, the engagement which I affirm to have paſſed between Mr. Francis and myſelf; this I repeat, that it may not be forgotten: viz.

"Mr. Francis will not oppoſe any meaſures which the "Governor General ſhall recommend for the proſecu- "tion of the war in which we are ſuppoſed to be en- "gaged with the Marattas, or for the general ſupport of "the preſent political ſyſtem of this Government: "neither will he himſelf either propoſe, or vote with "any other member who ſhall propoſe, any meaſure "that ſhall be contrary to the Governor General's opi- "nion on theſe points."

Mr. Francis admits that ſome engagement did exiſt between him and me, but denies the terms of it; and I do again moſt ſolemnly affirm, that they were literally ſuch as I have quoted them in my minute of the 3d July, and ſuch as I have here repeated. The paper which I ſhewed to Mr. Francis was not intended as a ſecurity, nor have I ever alluded to it as ſuch. My ſecurity was in his honour, on which I implicitly relied; nor did I commit the terms of the engagement to writing for any other purpoſe than to guard againſt the miſapprehenſions to which an agreement, formed and concluded in converſation only, was liable; and his anſwer ſatisfied me: I regarded it as equivalent to the moſt binding, legal inſtrument. As to my own ſenſe of its obligations, I gave the fulleſt proof by the immediate performance of my part of it; but were the engagement otherwiſe than I have repreſented it, and did it even bear the limited ſenſe which Mr. Francis has aſcribed to it, yet I have affirmed, that Mr. Francis was equally bound by it to yield his aſſent, (his negative aſſent, for more I claimed not) to the meaſure which I propoſed in June, of a diverſion in the province of Malva, ſince it formed a part of the meaſures projected and actually exiſting before the engagement took place: in proof of this, I have quoted the 5th article of the treaty with the Rana of Gohud, which ſtipulates that he ſhall aſſiſt us, if required, in an expedition againſt the province of Malva. I do not underſtand Mr. Francis's diſtinction, when he ſays, that from this article, "it can only be inferred, "that when the treaty was formed in November 1779, "the poſſibility of an expedition beyond the borders of "his dominions was ſuppoſed, &c. &c." The condition was poſitive and expreſs, and conſtituted as eſſential an obligation of the treaty as either of the other two points which compoſed it, and which may be equally ſaid to infer the like poſſibility, ſince the caſes ſuppoſed by either could not exiſt with the other two. But Mr. Francis forgets the purpoſe for which I have appealed to the 5th article of the treaty with the Rana of Gohud, which was to prove "that the plan of ano- "ther expedition from the upper country into Malva, "or any other part of the Maratta dominions on that "ſide of India, had been ſuggeſted to him, and that I "had had that matter in contemplation," which Mr. Francis in his minute of the 11th of September denies.

Appendix. No. 289.

I have proved that I had it in contemplation, and that it had been ſuggeſted to Mr. Francis, ſince it was an article of a treaty concluded and executed two months before the date of my engagement with Mr. Francis, debated and paſſed at the Board, and executed by him.

" But (Mr. Francis adds) it ſtill remains a queſtion, " whether it was, or was not relinquiſhed by Mr. Haſtings, " in the interval between that period and the month of " February following?"—To this I cannot reply, for I do not know how this became a queſtion, ſince nothing leſs than my formal renunciation of it could poſſibly make it one, and I am certain I never did renounce it.

The ſubſequent reaſonings of Mr. Francis on the additional clauſe of the 5th article, do not appear to me to have any relation to the ſubject; I therefore paſs them. I have not time to examine the whole of General Goddard's correſpondence received before the 12th June; but the following extracts from Sir Eyre Coote's letter to the Board, dated the 5th May, and of General Goddard's letter to him, dated the 28th March, and encloſed in the former, contain ſuch ſtrong and pointed evidence of the ſentiments of both, reſpecting the general expediency of a diverſion in favour of General Goddard, that any further ſearch for acceſſory proofs is unneceſſary.

" To the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Governor General, &c. &c. and Members of the Supreme Council.

Gentlem e,

I have the honour to encloſe you an extract of the laſt letter I have received from General Goddard, which I take the liberty of laying before you, as it contains ſentiments entirely conformable to what I have already ſtated to you, regarding the mode of carrying on the preſent war; though I did not want ſuch a confirmation of my former ideas upon this ſubject. General Goddard now declares himſelf confined to the defence of the territory newly acquired, which as I foretold, was a neceſſary conſequence of the plan adopted. I cannot therefore avoid reiterating my propoſal of ſome vigorous meaſures being taken from theſe quarters, as ſoon as the ſeaſon will admit. This appears to me the more preſſing, as I find ſince I have left the Board, that we are become principals in the war; and the preſent plan promiſes nothing but an endleſs, ruinous expence. I therefore beg leave to repeat, that while I recommend the moſt vigorous exertions, it is only with a view to accelerate a peace, which in the preſent ſtate of politics at home would in my opinion be the happieſt event that could happen to us.

I have the honour to be, &c.

Lucknow, 15th May 1780. (Signed) Eyre Coote."

" Extract of Brigadier General Goddard's Letter, dated the 28th March 1780.

My laſt gave you a very particular information of the ſituation of Scindia's forces, which he was then collecting from all parts of his country, to accompany him into Guzerat, ſince which time he has been joined by 5,000 horſe from Ugein; and it is reported, that another conſiderable body is on their march towards him; ſo that the northern provinces of the Maratta State, which are moſtly belonging to himſelf and Holkar, muſt be now greatly expoſed, and open to invaſions from our upper provinces, by the way of Gohud, and the extenſive provinces of Ajmeze, the principal Rajah of which, the Marwar Rajah, is I believe by no means well diſpoſed to the intereſts of Scindia: I have no poſitive proof of this being the caſe, having had no correſpondence or other communication with him whatever ſince my arrival on this ſide of India, but it is a circumſtance generally believed, and has its foundation in former diſputes, and I mention it to you, among other incidents, to give you an opportunity of judging how far it may be practicable, as it would certainly be of advantage to the operations of the war on this ſide, to cauſe a powerful diverſion to be made on the other; which could not fail to diſtreſs and divide their attention exceedingly.

Having no object to induce me to penetrate into Malva, but on the contrary, riſking the moſt material intereſts of the Company, by leaving the province of Guzerat, and the ſea coaſt, to the inroads either of an European or Indian enemy, I can only at preſent watch the motions of Scindia to prevent him from overrunning or deſtroying the country; and if poſſible, ſeize ſome favourable opportunity of attacking him, which as it is his only care to avoid, I ſhall find ſome difficulty to effect.

A true extract.

(Signed) Wm Tierney,
Sec^y to the Commander in Chief."

In compliance with the rule preſcribed by Mr. Francis I have been careful to annex the dates to the preceding extracts; and for greater preciſion will repeat them, with the facts ſtated in the order in which they happened.

General Goddard's letter to Sir Eyre Coote is dated the 28th March, and was recorded in our conſultation of the 29th May. My minute, which contained the firſt propoſition of the expedition, was dated the 12th June.

Mr. Francis will now permit me to quote his words for their application to the cloſe of this argument: " On this principle I join iſſue with the Governor Ge- " neral, and affirm in his own terms, that when he pro- " poſed the execution of the meaſure, (that is on the 12th " June laſt) General Goddard had not ſolicited us to make " ſuch a diverſion in his favour. The fact, if it exiſts, " is capable of immediate and direct proof."

The preceding extracts are an immediate and direct proof of the fact.

I do not anſwer the remainder of Mr. Francis's minute, becauſe it proves nothing but that my opinion of the meaſures neceſſary to be purſued for the proſecution of the Maratta war, varied according to the variations and contingencies of the war; which I admit; ſtill inſiſting, in the words of my laſt minute, that this is not material either to the engagement which I affirm Mr. Francis did conclude with me, or to the agreement which he ſays he meant to enter into, ſince the proſecution of the war againſt the Marattas was the general object of both, and the means of courſe included in it.

Extract of Bengal Secret Conſultations, the 21ſt Auguſt 1780;—preſent, the honourable Warren Haſtings Governor General, Preſident; Edward Wheler, Eſquire. (Mr. Francis indiſpoſed.)

READ the following letter from Captain Popham:

Gentlemen,

Since I had the honour to addreſs you of the 8th ultimo, I have been endeavouring by purſuit to oblige the enemy to quit the Rana's country. They have learnt vigilance to ſecure them from ſurprizes by night, and the diſtance they keep from us have excluded every poſſibility of attack by day; however, as we advance their forts ſurrender to the Ranah, and probably from their terror and alarm they will ſoon retreat, for the rainy ſeaſon, to ſome diſtant place of ſecurity.

I have received from the Adjutant General, a copy of the Board's reſolutions for the relief of the detachment, and ſhall accordingly prepare for that event; by uſing every means in my power to prevent ſo extraordinary a change in the face of an enemy, from hurting the public ſervice. With a hope that it may not be deemed a deviation from the high reſpects in which I hold the pleaſure of the Board, permit me to remark, that nothing thing could equal my aſtoniſhment at this meaſure, but the regret and diſappointment I profeſſionally feel in being withdrawn from the campaign immediately after receiving moſt honourable marks of your approbation. Such proofs of your perfect ſatisfaction, gentlemen, that myſelf, my officers, and indeed the whole army, could not but conſider as omens of your intentions to employ us in the proſecution of a ſervice we had ſucceſsfully began. But as my conduct has not been deemed unworthy of your good opinion, I ſhall ſtill retain hopes of my ſervices being demanded on ſome future active occaſion, and exerted to a happier iſſue.

I have the honour to be, &c.

Letter from Captain William Popham to the Governor General and Council; in general Letter 26th Auguſt 1780.

To the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Eſquire, Governor General, and Council.

Gentlemen,

I yeſterday had the pleaſure of congratulating you on the capture of Gwalior by the detachment under my command. Excluſive that it is my duty to ſubmit my conduct in every reſpect to the judgment of Adminiſtration, I flatter myſelf that a detail of the diſpoſition of ſo fortunate and honorary an enterprize will be both pleaſing and ſatisfactory.

This place, gentlemen, having been pronounced, and with juſtice, by the Princes of Hindoſtan, as far as their knowledge in military matters extended, to be impregnable, and being ſo ſituated as to render an examination of it which could be abſolutely relied on, a ſervice of danger and uncertainty, I have for a long time balanced in my mind the moſt eligible mode of attack. In order to gain this information, after ſecuring the new conqueſt of the Cutchwagaar diſtrict, I marched to Ripore, a village about five coſs diſtant from Gwalior. My ſpies were then continually employed in ſearching for a part of it fit for eſcalading. After many and dangerous trials they at length brought me advice that one part only bore the appearance of practicability: their deſcription of it reduced my hopes to a poſſibility of ſucceſs. The fort is nearly three coſs in extent, built on an exceeding high rock, ſcarped for the moſt part all round, and garriſoned by a thouſand men. The part that the guides propoſed our aſcent by, was where the ſcarp was about ſixteen feet high; from hence to the wall a ſteep aſcent of about forty yards; and the wall to be eſcaladed, about thirty feet in height. I took the reſolution immediately. The object was glorious, and I made a diſpoſition to prevent as much as in my power, in caſe of a repulſe, that the loſs we ſhould ſuſtain might not tarniſh the honour of the attempt.

I formed the detachment for the ſervice, without any aſſiſtance from our ally.

On the 3d at midnight, Lieutenant Cameron, the field engineer, having prepared ladders and every other requiſite for ſcaling, with great diſpatch and ſecrecy, I ordered the party for the attack to be formed. Captain Bruce, whoſe abilities are well known to you, at the head of two companies of grenadiers and light infantry, commanded by Lieutenants Wilſon, Archibald Scott, Allen, and Patterſon, led the van of the party. They were followed by myſelf, with twenty Europeans under Lieutenant Legortwood, and two battalions of Sepoys, under the command of Lieutenants Ford and Hamilton; Captain Maclary with his battalion, two guns, and the cavalry, received orders to march at two, in order to cover our retreat in caſe of a premature diſcovery; or, in the event of ſucceſs, to prevent Ambajee, with his troops, from eſcaping. The camp was left ſtanding, under charge of Captains Mayaffre and Clode, with a battalion.

At break of day the van arrived at the foot of the ſcarped rock: where wooden ladders were immediately placed, and the troops aſcended to the wall, when the ſpies climbed up and fixed the rope ladders; the Sepoys then mounted with amazing activity: the guards on the alarm aſſembled to the plain in order to diſlodge the aſſailants, but our fire ſoon repulſed them with great loſs, and the detachment pouring in very faſt, we puſhed on to the body of the place. The greateſt part of the garriſon had however taken advantage of the time employed in forming the troops, and quitted the fort with precipitation. The conqueſt was now complete; at ſun-riſe, or a little after, we were maſters of the ſtrongeſt hold in India. Many priſoners, and ſome of note, ſuch as Peer Khaun Keladar, and ſome particular friends of Babajee, are fallen into our hands. The latter was mortally wounded in the attack, and killed himſelf with a dagger in going out of the fort.

I cannot conclude, gentlemen, without again recommending to your notice the tried conduct and valour of the officers and men under my command, which has ſhone conſpicuouſly on this occaſion.

I have the honour to be,

With the greateſt reſpect,

Gentlemen,

Your moſt obedient and very humble ſervant,

(Signed) William Popham.

Appendix. No. 289.

Bengal Secret Perſian Correſpondence.

From the Rana of Gohud: received 5th September 1780.

Yeſterday the 2d of Shabaun, by the aſſiſtance and b eſſing of God, the fort of Gwalior was conquered. I was confident from your former favours that all my wiſhes would be brought to a happy iſſue; and from the beginning of my life to this time this was my moſt ardent deſire, that by ſome means I might be reſtored to my habitation, and thus gain additional honour in the ſight of my contemporaries; and accordingly I am now in peaceable poſſeſſion of my houſe, and have ſucceeded in my wiſhes. What can I now return you equal to this favour, except my life? this debt will remain for my lateſt poſterity and deſcendants to pay.

As I had no confidence in my army, on account of their being lately raiſed, and as I knew ſecrecy and caution to be neceſſary, I therefore had delayed ſending them; but upon the receipt of your orders to Toffuzzit Heſſein Khan, directing him to give me ſatisfaction that this place will not be retained by the Sirkar, on that ſame day I receive complete ſatisfaction that you had in conſideration of my attachment entered into a treaty with me, and had made known your friendly intentions to Meer Muzhir Ally Khan; and I knew that my dignity would increaſe daily, and that I ſhould be exalted in power. Agreeable to your orders, keeping this a ſecret from even my relations; I ſent to Captain Popham thoſe people in my ſervice who were acquainted with the fort of Gwalior, that they might procure an eaſy entrance for the gentlemen into the fort. Captain Popham ordered theſe men to take ſome of his people with them, and ſhew them the fort.' That ſame night they accordingly took two Hircarrahs of the Sirkar with them, and went near the fort, and at their return gave great ſatisfaction to the Captain, telling him that they would affix ladders to the fort and ſlay any of the Chokidars who might be awake and on duty. Captain Popham having approved, I ſent all the rope ladders which were in readineſs, and I and my people by the bleſſing of God executed executed every thing which we had promiſed, and conducted the Captain ſafely into the fort by the upper road, and the fort was thus taken. In all five of the enemies were killed, and two of my people were wounded; they arrived at the fort two Gurries before midnight. I have been making great rejoicings that the Engliſh have beſtowed on me a houſe, and deſign entering it in a day or two.

All the Rajahs of Hindoſtan are now convinced of your favour to me, from your having reſtored to the right owner his right, after thirty years diſpoſſeſſion. I will leave my people there, and proſecute the war till not one man is left on this ſide of the Nurbudda. I have now nothing left to hope for, my country will now be cultivated. All the Rajahs now direct their hopes towards you, and are in readineſs at all times. I ſhall remain fixed in my attachment, and have forgot the diſtreſſes and anxieties which I before ſuffered, and which your favour has now renewed.

Copy of the general Letter from Bengal, 26th Auguſt 1780, to Court of Directors, encloſing Copy of a Letter from Captain Popham to Governor General and Council.

To the Honourable the Court of Directors for Affairs of the Honourable United Company of Merchants of England trading to the Eaſt Indies.

Honourable Sirs,

THE departure of a Daniſh ſhip from hence to Europe, at this time, affords us an opportunity of informing you of the capture of the important fortreſs of Gwalior, poſſeſſed by the Marattas in the country of our ally the Rhana of Ghede. It was taken by eſcalade on the 4th of this month, by a detachment of the Company's troops under the command of Captain William Popham. For particulars relative to this event, we beg leave to refer you to the encloſed copy of a letter written to us by Captain Popham, under date the 5th inſtant, and think it neceſſary to add only, on the general occaſion of it, that it has completed the expulſion of the Marattas from the territories of our ally, who before had ſuffered in a ſevere degree by the ravages they were committing, and to whom it had been ſome loſs of credit that the Marattas, his conſtant enemies, ſhould be poſſeſſed of the principal fort in the heart of his dominions.

We have the ſincereſt pleaſure in tranſmitting you intelligence of a capture ſo favourable to the intereſts of the Company, and ſo diſtinguiſhing to the honour of their arms; and we doubt not that the ſpirited and well-judged conduct of Captain Popham, and gallantry of the officers and men under his command, will appear to you, as they do to us, deſerving of the higheſt commendation. We have reſolved for the preſent, that the fort of Gwalior ſhould remain in the poſſeſſion of our troops, as during the continuance of the war in which we are engaged with the Maratta State, the ſafety of the acquiſition might be hazarded if it were left to be protected by the Rana's.

We have the honour to be,
Honourable Sirs,
Your moſt faithful
humble ſervants,

APPENDIX, No. 291.

Extract of Bengal Secret Conſultations, the 9th October 1780.

READ the following letter from Major Popham:

Gentlemen,

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 24th ultimo. It is always matter of the higheſt ſatisfaction to me to find my conduct honoured with the approbation of Government; but the teſtimony you have now given of your good opinion, cannot fail of inſpiring the breaſt of every individual of the detachment with the deepeſt ſenſe of gratitude and reſpect, the moſt dutiful aſſurances of which, we truſt, will not be unacceptable to you gentlemen.

Your having thought proper to retain this fortreſs as a Britiſh poſt, it becomes a part of my duty to point out that the great extent of the fortifications, and of the Shiher Punnah, under its immediate protection, require at leaſt a garriſon of 50 or 60 European artillery, a battalion of Laſcars, and ſeventeen or eighteen hundred Sepoys, merely for the duty of the works without a capacity of detaching a man on any occaſion.

The various uſes to which the fort may be applied, particularly in the preſent war, will however recompenſe amply for this, or even a greater expence; and you may be perſuaded, I will neglect no means of convincing our ally of the attention of Government to his ſecurity, in this your reſolution; and I make no doubt he will coincide with the wiſdom of a meaſure which covers his dominions from invaſion, and inveſts him with the tranquil poſſeſſion of the fruits of our late fortunate campaign.

I have the honour to be,
Gwalior, 12th September 1780. (Signed) W^m Popham.

Perſian Correſpondence, 1780.

To the Ranna of Gohud: written 7th September 1780.

I received your letter, informing me of the taking of Gwalior by Captain Popham, with the aſſiſtance of your troops; and this intelligence gave me the greater pleaſure, as from your long ſilence on that ſubject I began to fear that ſome delays had ariſen in the execution of a plan, when the preſent ſituation of affairs required the greateſt expedition. The conqueſt of this fort being an object on which I had long fixed my wiſhes, the delays which ſeemed to have happened gave me ſome apprehenſions that you might have conceived doubts and ſuſpicions reſpecting the future diſpoſition of the fort after it ſhould be taken; and I accordingly aſſured you through the letters of Rahmut Ulla Khan and your Vackeel, that this Government entertained no ideas contrary to their former promiſe on this head.

I now find that the conduct of Captain Popham has given you apprehenſions of the ſincerity of our intentions in this point. The caſe is this: you yourſelf are well acquainted with the importance of this place to us both, during the preſent war with the Marattas, and muſt be well convinced that the retaining poſſeſſion of it is of the utmoſt conſequence in the future opperations againſt our enemies in that quarter, I muſt therefore requeſt that you will ſuffer it to remain in our poſſeſſion till the final concluſion of the preſent war with the Marattas; declaring to you at the ſame time, that as ſoon as peace ſhall have taken place with them, the fort of Gwalior ſhall be delivered up into your hands. It is yours, it is your right; nor have this Government any idea of alienating it. In the mean while this letter will remain with you as a voucher, if any is neceſſary when it is expreſsly provided by the treaty between us that it ſhall remain in your poſſeſſion for ever, and that it ſhall not be given up to any other Power upon any conditions or terms whatever.

APPENDIX, No. 292.

Extract of Bengal Conſultations, 4th September 1780.

Extract of the Commander in Chief's Minute.

CAPTAIN Popham's well-judged and ſucceſsful diſpoſition againſt the important fort of Gwalior has given us a very ſtrong poſt in that quarter. Our poſſeſſing it is an object of the utmoſt conſequence during the operations of the preſent war; and for this able-performed ſervice of Captain Popham's, I muſt beg leave to recommend, what I am clear this Board will be as ready in agreeing to, as I am in propoſing; viz. that Government will confer the rank of Major on Captain Popham, for his late ſervices. But though I recommend this attention to be paid to Captain Popham's merit, do not let it be underſtood that I have an idea of propoſing the ſuperſeding of two worthy officers on his account. I find Captain Popham the third effective Captain on the liſt of the army, the two above him are Captain Jones and Kyd; theſe I alſo recommend to be made Majors ſenior to him. The vacancy occaſioned this laſt week by the deceaſe of Lieutenant Colonel Wilding, makes fair room on the eſtabliſhment for one of the three above-named Captains to be made Majors, ſo that in fact there will be but one ſupernumerary made to enable us on this occaſion to come down in the promotion to Captain Popham; and I muſt remark, that at this time of actual ſervice, the number of Field officers on the eſtabliſhment is very inadequate either to the exigencies of our detail, or to the quota of troops conſtituting the Bengal army.

My recommendations in regular order ſtand thus; Major Alexander Hannay, the oldeſt Major on the eſtabliſhment, I recommend to be promoted to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel, vice Lieutenant Colonel Benjamin Wilding, deceaſed, Captain William Jones to be made a Major vice Major Hannay promoted as above; and that Captain Robert Kyd and William Popham be alſo promoted to the rank of Majors.

Calcutta, 4th September 1780. (Signed) Eyre Coote.

Reſolved unanimouſly, That the Board do agree to make the promotions recommended by the Commander in Chief; and that, as a laſting teſtimony of the high ſenſe which the Board entertain of the merits and ſervices of Captain Popham, a clauſe be inſerted in the body of his commiſſion, expreſſing that it is granted as a reward, and as an honourable teſtimony of the high ſenſe they entertain of his military ſervices, it not being in the regular courſe of ſucceſſion.

APPENDIX, No. 293.

Bengal Secret Conſultations, 11th September 1780.

READ a letter as follows from Major Popham.

Gentlemen,

Herewith I have the honour to tranſmit you a return of the ordnance, ſtores, &c. taken in this fort.

Since the conqueſt of Gwalior, the Marattas poſſeſſed of the nighbouring country have entirely deſerted it and retired, ſome to Seronge and Belerah, others more weſtward. They have even quitted Superee, a part of the Narwar Rajah's territory, but for ſome time paſt held by them.

A ſtrong detachment marched now into Serange might probably be a means of bringing Scindia to propoſe advantageous terms to our Government. That Chief is greatly alarmed and diſtreſſed at the fall of this place.

I have the honour, &c.

Gwalior, 23d Auguſt 1780. William Popham.

APPENDIX, No. 296.

Extract of Bengal Secret Conſultations, 15th May 1780.

THE Board think it proper to remark, that they are precluded from deputing another miniſter at this time to the Court of Hydrabad, for the following conſiderations:

Firſt, That although it would be of very eſſential advantage to poſſeſs ſuch means of removing or preventing every occaſion of jealouſly or diſſatisfaction in the mind of the Nabob Nizam Ally Cawn, or of affording us a timely knowledge of their effects; yet this is not of itſelf a proper object, nor ſuitable either to the intereſts or dignity of our Government to be avowed, and we can propoſe no other which might ſerve to give a ſpecious colour to ſuch an appointment.

Secondly, Becauſe the idea which would be publicly ſuggeſted by it, of a confidential connection with that Government, might tend to alienate from us that of Berar, which by a natural oppoſition of intereſts, is and ever muſt continue in a ſtate of variance with it, either open or concealed; and thus it might prove the means of forcing the Government of Berar to the ſide of our enemies, at a time in which it poſſibly is wavering in the choice of the party which it may finally be compelled to eſpouſe.

APPENDIX, No. 297.

Extract of Bengal Secret Conſultations, 12th June 1780.

THE Board deeming the reſidence of Mr. Hollond at the Court of the Nabob Nizam Ally Cawn eſſentially and indiſpenſably neceſſary;

Agreed, That a letter be immediately written to him, confirming his appointment of Reſident at that Court on the part of this Government.

And as it is incumbent upon this Board to indemnify Mr. Hollond by every means in their power from the effects which he has unjuſtly ſuſtained by the reſentment of the Preſident and Council of Fort Saint George, for his obedience to the inſtructions tranſmitted to him in conſequence of thoſe he had received from Fort Saint George, which were notified to this Board by that Preſidency; and becauſe the Board are of opinion that Mr. Hollond was the means of preventing a breach of the alliance ſubſiſting between the Company and the Nabob Nizam Ally Cawn;

Reſolved, That the circumſtances of this tranſaction be particularly related to the Court of Directors, and that it be ſtrongly recommended to them, either to reſtore Mr. Hollond to the ſervice and to his ſtanding on the Madras eſtabliſhment, or that he be transferred with his rank to this.

APPENDIX, No. 298.

Bengal, Secret Conſultations, 11th September 1780.

READ the following letter from Mr. Hollond, Reſident at the Court of his Highneſs Nizam Ally Khan.

Honourable Sir, and Sirs,

I was honoured on the 13th ultimo, with your orders of the 12th June; and immediately made known to his Highneſs the Nizam, your reſolution regarding the reſtoration of the Mortazanagur Circar to his brother Bazalut Jung. His Highneſs, on my declaring to him theſe your intentions, expreſſed great ſatisfaction; and on my mentioning your deſire of receiving his moſt poſitive aſſurances, that he would not ſuffer any debarkation of men or ſtores, belonging to the French, or the enemies of the Engliſh nation, at the port of Mootapillee, he very readily engaged to give every ſatisfaction you might deſire on that head; I accordingly propoſed to him to ſign a paper writing to that purport; to which he gave his willing aſſent. His Highneſs took this occaſion to mention his expectation of having the collections alſo of the Mortazanagur Circar reſtored to him, and deſired to know what was your intention regarding the peſhcuſh and the arrears? I told him, with reſpect to the latter, that as you had declared to him your intention of adhering to the treaty of 1768, in which I was aſſured you were perfectly ſincere, it would, I hoped, prevent any uneaſineſs, from any little delay that might happen in the actual payment of what was due; that the war now on our hands with the Marattas, and a poſſibility, as his Highneſs himſelf had ſuggeſted, of a rupture between Hyder Ally and the Company, made it unadviſable at preſent to diminiſh our treaſure; and that I hoped he would acquieſce in the reaſonableneſs of what I now ſaid to him. That as to the Guntoor Collections, the ſubject had not been mentioned to me by you, but that in any event there muſt be conſiderable accounts to ſettle before it could be known whether any thing, or what would be due on that head. His Highneſs, after hearing what I had urged, and after declaring his confidence in the aſſurances I had made him, did not think proper at that time to preſs the matter any further.

Upon receiving on the 23d ultimo, the Governor General's letter to the Nizam, and my credentials encloſed to me under date the 26th June, by Mr. Bruere, I again waited upon his Highneſs, ſhewed the renewed credentials, and delivered the letter; which he ſaid contained what I had before declared to him.

Upon my informing his Highneſs of your having reappointed me Reſident at his Court he again expreſſed his ſurprize at the meaſure you had lately adopted, of ordering me away; and made ſome inquiries relative to thoſe peculiarities in our Government, that had occaſioned a ſtep which appeared to him ſo extraordinary; obſerving, that the appointment of a Company's ſervant to tranſact buſineſs under your Government ſeemed to him a ſmall act of authority, in compariſon of the other more momentous affairs, with which, as it appeared, you were entruſted; he obſerved, that he ſhould ſtill have had reaſon to be under ſome uncertainty, with reſpect to the efficiency of your authority, had it not been for the aſſurances you had now given him, relative to the immediate reſtoration of the Guntoor Circar, which afforded him every reaſon to be perfectly ſatisfied on that head.

I am, &c.

APPENDIX, No. 299 and 300.

Extract of Bengal Secret Conſultations, 12th June 1780.

READ the following letters from Moodajee Boofla and Dewagur Pundit.

From Moodajee Boofla: received 2d June 1780.

Your agreeable epiſtle (every letter of which was filled with friendſhip, and every line of which informed me completely of your favourable deſigns) by which you acquaint me, that Beneram Pundit explained fully to you all the particulars contained in the letter of my Miniſter Dewagur Pundit, and that you had been long anxious for that explanation; and that when you had attentively reflected and conſidered on the contents of the letters, you converſed in private with Beneram Pundit on the ſubject of them, and that I ſhould learn all the particulars from his letters, and from yours to my Miniſter; arrived in a happy hour, and gave me inexpreſſible pleaſure.

At the end of your letter, you write a few lines in your own hand, that your final reſolution in your affairs is delayed till you can receive my opinion and advice; this has exceeded every thing which you had written before. I have learnt all the particulars of your private conference from the letter of Beneram Pundit. God be praiſed, that after two years I ſtill receive from you ſuch letters as no friends, however intimate and pure their connection, ever before wrote. You are truly in every inſtance a complete friend, and write ſuch anſwers and reſolutions as are becoming your friendſhip. Had a Kareta to the purport of the preſent letter been received while the Miniſter was ſtill at Poonah, many things might have been done. At preſent, that in conſequence of the meaſures of the Nabob Nizam Ally Cavon Behadre, armies are marching from all quarters towards the Engliſh territories, and that General Goddard is engaged in open war with Scindia, and that the execution of all theſe matters is delayed till a proper ſeaſon, and as the rains are now approaching, we can wait to ſee what anſwer will be returned from the Miniſters at Poonah to the advice which I have written to them, and which I will inform you of as ſoon as received.

As all my deſires tend to keep up the friendſhip with you, and as you are diſtinguiſhed from among all the Engliſh for prudent counſels, and knowledge in all matters, prudence and foreſight, attention to treaties, ſtrict friendſhip, and a complete knowledge of the rights of old connections, for declining all intercourſe with oppreſſive and tyrannical Chiefs, and for attending in all caſes to the voice of juſtice and right, by the bleſſing of God, all affairs will be ſettled. All theſe particulars are mentioned more fully in the letters from my Miniſter to you, and to Beneram Pundit, from which you will learn them fully. I am hopeful that you will favour me with letters containing the ſtate of your health.

From Dewagur Pundit. Received 2d June.

Your gracious letter, which notwithſtanding the apparent ſhortneſs and conciſe manner of it, in reality contained the beſt and moſt ſolid advice, and the greateſt knowledge of all matters, and expreſſions of the firmeſt friendſhip and affection for the Rajah my maſter, and of favour to me, with other remarks incumbent on your friendſhip, informing me, that Beneram Pundit being arrived in Calcutta, had ſhewn you my letters, and had fully explained all the contents to you; that you had had a private converſation with the ſaid Pundit, of which I ſhould learn all the particulars from his letters; that I may be well aſſured that you have ſo firm a dependance on the friendſhip of this quarter, that in every matter where the intereſt or views of this country are concerned, you will be guided by our advice, notwithſtanding your own deſigns ſhould be thus delayed; arrived in a happy hour, and gave me great ſatisfaction. On the back of it was written in your own hand, that I ſhould learn all particulars from the letters of Beneram Pundit, and the execution of your deſigns is delayed till you receive my advice and opinion. From this writing in your own hand, I received great encouragement in my duty, and the letter of Beneram Pundit, which was doubtleſs written agreeable to your directions, has made me acquainted with all your deſigns and intentions. Agreeable to the former cuſtoms of Bengal, and the preſent firm ſtate of our friendſhip, notwithſtanding the hoſtile deſigns of all quarters, which not only prevent an intercourſe and correſpondence by letters and meſſages, but have interrupted and deſtroyed the peace and friendſhip which has ſubſiſted for many years with the people of Decan, and have occaſioned many conſiderable difficulties, which would take up much time to enumerate, and which may eaſily be learnt by you; I have continually written in ſuch a manner, by the directions of the Rajah my maſter, both in what I wrote after the arrival of Colonel Goddard at Horſhungabad, and of Mr. Watherſtone at Naigpore, and after it was thought adviſable and proper that I ſhould go to Poonah, and undertake ſecret and open negotiations with the Miniſters of Poonah, on ſeveral matters relating relating to the Engliſh, and in writing about the ſituation of all affairs, however inconſiderable, in adviſing you to obſerve the rules of peace, and to remain ſtedfaſt to your treaties, like the branches of a large river, of which one runs towards Calcutta, and the other to Surat; that is to ſay, that I have written in this manner to both ſides, and this not for my own advantage, but ſolely from my friendſhip to the Engliſh gentlemen, to procure the eaſe of the people, and the final ſtop to all diſputes and miſunderſtandings, and a peaceable reſt to all the countries, towns, and villages, in ſuch a manner as no other perſon can ever have written. But as no explicit anſwer was received from any quarter, on which a treaty might have been founded, through the mediation and guarantee of the Rajah my maſter, being remedileſs, I took leave of the Miniſters of Poonah, and returned to Naigpore, and in conſequence of the meaſures of the Nabob Nizam ul Dowlah Behadre, who before wrote to all quarters, to demand troops of them, I inſtantly began aſſembling the troops, and raiſing new forces on the ghaut Lakenwara, on the banks of the river Ganges in Decan; and remained employed in that buſineſs, for near three months; but my friendſhip and good wiſhes lead me to write the ſituation of all affairs, in a full manner, to Beneram Pundit, in a Hindoſtany letter, and to direct him to return from Benares to Calcutta, and explain all the particulars to you, and procure a ſpeedy anſwer to them, thinking that till that time, the troops would remain inactive and preparing their ſtores, &c. But when, from the great diſtance, your anſwer was late before it arrived, and as the Poonah Miniſters, from their foreſight into theſe affairs, entered into a league with Hyder Naig, and Scindeah and Holcar met the Engliſh army in Guzerat, upon the repeated calls of the Nabob Nizam-ul-Dowla, and the meſſages of Pundit Purdhaun, it became neceſſary to march the army from Lakenwara towards Sumelpore, which is 300 coſs, and even more diſtant from it, and at this time Rajah Khundajee Bhoſla has undoubtedly reached Sumelpore, and even paſſed beyond it. Accordingly, immediately upon receiving your Kareta and letter, and learning the contents of what you wrote in your own hand writing, and of the letters of Beneram Pundit, to which you referred me, I wrote to the Miniſters of Poonah whatever I thought proper and adviſable towards the confirming and ſtrengthening their friendly intentions. Now that General Goddard and Scindeah are in the neighbourhood of each other with their forces and are on the eve of hoſtilities, we muſt wait to ſee what overtures will come from that quarter, after they ſhall learn the events in that diſtrict, upon which their whole attention is engroſſed; I will write them to you without the leaſt reſerve or omiſſion. Before any letters written in your own hand were received here, the activity and diligence which I ſhewed in bringing about theſe matters, it is needleſs to mention, and would be only vain boaſting; but now that I have received this explicit letter, in which from your confidence and faith in me you refer the ſettlement of all matters entirely to this quarter, how is it poſſible that I can be guilty of the ſmalleſt negligence in them? On the contrary, I will exert myſelf in them as far as my ſtrength and life will go, and even further. Had this poſtſcript in your own hand given me this degree of ſtrength and ſatisfaction before, every thing would certainly have been ſettled.—At preſent alſo, by the bleſſing of God, who aſſiſts and befriends all who pay ſtrict regard to truth, faith, and engagements, every thing will end well.

Poſtſcript.—What you write to induce the Rajah to undertake theſe negociations to this purport, that the determination in your affairs is delayed for the counſel and advice of this quarter, and that it matters not whether your deſigns are delayed by it: the caſe is this, that this expreſſion is as ſecret and difficult to be underſtood as it ought to be; but what I can diſcover it is neceſſary ſhould be written plainly and without reſerve, and is as follows: that when the Rajah for theſe two years has been pointed at by all perſons high and low, like a flag or the new moon, on account of his friendſhip for the Engliſh gentlemen, and has come into the meaſures of the Nabob Nizam-ul-Dowlah, and agreed to raiſe an army and ſend his ſon towards Bengal ſuch a length of way, he has taken upon himſelf the expences of the troops, which for the ſole pay amount to four lacks of rupees per month, and amount in the year to a crore of rupees, not ſolely from the hopes of having them paid by the Miniſters of Poonah, but from his fixed obedience to the family of the Rajah, and reſolution to keep up the ancient treaties ſubſiſting with them, from their having reſided at the ſame place, and from the proximity of their territories, and their agreeing in all matters. All the hopes which he has of being eaſed of theſe expences, and of gaining other advantages, are from your friendſhip and alliance, and the rights of this quarter are firmly obſerved by you. The Rajah my maſter has written all theſe matters fully in anſwer to Beneram Pundit's Hindoſtany letter. You will conſider them to be written agreeable to my maſter's and my directions, and will not be diſpirited in any of your great deſigns; but having peruſed them with the greateſt attention, ſend a ſpeedy anſwer to them, as I am in great anxiety for the arrival of it. As the friendſhip between the family of Boſſla and your Highneſs is increaſed to ſo great a degree, I am hopeful that you will frequently favour me with letters containing the ſtate of your quarters, and the nature of your deſigns, and conſider me as one whoſe hopes are in your favour.

Vol. VIII.

Second Poſtſcript.—As in the preſent ſcarcity of good men you admit of no equal either in courage, ſpirit, reſolution, and magnanimity, or in your knowledge of mankind, or in prudence and foreſight, or in the faithful obſervance of treaties and engagements, or in the attention to the rights of friendſhip, or in ſkill in diſcovering what is right or wrong, conſiderable or inconſiderable in the affairs of Government, or in the keeping ſtrict to the rules of care and caution, and of juſtice, I am therefore greatly deſirous of ſettling a ſtrict intimacy with Pundit Purdhaun, and with his permiſſion to repair to the Preſence by the road of Mundela or Ballaſore, and to have an interview with you to make you acquainted with all the attachments and good wiſhes which I have for you, and to draw from that fountain of knowledge and prudence ſuch counſels as may be the means of ſettling and bringing to an iſſue all deſigns, and may give me ſatisfaction and eaſe of mind in many matters. I am hopeful that you will ſpeedily favour me with an anſwer, granting this my requeſt; and may the Almighty grant, that it come to paſs!

Appendix No. 300.

No. 300.

The Governor General delivers in the following minute:

The Governor General—The members of the Board having been furniſhed with copies of the letters which have been written by Moodajee Boſſla and his Dewan to Beneram Pundit, their Vackeel or Miniſter at this Government, containing, in a very long detail, the motives and views of the Government of Berar. Theſe I think improper to be entered on our records, but I recommend them to the attention of the Board in their conſideration of the conduct which we are to obſerve towards that Government.

From the declaration made in theſe letters, and from other advices, it appears that urged by the demands of the Adminiſtration at Poonah and the menaces of the Nabob Nizam ul Mulck, the Rajah hath levied a conſiderable force, ſaid to conſiſt of 50,000 horſe, oſtenſibly deſtined to co-operate with the Peiſhwa, by invading Bengal and the dominions of our ally the Nabob of Oude. That one diviſion of 30,000 horſe commanded by

by Chimnajee Booſla, the Rajah's ſecond ſon, has been accordingly diſpatched to our frontier by the road of Cuttack, and has been ſome time ſince arrived in the neighbourhood of that city, where it is propoſed that it ſhall canton during the rainy ſeaſon.

The Rajah and his Dewan both profeſs the moſt ſteady attachment to the Company, and a reſolution to preſerve the peace and good underſtanding which have ſubſiſted between that Government and the Engliſh ſince the period in which the latter firſt obtained a ſhare in the political concerns of theſe provinces.

Theſe profeſſions have been repeated in all their letters, and ſanctified by the moſt ſolemn atteſtations. However ſuſpicious ſuch voluntary proteſtations may generally appear, there can be no valid reaſon for refuſing a certain degree of credit to them on the preſent occaſion, as they are perfectly conſiſtent with what we know to be the intereſt of the Booſla family, and with the conduct which it has invariably obſerved towards the Government of Bengal from the acceſſion of Tamoojee to the preſent time. Its natural enemies are the Chiefs whoſe dominions border immediately upon the diſtricts of Berar, and lie in many places intermixed with them; that is to ſay, the Peiſhwa, Nizam Ally Cawn, and Mhadajee Scindia. The Company cannot be regarded in the ſame light, becauſe the line of country which joins their poſſeſſions to Berar is ſo wild and uncultivated that no cauſe of competition can ariſe reſpecting it, and the territories of each in thoſe parts yield little advantage to the proprietors. The claim of the Berar Government to the chout of theſe provinces is ſo antiquated that though it might be revived as a pretext, it could never operate as an inducement to invade them, on any other principles than thoſe which are the grounds of original conqueſts; nor could ſuch an enterprize be formed without great and certain hazards, a length of hoſtilities, and a proportionate expence (to which the reſources of Berar are inadequate) and the expoſure of its own internal poſſeſſions to the ambition and rapacity of its neighbours.

The habits of a long intercourſe of friendſhip, and the benefits which are mutually and equally derived by both Governments from a continuance of the ſame degree of union, may likewiſe be aſſumed as arguments of the favourable diſpoſition of that Government towards this, even under the preſent appearances. Yet the contrary, notwithſtanding the ſtrong grounds which appear for this concluſion, may be the caſe; and even with the beſt intentions, the ſteps through which the Berar Government, in the accommodation of an oſtenſible plan to its own ſecret wiſhes, may be inſenſibly led, may terminate in hoſtilities againſt us.

From the whole of this review it appears to be the proper policy of this Government to conſider and treat that of Berar in the character which it profeſſes, but to guard againſt the poſſibility of its becoming hoſtile to us.

This policy at the ſame time fortunately coincides with the preſent views of that Government, and may be made to promote them. The Rajah and his Miniſter have from the beginning expreſſed the ſtrongeſt deſire to become the mediators of peace between us and the Marattas; and this deſire is more ſtrenuouſly urged in their laſt than in any of their former letters, which may be accounted for on good grounds, for it is certainly their intereſt to be the inſtruments of bringing the war to a termination, by means which muſt enhance their conſequence, and relieve them from certain difficulties and expence. The Rajah informs us that he has written to the Peiſhwa and offered his interceſſion to accommodate matters with us, confiding in the aſſurances given him by this Government, of its willingneſs to agree to peace through his mediation, and to his guarantee for the maintenance of it; and has propoſed that his Dewan ſhall come to Ballaſore or Benares with credentials and full powers from the Peiſhwa to negociate and conclude a treaty of peace: let us avail ourſelves of this favourable diſpoſition; let his mediation be accepted, and his Dewan invited to come for that purpoſe to Calcutta. I am firmly of opinion, that peace can only be accompliſhed by this or ſome other mode that ſhall put the negociations for it within the reach and immediate controul of this Government. The ſeat of war is not the ſoil adapted by nature for the growth of peace; yet while every means are employed to promote this end, we muſt not ſlacken in thoſe which may give us an advantage in the war, if our hopes of a ſpeedy termination of it ſhould be fruſtrated: on the contrary, this ſeaſon and theſe hopes require a redoubled exertion on our part in the proſecution of the war, as a neceſſary concurrence with the meaſures which we may take for the concluſion of it.—For this reaſon I recommend that the order lately paſſed for the reduction of Captain Popham's detachment be ſuſpended; that the Sepoys of the detachment be immediately formed into three regular battalions, and added to the detachment allotted to Major Camac. Let it be given in inſtructions to Major Camac, if he ſhall find it practicable, to march this detachment, in conjunction with the forces which the Rana by his treaty will be obliged in ſuch a caſe to furniſh, directly to Oogein, the capital of the territory dependant upon Mhadjee Scindia. This cannot fail to divert him from the war in Guzerat; and by bringing it home to his own intereſts, which have hitherto been wholly exempted from it, induce him to be an equal ſolicitor for peace, to which at this time he appears to be the only impediment. In effect, all advices confirm the information contained in the Berar letters of the oppoſition of Scindia's wiſhes to thoſe of the Miniſter in this particular inſtance: the only obſtacle to this deſign is the force which the Maratta Government actually poſſeſſes in Calpee and Bundlecund. A diſcretionary power ſhould be given to Major Camac to remove this by any means, either by negociation or force, which he ſhall judge neceſſary, and which ſhall not be likely to detain him from his main object. From all the intelligence which has been lately received from that quarter, this appears to be no difficult work, as the Maratta power in that country is not in itſelf very conſiderable, and thoſe who poſſeſs it are diſaffected to the Government on which they depend. The purpoſe of undertaking this expedition and its motives may be communicated to Moodajee Booſla; he cannot diſapprove it, nor is it likely to give ſuch offence to the Miniſter of Poonah (whoſe jealouſy of Madajee Scindia is well known) as to excite in his mind any new objection to a pacification.

APPENDIX, No. 301.

Letter from Dewagur Pundit; received 13th September 1780.

YOUR letter dated the 1ſt Rejeb, containing an explicit explanation of your ſentiments and your wiſhes reſpecting peace, &c. friendſhip with Pundit Purdhaun and his Miniſters; that you had always been inclined to peace, but you could not think of entering into one upon the faith of a mere piece of paper, unleſs ſtrengthened by ſome ſtrong and binding tie; that now conſidering the well-known attachment to faith, adherence to engagements, and ſteady friendſhip which have always diſtinguiſhed the Bhoſila family, and have been tried for twenty years by your Government, you have placed the moſt implicit confidence on the guarantee of the Maha Rajah; that you did not enter into the preſent war from your own wiſh, but that the failure of an expedition from Bombay without your knowledge, which brought the honour of the Engliſh and their ſafety into danger, made it neceſſary for you to ſend General Goddard to their aſſiſtance, for the ſupporting of your dignity and the ſecuring your poſſeſſions; that as by the favour of God the General's expedition had ſucceeded, you can accede to the bringing about an accommodation between the Poonah Miniſters and the Engliſh Company through my mediation, on ſuch terms as may be for the honour and intereſt of the Company. That on this head you need not ſay any thing, but that as the Maha Rajah had made a voluntary offer of his mediation, his juſtice and friendſhip will prevent him from liſtening to any overtures which it would not become you to receive. That whenever the Maha Rajah ſhall have obtained ſatisfactory anſwers from the Miniſters of Poonah, and their credentials to treat with you, through my intervention, you will be happy to meet me, for the purpoſe of making a treaty under the guarantee of the Maha Rajah, and that without a perſonal communication you cannot explain yourſelf further; honoured me, by its arrival in a happy hour, together with a Karetah for my maſter; and gave me great pleaſure by its contents, which informed me of all your ſentiments, and of all matters without reſerve. Theſe particulars were likewiſe fully underſtood by the Maha Rajah my maſter.—Before this, three letters and Karetahs arrived addreſſed to the Maha Rajah, containing important matters, and having this written in your own hand, that you had given full powers to this quarter for theſe negociations; and had entruſted the controlling of all points to this ſide, and would agree to every thing, even ſhould it occaſion loſſes to yourſelf and advantages to this quarter; that therefore we ſhould act in ſuch manner as ſhould ſeem beſt to us. In conformity to this, every thing which was thought adviſable and tending to the advantage and proſpect of peace, was written to the Miniſters: in anſwer to this, it was written from Poonah, that this matter was of the higheſt importance; and that the negociation reſpecting the former, preſent, and future treaties, could not be undertaken upon ſo vague a letter, till every particular was fully diſcuſſed. It was neceſſary that we ſhould write to you all the articles of the former treaties, which have been forgot and broken through, and write them after we ſhould receive an explicit anſwer from you: that as you are reſolved to abide by the articles of the treaties, they likewiſe have always been ſtedfaſt in this obſervance of treaties, and know not the ſmalleſt advantage in war and diſputes. In conſequence of this, knowing it to be unadviſable to commit all theſe matters to writing, I have diſpatched to your quarter Bejy Ram Pundit, a man of confidence, an inhabitant of Benares, and a relation of Beneram Pundit, with letters, and Karetahs, and memorandums of the articles which have been broken and omitted, which the Poonah Miniſters had wrote down; and have verbally committed to the ſaid Pundit, many particulars of our ſentiments on all points of this buſineſs, and the many advantages of friendſhip and obſervance of treaties, together with the evils and loſſes attending diſputes and war, which he will doubtleſs, directly after his arrival, explain to you in a full and particular manner through the intervention of Beneram Pundit; and I am convinced that your juſtice and love of truth, together with your prudence, foreſight, and extenſive political knowledge, will lead you to approve of his repreſentations, and to give an explicit and ſatisfactory anſwer to them.

After the departure of Bijy Ram Pundit, what was written in anſwer to the letters of Beneram Pundit which you had cauſed to be written by him, and at the beginning and ending of which you added a few Perſian lines, purporting, that on account of the ſickneſs of your Moonſhey, you had delayed replying to my letters, but that you would ſoon diſpatch an anſwer; and that in the mean while, I ſhould conſider the Hindoſtanny letter of the Pundit as written with your approbation, and conveying your ſentiments; will have been underſtood by you. At preſent that this letter from you with a Karetah for the Maha Rajah has been received; although it contains your reſolution of making peace and friendſhip with the Miniſters of Poonah, yet two or three ſentences in it have given me great reaſon to think, namely, that by the favour of God, the expedition of General Goddard has ſucceeded, and that you can therefore enter into a peace upon ſuch terms as may be for the intereſt and honour of the Engliſh Company; and that we will not liſten to any overtures from the Miniſters of Poonah, which it will not become you to accept of, becauſe in your former letters, you beſtowed on this ſide in your hand writing, the ſole and full powers of managing theſe negociations; and in your preſent letter, although you ſtill keep your firm reſolution of making peace, yet it may be ſeen that you reſtore more in your own hands, and diminiſh the powers granted to this quarter. It is however of no conſequence, for while a negociation of great conſequence in which the political affairs of the country, the eaſe and ſecurity of the inhabitants, and the protection of the poſſeſſions are concerned, is in agitation, till it has been adjuſted and properly cleared up and ſettled, the events and conſequences of it, and the open and hidden parts are well conſidered, and the granting powers, and the beſtowing unlimited authority, or the reſerving the deciding power, we maturely weighed, and after that the matter is determined, agreeable to what prudence, foreſight, and wiſdom requires, I am in all caſes your true well-wiſher and ſincere friend; and never did, nor ever ſhall, by any doubts in this point, forget my faith and promiſes, or omit to write you on all ſubjects, or neglect your intereſts and advantages, but am firm and ſincere in my attachment. Before this I wrote you long and frequent letters on the ſubject of peace and friendſhip, and procured full powers from you to act in this buſineſs, and I now write again, and requeſt that you will give what I write room in your breaſt; it is as follows: When I went the ſecond time to Poonah, I told Nanna Purnaveeſe plainly, that he muſt not conſider the advantages they had gained over the people of Bombay as a victory, nor imagine the loſs which the Chief of Bombay had ſuffered, to be a defeat of the Engliſh; that this matter would be of long continuance, and that the conſequences of it would be a long war, which would cauſe the deſtruction and devaſtation of the confines of both countries; that as the Engliſh poſſeſſed ſtrong places, ſuch as Madras, Pondicherry, Sinkacool, Rajebundy, and other ſtrong forts in the Decan, well ſupplied with proviſions, and military ſtores of powder, ball, cannons and muſkets, and other powerful ſupplies; and beſides, that whilſt their power and authority extended over many ſoubahs, and countries of Hind, while their courage and bravery were ſo great, and their treaſures and reſources ſo extenſive, and while ſo many Powers were attached to them from their hearts, it was the moſt adviſable to ſettle this matter upon peaceable and friendly terms. Nanna Purnaveeſe replied, that he had not ſtepped out of the line of peace and faithful obſervance of treaties; that whatever had happened proceeded from the Chief of Bombay; that whenever he, contrary to expreſs engagements, had taken Ragonaut Row with him, and had croſſed at Bhore Gaut, and arrived within four coſs of Poonah, the hoſtile beginning of the Engliſh obliged him likewiſe to riſk an open attack, and that he accordingly did what was incumbent on him; that notwithſtanding this, he is ſtill ſtedfaſt to the treaties, and that I might judge which ſide had been guilty of breaches in their engagements. That they openly aſſiſt Ragonaut Row, which is expreſsly forbidden by the treaty, and that he left it to me to judge. At that time letters from Nanna Purnaveeſe, containing profeſſions of friendſhip and peace, and aſſurances of his abiding by his treaties, were ſent, together with letters from me to General Goddard, and perſons of truſt were diſpatched for the purpoſe of negociation; and beſides this, what was proper to be written was written to Calcutta; but however, in this matter the will of God was done, and ſtill takes effect. The ſhort of all my former attempts is this, that from my ſpeaking the truth, which in the time of victory feels bitter, Nanna Purnaveeſe would not conſider the conſequences and future ture events of what had happened. All theſe matters, together with the whole particulars of the Decan, with which I am better acquainted than any one elſe, I from my old and firm friendſhip wrote to you fully; namely, the victories of the Maratta army in Hindoſtan, and their conqueſts in that country, as far as the river Sindah, on the borders of Cabill. That although from the revolutions of worldly affairs, which are continually ſhifting, the private concerns of Pundit Purdhaun Peiſhwa ſhould ſuffer from his not acknowledging the rights of Ragonaut Row; yet that in caſe of neceſſity, they can bring two lacks of horſe into the field, where they conſider it a victory to be able to fly off and return again, and never to expoſe themſelves within the reach of cannon, but to remain watching for favourable opportunities, by which conduct they always effect their views, and have been able to poſſeſs themſelves of ſo large a tract of country, that they poſſeſs about 300 ſtrong forts; that they have gained over Hyder Ally to be equally united with them as the Nabob Nizam ul Dowlah; that therefore to perſiſt without cauſe in an open war with them, was a reſolution of ruining the country and poſſeſſions; that it was therefore adviſable to keep ſtedfaſt to the treaties, and to deſiſt from aſſiſting Ragonaut Row, which was an open breach of them, and to give me full powers to effect a reconciliation. Although General Goddard, conſiſtent with the honour of the Engliſh gentlemen, ſuffered many difficulties during four months that he oppoſed the numerous armies of Sindeah and Holcar, and never made any ſhew of friendſhip, and never once in his anſwers to the meſſages of Pundit Peiſhwa, did he ſeem inclined to effect a peace, yet you, from your great political knowledge and true wiſdom, in anſwer to the letters of this quarter, dictated by the moſt ſincere friendſhip and attachment, have till this time continued to write letters of the higheſt ſentiments of affection and friendſhip, and were never from the beginning inclined to this war; but it is certain that General Goddard's march from Hoſhungabad was abſolutely after the defeat of the Bombay Chief, neceſſary for the defence of the honour of the Engliſh, and for the ſecurity of their poſſeſſions; for this purpoſe, from which the greateſt advantages are to be derived, I ſhall exert myſelf to the utmoſt of my power, and even further, as long as I have life; and the Maha Rajah will take care to inſure and guarantee it; but it is equally of no effect to ſpeak the truth to either ſide; for till the light of the ſun ſhines clear and bright, the violence of war will never ſubſide, and till the negociation of approvals and refuſals, of denials and aſſents in many points, takes place between you, the wiſhes and concerns of both ſides cannot be effected.

Immediately on the receipt of your letter, I diſpatched to Poonah, Jadaſeo Pundit, who was here entruſted by Pundit Peiſhwa, together with letters, containing the points which can be aſſented to, and thoſe which will be refuſed; and informing them that if they wiſh to make peace, it muſt be on thoſe terms, and that they muſt inveſt me with complete powers, in which caſe every thing may be equally balanced on both ſides, and neither ſcale have leſs or more weight than the other. After his arrival at Poonah, he will explain to them every matter, both of conſequence and inconſiderable, and whatever can be ſettled there, immediate intelligence ſhall be given you; by that time anſwers will have been received from Bejy Ram Pundit who has been ſent to your quarter, entruſted with all our ſentiments, and in conformity to his letters, whatever ought to be determined ſhall take effect.

General Goddard writes about his own victories, and Sindeah and Holcar in their letters talk of their ſtrength and ſucceſſes: which of theſe accounts are we to ſuppoſe true, and which falſe? Wherever there is war there is falſhood, and nothing but loſſes and diſadvantages are to be expected from it: in my opinion, neither are thoſe victories victories, nor are thoſe defeats defeats. When the roots of both ſides remain ſtill firm in their own poſ-ſeſſions, like the wall of Alexander what has been derived from theſe victories and defeats? The buſineſs is with the root not the top. As you have in this matter mentioned the honour and credit of the Engliſh, and have written that we will not liſten to any thing from the Poonah Miniſters which you cannot aſſent to; ſir, the reputation and honour of the Engliſh gentlemen is firmly eſtabliſhed and ſpreads every where, and General Goddard to repair the ſmall loſs of the Bombay Chief, ſhewed the greateſt courage, ſkill and activity in the war, and brought the water which had left its banks back into its bed. There now therefore remains nothing more to be done by war, and the honour and courage of the Engliſh has been publiſhed to every one; and beſides the Maha Rajah, from his great friendſhip and affection for the Engliſh, regards their reputation and honour more than his own life; and conſidering his own honour is connected with and dependant on it, how therefore can he ever liſten to any thing which will be improper for your aſſent? Or how can I who am loaded with your favours and friendſhip ever ſuffer it? But as you have now determined upon peace, under the guarantee of this quarter, it is therefore incumbent on the guarantee to conſult the advantage of both ſides in his negociation, and whatever may be done by either part contrary to the treaties and engagements, firſt he ought to forbid it, and afterwards reprove them for their conduct; and when he can bring them to a perfect agreement, then to add this guarantee to it, and to ſecure the duration of it. To be ſecurity between powerful and warlike Chiefs is not in the power of every one, but requires a perſon of great ſtrength. The whole efforts of this quarter will be neceſſary to terminate the negociation; you have therefore done wiſely in committing this office of guarantee to ſo powerful a Chief as the Maha Rajah, for by his means every point will be properly adjuſted. This quarter therefore is not backward in ſpeaking and writing the truth to either ſide; but conſiders that in ſo doing friendſhips with both ſides and their general reputation is increaſed. In a word, what you write reſpecting the honour of the Engliſh, will in every negociation be our chief care; but this is ſtill vague, nor have you ſufficiently explained it: as it is incumbent on this quarter, in the character of guarantee, to attend equally to the honour of both ſides, it is neceſſary that you write plainly in what points you conſider the honour of the Engliſh concerned. Before this, in your letters to the Miniſters of Poonah, you wrote that you were ready to aſſent to every thing which was conſiſtent with the honour of your Government, and that you would abide by the treaty of Colonel Upton, and that the new engagements were entered into without your knowledge; I have therefore entruſted with Bejy Ram Pundit a memorandum of ſuch articles in the treaty of the Colonel which have been broken by the aſſiſtance afforded Ragonaut Row and by the affair of Shaſtie, &c. This he will deliver to you, and you will, after peruſing it, perceive whether it is true or falſe. If it is true, then you muſt determine upon conforming to them, and upon extinguiſhing the flames of diſcord with the water of peace. The negociations which will at this time take place reſpecting the country of Gojeraut and the aſſignments made by Futtah Sing Guicowar, &c. for the expences of the new-raiſed followers and the large ſum of money which General Goddard collected in the plunder of the town and villages, a ſeparate memorandum of them has been likewiſe given to Bejy Ram, which when you have peruſed, and determined on what is to be done, you will write to me. Thus every matter is on the point of being ſettled, and will ſoon be adjuſted by a perfect reconciliation under the guarantee of the Maha Rajah, when the friends and enemies of both ſides will become the ſame; the greateſt benefits will be derived from the accommodation, and the loſſes of both ſides turned into advantages. You muſt therefore write to General Goddard whatever is adviſable, and ſend orders to the Chief of Bombay, who has invaded the diſtrict of Cokun, where he is daily engaged in hoſtilities with the army of Pundit Purdhaun, to deſiſt from theſe proceedings, which during a negociation for peace are very improper. As ſoon as I receive your explicit anſwer in theſe points, and when I ſhall have informed the Poonah Miniſters of it, I will then begin my journey to your quarter, and have the ſatisfaction of an interview with you, which has long been my moſt earneſt wiſh, and in perſon make known to you many particulars and views which cannot be committed to writing.

As from the diſtance between us it requires two months for the Coſſids to go and return, and as there are ſtill two months to the end of the rainy ſeaſon, it is adviſable that you loſe no time in ſending a full and explicit anſwer.

For further particulars I beg leave to refer you to Beneram Pundit, to whom I have written more fully, and from whoſe repreſentations you will have complete information, As I am a ſincere well-wiſher to you, and entertain no other thoughts but thoſe of the moſt ſtedfaſt friendſhip and attachment to you, you will therefore conſider to have been dictated by my great affection to you, all that I have above written, without the ſmalleſt reſerve, and knowing that I have given you full intelligence of every matter, reflect on it, and determine according to juſtice.

Poſtſcript.—In anſwer to what you from your great friendſhip write, of the reports of our enemies reſpecting the army which is arrived at Cuttack, where a ſtrict intimacy has been effected, and all diſtinction removed, how can any thing be done to be pointed at by the enemies? ſet your mind at eaſe, I will give you timely information of any thing that may be determined on.

From Modajee Bhoſila; received 13th September 1780.

Your letter of the 1ſt Rejeb, to the following purport, &c. arrived on a happy day, namely, the 1ſt Shabaun, which ſhew with a light, giving increaſe to friendſhip, and which brought me the completion of my wiſhes and deſires. This letter, after firſt giving me the ſincereſt ſatisfaction, informed me of your intentions for peace, and your reſolutions for the negociations with the Poonah Miniſters, in conſequence. The happy conjunction of thoſe two days, which is a moſt bleſſed occurrence, and does very ſeldom happen, brought with it theſe lucky events, namely, the ſettling of every matter agreeable to my wiſhes, and cauſed ſuch additional verdure in the garden of our friendſhip, that the fragrant odour of it has in every breath, given new life to my ſoul; God grant that it may be daily increaſed, and for ever ſupported by a more intimate and affectionate connection. As our mutual friendſhip is publicly known through all the Soubahs of Bengal, from our long intercourſe of letters, and as all the inhabitants of Decan talk of the friendſhip of the Engliſh for this quarter, and from that, entertain ſuſpicions of me, my heart is therefore at all times, and in all ſituations, conſulting and wiſhing for your intereſts and advantage, and I continually write in the moſt unreſerved manner every thing which appears to me adviſable; and you likewiſe are firmly reſolved to do whatever is proper and neceſſary for the maintaining this excellent intercourſe, as may be plainly and clearly diſcovered from the contents of your anſwers; and although the triplicate Karetahs lately received contain many and long particulars with this view, yet the ſhort of them can be collected from the poſtſcript, written at the foot in your own hand, by which you give me full powers in theſe negociations, and in which you write, that although the effecting and ſettling this treaty ſhould be to your damage, yet ſhould it be for the advantage of this quarter you will agree to it. When friendſhip and alliance ſubſiſts upon ſuch intimate terms, and the chief and full authority is intruſted to one ſide, the loſſes of one ſide become the loſſes of the other, and the advantages of both ſides are the ſame. Notwithſtanding the difficulties I have brought on myſelf, by raiſing and keeping up this new army, the cauſes of which are well known to you, yet all my views in bearing them, are from your friendſhip and juſtice. What now appears to be the moſt adviſable policy, is the making and maintaining peace and alliance between the Engliſh and Pundit Purdhaun, the advantages and conſequences of which I have before this written to you at large in many letters; and before the arrival of your laſt letter, I ſent to Calcutta Bejy Ram Pundit, with a liſt of the omiſſions and breaches in the former treaty and in that of Colonel Upton, and doubt not but that upon his arrival he will through the intervention of Beneram Pundit, explain every particular to you; and that you from your great prudence and knowledge will attend to and approve of them, and will be convinced, that there is nothing in this world to compare to friendſhip and unity; as ſoon as this important matter is determined between two powerful States, the eaſe of the people, and the ſecurities of the cities and towns is inſured, and all the poſſeſſions of both ſides are protected from damages: I have therefore no doubt but that you will ſend me an explicit anſwer, and that from your wiſdom and foreſight you will approve of every thing that I ſaid to my miniſter Dewagur Pundit, after I had fully informed myſelf of the contents of your letter which the ſaid Pundit has written to you in an unreſerved manner, and will be able to diſcover whether they were dictated by true friendſhip, or by mere politeneſs. As the office of guarantee in this important buſineſs is committed by you to me, it is therefore incumbent on the guarantee to write the plain and open truth to both ſides, and to bring both with equal weight into the ſcales of friendſhip; for where the guarantee does not attend equally to the intereſts of both parties, no point can be ſettled properly; it was therefore neceſſary for my Miniſter, to write all matters at large, and it is equally neceſſary and adviſable, that a full, and explicit anſwer be returned to it as ſoon as poſſible. For the well ſettling and adjuſting of all theſe points, I have ſent to Poonah Sadaſio Pundit, a confidential perſon, who reſided here intruſted with all the concerns of Pundit Purdhaun; we ſhall ſee what he will be able to effect, of which immediate information ſhall be given you. A memorandum of all the omiſſions and breaches in the articles of Colonel Upton's treaty, has been committed to Bejy Ram Pundit, who on his arrival will preſent it to you; and a note of ſuch negociations as will take place reſpecting the Talooks and Tannahs of Gojeraut, the affairs of the Guicawars, the accounts of the new troops raiſed on both ſides for this war, and the invaſions and devaſtations of the Bombay Chief in Cokun, were he has taken ſeveral places is incloſed in the letter to Beneram Pundit, who will preſent it to you for your peruſal and approbation; when you will write a full and explicit anſwer to the preſent and former memorandums, that no miſunderſtanding may remain, but that all diſputes may, by the refuſing and granting of all points, be changed into a firm and laſting friendſhip. In all my proceedings in this matter, I have had no other view, but the proving my friendſhip and affection for you, and I conſider the honour and reputation of the Engliſh, the ſame as my own; but in the caſe of a guarantee, the honour and credit of the other ſide is likewiſe to be attended to in the negociations, without which, nothing can be ſettled properly; whenever theſe points are determined by you in a ſuitable manner, it will be highly adviſable and proper for Dewagur Pundit to go immediately to Calcutta, for the purpoſe of preparing the treaty, and of acquainting you with many of my views, which are entirely and ſincerely tending to your intereſts and honour. As there are two months to the end of the rains, the ſooner an anſwer can be received the better; and it is neceſſary that General Goddard and the Bombay Chief receive poſitive orders to deſiſt from the hoſtilities they have commenced in the diſtrict of Cokun. In ſhort, I have no view or intention in what I have written, but the performing performing the duties of friendſhip, and the conſulting your intereſts and advantage; of this be well convinced. For further particulars, I refer you to the Hindoſtanny letter of Beneram Pundit.

Poſtſcript. The ſame as the one to Dewagur Pundit's letter.

Tranſlation of a Letter from Dewan Dewagur Pundit to Beneram Pundit: written the 14th Shabaun, (16th Auguſt) received the 13th September 1780.

Your letter diſpatched the 29th Jemadiaſſanie (3d July) and received the 25th Rejib (28th July) the contents thereof fully explaining and particularizing your conferences with the Governor General, written by his order, and ſigned by him, I clearly underſtand, and have communicated the ſtate and circumſtances of every matter, very particularly, to Bejy Ram Doby, and ſent him to you after his arrival; he will acquaint you with his commiſſion. You write me, that the indiſpoſition of the Governor's Moonſhey and the want of a Karetah, has occaſioned the delay of the letter to the Preſence, but that you have at length diſpatched it, ſigned in Perſian and Engliſh; nevertheleſs, the Karetah containing the Governor's letter to the Maha Rajah, with one to me, did not arrive till eight days after the receipt of yours, and there was no letter from you with it. The Governor's letter is very particular, and the purport of it is, that peace and amity with the Peiſhwa is neceſſary; but does he expect it is to be done by a piece of paper? he ſays, was I fully authorized on the part of the Peiſhwa to ſettle this buſineſs, he ſhould be very happy, for he is well convinced I would propoſe nothing that would not be acceptable to him, and propoſe the Rajah to be the mediator and guarantee, and to make peace with the Peiſhwa, but how pleaſing ſoever the words of Engliſh gentlemen may be, they ſhould be open and undiſguiſed. My friend, we are continually writing an abridgement of real facts, under the veil of particular arrangements. If the miniſters of Poonah will write, and give me leave to go to Calcutta, fully authorized to confer on the terms of peace, then ſhould I arrive there, and any evaſions or diſputes ſhould ariſe, it would be difficult for me to ſhew my face here again. Hitherto I have ſeveral times been mediator between the Sirdars of the empire, and by the bleſſing of God, peace has been eſtabliſhed, ſo as to ſatisfy all parties, and as yet thank God, I have never been reproached, nor my name abuſed, neither have I had any contention or diſpute afterwards. Between the Maha Rajah and the Governor the tree of friendſhip and concord flouriſhes; but in future the root of friendſhip and unity might be more firmly fixed, and with poſterity might be immoveable, and the Engliſh and the deſcendants of the houſe of Bhoſila might be united by ties of friendſhip with one heart and one ſoul. If by the will of God the advantages of ſuch a friendſhip ſhould on my arrival be clearly ſeen and underſtood, and the Governor ſhould be perfectly deſirous and fully inclined to obtain them, I would then firſt ſtrengthen the root of our own friendſhip, and after that thoroughly cleanſe the mind of Pundit Purdhaun Row of hatred and rancour, and confirm the agreement by the oaths and faith of each party, and in ſecurity thereof the Maha Rajah ſhould be guarantee; but if I ſhould arrive at Calcutta, and any evaſive and deceitful diſcourſe ſhould ariſe, then what advantage can there be in my taking ſo long a journey, although I am thoroughly convinced in every reſpect that the Governor would not deviate from the main buſineſs, nor permit me to be hereafter reproached; but becauſe the Chiefs of the Bhoſila family are famous for keeping faith and fulfilling engagements, ſo that in whatever they may ſay or write there is no deceit or ambiguity, and it being certain that the mind of the Governor is diſpoſed to peace, my name and reputation ſhould be alſo eſtabliſhed. Therefore as the letters of the Governor are inveloped in myſteries, I am under doubts and apprehenſions. It may be I may return in diſgrace; and at this time whatever reputation and friendſhip I have acquired, ſhall I throw it to the winds? I have for this reaſon been thus particular, that preliminaries being ſettled, our conferences may not be fruitleſs, but effectual and to the purpoſe: when I can be certain of that my going to Calcutta will be highly fit and proper.

Firſt Preliminary. Colonel Upton having concluded a treaty at Poonah let that be obſerved and confirmed. If the treaty which the Bombay gentlemen entered into after the battle of Worgaum appears to have been forced from them, yet ſurely that with Colonel Upton was voluntary, the Bombay gentlemen not having adhered to that, the blame of perfidy and breach of faith lies on them, and they are the cauſe of war, which has loaded each ſide with the immenſe expence of near a crore of rupees. This year General Goddard and Scindia have been fighting for three months: but what advantage has either obtained? Ruin and devaſtation has been the conſequence to both; it is to the gentlemen of Bombay that the cauſe of theſe diſputes and contention muſt be imputed. But let what is paſt be forgot; now it is prudent and adviſable for both ſides to ſtop the current of diſſention, that the Maha Rajah being the mediator and guarantee, may reſtore peace and thereby give eaſe to mankind and ſatisfaction to the Creator; and a firm friendſhip and union being eſtabliſhed, the enemies of both ſides ſhall be confounded. I am a warm friend to both parties; and when I ſay this, God is witneſs of my ſincerity. It is true General Goddard has this year taken Ahmadabad, and by the attack of Brodrah has brought over Futty Sing Guickwar, one of the ancient Sirdars, on the ſide of the Peiſhwa, to join him; he has alſo ſubdued Guzzerat, and the gentlemen of Bombay have taken Kolean and two or three other places in the province of Kocun. At the time then, when overtures for peace may be attended to by Pundit Purdhaun and the Governor, with a ſincere view to a reconciliation, theſe places ſhould be given up, and reſtored to Pundit Purdhaun in the ſame manner he before poſſeſſed them; the chout ſhould be collected from the city of Surat as before, and whatever Jaghires belong to the Sirdars of the Preſence (Peiſhwa) or others in the province of Guzzerat, ſhould be reſtored them, and what remains after that, ſhould be equally divided by Pundit Purdhaun and General Goddard, and one half given to Futty Sing and the other to Gobind Row Guickwar, that the honours of the Guickwars may be preſerved, and the promiſe of General Goddard fulfilled.

Second. In reſpect to Ragonaut Row, Pundit Purdhaun ſhould conform to the ſtipulations made for him by Colonel Upton, and if any doubt ſhould ariſe that they will not be adhered to, one of the principal Sirdars ſhould be ſecurity for the performance thereof. Let God be witneſs, that nothing ſhall be intended contrary to the terms of the treaty, and let Ragonaut Row deſiſt from perfidy.

Third. For theſe two years paſt the expence of the Engliſh army has been very great; ſo has alſo the expence been on the other ſide, of Pundit Purdhaun: let there be no demand on either ſide for reimburſing this expence, but let Pundit Purdhaun and the Engliſh gentlemen recover their heavy expence by uniting themſelves and jointly attacking their enemies; then whatever countries they may conquer from the enemy after leaving the Jaghires free, what ſhall remain, let them equally divide it like brothers, and reimburſe themſelves. Surely both Pundit Purdhaun and the Engliſh gentlemen will readily agree to this.

Fourth. The Governor agreeing to the firſt propoſition, let him write a letter to me under the teſtimony of his faith; and encloſing letters to the gentlemen of Bombay and General Goddard to this purport, that they ceaſe hoſtilities becauſe of the approaching peace and amity amity which is about to take place by means of the Maja Rajah; that Dewan Dewagur Pundit is ſent by Pundit Purdhaun to Calcutta, to eſtabliſh and confirm the reconciliation, and that they ſtir not from the places where they now are; then, when I ſhall arrive at Calcutta, I may with pleaſure aſſiſt to eſtabliſh friendſhip and unity to the ſatisfaction of both parties; and the General, Pundit Purdhaun, and Nanna Purnaveeſe, having a friendly meeting, may ſtrengthen the foundation of friendſhip, and whatſoever ſhould be determined on between the Governor and me in our conferences, the General ſhould conform thereto.

Fifth. After I ſhall have been a month with the Governor in Calcutta, he ſhall permit me to depart, and ſhall ſend an Engliſh gentleman of quick penetration and ſound judgment with me, that when we arrive at Poonah he may deliver up Ragonaut Row; according to the terms of the treaty with Colonel Upton and General Goddard, Pundit Purdhaun, and Nanna Purnaveeſe ſhall have a meeting at Poonah in his preſence, and fixing their ſeals to the treaty, it ſhall be witneſſed by ſome of the Chiefs in ſuch manner as ſhall be preſcribed, after which he may return.

Sixth. The gentlemen of Bombay having taken in the province of Kocun, Kolean, Belapore, Argingur, and Indergur, and having ſubdued ſome other places, theſe ſhall be given up, but Salſette having been ſix years in the poſſeſſion of the Engliſh gentlemen, it would ſhow a more ſincere deſire for friendſhip, were they to give this up alſo.

Make theſe conditions known to the Governor General immediately, and ſend me a proper anſwer with all expedition.

If the Governor ſhall be inclined to agree to the terms of the treaty made by Colonel Upton, then let letters confirming this agreement be ſent under the pledge of an oath, that my going to Calcutta, and the Maha Rajah's being guarantee may be effectual, but if he ſay, how can the Engliſh gentlemen agree to theſe conditions? it may be ſo; yet they are poſſeſſed of excellent wiſdom, penetration, and foreſight, and can ſee what is beſt for the good of mankind: they will therefore certainly agree, and the friendſhip and alliance will remain firm as the baſis of the earth to the end of time. There is no deceit in this; when theſe preliminaries ſhall be ſettled I ſhall go to meet the Governor. My friend, may your health and intereſt daily increaſe.

Though I am a ſtranger in the Decan, and not the principal miniſter in the ſervice of the Maha Rajah, yet at this time it happens that I ſhould be choſen to go to Calcutta to eſtabliſh friendſhip; this is an extraordinary piece of fortune. When I ſhall arrive in the preſence of the Governor, the army which is in Cuttack ſhall be recalled, and the plan which is the Nabob Nizam Ally Khan's, will be laid aſide.

In the Dewan's own hand.

The Nabob Nizam Ally Khan having ſettled the plan of operations, has wrote ſeveral letters to the Pundit Peiſhwa, to Nanna Purnaveeſe, and Scindia, and they have wrote to the Rajah, that according to the plan laid down he ought to invade the Engliſh dominions, and give no reſpite to the Decan, in making preparations for war; and they urge this convincing argument, that his giving a free paſſage through his dominions has been the cauſe of all theſe evils. As every one has liſtened to the advice of the Nabob Nizam Ally Khan, it was neceſſary for us alſo to ſend an army to Cuttack; but it is of no conſequence, for like the waters of the ocean, it has not gone beyond its juſt and proper bounds. When peace ſhall be eſtabliſhed between the Governor and Pundit Purdhaun, this expence to us ſhall alſo be removed: this is the true ſtate of our mind, and for this reaſon we ſhew ſo much anxiety and unſteadineſs: we are deſirous that peace may be eſtabliſhed between the Governor and Pundit Purdhaun, that we may be relieved from theſe importunities; to effect this, Shadaſeo, the Pundit Peiſhwa's Vackeel, is ſent to Poonah, and Bejy Ram diſpatched to Calcutta. Whatſoever we may receive from Poonah you ſhall be particularly adviſed; for that it is certain there are many who will obſtruct the accompliſhment of the treaty and who will endeavour to prevent its taking place, but the Nabob Amaud-ul-Dowlah Bahadre is poſſeſſed of foreſight: in whatſoever manner he may be inclined to peace, it muſt be approveable. Let it be manifeſt that I am a ſincere friend. Appendix. No. 301.

From Modajee Bhoſila: received 21ſt September 1780.

Your agreeable letter, and the duplicate and triplicate of it, informing me, that you had, upon the repreſentations of Beneram Pundit, given orders for the furniſhing the army at Cuttack with proviſions, and that whatever elſe they might have occaſion for ſhall be ſupplied them and that you conſider that army as your own, arrived in a happy hour, and gave me the moſt ſincere ſatisfaction. This act of yours I conſider to have proceeded from the greatneſs of your friendſhip, and the ſincerity of your heart; and the many offices and duties which have mutually taken place between us in the progreſs of this great concern may be conceived and comprehended in the mind, but cannot be deſcribed in writing; and when friendſhip is carried to this pitch, the armies of both ſides become truly the ſame in the opinion of both. It is at all times the duty of both ſides to conſider as the ſame their mutual concerns, and to acquaint one another with every particular; but at preſent that our friendſhip and connection is arrived at ſo intimate a ſituation, how can any thing be concealed from either ſide according to the verſes of Huzzut Jamy. Although a hundred coverings ſhould be laid over the muſk, yet the ſcent of it will force its way through the hundred coverings. For this reaſon I have taken upon my ſhoulders, and hold aloft, the ſtandard of friendſhip of you and the Engliſh nation, and what is more, I ſtyle myſelf by the name of Amaud ul Dowlah.

I have ſent to Poonab Sadaſeo Pundit, a perſon in the confidence of Pundit Peiſhwa who reſided here as his Vackeel, and I have charged him with many and important points in the negociations for peace with the Engliſh. I am now waiting in expectation of his anſwer, and will inform you of it immediately.

As from of old you had a friendſhip and alliance with the family of Pundit Purdhaun, it is neceſſary that you at all events and in all ſituations keep it up with Madho Row Narrain, who is the youthful remains of that family, and a ſingle orphan to whom by all religons protection and friendſhip is commanded. The friendſhip, intimacy, and agreement in all matters, and the keeping concealed no ſecrets, ſentiments, or views of either ſide, and the other friendly offices which you have done, induced me, and ſtill induce me to conſider you and the Pundit Peiſhwa in the ſame light.

At preſent that I have ſtyled myſelf Amaud ul Dowlah, what is left to be done? It is accordingly neceſſary for you to inform me of all points, however inconſiderate, of your future advantages and diſadvantages, without the ſmalleſt reſerve. On this ſubject I have many and long converſations with my Miniſter Dewagur Pundit, who has written them fully to Beneram Pundit, which I requeſt you will attend to.

As I have already written 6 or 7 propoſals to you, the moſt adviſable of all is this, That a peace ought by all means to be eſtabliſhed with Pundit Peiſhwa, and after this has been ſettled, Dewagur Pundit ſhall be ſent to you, entruſted with many negociations, who will in perſon explain to you all my ſentiments, at which time whatever ought to be determined on ſhall be done. For the preſent be convinced that I have written theſe preliminaries for peace and alliance ſolely from my regard to friendſhip, which is at all times firm and ſtedfaſt. Loſe no time in anſwering theſe points to ſet my mind at reſt. The future management of every thing depends upon your anſwer.

Appendix. No. 301.

Poſtſcript.—With reſpect to the aids required for my ſon, whatever Beneram Pundit ſhall repreſent to you, you will undoubtedly comply with.

From Dewagur Pundit. Received 21ſt September 1780.

The triplicate as well as duplicate of your agreeable letter, informing me that you had, in conſequence of the repreſentations of Beneram Pundit, given orders for the army which is arrived at Cuttack to be ſupplied with proviſions from your own provinces, and for them to be furniſhed with every other neceſſary that they may deſire, and that you look upon that army to be your own, arrived in a happy hour. The contents of it were properly peruſed and underſtood by the Maha Rajah, and I received the ſincereſt pleaſure and ſatisfaction from the many marks it contained of your friendſhip. What this quarter has to this day done in ſupport of their friendſhip and alliance, and the many friendly offices you have done them, can be conceived and comprehended in the mind, but are not reducible to writing. At preſent that the inclinations and wiſhes for peace which before were only on one ſide, are now plainly reciprocal. Thanks be given to the Almighty for it.

When General Goddard arrived at Hoſhungabad, and by the advice and ſolicitations of this quarter remained there two months: when people of truſt were ſent to ſee that he was properly ſupplied with proviſions and all other neceſſaries; when two confidential perſons of Mr. Elliott's train came here, and Mr. Watherſtone likewiſe arrived at Naigpore, to negociate many matters, and to procure ſeveral neceſſaries, ſuch as bullocks to draw the cannon, and to get money for his bills of exchange; when this quarter, notwithſtanding that the Vackeels of Pundit Peiſhwa, and the Nabob Nizam Ally Khan were preſent, aſſiſted and procured the completion of all that gentleman's objects; and when in the points and negociations entruſted to Mr. Elliott, which after his deceaſe were committed to Beneram Pundit and General Goddard, karetahs and letters were written you with the greateſt caution, foreſight, and circumſpection, which, together with a memorandum of our views and ſentiments, were ſent by the way of Cuttack, under charge of Beneram Pundit, and letters were written to the General deſiring him by all means to ſtay at Hoſhungabad till the receipt of anſwers from Calcutta, and the General paying no regard to our advice departed for Surat, and an anſwer was received from Calcutta, that you had for the preſent ſuſpended your views, but were ſtill, and would continue in all times firm in your friendſhip to the Maha Rajah, and that on all occaſions of neceſſity, aſſiſtance ſhould be afforded when affairs had come to this paſs, that we had loſt one ſide, and had not gained the other, that is to ſay, that from our friendſhip and connection with the Engliſh, we had become obnoxious to the Nabob Nizam ul Dowlah and Pundit Purdhaun, and you had given this explicit anſwer.

As to the delays in furniſhing aſſiſtance, and executing engagements and treaties, at that time you yourſelf well know the difficulties we were brought into, and I ſeeing none but the Poonah Miniſters inclined to the putting an end to the hoſtilities, being remedileſs, went to Poonah. In the mean while were received accounts of the defeat of the Bombay army, ſo that whether I was inclined or not, I was abſolutely compelled to go to Poonah; for had you written a full anſwer to the memorandum ſent you, and had you afforded the proper aſſiſtance, or had not General Goddard marched towards Surat what occaſion ſhould I have to go to Poonah? On the contrary, I ſhould in that caſe have ſent for Major Camac, who was arrived in the dependencies of Jetteeſſgurra. I ſhould have aſſociated to myſelf many friends, and ſhould by their aſſiſtance have ſettled every thing according to your wiſhes; ſo that the Decan people could never have attempted to oppoſe me. As the opportunity was loſt, and the arrow had been ſhot from the bow, it is impoſſible to recal it, and it is equally uſeleſs to talk of it.

After my arrival at Poonah, having ſeen and made myſelf acquainted with the changes and revolutions of the world, and the occurrences of time, and keeping in view my friendſhip for you, and alſo upon receiving letters from you to this purport, that you would do whatever was conſiſtent with the honour of the Engliſh, that you were ready to abide by the treaty of Colonel Upton, but that any thing which had been agreed to was without your knowledge, the attachment and friendſhip I ſhewed and the good ſervices I did the Engliſh in my negociations, are well known to you from my frequent letters. The putting away the new treaty which had been entered into by the Bombay army after their defeat, the beginning negociations agreeable to your orders reſpecting the former treaties, the writing continually to General Goddard and to Calcutta about peace, the ſettling conformable to his letters a meeting between him and the Poonah Miniſters, and making Ballajee Jenardun fix his tent without the town for this purpoſe, and the ſending confidential perſons to Surat to confer with the General, all theſe matters were entirely effected by the exertion of my friendſhip and attachment. When General Goddard, after firſt writing about peace, afterwards contradicted it, and prepared himſelf for hoſtilities, and in Poonah likewiſe all the ſupplies neceſſary were in readineſs, and Scindia and Holcar were ready with their utmoſt expedition, and by the propoſals and advice of Nizam-ul-Dowlah the plan of a war in the four quarters was determined on, and Hyder Naig likewiſe has become an intimate ally, at that time, on account of our propinquity to the Soubahs of Bengal, it was determined by the plan of the ſaid Nabob, that this quarter ſhould ſend an army towards thoſe provinces. From a regard and knowledge of political matters, we agreed to this plan, and accordingly raiſed 30,000 new horſe, and were brought to great diſtreſs by the expences of them. In this matter two different things were to be obſerved, one the keeping upon terms with Pundit Purdhaun, which nothing but his being near us, and his country bordering upon ours, renders neceſſary, and the other the maintaining a ſtrict and intimate connection and friendſhip with you; for it is as difficult to ſupport an appearance of friendſhip with Pundit Purdhaun and the Nabob Nizam Ally Khan, and at the ſame time to keep our connections with you entire, as it is to unite fire and water. Notwithſtanding open war and hoſtilities had commenced between General Goddard and Scindia and Holcar, and repeated meſſages were received from Pundit Peiſhwa, hurrying us to march towards Bengal, we however diſpatched the army in ſo ſlow a manner, that they might be able to reach Cuttack at the commencement of the rains, and they are now ſtationed in the province of Oriſſa.

Bejy Ram Pundit has been diſpatched to you reſpecting the buſineſs of peace with the Peiſhwa, and has charge of a memorandum of Colonel Upton's treaty, by which you mean to abide, that peace and alliance may at any rate be eſtabliſhed with Pundit Peiſhwa, and that you may put a ſtop to the preſent hoſtilities. As many and great loſſes and diſtreſſes have been brought on us, as by the raiſing and keeping up a new army, in caſe peace ſhould be made, ſomething muſt be done by Pundit Peiſhwa, ſomething by the Nabob Nizam-ul-Dowlah, and ſomething by the Engliſh gentlemen, to make good the expences of them.

As at this time a karetah and letters have been received to this purport, that you before had not the ſmalleſt intentions or thoughts of war with Pundit Purdhaun, and have none ſtill, but that from the defeat of the Engliſh of Bombay, hoſtilities had been determined on for the defence of the honour of the Engliſh nation, and for the protection of their poſſeſſions: that General Goddard had been victorious; that you could not give the faith of a treaty and engagement to a mere piece of paper till the ſtrong ties of the guarantee of ſome powerful chief is added added to it; that as you have the greateſt confidence in the Bhoſila family, and are acquainted with them for twenty years, you agree to any thing guaranteed by the Maha Rajah, but that we will not liſten to any propoſals from the Poonah Miniſters which are improper for you to aſſent to; that we will do every thing which is conſiſtent with the honour of the Engliſh; that when I have received from the Poonah Miniſters powers for theſe negociations, you will be much rejoiced if I come to Calcutta for the ſettling the baſis of a treaty, when our ſentiments may be explained in perſonal conference without any witneſs. For this reaſon, Sadaſeo Pundit, a perſon of truſt who reſided here on the part of Pundit Peiſhwa, has been ſent to Poonah charged with the explaining all points, and the receiving their aſſent or denial on all points of theſe negociations, of which no part is concealed from or unknown to me. I have no doubt but that within this week he has reached Poonah, and has explained every thing committed to him, and will write me the anſwer which he finds them to have reſolved upon. We ſhall ſoon ſee what they will determine, and what anſwer they will write. As we now received your triplicate letter, accompanying a karetah for the Maha Rajah, about your having given orders for the furniſhing the army arrived at Cuttack with proviſions from your dependencies, and containing many other particulars, ſuch as conſidering that army as your own, and as you have plainly in many inſtances ſhewed your knowledge of the virtues, courage, and great qualities of Rajah Chumnajee Baboo, whom you from your friendſhip and unanimity, and for the maintaining the rights of alliance, were equally ready and reſolved to aſſiſt as the Maha Rajah himſelf can be; our friendſhip is thus carried to the higheſt pitch, and nothing further is left to be done in it; the reputation, honour, and name of both ſides are now of equal weight, and we are even two bodies in one ſoul, and the army arrived at Cuttack is in reality yours. But according to that verſe of Hafiz, how can that remain a ſecret which is mentioned in the durbar? In the ſame manner from the coming of General Goddard to Hoſhungabad, and the unreſerved correſpondence of letters between us, the friendſhip of this quarter for the Engliſh was proclaimed among all the inhabitants of Decan, &c. both friends and enemies; and your affection for the family of Bhoſila was publicly ſpoken of in your council, and among all your friends and foes; and was believed by every one. Whatever can happen from this intimate connection will give pleaſure to our friends and grief to our enemies; but nothing can happen which may rejoice our foes, and diſtreſs our allies. To this reaſon, not thinking it conſiſtent with the ſincerity and openneſs of friendſhip to keep the ſecrets and ſentiments any longer concealed in our mind, but exalting the ſtandard of our alliance with the Engliſh in the eyes of all Decan, we told Sadaſeo Pundit, the Vackeel of Pundit Peiſhwa, every thing which was proper, and ſent him to Poonah. We muſt now wait for his anſwer; and we have through Bejy Ram Pundit ſent you a memorandum of the articles of Colonel Upton's treaty, which have been omitted and broken, at the ſame time adviſing you to give up the aſſiſting of Ragonaut Row, and to remain ſtedfaſt in the articles of the former treaty; and beſides this, a paper of ſuch articles which will now be propoſed reſpecting the dependencies of Gojeraut, together with karetahs and letters, have been delivered to the ſaid Pundit, with which he has been diſpatched to your preſence, and which, when you receive, will, I doubt not, explain all matters to you.

As we have at this time received your triplicate and karetah and letter, reſpecting the orders you have given for furniſhing the army arrived at Cuttack with proviſions, and that you conſider that army as your own, it becomes neceſſary for the Maha Rajah to remove the covering which had been kept over the eyes of his friends; to make public to all ranks of people his ſentiments and deſigns, and even to ſtyle himſelf in Naigpore, Amaud-ul-Dowlah; to exert himſelf as far as his life and power carry him in effecting what the honour of the Engliſh and your wiſhes require; to keep ſecret and concealed from you no point, but to write and ſpeak plainly his opinion and advice; and on my part it is now incumbent on me to give proofs in all events of the ſincerity of my obedience and attachment. Although many matters have ariſen which ſeem difficult and hard, and which no one but thoſe who are entruſted with the ſecret can underſtand, yet when you ſhew ſo much favour and affection to Rajah Chumnajee Baboo, the ſon of my maſter, and conſider him as much as your own life, it becomes immediately my duty to lay before you every thought and idea which my attachment and friendſhip to you may have given birth to. Theſe it is adviſable that you keep concealed in your breaſt, which is the ſafe receptacle of ſecrets, and that you ſuffer no one to be acquainted with them but thoſe who are entruſted with your other ſecrets, otherwiſe it will bring great difficulties on us. It is the abſolute duty of all true and ſincere well-wiſhers, in any difficult ſituations to keep no views or opinions in any matter concealed from their maſter, although they plainly ſee that by diſcovering them they will bring inevitable dangers on themſelves. This is in fact ſporting with their own lives; but it is at the ſame time incumbent on his protector to exert himſelf in every thing which may prevent the other's ſecret offices from being diſcovered, and from his attachment and ſervices being the cauſe of his deſtruction; to keep the ſecrets made known to him as carefully as he would his own life, to do whatever is proper to be done, or elſe to remain perfectly ſilent, and not to ſay that ſuch a one has written me this, I am accordingly employed in this matter, and have got authentic particulars of it, at the ſame time ſhewing what his friend had written him. You are ſuperiorly ſkilled in the knowledge of all political concerns, and from this you will, without doubt, keep all you learn with the moſt careful circumſpection.

APPENDIX, No. 304.

Bengal Secret Conſultations, 4th September 1780.

4th September 1780.

Sir Eyre Coote—It has never ſince my firſt entering upon public life, fallen to my ſhare to deliberate on a buſineſs of ſuch extent and importance as the preſent criſis of the Company's affairs in India. And unequal as I find myſelf to the taſk of deviſing means in my own mind ſo well approved as to leave me without a doubt of their extricating them from the more than common difficulties in which they are at preſent involved; nevertheleſs do I find myſelf called upon equally by a regard for the intereſts of my nation and my employers to ſuggeſt ſuch meaſures as in my judgment appear beſt calculated to repel thoſe evils which have already fallen upon the Company's poſſeſſions in the Carnatic, as well as to avert, if poſſible, the further calamities with which their intereſts in general are threatened.

I am well aware of the very great diſadvantages under which I ſhall here give my opinions; I mean the expectations entertained from this quarter, both by the Company and the nation, of reſources to ratify thoſe conditions, unavoidable on a renewal of the charter. But whilſt not in poſſeſſion of theſe reſources, and whilſt the very ſpring from whence they are ſuppoſed to flow, and I truſt they may ſtill at a future period be derived, is itſelf in danger; I flatter myſelf I ſhall ſtand exculpated in the eyes of my king, my country, and my employers, in recommending the adoption of meaſures, for the ſecurity of ſo important an object to all, however oppoſite they may be to the immediate hopes of the public.

In the preſent exigency of our affairs, with no money in our treaſury, excepting the war depoſit in our new fort, and which I have been taught to underſtand the demands demands againſt us, both from the civil and military eſtabliſhments, have nearly if not entirely mortgaged, added to the knowledge we have, that our receipts of revenue are barely adequate to defray our preſent diſburſements, it behoves us to conſider in what manner the extraordinaries attendant upon the extenſive wars we are now engaged in are to be ſupplied.

I know of no other mode than to endeavour to borrow money on bond, and at the ſmalleſt intereſt procurable. This is a ſtep which indiſpenſable as it appears to be in the preſent ſtate of our finances, I would not heſitate to adviſe in a like critical conjuncture of the Company's intereſts, even allowing that there were no calls for its immediate diſburſement.

In all well-regulated Governments, it is a leading maxim to act in ſuch manner as may tend to intereſt as many of the community as poſſible in its welfare and ſucceſs. A natural love of the laws and religion by which they are governed, binds the ſubject to the intereſts of his country; but in this, where every action of a native's life is influenced by ſelfiſh motives, and the more powerfully in proportion to the magnitude of the pecuniary object, and totally devoid as they muſt be of any further attachment to us than what ariſes from the neceſſity of our protection, it would appear to me, there is no more certain method of enſuring their good wiſhes and ſupport to the cauſe of the public, than by inducing them to place as much of their property as poſſible under the ſecurity of our Government. In doing this we alſo diveſt them of thoſe means, which in caſe of invaſion of a foreign enemy, might either through accident, or by their free-will contributions, be inſtrumental to our deſtruction. The reputation too of having a large treaſury would operate in the moſt favourable manner upon the minds of our adherents, by the confidence it would give them of our ſuperiority, at the ſame time that it would damp the minds of our enemies, by the very great diſtance at which it would place all their hopes of ſucceſs.

For the preceding reaſons, ſo thoroughly am I convinced of its being an eligible policy, I ſhall, juſt for the ſake of drawing a compariſon between the two points, as they mutually affect the Company's intereſts, make the following ſuppoſition:

We have already got a conſiderable ſum of money in our treaſury, ſay two crores; our ſituation in every other reſpect the ſame as at preſent, which every impartial obſerver muſt allow is far from being a ſafe one; but by drawing into our treaſury a further ſum of two crores of rupees, I not only provide againſt the evils which threaten us, but give to our Government, by attaching to its intereſts a number of the moſt opulent of its ſubjects, a form of ſtability which nothing but the moſt unforeſeen and unexpected accident ſhall be able to ſhake. Our affairs render it neceſſary to ſupport this policy for two years; it has not however happened in the courſe thereof, that we have had occaſion to ſpend even a rupee of the borrowed ſum, which we ſhall admit was taken up at five per cent. Our buſineſs is finiſhed, the tranquillity of the country reſtored, and we pay it back with a premium of twenty lacks; a ſum which ſurely when brought againſt the great points we had ſecured by it, will hardly be thought deſerving our conſideration; and in the event of our ſpending any part of the principal, the argument in favour of the meaſure is ſtill ſtrengthened, as the neceſſity for it more plainly appears.

The hoſtile operations of Hyder Ally, the very great ſtrength of his army, the want of money at Madras, are ſubjects that demand our moſt ſerious conſideration, whilſt they leave us no alternative, but that of all others the leaſt deſirable—a war; to proſecute which, the moſt ſpeedy and vigorous meaſures ought to be adopted.

In the firſt place, a ſum of money adequate to the emergency of the occaſion, ſhould be ſent to Madras, provided they are not able to furniſh themſelves by the method they are now purſuing, of raiſing money upon the Company's bonds; and that there may be as little delay as poſſible in furniſhing this ſupply, if neceſſary, I would recommend its being taken from the war depoſit in the new fort, as being a fund apparently provided for ſuch exigencies.

The particular manner in which our troops on the coaſt are diſtributed in garriſons ſituated at a diſtance from each other, and the communication between them partly cut off by Hyder's cavalry, may render it a ſervice of no leſs difficulty than danger to aſſemble an army ſufficiently ſtrong to riſk an engagement with the very formidable force he is reported to have now in the field. I feel this circumſtance with the more ſenſible regret and concern, as the diſtance from hence puts it beyond a poſſibility to give any aſſiſtance that could afford immediate relief. However, in order to lighten the burthen, and to give ſpirit and confidence to ſuch operations as the Madras Adminiſtration from their own diſcernment and local obſervation may find it expedient to purſue againſt Hyder (for to their own conduct it muſt in a great meaſure now be left) as well as to awe the Nizam from attempting any thing againſt the Circars, to deter Hyder from turning his views towards theſe northern dominions, and to be in readineſs to act in concert with what force may now be in the Circars againſt the French, who, as they are at this time expected, may attempt a landing on that coaſt; I ſay, for theſe moſt important purpoſes, I would recommend a ſufficient army being formed to the ſouthward; but to the good effects of this ſalutary meaſure I cannot help obſerving that I perceive a very powerful obſtacle, and which I ſhould be happy to ſee removed, I mean a Maratta army on the confines of Cuttack, and now laying in conſiderable force on our borders. As they have had no enemy to oppoſe, and as we have as yet neither made or threatened to make any encroachments upon their territories in that quarter, I ſhould be glad to be informed of the cauſe and purpoſe of their being there, the more eſpecially, as I have been told that for upwards of eleven years paſt, they have never once ſhewn themſelves in thoſe parts.

To this query it may be anſwered, that as they have been there for ſome months, and have offered us no harm, they are our friends. As a military man, I muſt declare that the circumſtance itſelf in the effects it produces diſproves the allegation. Were they invited into their preſent ſituation by us, or did they come to ſuppreſs any diſturbances that had ariſen there? If neither of theſe has been the caſe, they muſt be an army of obſervation leagued with thoſe who wiſh no good to our affairs, and have proved more injurious to our political intereſts, than if they had abſolutely entered our territories, in which caſe we could immediately have applied the remedy, but as they have conducted themſelves, they have by forming a barrier on our frontier, in the high road of communication with our poſſeſſions on the coaſt, encouraged, covered, and given ſpirit and confidence to Hyder Ally's tranſactions in the Carnatic, whilſt they have on the other hand ſerved as a check, and deſtroy every favourable effect that might have reſulted from our operations, and ſo alarmed and intimidated our inhabitants, that there is not a man amongſt them of any rank or denomination with whom I have converſed, and I have had full opportunity in coming down the country to learn their ſentiments, who has not expreſſed his fears of their coming into this country; and in ſuch caſe pointed out his own defenceleſs ſtate, and the dependence he had upon us, as holding the only power to afford him protection; under the influence of theſe apprehenſions many are preparing, and ſome I am informed are actually removing their property and families to places which appear to them more ſecure. With ſuch incontrovertible evidence of the prejudice done to the eaſe and happineſs of our ſubjects by the continuance of this force at Cuttack, is it poſſible that I ſhould ſo totally overlook my duty to the public, both in my civil and military capacity, as not to be anxious to diſburthen our affairs of a weight which may impede impede every operation we wiſh to carry on, either offenſive or otherwiſe?

It is therefore my opinion, that under whatever authority they may be, an immediate application ſhould be made for them to retire, as their remaining where they are diſturbs the peace of our provinces. This requiſition will ſoon diſcover the reality of their intentions towards us: and in order that we may not ſuffer ourſelves to be further injured by delays, a time ſhould be ſtipulated for receiving an anſwer; ſhould this be denied us, our own ſafety and intereſts will dictate to us how to act.

I muſt further point out the neceſſity of covering the province of Babar, which now lies open and expoſed to the incurſions even of ſmall parties of the enemy; for this purpoſe I recommend the giving immediate orders for completing our two regiments of cavalry, and calling them down as ſoon as the ſeaſon will admit, for its protection.

I do not apprehend at this time any danger to the Vizier's provinces, as the troops ſtationed in thoſe parts, when properly arranged will, excluſive of our cavalry, be more than ſufficient to prevent the Marattas from entering them.

It ſhould, however, be ſtrongly recommended to the Vizier, to be attentive to the keeping up a reſpectable body of horſe, and the Reſident directed to urge the neceſſity of their being regularly and punctually paid.

As theſe are the outlines neceſſary to be firſt conſidered, I ſhall not take up the attention of the Board further at preſent, but reſerve what I have ſtill to propoſe until the detail of the buſineſs ſhall be entered upon.

(Signed) Eyre Coote.

Governor General—I could not ſuffer a greater mortification than that which I have undergone, from the neceſſity impoſed on me of propoſing the queſtion now before the Board, and I did intend to have contented myſelf with entering ſimply my aſſent to it. But the Commander in Chief has ſupported it by an argument drawn from the wants of the people of theſe provinces, and eſpecially their more wealthy inhabitants, which I think deſerving a more particular attention, as it proves not only the propriety of opening our treaſury for the mutual relief of this Government and the country itſelf, but of extending this meaſure without any limitation. I think it proper both to add my concurrence in this opinion, and to extend the reaſoning on which it is founded to the other conſequences which are deducible from it.

The ſlighteſt cauſes will be ſufficient to excite a general alarm among the people, who having no criterion to judge of the truth or probability of public rumours, and being by nature timid, will therefore be ready to believe ſuch as portend public danger.

The immediate effect of ſuch apprehenſions will be a ſolicitude in every perſon poſſeſſing property to ſecure it by ſuch ſimple and rude means of concealment as cuſtom alone has taught them, by conveying it to the woods or hills, or by ſhifting it from place to place, as their fancies may ſuggeſt to them the hopes of greater ſafety in one than another; by depoſiting it with a heavy tax in the foreign European ſettlements; by tranſporting it altogether beyond the bounds of the provinces; or laſtly, by the more frequent and eaſy expedient of burying it in the earth. Each of theſe means will create an irretrievable loſs of the current ſpecie, and a ſtagnation of the remainder. Both theſe conſequences will fall heavily on the revenue, and add to the diſtreſſes of Government at a time when it can leaſt bear a failure in its collections. To open the public treaſury as a repoſitory for the wealth of the country, if they have a confidence in the Government itſelf, of which I own there is room for doubt, may prevent the application of ſuch dangerous reſources, and thus not only ſecure the attachment of the people by affording them the moſt ſubſtantial protection. I give my aſſent to the queſtion.

The other ſubjects of the General's minute being of a different nature and wholly unconnected with the queſtion immediately before the Board, I ſhall conſider as diſtinct queſtions. Appendix, No. 304.

The firſt is "That a ſum of money adequate to the "emergency of the occaſion be ſent to Madras, pro"vided they are not able to furniſh themſelves by the "method they are now purſuing of raiſing money upon "the Company's bonds; and that there may be as "little delay as poſſible in furniſhing this ſupply, if ne"ceſſary, that it be taken from the war depoſit in the "new fort, as being a fund apparently provided for "ſuch exigencies." As the terms of the queſtion do not require or admit of an immediate conſideration of it, and we have already provided two modes of remittance, which though not ample, will prove a ſufficient relief to the immediate wants of the Preſidency of Fort Saint George, I hope the General will conſent to ſuſpend the final determination upon it until the approach of the period in which his propoſal, if approved, muſt be carried into execution. In the mean time we may hope to be informed of the ſtate of that Preſidency with relation to its wants, its reſources, its diſpoſitions for repelling the pretended or actual invaſion whichever it may prove, and the other diſtinct ſervices to which they may propoſe to apply the ſums afforded them by this Government.

Theſe provinces, already very much exhauſted, will not bear greater drains, nor can any thing ſhort of extreme neceſſity juſtify it in repeating them. It is therefore at leaſt reaſonable to expect that they will furniſh us with previous information upon the points which I have enumerated; nay, it may ſo happen, that by the neglect of this precaution, we may furniſh them with the means of employing the Company's arms in an unnatural and deſperate oppoſition, even to the authority of this Government, which was appointed for their controul, and to whoſe protection they muſt finally owe their exiſtence.

On this occaſion I muſt remind the Board of the demand which was made to them ſo long as the 12th of June laſt, for the reſtitution of the Cirkar of Guntoor or Mortezanagur to the Nabob Nizam Ally Cawn, and of the repetition of that demand in our letter of the 24th ultimo. Their ſilence will juſtify us in crediting the reports, which though not of official authority, have doubtleſs reached every member of this Board. That the forces of that Preſidency, which were ſent to take poſſeſſion of the Circar of Mortezanagur, ſtill continue there in defiance of our orders, and that the management of it had been aſſigned in form to the Nabob of the Carnatic. Hence I draw a ſtrong ſuſpicion, that they will not eaſily be induced to reſign it, and this is an additional and very powerful inducement with me to defer the conſideration of the preſent queſtion until we know whether the Preſidency of Madras will yield to our authority, or compel us to uſe the means with which we are conſtitutionally armed for that purpoſe to ſupport and enforce it; if ſuch ſhall be, as I truſt it will, the reſolution of this Board.

The ſecond propoſal introduced in the minute of the Commander in Chief is, "that in order to lighten the burthen, and to give ſpirit and confidence to ſuch operations as the Madras Adminiſtration from their own diſcernment and local obſervation may find it convenient to purſue againſt Hyder, as well as to awe the Nizam from attempting any thing againſt the Circars; to deter Hyder from turning his views towards theſe northern dominions, and to be in readineſs to act in concert with what force may now be in the Circars againſt the French, who, as they are at this time expected, may attempt a landing upon that coaſt, a ſufficient army be formed to the ſouthward." To the proſecution of this meaſure, the Commander in Chief juſtly obſerves, there is one powerful obſtacle in the ſituation of the forces of the Rajah of Berar; their poſition at Cuttack being directly in the road which our troops muſt paſs to effect the pro-poſed junction with thoſe of the Preſidency of Fort Saint George, and their vicinity to our borders having intimidated the people of the country, and impreſſed them with the dread of an invaſion, the General is led to propoſe, that immediate application ſhould be made for them to retire; and he ſupports his opinion on this point, by obſerving that ſuch a requiſition will ſoon diſcover the reality of their intentions towards us. Though the fact itſelf, ſtated without the antecedent circumſtances which have produced it, will juſtify the reaſonings of the Commander in Chief, I yet perſuade myſelf that when he is acquainted with all the particulars and gradations of it, he will not only change his ſentiments, but agree with me in opinion that it will be better policy in this Government to wait a ſhort time for the knowledge of the intentions of the Government of Berar, than by any premature act impel it to a decided choice, which may prove hoſtile to us, whether its preſent inclinations are yet fluctuating, or, as I believe them to be, determined in our favour.

Referred to under Appendix 302.

I am pleaſed that the General has furniſhed me with this occaſion to lay before the Board the true ſtate of the ſubject; and I requeſt I may be indulged with a patient attention while I deliver it, which I ſhall endeavour to do in as ſuccinct a manner as poſſible.

The Board will well remember (nor ought it to be forgotten) the ready and effectual aſſiſtance which General Goddard's detachment repeatedly received from the Government of Berar.

On the firſt formation of that corps, an application was made to Moodajee Booſla, to permit it to paſs through a part of his dominions; he inſtantly and cheerfully complied, and unſolicited wrote to Colonel Leſlie, who then commanded the detachment, inviting him to proceed, and offering him both a free paſſage and the means of ſubſiſtence; at the ſame time he cauſed a large ſtore of grain to be provided on his borders, where it lay ſix months waiting for his arrival. General Goddard's letters contain acknowledgments of the hoſpitality with which he was received, and treated during his long continuance at Hoſungabad, and the liberal manner in which Moodajee Booſla advanced the money due on his bills when General Goddard formed the reſolution of marching to the relief of Bombay, though againſt his repeated and urgent remonſtrances. Theſe were ſpontaneous acts and ſubſtantial proofs of his friendſhip; and whatever policy may have dictated them, their obligation on this Government is the ſame, and has acquired an increaſed force by the knowledge which we now poſſeſs of the effects ſince produced by it on that Government. It has expoſed it to the reſentment of the Poonah Government, for having been inſtrumental to all the conſequences occaſioned by the march of our troops to the other ſide of India.

May I be permitted to add, as a proof of the notoriety of the diſpoſition of the Government of Berar to ours, the facility with which Mr. Elliott obtained the ſurrender of Mr. Chevalier at Cuttac, ſince nothing but a certain knowledge of that attachment could have induced the Naib to have conſented to an act which on a different ſuppoſition would have proved of ſo much danger to himſelf.

What has ſince paſſed, notwithſtanding external appearances, will fully juſtify the belief that its diſpoſition is ſtill the ſame.

Whatever movements of whatever tendency have been made, have been previouſly and confidentially communicated to this Government.

The Dewan was early diſpatched to Poonah to negotiate a peace with General Goddard: in this attempt he failed; but he communicated to me, and ſtill more largely to Beneram Pundit, his Miniſter at this place, every circumſtance that happened during his ſtay there. It was from him as I recollect, that I firſt heard of the confederacy planned by the Nabob Nizam Ally Cawn, and formed in conjunction with him, the Miniſter at Poonah, Maddajee Scindia, Hyder Ally, and Moodajee Booſla, againſt the Company.

He was called upon by the Miniſter, with the command of the Peiſhwa, to furniſh his quota of troops for the common cauſe, and was threatened by Nizam Ally Cawn and Madajee Scindia, that they would invade and lay waſte his country if he refuſed. He was totally unprepared to reſiſt two ſo formidable enemies, having diſbanded his troops, and reſerving only a peace eſtabliſhment. He was obliged therefore to temporize, conſenting to enter into the general confederacy, but ſtill claiming the privilege of mediation. The part aſſigned him was to ſend an army during the courſe of the laſt ſeaſon to lay waſte the provinces of Bengal. With this requiſition he complied, but at the ſame time informed me, that he ſhould continue ſuch means to delay as ſhould prevent the army from approaching our borders till the cloſe of the fair ſeaſon, which would be a plea for not entering upon immediate action; that in the mean time he ſhould be able by the next ſeaſon to raiſe ſuch an army as would effectually eſtabliſh his own independency, and qualify him to act according to the dictates of his own judgment. Theſe declarations have been literally verified, for we have ſeen this body of troops ſpin out a march to four months, which might with eaſe have been accompliſhed in two, and arrive at the place of their deſtination at the commencement of the rains. Theſe though Marattas, and part of them pindaries or plunderers by profeſſion, have remained as quiet as if cantoned at their own capital. Every letter received from the Court of Berar is filled with the moſt ſolemn aſſurances of actual friendſhip, and its reſolution to maintain it under every circumſtance.

I now lay before the Board the two laſt papers of advice which have been received from Naigpoor. The firſt of theſe, which is a letter from Dewagur Pundit to Beneram Pundit, mentions that Sedaſhew Pundit, the Reſident of the Peiſhwa at Naigpore, a man of high rank and truſt, had been diſpatched to Poonah with a repetition of the propoſal expreſſed in the moſt peremptory terms, that credentials ſhould be immediately ſent to Dewagur Pundit to treat with this Government for peace, and that the Dewan was making every preparation to ſet out for Bengal on the inſtant of the arrival of an anſwer from Poonah. This being the actual ſtate of that Government in its relation to ours, and no occaſion calling us to an immediate deciſion, I hope the Board will agree with me to ſuſpend it to the period within which we may reaſonably expect to be informed of theirs.

I for my own part am morally certain that it is the earneſt wiſh and ambition of the Government of Berar to become the mediator and guarantee of a peace between this and the Government of Poonah; and it is my firm belief, that if it ſhall fail of this purpoſe, and be compelled at length to take a decided part in the war, it will rather unite with us than ſubmit to act with its natural enemies, the Nabob Nizam Ally Cawn, Mhadajee Scindia, and the Poonah State, its conſtitutional ſuperior.

With reſpect to any requiſition made to the commander of the forces at Cuttack for their removal, it can be of no effect, becauſe he acts under poſitive orders, and is perhaps as little acquainted with the real deſtination of his troops as are the members of this Government. Such an application might indeed be made to Moodajee himſelf; but this is now unneceſſary, as the next advices muſt amount virtually to the ſame effect as any that could be expected from it.

Letter from Dewagur Pundit to Beneram Pundit.

On the 24th Rejeb I received your letter dated the 29th Jemadiaſſanie, together with an Arzie for the Preſence, and a letter to the Dewan Sahib, and became acquainted with all particulars, and made known fully every point which you mention to my maſter and the Dewan. What you ſaid to the Nabob Amaud ul Dowlah, reſpecting reſpecting the arrival of our victorious army at Cuttack, was very proper and adviſable. The Dewan Sahib greatly praiſed your conduct, and ſaid, that if the Sirkar had any people of equal wiſdom and attachment to what you have ſhewn in your good and prudent management of this matter, every thing would be well and properly ſettled, and his Highneſs, upon hearing all theſe particulars, expreſſed ten times more regard and favour for your wiſdom than he had done before. All theſe you will learn from Beneram Pundit, who ſet off the day before your letter arrived, and who will deliver you the Khellaat and Serpaitch for the Duſſara, and receive your thanks for it; and will be able to inform you about the bill of exchange for 1000 rupees which was before ſent to Ram Bhedar Pundit at Surat. In all the views and intentions of this quarter you are truſted with entire confidence; continue therefore to exert yourſelf to the utmoſt of your life and ſtrength to execute the wiſhes and orders of our maſter to his ſatisfaction, and be convinced that the Dewan Sahib is in every inſtance favourable and well inclined to you. I who am your firm friend, will write to you every thing which I ſee with my own eyes, or which may be communicated to me either in public or private. The army which is arrived at Cuttack was ſent there in purſuance of a plan of the Nabob Nizam Ally Cawn, and of the advice of the Miniſters of Pundit Purdhaun. This has been fully explained in the karetahs written to that quarter, and not the ſmalleſt occurrence or particular requiſite in the duties of friendſhip has been omitted. I cannot therefore conceive what could be his intentions of telling you, that ſo large an army was not neceſſary for the ſettlement of Cuttack. Where all diſtinction has been taken away, every thing ſhould be the ſame to both parties. Every circumſtance which has happened in this quarter, has been written to that ſide, without reſerve. The army, after its departure from hence, arrived at Cuttack at the beginning of the rainy ſeaſon, in ſix months. Conſider this likewiſe, that all theſe delays were ſolely owing to the ſincere friendſhip entertained for the Engliſh. If the friendſhip for the Engliſh gentlemen, and the long intercourſe of letters with them, the arrival of General Goddard at Hoſhungabad, the ſtationing of a Vackeel with them, for the providing of proviſions, &c. the coming of Mr. Watherſtone to Naigpore, the paying from the Sirkar the bills of exchange of the Mahajuns, had not been known to them, it would not have been neceſſary for the army to be levied and ſent to that quarter, and ſuch difficulties and expences incurred for the payment of the ſoldiers. In an intercourſe of friendſhip, all theſe difficulties and expences are eaſily borne by firm friends. The explaining all this to the other quarter, is incumbent on you: of this, you will learn all particulars from the Hindoſtanny letter of the Dewan Sahib, who before has written and ſtill writes with the greateſt affection and attachment for the Engliſh gentlemen. On the arrival of Bejy Ram Doboy at that quarter, not the ſmalleſt article of all the views, intentions and dangers of this quarter will be unknown to you, and you will then repreſent and explain to the Nabob every thing which ſhall appear to you of uſe and adviſable. The proverb which you mention, by the Nabob's orders, that whoever by the ſtrength of his arms attempts to ſwim in a river, when a large wave comes he loſes his power of moving, and is carried away at the pleaſure of the waters without it being poſſible to affirm what will become of him: the Maha Raja upon hearing this proverb ſmiled, and immediately without any previous thinking ſaid, what the Nabob mentioned was very proper and applicable; but that, by the bleſſing of God, the river was unable, notwithſtanding its violence and the fury of its waves, to go beyond its banks, but is always fixed in its determined boundaries. That the authority, greatneſs, power and ſtrength of the gentlemen were like a river that has large waves; but that from their great and ſtriking virtues and their piety and love of God, they never go beyond the boundaries fixed by their treaties and engagements: that if at any time in their intercourſe of friendſhip, events and circumſtances, and the common revolution of affairs, which are never fixed, any difficulties ſhould come upon their friends, they, like a river which ſupports upon its water the great weight of large ſhips, take upon themſelves the weight of them, and depoſit them ſafely on the ſhore; that the Nabob has now approved of what he had ſo often written in all his letters to that quarter, and has in ſome of his karetahs written orders to that purport, and will continue in the ſame intention. Secondly, the Nabob has mentioned another proverb, which you have wrote as follows, that the Governor of Bombay had undertaken a matter without his advice, which had rendered neceſſary every thing which has ſince been done; but that as this quarter is deſirous of ſeeing peace brought, and as he is reſolved to follow the advice of this quarter, he will therefore make over to the Rajah the power of Solomon's ſeal. In anſwer to this his Highneſs ſaid, that when the Nabob, from his friendſhip and confidence in him, entruſts him with the power of Solomon, he himſelf muſt be like the ſeal and inſcription, as the power of Solomon was entirely derived from the inſcription; that when he is made mediator and guarantee by both parties in the intended peace and reconciliation between the Engliſh gentlemen and Pundit Purdhaun, and when he gets into his hands written powers from the Nabob, his authority will then be complete; and that this authority, from the diſtinguiſhed character of his illuſtrious family, will be productive of great advantages: that he will keep poſſeſſion of this ſeal of Solomon in the manner that is requiſite; and will, agreeable to the repreſentations, after the arrival of Bejy Ram Dooby, give an explicit and final anſwer: in a word, I have written every thing which his Highneſs ſaid, in anſwer to the two proverbs; for the reſt, I refer you to the Dewan's letters, and you will act agreeable to them, and will write every thing, either public or ſecret, which occurs in that quarter. You will alſo conſider the effecting a true and perfect reconciliation of the Maha Rajah to be the moſt neceſſary of all meaſures, and that after the terms of the treaty of peace ſhall be ſettled, it will be adviſable for the Dewan to be admitted to an interview. You will keep up a correſpondence with Raja Chimna Baboo and Bowanny Pundit Buckſhy; and will write the ſtate of affairs, and your advice and opinion on all matters.

Appendix. No. 304.

Tranſlation of a Letter from Dewan Dewagur Pundit to Beneram Pundit, dated 26 of Shabaun.

On the 25th Rajib I received your letter, dated the 27th Jemmadieaſſanie, and underſtand the contents. I perfectly comprehend what the Nabob Amaud O'Dowlah ſaid to you, which you mention in your letter. To this time, three letters have been ſent from this quarter, and a fourth is now diſpatched; from them you will have learnt particulars. What you ſaid to the Nabob Amaud O'Dowlah, reſpecting the furniſhing proviſions, and what he told you in anſwer, namely, that there could be no exception againſt furniſhing proviſions, &c. but that he could conceive what were the views of ſo large an army at Cuttack; that God forbid any other intentions except friendly ones ſhould be entertained, and that of this you muſt be ſecurity, and what you, keeping in view the directions and orders of our maſter, repreſented in anſwer; the particulars of all theſe matters, both what was written in your hand for my private information, and what was in the letter of the Moonſhy of Bowanny Pundit, are fully underſtood by me. The Nabob Amaud O'Dowlah is ſuperiorly wiſe and foreſeeing, and knows the proper meaſures and advice in all matters. You muſt explain to him that this army has been ready ever ſince the Duſſarah, and that if any hoſtile thoughts had exiſted they would have been ſent by the road of Mundella to Chutta,

Appendix, No. 304.

Chutta Naigpore, from whence they would have paſſed into Azeemabad. But as it is now ſix years that friendſhip has been ſtrongly cemented with the Nabob through your mediation, God is witneſs that I have watched and guarded it as I would my honour and poſſeſſions; of this you muſt be fully convinced. How can a powerful friend that has been acquired be loſt? Had not our whole deſires been fixed on friendſhip, how could Mr. Anderſon have come to Naigpore, and Colonel Goddard to Hoſhungabad, and have remained there three months? or would Mr. Watherſtone have been invited to Naigpore? or ſhould we have ſent Jadoo Row and Sewo Sing, and have perſuaded Colonel Goddard to ſtay three months at Hoſhungabad? At that time you were at Naigpore, and were an eye witneſs to every thing I mention. Although it is abſurd to repeat theſe points ſo often, yet as you have written on this ſubject, I have therefore mentioned them. The Nabob ought to reflect with an eye of juſtice, on the largeneſs of the army at Cuttack, the difficulties, expences, and loſſes with which it has loaded the Sirkar; let him conſider that the coming of Mr. Anderſon and Mr. Watherſtone to Naigpore, the remaining of Colonel Goddard at Hoſhungabad, the attack and hoſtilities begun by the Bombayers againſt Pundit Purdhaun, and raiſing battalions here by Mr. Watherſtone, and the negociations reſpecting theſe battalions, and the purchaſing of all articles which he had occaſion for, in Naigpore; all theſe circumſtances, the Vackeels of the Nabob Nizam Ally Khan and Pundit wrote to their conſtituents; you yourſelf were here at the time, and know all this to be true, as you were an eye witneſs. Theſe events were the original cauſe of our preſent difficulties, the Nabob Nizam Ally Khan, having fixed upon a plan, brought into this dilemma, promiſing to march in perſon towards Checkacool and Rajebundery, and obliging us to go towards Bengal, while Scindia and Holcar were to have proceeded to Surat. When Nana Furneſſe and Hurry Pundit Umteah and Scindiah came from their own habitations to Poonah, to examine into this plan, and conſult on the beſt meaſures, from the proof of Mr. Watherſtone's having been at Naigpore, they accuſed me of every point, which as I above ſaid, all the Vackeels had written to their conſtituents, and pointed at me with their fingers; to all this I ſingly ſubmitted. In an intercourſe of friendſhip, ſhould ſuch difficulties, diſtreſſes, and abuſe fall on a perſon? it is of no conſequence, the ſhame of it is on the friends. No neglect was ever committed by this quarter, the diſpoſition of the Maha Rajah my maſter, and of all this family, is fixed in obſerving their word, and in preſerving friendſhip, nor is he ever wanting in fulfilling any thing which he promiſes, either verbally, or by writing, nor backward in performing his engagements. Never was any anceſtor of this family accuſed of neglect or breach in his promiſes; with whomever they had entered into oaths and engagements of friendſhip, or had a proſpect of effecting an alliance, they never admitted any thoughts different from that, as it would bring a ſtain upon the lateſt poſterity. Of this you are well informed; and although by ſending this army we have brought a great weight upon us, yet, by the bleſſing of God, I am firm in my attachment, and hope for its increaſe. This you muſt explain in a proper and convincing manner to the Nabob Amaud O'Dowlah, that the Maha Rajah is a firm friend, and that I conſider them both as one: of this God is witneſs!

The Nabob in greatneſs and diſtinction admits of no ſecond, and in foreſight, prudence and wiſdom, is ſo far above all praiſe, that in this age no one can be found to approach him. This is my preſent moſt earneſt wiſh, that at all events I may once be able to ſee the Nabob with my own eyes, and may either in Benares, Balaſore, or in Calcutta, it matters not which, be made happy by one month's reſidence near the Nabob, and may in perſon effect a ſincere reconciliation between the Nabob and Row Pundit Purdhaun, that no interruption may ever in future happen in it; but that they may be united in their mutual intereſts, and that having next made a treaty on the part of the Maha Rajah, I may return.—This is my earneſt deſire. It is abſurd to repeat this ſo often; but in this there are three conſiderable opponents: firſt the Nabob Nizam Ally Khan, who upon learning this will take hoſtile reſolutions; ſecondly, Scindia, who is the moſt confidential Miniſter of Pundit Purdhaun, and in whoſe hands at preſent all the political affairs are lodged; ſo that the Poonah Miniſters were obliged to give him intelligence of what I inform them reſpecting my wiſh to go to Calcutta; and thirdly, the weight of expences and difficulties from this army. But my whole deſire and view is, to ſecure the peace of the people; and if between the two Chiefs a firm reconciliation and alliance ſhould take place, and the people of the two countries acquire eaſe and ſecurity, how can my diſtreſſes remain, as the peace and happineſs of the whole world is fixed in my mind? The inhabitants of it cannot remain in difficulties, nor can friends deſire it. After the receipt of your letter to Nana Furneſſe and Hurry Pundit Tupteah, for their private information, to the following effect; that they muſt try to perſuade the Nabob Nizam Ally Khan and Scindeah, of the neceſſity of my going to Calcutta. I before this gave you notice of what the letters from Poonah contained, which you will have learnt; and I have now diſpatched Bejey Ram, from whom nothing is kept ſecret; after his departure, as ſoon as Taram Reek arrived and delivered me your letters, knowing it to be unadviſable to delay anſwering them, I immediately wrote all particulars, and the Moonſhy of Bowanny Pundit has wrote every matter in anſwer to the letters, which you will ſoon learn.

Poſtſcript.—During three months, continual hoſtilities were kept up between General Goddard and Scindia and Holkar; at laſt, when the rainy ſeaſon commenced, the General retired to Surat, and Scindia and Holkar went towards Oogein and Indore. The gentlemen of Bombay making an invaſion in the diſtrict of Cokan, ſeized upon three or four magazines, and took poſſeſſion of their whole contents, and committed divers other devaſtations; and the army with Serement Pundit Purdhaun ſent into the ſame diſtrict is employed in oppoſing them with various ſucceſs. At preſent that I have written to Poonah for their approbation of my going to Calcutta, and am myſelf deſirous of going thither, what can be thought of theſe violent hoſtilities ſtill ſubſiſting in Cokan? The Nabob, at the beginning, ſaid, that he did not approve of the engagements of the Bombayers, and could not aſſent to them; what therefore can I effect? It is therefore neceſſary, that before you receive letters from hence, adviſing you of the Poonah Miniſters having aſſented to my journey to that quarter, you do ſo; that General Goddard and the Bombayers receive directions to remain inactive, at that time it will be proper for me to begin my journey.

In the Dewan's own hand writing.

I have written to Poonah, to Nana Furneſſe and Hurry Punt Tanteah, and for greater ſecurity propoſe ſending to Poonah Sadage's Pundit, who is equally truſted as myſelf, and reſides here as Vackeel from Pundit Purdhaun to the Maha Rajah, who is truly and firmly attached to this Sirkar, and is a ſincere friend of mine. After his arrival I do not doubt but that I ſhall receive ſuch letters from Poonah as I could wiſh, reſpecting my journey; as ſoon as I receive them I will, after celebrating the Duſſora, take Sadajee Pundit Dadda and my Moonſhy with me, and go by the road of Cuttack. I expect to receive their letters before the end of Sawan, or middle of Bhagdom, and immediately I will prepare all the neceſſaries for my journey, and before I ſet off I will write to you by the way of Benares. In that letter I will mention that you muſt procure orders from the Nabob Amaud O Dowlah to General Goddard and the gentlemen of Bombay, to put a ſtop to all hoſtilities; in this you muſt exert yourſelf and bring it about. It is now eight months that the army has ſuffered much from the ſcarcity and dearneſs of proviſions, nor do the Boephanils bring enough. It is neceſſary, abſolutely neceſſary, that you repreſent this to the Nabob. If the Boephanils can be ſent to the army of Baboo Sahib Seeva Bahadar, it is a duty of friendſhip, and ought to be done. I am friend to the Nabob; the friend, the friend; of this convince him, and give entire ſatisfaction on this point: you muſt gain me one interview with him, as it is my moſt ſanguine wiſh. The Nabob himſelf laſt year expreſſed a great deſire for an interview; may God grant that it be happy! I am anxious for the receipt of letters from Poonah.

Reſolved, That the treaſury be immediately opened for loans of money at the eſtabliſhed rate of intereſt, being 5 per cent. and that public notice thereof be given accordingly.

Ordered, That the Sub-treaſurer do ſubjoin to his weekly abſtract of treaſury, the ſum received into the treaſury during the courſe of the preceding week, and the diminution of the depoſits during the ſame period.

Agreed, That the other ſubjects of the Commander in Chief's minute lie for conſideration.

Extract of Bengal Secret Conſultations, the 18th September 1780.

The Commander in Chief delivers in the following minute in conſequence of that from the Governor General recorded on the 4th inſtant.

Sir Eyre Coote—I agree with the Governor General in the propriety of deferring to ſend further ſupplies for the relief of the Preſidency of Madras until the Adminiſtration there ſhall have adviſed us on thoſe points which the Governor General has ſtated, and which are ſo very neceſſary for our information, in order to guide us as to the nature of the aſſiſtance to be given them.

From the effect which the Governor General apprehends might be produced in the conduct of the Berar Court towards this Government by the formation of an army to the ſouthward, and in conſideration of the further arguments he has ſtated in proof of Moodajee Boosla's friendly diſpoſition towards us; and becauſe the ſeaſon when our troops can move with facility is not yet arrived, I agree with him to ſuſpend the immediate execution of that meaſure, and to wait further intelligence as to the intentions of the Government of Berar. At the ſame time I muſt beg leave to recommend that every neceſſary preparation be made for the adoption of ſuch a ſtep the moment it may be found expedient; and in ſhort, that every precaution be taken to ſecure the Company's poſſeſſions from any ſudden ſurprize in thoſe quarters where it is moſt to be apprehended, and which may operate to the prejudice of the collections. In this particular, the province of Bahar appears firſt to demand our attention, as well becauſe of its being more expoſed to the danger of an incurſion by the Marattas, as that it is leſs protected than any of the others.

(Signed) Eyre Coote.

The Board agree with the Commander in Chief in the ſentiments expreſſed in the above minute, and refer it to him to take ſuch precautions, and to paſs ſuch orders, as may be immediately neceſſary to guard againſt the event of an invaſion.

Bengal Secret Conſultations, 10th Auguſt 1780;—preſent, the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Governor General, Preſident; Edward Wheler, Eſquire.—(Mr. Francis indiſpoſed. Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote abſent.)

The Secretary having with the aſſiſtance of Brigadier General Stibbert, commanding officer of the firſt brigade, prepared orders and inſtructions to the commanding officer of the battalion lately ordered on duty towards the banks of the Subenreka river, now lays them before the Board for their approval. Appendix, No. 364.

Sir,

Being in command of the 3d battalion of Sepoys and artillery, lately ordered upon ſervice, you are directed to march with them from Midnapore (after the arrival of the troops at that place, whereto they have been directed to proceed in boats by water) to Jellaſore; you are then, or at ſuch other place adjacent as you may ſee moſt convenient, to take poſt with your detachment, and be ready to repel any invaſion or incurſions that may be attempted by the Maratta army aſſembled at Cuttack, into the Company's provinces at the gaut acroſs the river Subenreka, called Rajegaut, on the great road leading from Ballaſore to Jellaſore, &c. or at any other gaut or fords in the neighbourhood or contiguous to it. Inſtructions to Captain M'Pherſon.

You will uſe ſuch means as may be in your power to obtain the moſt early and beſt intelligence from time to time of the motions and deſigns of the enemy; and as their forces are ſaid to be numerous, it is ſtrongly recommended to you to be ſtrictly upon your guard againſt any ſurprize, and to take the neceſſary precautions for the ſecurity and defence of your detachment, in caſe of your being attacked by a ſuperior body of troops, till you can be reinforced from Midnapore, or the Preſidency. Theſe precautions your own experience will beſt point out to you, as well as the meaſures moſt proper to be purſued for effecting the ſervice in general on which you are employed.

You are immediately upon receiving advice of the enemy's making any movements from Cuttack towards Ballaſore, with their army or any part thereof, to ſend out parties and ſeize upon all the boats on the Subenreka above or below Jellaſore, as far as Pipley, and the ſea ſhore, which might be uſed by them in croſſing that river, as it is broad, and as the tide ſets in ſtrong at Pipley, and it is ſaid there are no fords for ſome coſs above that town; by ſecuring the boats, and ſtationing a guard of a company of Sepoys there, you will it is conceived effectually prevent any troops from croſſing, and inroads being made by them at that part; the road leading thereto, and that to the gaut near Jellaſore being, as it is reported, the principal by which they can effect an entrance on that ſide of the country. But this you will be the beſt able to examine into and determine after your arrival. All that is further recommended to you is, that you do not divide your force for the protection and defence of any ports unleſs it be abſolutely neceſſary, or on any account whatever, as far as it can be poſſibly avoided.

You are to report to the Commander in Chief all intelligence of conſequence, which you may receive reſpecting the enemy, as well as all occurrences of your detachment: you are to make ſimilar reports to Lieutenant Colonel Blair, commanding the troops at Midnapore, with whom you are alſo to co-operate; and you are to obey any orders that he may give you, which are neceſſary for the good of the ſervice, and the general defence of the provinces and diſtricts which you are ſtationed to protect.

Fort William,
the 10th Auguſt 1780.

Approved the above inſtructions, and ordered that they be copied fair, and ſent by the Secretary to Brigadier General Stibbert, to be by him iſſued to Captain Macpherſon.

Warren Haſtings,
Edw^d Wheler.

Appendix. Nos. 305 & 306.

APPENDIX, No. 305.

Extract of Bengal Secret Conſultations, the 22d June 1780.

THE Governor General informs the Board that he has received advice of the arrival of Chimnajee Booſla, the commander of the army of Berar, in the province of Oriſſa, at Cuttack. By intelligence communicated ſome time ſince to the members of the Board, they have been informed of the diſtreſs which this army had actually ſuſtained, and of the greater difficulties which it was likely to incur from the want of proviſions, and of the order which Beneram Pundit, the Vackeel or Miniſter of the Berar Government, had received, to apply to this Government for aid in procuring their future ſupply: that application has accordingly been made by the Vackeel; and as it appears to be the general ſenſe of the Board, that we ſhall conſider the Government of Berar as friendly to this; and as it is entitled to ſome return for the hoſpitality which it afforded to our army under the command of General Goddard, for many months before its arrival within the frontier of Berar, and during its reſidence in it, the Governor General recommends, that orders be iſſued to the provincial Chiefs and Councils of Burdwan and Calcutta, and the collector of Midnapore, to permit ſupplies of grain, proviſions, and other neceſſaries, to paſs to the Maratta army at Cuttack, and to aſſiſt their agents in procuring them; and that he himſelf may be authorized to inform the Berar Vackeel, that the Board have thought proper to iſſue ſuch orders.

Mr. Wheler—Placing a much greater confidence in the opinion which the Governor General has formed of the friendly intentions of the Rajah of Berar, and which I conclude he has collected from his long intercourſe with the Vackeel of that Chief, than from any evidence of them which I can gather from the proceedings, or from the correſpondence with him, I accede to the preſent motion.

Mr. Francis—I think that we ought to continue to treat the Berar Government as friends, without neglecting to have a ſtrict eye upon their motions: if their intentions be hoſtile to us, they will ſoon be diſcovered; in the mean time I think it may be proper to give them this proof of our friendly diſpoſition towards them: the ſupplies may be ſtopped at any time. I therefore agree to the motion.

The Governor General—My opinion of the diſpoſition of the Berar Government towards this, has been fully expreſſed and explained in my minute of the 12th June. I repeat, that I believe it to be perfectly friendly; but I muſt add, that it will depend upon the conduct of this Government towards it, whether it is to prove in the end our friend or our enemy.

Agreed to the Governor General's propoſition.

The following letter is accordingly written to the provincial councils of Calcutta and Burdwan, and to the collector of Midnapore.

Mr. David Anderſon, Chief, &c. Calcutta Committee.

Gentlemen;

To the Calcutta Committee of Revenue.

A large body of troops belonging to the Berar Rajah, and commanded by Chimnajee Booſla, being arrived in the neighbourhood of Cuttack, we authorize and direct you to permit ſupplies of grain, proviſions, and other neceſſaries, to paſs to Cuttack for their uſe, and to aſſiſt their agents in procuring them.

We are, &c.

Fort William,
the 22d June, 1780.

The ſame to Burdwan, and to the Collector of Midnapore.

Extract of Bengal Secret Conſultations, 17th July 1780.

Read the following letter from the Calcutta Committee of Revenue:

Calcutta Committee.

We have been honoured with the receipt of your orders of the 22d of June, and have iſſued Perwannahs to the Naibs and Zemindars of Hidgelee and Tumlook, directing them to permit ſupplies of grain, proviſions, and other neceſſaries, to paſs to Cuttack, for the uſe of the troops of the Berar Rajah at that place, commanded by Chimnajee Booſla, and to aſſiſt his agents in procuring them.

We ſhall take care that proper attention is paid to our Perwannahs.

We are, &c.

APPENDIX, No. 306.

Bengal Perſian Correſpondence.

Tranſlation of a Letter from Dewagur Pundit to Beneram Pundit: received 21ſt September, 1780.

CONFIRMING what has paſſed in all former letters without the deviation of an iota, I write with my attention limited by them alone, and without reſtraint by the fear of any one.

The Governor wrote the Maha Rajah that he looked upon the army under Chumnajee as his own. There is now nothing wanting to the completion and extent of their friendſhip; therefore every thing, good and evil, muſt meet with the moſt unreſerved communication: when you have well underſtood the contents of my letter, you will lay it entirely before him.

The times require that a peace be made with the Maratta Adminiſtration, and that, in whatever mode it may be, a treaty and agreement take place between them. If this is not now effected, confuſion and warfare muſt be carried to the greateſt lengths and extremities. I write, appealing to God and the friendſhip now eſtabliſhed. This diſpute muſt be ended.

Although many impediments are attempted to be thrown into my way, to prevent my hoped for meeting with the Governor, and have ſent Sadaſeo Pundit to Nanna Purnaveeſe and Hurry Punt Purkia, well aſſured that the anſwers from Poonah will prove agreeable to my wiſhes, and enable me to accompliſh them. I have therefore ſent encloſed, the heads of the treaty concluded with Colonel Upton, and memorandums of the claims regarding Guzerat, Ahmudabad, Cokun, Surat, and the Guicawars, &c. You muſt lay them without diminution before the Governor, aſk his definitive and ſolemn anſwer, and ſend it to me. This is the advice, and moſt neceſſary to be followed.

The Maha Rajah will never drop the Pornagor. They promiſed Gurrah and Mundela, and have not performed it, but this remains upon them. Notwithſtanding this, it is proper and right that peace ſhould be brought about between them and the Engliſh, by me, that I may on this ſide of the Marattas, have a claim upon their gratitude, for the after performance of many unfiniſhed claims between them and the Maha Rajah. And on the ſide of the Engliſh, I ſhall enhance our friendſhip with them. An agreement ſubſiſted between the predeceſſors of the preſent Maratta Government, and thoſe of the Maha Rajah, and ratified when Ragojee Bhoſila went to Poonah, by my placing him in their arms, and they promiſing never to deſert him. Upon this ſcore therefore, our fidelity is due to them in every form. When at ſundry times we have been diſtreſſed, they have helped us. I therefore hope now in return to aſſiſt them. A meeting between me and the Governor is abſolutely neceſſary to conclude this buſineſs.

In Repetition.

The Maha Rajah, like all others of the Bhoſila family, is not ſelf-intereſted. Wherever they place their friendſhip, they do not heſitate to ſtake their lives, much leſs their fortunes, provided either can ſerve to cement and anſwer the ends of friendſhip. You have ſeen all this yourſelf, and know it from your own knowledge.

Inform the Governor the Nabob Zuffer ul Dowla Donſah,* is at Nuzmull, and is ſoul and body united with the Maha Rajah. You ſaw the letters which came from him, at the time General Goddard was at Hoſſhungabad, and Mr. Waterſtone came to Naigpore; eſtabliſh the truth therefore with the Governor. Zuffer ul Dowla has 12,000 gardies, 2,000 coffrees, 6,000 horſe, and 40 guns, with and under him, and is devoted to us: the Governor probably knows this: it is no ſecret to the Marattas, and Nizam Ally. A friendly letter from the Governor to him, would be of great uſe. God enlighten you in this path, that every thing may be underſtood by the Governor, for if the whole of this is not only not underſtood, but does not meet with his warmeſt concurrence, a world will be loſt.

I look up to the Governor as my own maſter, and ſpeak only for his welfare. This is true to the leaſt tittle.

If an oſtenſible letter from the Governor to Scindia be written, referring to me as an agent, I can then come to your quarter.

Again in Repetition.

Every thing has been moſt fully explained to you in former letters, but for certainty I repeat the heads. I was at Poonah when the army under Chumnajee was propoſed and recommended by Nizam Ally Khan, to the Government of Poonah, to be ſent into Bengal. Letters were then paſſing between Scindia and Goddard, about peace, but being interrupted and broken off by the means of Nizam Ally, he then carried the ſending of our army to Bengal. I took my leave of Poonah, and came to Naigpore. On the day of the Duſſara, Chumnajee took the field (now one year) and arrived at Cuttack, not till the laſt of Jeyt, as before explained, and unneceſſary to repeat. On the day of the departure of the army, 35 lacks in money, 3 lacks in cloths, and 14 elephants, were given to the chief of it. Diſtreſs of proviſions much injured them upon the road. Upon their arrival at Cuttack, they experienced the ſame. Yet ſo ſtrong is our friendſhip with the Engliſh, particularly with the Governor, that we never treſpaſſed their bounds, and never will; God is my witneſs to this. The Governor has permitted grain to be ſent to them, it muſt have taken place of courſe; the merchants muſt certainly have carried it, but there is no money with the army. According to the loweſt calculation, 4 lacks per month is the leaſt that can defray their exigencies. It is adviſable between us as friends that this army return in Poos and Maug. Sixteen lacks ſhould be ſent for their aſſiſtance, twelve of it ſecretly, to Bowanny Pundit, that he may be able to repreſs the army, and keep them under controul. This is ſpeedily neceſſary. Let not the Governor apprehend that this money will thereby be thrown away, for the Bhoſila and Engliſh intereſt will then be but one, and much benefit muſt flow from this. To bring this about is neceſſary, extremely neceſſary, I do not write for myſelf. This is the advice to be followed, moſt certainly, or the army will be no longer governable. Save us from this diſgrace. All my hopes are upon you. If the army remains till Poos and Maug, the fear of the Engliſh will be upon all, and therefore this ought to be effected.

Bengal Perſian Correſpondence.

To Chumnajee Baboo.

13th October 1780.

HAVING received repeated letters from Moodajee Booſla, reſpecting the ſtate of the army under your command; and regarding it on account of the long intimacy which has ſubſiſted betweeen our two Governments, as my own; I have for this reaſon diſpatched Biſſembeer Pundit, the brother of Beneram Pundit, to you, and have furniſhed him with ſuch aids as were in my power, which he will deliver to you. As he is fully acquainted with all the circumſtances of my affairs, and of my long fixed attachment to the Maha Rajah, and to the houſe of Booſla, he will ſerve in the place of a longer letter, and to him I refer you for all the particulars.

APPENDIX, No. 308.

Letter from the Governor General, 29th November 1780.

To the Honourable the Court of Directors for Affairs of the Honourable United Company of Merchants of England trading to the Eaſt Indies.

Honourable Sirs,

YOU will be informed by our conſultations of the 26th June of a very unuſual tender which was made by me to the Board on that day, for the purpoſe of indemnifying the Company for the extraordinary expence which might be incurred by employing the detachment under the command of Major Camac in the invaſion of the Maratta dominions, which lie beyond the diſtrict of Gohed, and drawing the attention of Mahdajee Scindia, to whom that country immediately appertained, from General Goddard, while that of the General was employed on the reduction of Baſſein, and in ſecuring the conqueſts made by your arms in Gujerat.

I was deſirous to remove the only objection which had been, or could be oſtenſibly made to that meaſure, which I had very much at heart, as may eaſily be conceived from the means which I took to effect it. For the reaſons at large which induced me to propoſe this diverſion, it will be ſufficient to refer to my minute recommending it, and to the letters received from General Goddard near the ſame period of time. The ſubject is now become obſolete, and all the fair hopes which I had built upon the proſecution of the Maratta war to its termination, in a ſpeedy, honourable, and advantageous peace, have been blaſted by the dreadful calamities which have befallen your arms in the dependencies of your Preſidency of Fort Saint George, and have changed the object of our purſuit from the aggrandizement of your power to its preſervation. My preſent reaſon for reverting to my own conduct on the above-mentioned occaſion, is to obviate the falſe concluſions, or purpoſed miſrepreſentations which may be made of it, either as an artifice of oſtentation, or as the effect of corrupt influence by aſſuring you, that the money, by whatever means it came into your poſſeſſion, was not my own; that I had myſelf no right to it, nor would nor could have received it, but for the accidental means which were at that inſtant afforded me of accepting and converting it to the property and uſe of the Company; and with this brief apology I ſhall diſmiſs the ſubject.

Something of affinity to this anecdote may appear in the firſt aſpect of another tranſaction which I ſhall proceed to relate, and of which it is more immediately my duty to inform you.

You will have been adviſed by the repeated addreſſes of this Government of the arrival of an army at Cuttae, under the command of Chimnajee Booſla, the ſecond ſon of

* A diſaffected and powerful Jaquidar of Nizam Ally's.

Appendix. No. 309.

of Moodajee Boosla, the Rajah of Berar. The origin and deſtination of this force have been largely explained and detailed in the correſpondence of the Government of Berar, and in various parts of our conſultations: the minute relation of theſe would exceed the bounds of a letter; I ſhall therefore confine myſelf to the principal facts. About the middle of the laſt year a plan of confederacy was formed by the Nabob Nizam Ally Cawn, by which it was propoſed, that while the army of the Marattas, under the command of Mahdajee Scindia and Tuckobjee Holkar, was employed to check the operations of General Goddard in the weſt of India, Hyder Ally Cawn ſhould invade the Carnatic, Moodajee Boosla the provinces of Bengal, and he himſelf the Sirkars of Rajahmundry and Chicacole.

The Government of Berar was required to accept the part aſſigned it in this combination, and to march a large body of troops immediately into Bengal. To enforce the requiſition on the part of the ruling members of the Maratta State, menaces of inſtant hoſtility by the combined forces were added by Mahdajee Scindia, Tuckoojee Holcar, and Nizam Ally Cawn, in letters written by them to Moodajee Boosla on the occaſion. He was not in a ſituation to ſuſtain the brunt of ſo formidable a league, and oſtenſibly yielded. Such at leaſt was the turn which he gave to his acquieſcence in his letters to me, and his ſubſequent conduct has juſtified his profeſſions. I was early and progreſſively acquainted by him with the requiſition, and with the meaſures which were intended to be taken, and which were taken by him upon it. The army profeſſedly deſtined for Bengal marched on the Duſſerra of the laſt year correſponding with the 12th of October; inſtead of taking the direct courſe to Bahar, which had been preſcribed, it proceeded by varied deviations and ſtudied delays to Cuttac, where it arrived late in May laſt, having performed a practicable journey of three months in ſeven, and concluded it at the inſtant commencement of the rains, which of courſe would preclude its operations, and afford the Government of Berar a further interval of five months to provide for the part which it would then be compelled to chuſe. In the mean time letters were continually written by the Rajah and his Miniſters to this Government, explanatory of their ſituation and motives; propoſing their mediation and guarantee for a peace and alliance with the Peiſhwa; and profeſſing, without any ſolicitation on our part, the moſt friendly diſpoſition towards us, and the moſt determined reſolution to maintain it. Conformably to theſe aſſurances, and the acceptance of a propoſal made by Moodajee Boosla to depute his miniſter to Bengal, for the purpoſe of negociating and concluding the intended treaty of peace, application had been made to the Peiſhwa for credentials to the ſame effect: at this inſtant the fatal news arrived of the defeat of your army at Conjeveram. It now became neceſſary that every other object ſhould give place, or be made ſubſervient to the preſervation of the Carnatic; nor would the means requiſite for that end admit of delay. Peace with the Marattas was the firſt object. To conciliate their alliance and that of every other Power in natural enmity with Hyder Ally, the next meaſures were immediately taken (as our general advices will inform you) to ſecure both theſe points, and to employ the Government of Berar as the channel and inſtrument of accompliſhing them. Its army ſtill lay on our borders, and in diſtreſs for long arrears of pay, not leſs occaſioned by a want of pecuniary funds than a ſtoppage of communication. An application had been made to us for a ſupply of money, and the ſum ſpecified for the complete relief of their army was ſixteen lacks. We had neither money to ſpare, nor in the apparent ſtate of that Government, in its relation to ours, would it have been either prudent or conſiſtent with our public credit, to have afforded it; it was nevertheleſs my decided opinion, that ſome aid ſhould be given, as well to contribute the neceſſary relief, as to indicate a confidence upon our part, and a return for the many inſtances of ſubſtantial kindneſs which we had within the courſe of the laſt two years experienced from the Government of Berar. I had an aſſurance that ſuch a propoſal would receive the acquieſcence of the Board; but I knew that it would not paſs without oppoſition, and it would have become public, which muſt have defeated its purpoſe. Convinced however of the neceſſity of the expedient, and aſſured of the ſincerity of the Government of Berar from evidences of ſtronger proof to me than I could make them appear to the other members of the Board, I reſolved to adopt it, and take the entire reſponſibility of it upon myſelf. In this mode a leſs conſiderable ſum would ſuffice: I accordingly cauſed three lacks of rupees to be delivered to the miniſter of the Rajah of Berar reſident in Calcutta, which he has tranſmitted: two thirds of this ſum I have raiſed by my own credit, and ſhall charge it in my official accounts; the other third I have ſupplied from the caſh in my hands belonging to the Honourable Company. I have given due notice to Moodajee Boosla of this tranſaction, and explained it to have been a private act of my own, unknown to the other members of the Council. I have given him expectations of the remainder of the amount required for the arrears of his army, proportioned to the extent to which he may put it in my power to propoſe it as a public gratuity, by his effectual orders for the recal of the troops, or for their junction with ours.

I hope I ſhall receive your approbation of what I have done for your ſervice, and your indulgence for the length of this narrative, which I could not comprize within a ſmaller compaſs.

I have the honour to be,
Honourable Sirs,
Your moſt faithful, obedient,
Fort William, and humble ſervant,
Nov^r 29th, 1780. Warren Haſtings.

APPENDIX, No. 309.

Extract of Bengal Secret Conſultations, 17th July 1780.

READ another letter as follows, from Mr. Hollond, encloſing one from Hyder Ally Cawn, which is entered after it:

Honourable Sir,

I herewith encloſe Hyder Ally Khan's anſwer to the letter which I forwarded to him on the 11th March. The hircarrahs inform me that they were detained twelve days by Meer Sahib, Governor of Cudapah, who at laſt ſent them forward with two of his own hircarrahs and a duſtuck; that upon your letter being delivered to Hyder he expreſſed himſelf, as they heard from Hyder's hircarrahs, in terms and looks of anger and reſentment; that there was a report at Syringapatam where Hyder then was, of his intention of ſetting out ſoon to invade the Carnatic; that his troops under Meer Sahib, Governor of Cudapah, had plundered ſome parts of Venentagharry the country of Bungan Yachem Naick, tributary to the Nabob Walaw Jau, and had carried off from thence 1,500 women.

Hydrabad, I am, &c.
June 16th 1780. (Signed) John Hollond.

P. S. The latter part of the news I had heard here previous to the arrival of the hircarrahs, who returned this morning.

From Hyder Ally Khan; received 14th July 1780.

I have received your agreeable letter, and underſtand the contents, which gave me inexpreſſible pleaſure: I was before well convinced, that the treaties and engagements of the Engliſh are inviolable; but whenever a new Governor arrives, he will not conform to the agreements of the Council, but acts as he pleaſes, making many innovations in the eſtabliſhed friendſhips. Firſt, the engagements which Wallah Jah Bahadre, and the Chiefs of the Company

Company entered into at the time of the ſiege of Chunapilly, were never fulfilled; and ſecondly, it was agreed between us, under the ſtrongeſt engagements, that whenever I ſhould require aſſiſtance in a neceſſary war, it ſhould be immediately furniſhed from that quarter, and that as often as they could demand ſuccours, they ſhould be ſent from hence. Accordingly before this, when I was engaged in hoſtilities againſt ſeveral enemies, notwithſtanding that I had not the ſmalleſt occaſion for it, yet to try the ſtrength of their friendſhip and alliance, I deſired aſſiſtance from them: but they pleaded various excuſes, and in many other inſtances, acted in direct breach of the engagements. What dependance therefore can be placed on the engagements and treaties of the Chiefs of the Company? Do you however act as ſhall ſeem beſt to you.

A true copy.

APPENDIX, No. 310.

Extract of Bengal Secret Conſultations, dated 25th September 1780.

THE Governor General delivers in the following minute:

Governor General. Governor General—This is not a time either for long deliberation at home, or the formal and tedious proceſs of negociation abroad. The calamity which has befallen us upon the coaſt, and the alarming ſuperiority which Hyder Ally Cawn has acquired in the Carnatic; the deſpondency of the Government of Fort Saint George; the conſternation and diſtruſt which ſeem to have ſpread themſelves among all thoſe who are ſubject to its authority; its utter want of preſent means and reſources; the diminution of their military ſtrength, and its declared inſufficiency for the war which it is to ſuſtain; and above all, the authentic information which we have received, of a great naval and military armament prepared by the Court of France, and deſtined beyond all doubt to co-operate with Hyder Ally, demand the moſt inſtant, powerful, and even hazardous exertions of this Government, to avert the event portended by ſo many concurrent difficulties. To this point every other conſideration muſt now give place. Without further preface, I propoſe the following reſolutions:

1ſt. That the ſum of fifteen lacks of rupees be immediately ſent to Fort Saint George in ſpecie, and laden for that purpoſe on the Honourable Company's ſhip the Duke of Kingston, and the other veſſels which are now on the point of ſailing for Madras.

2d. That the treaſure depoſited in the new fort, including the moiety lately taken from it, be all replaced in the general treaſury, to be applied to the preceding purpoſe, and other exigencies of this Government.

3d. That a large detachment of European infantry and artillery, be immediately ſent to Fort Saint George by the Duke of Kingston, and the other veſſels which are now on the point of ſailing for Madras. To this propoſition, as a neceſſary and eſſential part of it I muſt add the following, viz. That the Commander in Chief be requeſted, and I do for my own part, make it my moſt earneſt and particular requeſt, that he will proceed himſelf immediately to the coaſt, and take the command of the army on that eſtabliſhment.

(The Commander in Chief will pardon this formal and official ſolicitation. I know the ardour of his zeal for the public ſervice, and that this principle will of itſelf impel him to be wherever it ſhall moſt require his preſence; but I think this a caſe in which it would mark too great an indifference to the public welfare, and too cold a ſenſe of the utility of his ſervices, to leave the offer of them to his unſolicited opinion. I make no ſcruple to avow, that although I am convinced that the danger impending on our intereſts in the Carnatic, might be eaſily repelled, even with the force which it already poſſeſſes for its defence; yet I cannot place any reliance upon it, unleſs it ſhall be properly applied and conducted; that I do not think it has been properly applied, nor expect that it will be properly conducted, unleſs Sir Eyre Coote will at this criſis ſtand forth, and vindicate in his own perſon the rights and honour of the Britiſh arms. I mean not to compliment his military experience; and above all the high eſtimation in which his name is held by the world, and eſpecially by that part of it where it was principally acquired, mark him as the only poſſible inſtrument to retrieve our paſt diſgrace, or to preſerve the Britiſh intereſts and poſſeſſions in the Carnatic from utter ruin. Appendix No. 319.

Our armies which have been ſo long formed to the habits of conqueſt, will not eaſily recover from the impreſſion of the dreadful reverſe which has lately befallen them, nor be brought to act with the former confidence under unſucceſsful commanders. The addition of numbers will not relieve their apprehenſions, and will but contribute to oppreſs the hands which have been already proved too weak to ſuſtain the weight of an imperior charge.)

4th. That an immediate offer of peace be made to the Maratta State, in the mode and on the conditions following; viz. That as the Miniſters of that State have profeſſed a deſire for peace, which has been equally the wiſh of this Government, even from the commencement of the war; and as the attainment of it ſeems to have been hitherto impeded by the difficulty of managing a negociation between the principals ſituated at ſo great a diſtance from each other; to preclude all further delays, we do at the ſame time offer peace, and bind ourſelves to the obſervance of it on their acceptance and ratification of the following conditions; viz.

1ſt. That all acquiſitions made by our forces in the courſe of the war, and retained in our poſſeſſion as the property of the Company, ſhall be delivered up and reſtored to the ſame footing as that on which it ſtood before the commencement of the war; but that ſuch as have been conquered and ceded in virtue of formal treaties ſhall remain, and be confirmed to the perſons to whom they were ſo ceded; and the treaties concluded with them remain firm and inviolate.

2d. That a proviſion be made for the maintenance of Ragonaut Row during his life; and that he ſhall be permitted to reſide where he pleaſes, excepting Bombay or any place nearer to Bombay than Surat, but ſhall receive no aſſiſtance from the Governor General and Council of Bengal, nor from any other Preſidency of the Company; nor, if he ſhall chuſe any of the Company's Preſidencies or ſettlements for the place of his reſidence, ſhall he be permitted to reaſſert his pretenſions to the adminiſtration of the Maratta State, without the entire and univerſal conſent and requiſition of all the members of the State, who are included as parties in this treaty.

3d. That the Peiſhwa and rulers of the Maratta State ſhall agree to an alliance, offenſive and defenſive, with the Company, againſt the French and Hyder Ally Cawn, and ſhall immediately employ their forces in conjunction with ours in the invaſion of his dominions, and in the proſecution of ſuch operations againſt him, as the circumſtances of the war, and the judgment of thoſe who have the conduct of it on both ſides, ſhall determine; and if in the courſe of it any acquiſitions of territory ſhall be made, theſe ſhall be equally ſhared between the parties to this engagement, in ſuch manner as ſhall be moſt ſuitable to the ſituation and contiguity of the places or dominions at this time reſpectively held by them.

4th. That if the Peiſhwa will not agree to the propoſed alliance, peace be nevertheleſs concluded, each party retaining what it hath acquired, or that a ſuſpenſion

a ſuſpenſion of hoſtilities ſhall take place on both ſides during one year from the date of the treaty, for the purpoſe of negociating the terms of a future and perpetual adjuſtment.

5th. That the treaty ſhall be concluded with the mediation and guarantee of Rajah Moodajee Booſla, who ſhall be a ſubſcribing party to it, and ſhall bind himſelf and his ſucceſſors to the faithful obſervance and ſupport of it.

6th. That the treaty ſhall be ſealed, ſigned, and ſanctified, by the reſpective parties to it, with the moſt ſolemn oaths preſcribed by their reſpective religions.

7th. That one copy of the treaty executed in manner above preſcribed by the Governor General and Council of Bengal, being received by the Peiſhwa or his Miniſters, two copies or counterparts thereof ſhall be in like manner executed by the Peiſhwa and principal rulers of the Maratta State and Moodajee Booſla as the guarantée to it in the manner above mentioned, and ſhall be tranſmitted, one to the Government of Bombay and the other to General Goddard, or to the officer commanding the detachment ſent from Bengal, that all hoſtilities may immediately ceaſe on both ſides, and each provide for the due execution of the treaty: but until the treaty ſhall be thus ratified on the part of the Peiſhwa, it ſhall not be binding on the Governor General and Council, neither ſhall it be binding, unleſs it ſhall be ſo ratified within two months after the receipt of it.

5th. That a letter be written to the Preſident and Select Committee of Bombay, and a ſimilar order to General Goddard and Major Camac, requiring and commanding them immediately to ſuſpend all hoſtilities and military operations on the receipt of a requiſition in writing to that effect, and a notification from the Peiſhwa, that the like order has been given on his part to the officers commanding his armies; and that the Peiſhwa be adviſed of theſe orders, that if deſirous of peace, he may make the ſaid requiſition and notification accordingly.

6th. That the treaty being executed by the Governor General and Council, in the manner ſpecified by the 6th and 7th articles of the 4th reſolution, it be forwarded to Moodajee Booſla with two blank copies of it; that if he ſhould approve of it, it may be previouſly ratified on his part as guarantee, and tranſmitted with the treaty executed by this Government to the Peiſhwa for his ratification, in the manner preſcribed by the 6th and 7th articles of the 4th reſolution.

This is all that I propoſe as immediately neceſſary. The Commander in Chief will offer ſuch a plan for the diſtribution of our troops and other military arrangements, as appertain to his ſeparate province.

Other ſubſidiary meaſures may be the ſubject of future deliberation.

Agreed, That the conſideration of the foregoing propoſitions be deferred until the next meeting.

The Board adjourn till to-morrow morning, at 10 o'Clock.

Warren Haſtings,
P. Francis,
Edw^d Wheler.

Bengal Secret Conſultations, 26th September.—At a Council; preſent, the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Governor General; Philip Francis, Edward Wheler, Eſquires; Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote, K. B.

THE Board met agreeable to adjournment.

The Secretary lays before the Board the following letter from the military Paymaſter-general.

To Mr. Edward Hay, acting Secretary to the Supreme Council. Military Paymaſter-General.

Sir,

In anſwer to your letter of this date; I have to inform you, that all the Europeans at the Preſidency are paid to the laſt day of this month; the engineers to the 31ſt of laſt month; and all the artillery Laſcars, Sepoys, and artificers, to the 30th of June; Captain Allen M^cPherſon's battalion ſent on command, to the 31ſt of July. No. 24. Mr. Francis's packet.

It is impoſſible for me to ſay to what period the troops at Surat, and Majors Camac and Popham's detachment are paid, and by the lateſt advices there were no arrears due to the troops at Cawnpore, Futty Ghur and Berhampore.

There is now due to me from the treaſury, a balance of Auguſt eſtimate,

Mr. Francis delivers in the following minute on the propoſitions recorded by the Governor General on yeſterday's proceedings. No. 23. Mr. Francis's packet.

Mr. Francis—I am earneſtly deſirous of giving every aſſiſtance and relief to the Preſidency of Fort Saint George, that prudence and a due regard to our own ſafety will admit of; our endeavours to provide for the ſecurity of the Company's other poſſeſſions in India, ſhould always be guided and limited by the fundamental principle laid down for us by the Court of Directors in our general inſtructions, to make the ſafety and proſperity of Bengal the principal objects of all our deliberations and reſolutions: and I truſt that the Board will not loſe ſight of this principle in the preſent debate.

1ſt. I ſee many objections to the Governor General's firſt propoſition. The ſum of 15 lacks in ſpecie is much too great for this Government to ſpare from its own preſſing occaſions, nor do I think that ſo great a ſum ought to be truſted at once to the gentlemen of Madras, if our treaſury were full. If we ſupply them gradually and with moderation, it is probable they may apply our money with œconomy to the ſervice for which we intended it; if not, I very much fear it will not only be miſapplied but waſted. Before we part with any thing, we ought to look into the ſtate of our own treaſury, and ſee what ſupplies can be afforded from it, conſiſtently with the immediate demands, and other indiſpenſable ſervices of this Government.

We had yeſterday an apparent balance of 44 lacks of current rupees, including 4,65,196 bills receivable; 1,26,990 unſtated treaſure, and depoſits of private property to the amount of C. R^s 16,51,653: this is our actually exiſting fund. The Paymaſter-general's immediate demand on this fund is for 17 lacks 59,556; other orders unpaid amount to C. R^s 15,91,441. The civil ſervice I believe is univerſally in arrears. The artillery Laſcars, the artificers, and all the Sepoy battalions, except one, are three months in arrears. On the firſt day of next month, the Paymaſter General will call upon us for C. R^s 5,47,000, excluſive of any bills that may be drawn by General Goddard and Major Camac; put theſe demands together, and ſee in what ſtate we ſhall be left when they are ſatisfied, as ſome of them at leaſt muſt be without delay: in effect we have no fund to meet our moſt preſſing expences; nor do I ſee by what means it will be poſſible to create ſuch a fund as our ſituation requires. Before we have a conſiderable ſum in hand, I would not undertake to ſend large ſupplies to the other Preſidencies. For theſe reaſons, I think that the preſent ſupply to Fort Saint George ſhould not exceed half the ſum propoſed, nor could any thing but their preſſing neceſſities extort even this ſum from me in the preſent ſtate of our treaſury.

2d. If it depended on me, I would rather take meaſures to increaſe the depoſit in the new fort, than proclaim our diſtreſs to all India, by taking away the reſidue now left there. It is a dreadful conſideration, that a Government ſuch as this ſhould not at all times have a reſerve of 20 or 30 lacks in ſpecie at its command.

3d. On the firſt part of the 3d propoſition I muſt ſubmit to the judgment of the Commander in Chief, Whether a large detachment of European infantry and artillery can be ſpared with ſafety from the defence of Fort William, and of theſe provinces? It is not aſcertained by what conveyance they are to be ſent. The Kingston, it is ſaid, may be ready in ten days; but this is the only ſhip now under orders for ſailing; and it is to be feared that even ſhe will arrive on the coaſt at a time when it may be very difficult, if not impoſſible, to land the ſtores or men. I deem this to be a point of very great conſequence, and hope the Board will attend to it, as the Governor General declares, that he is convinced, that the danger impending on our intereſt in the Carnatic might be eaſily repelled, even with the force which it already poſſeſſes for its defence, if properly conducted.

I concur in the requeſt propoſed to Sir Eyre Coote; but I do not ſee the ſame neceſſity for ſending a reinforcement of troops.

4th. I agree to the fourth paragraph, with the following reſervations, viz. That all acquiſitions whatever, on the Malabar coaſt, made by us ſince the laſt rupture with the Poonah Government, ſhall be reſtored: I would not continue the war for the ſake of keeping Futty Sing in poſſeſſion of any part of Guzerat. With reſpect to the Rana of Gohud, I would ſecure him, if poſſible, in the poſſeſſion of whatever is properly his own dominions; but I would keep Guilior, which is a royal fortreſs, and not his, to be made uſe of in our accommodation with the Marattas; that is, I would exchange it for Baſſein, and garriſon it until that point can be accompliſhed. I agree to the article reſpecting Ragonaut Row; except, that he ſhould not be permitted to reſide at Bombay: and, if he could be removed entirely from that coaſt to ſome other reſidence, I think that one principal cauſe and inſtrument of future quarrel with the Marattas would be thereby removed.

On the 3d and 4th articles of the 4th propoſitions, I am of opinion, that we ought to make peace with the Marattas at all events; becauſe I deem it a caſe of indiſpenſable neceſſity, which ſuperſedes all other conſiderations: it is, undoubtedly, much to be deſired that they ſhould join with us againſt Hyder Ally; but, in our preſent circumſtances, it is of itſelf a point of ſo much conſequence, and will give us ſo great a relief to put an end to the war with the Marattas, that I think it ought not to be embarraſſed with any conditions which they can reaſonably refuſe. All they deſire as I underſtand is, that we ſhould reſtore them their property: they are content to ſit down with the heavy loſſes and diſtreſſes they have ſuffered in the courſe of our different invaſions of their country. I ſhall not object to the mode propoſed for obtaining a ſpeedy determination of the queſtion, whether the Marattas will accede to our propoſal or not? The Governor General knows better than I do, what dependance is to be placed in the zeal and friendſhip of Moodajee Booſla. For my own part, I fear delays, and am inclined to think, that if Major Popham, or ſome other officer from that quarter, were ſent to Poonah with the treaty in his hand, it would be the ſhorteſt courſe, and the moſt likely to ſucceed.

I ſubmit to the Board, whether, in caſe the Marattas ſhould not join in an offenſive alliance with us, it would not be proper to inſert an article in the treaty, to provide for the free paſſage of General Goddard's army through their country, and its return home, ſuppoſing we ſhould at any time think fit to demand it? I have not mentioned the recal of Major Camac's detachment, nor any thing that relates to the arrangement of the troops for the defence of theſe provinces, eſpecially to the ſouthward towards Cuttack; as I underſtand theſe points have been duly attended to by the Commander in Chief, in whoſe care and judgment I confide, I think it would be proper to recommend it to Sir Eyre Coote, to inſiſt on the reſtoration of Mr. Hollond to his rank in the Company's ſervice, from which he was diſmiſſed by a moſt arbitrary and unjuſt reſolution of a majority of the Select Committee formed by the caſting voice of the Preſident. It was an indignity to this Government which we ought to riſe at, as well as an injury to Mr. Hollond which we are particularly bound to repair, ſince it was drawn upon him by his compliance with our inſtructions: I need hardly add, that, in the preſent juncture, his ſervices at the Nizam's Court may be turned to the moſt advantageous account. An offenſive alliance with this Prince ſeems to me one of the firſt objects to be aimed at; and with ſome conceſſions, which in effect would coſt us nothing, I ſhould think it might eaſily be accompliſhed.

Appendix. No. 310.

But there ſtill is another point which I deem eſſential to the ſucceſs of every meaſure we take for the defence of the Carnatic, and which I muſt again beg leave to bring into view. I mentioned it yeſterday in diſcourſe; and if we are unanimous I ſhould have no ſcruple to record my opinion of it. If we are not unanimous, the ſubject had better not be mentioned.

Theſe ideas are thrown together, I confeſs, with much leſs care and deliberation than the importance of the ſubject of them demanded: the ſhortneſs of the interval ſince the cloſe of yeſterday's council obliges me to defer entering into many other important conſiderations which are ſuggeſted to me by a general view of our ſituation.

I beg leave to annex an abſtract ſtate of our Treaſury, with the preſent and immediate demands upon it.

The Governor General—As the principal part of the reſolutions which I had propoſed for the preſent deliberation of the Board, depends on the reliance which I had placed on the diſpoſition of the Government of Berar, I requeſt that the Board will permit Beneram Pundit, the miniſter of that Government, to attend them, and anſwer ſuch queſtions as may be put to him, for the purpoſe of ſatisfying all doubts which may remain reſpecting the credit which is to be given to the propoſitions of that Government. He is now waiting, if the Board ſhould think proper to order his attendance.

Ordered, That Beneram Pundit be deſired to attend the Board.

The Miniſter, Beneram Pundit, attends the Board accordingly. Mr. Nathaniel Middleton, being in waiting, is called in to interpret between the Board and Beneram Pundit.

The Governor General—With the permiſſion of the Board, I will propoſe the firſt general queſtion to be put to Beneram Pundit.

Queſtion,

Appendix. No. 310.

Queſtion. The Board deſire to be informed, generally, of the diſpoſition and intentions, of your maſter, the Rajah of Berar, reſpecting this Government, and that of the Peiſhwa, in ſuch points as have a common relation to both.

Anſwer. To the Peiſhwa, my maſter is bound by his faith and his religion; to this Government, by a ſtrict friendſhip. The Rajah's deſire is to become the inſtrument of effecting a reconciliation between the Peiſhwa and this Government.

Queſtion. If we ſhall employ him as the inſtrument of peace and the mediator between us and the Peiſhwa, and the terms that we may offer ſhall be ſuch as his maſter ſhall approve, will he in ſuch caſe be the pledge to us for the concurrence of the Peiſhwa? or, in caſe he cannot anſwer for that event, and our offers ſhould be rejected, the treaty be broken off, and the war continued, what part will your maſter take in ſuch a caſe? Will he preſerve his neutrality between us? or, will he take a part actively as our friend, or as our enemy?

Anſwer. The Rajah is willing to pledge himſelf, that in caſe he ſhould be employed as the inſtrument of peace and the mediator between the two Governments, and the terms propoſed by the Company ſhall be approved by him, that they will be accepted by the Peiſhwa; if they are not, the Rajah himſelf will become the Company's ally, and aſſiſt the Company to the utmoſt of his abilities.

Queſtion. You have ſaid, that the Rajah of Berar is bound to the Peiſhwa by his faith and religion; and you now ſay, that if the Peiſhwa will not ratify his approbation of our propoſals, he will be our ally: how can he be in any caſe our ally, if he is bound to the Peiſhwa by his faith and religion?

Anſwer. If the terms propoſed by the Company be reaſonable, and rejected by the Peiſhwa, a breach of faith is on the Peiſhwa's ſide, and my maſter will be juſtified in becoming the Company's ally. The Rajah has written to me, that in caſe the Peiſhwa rejects, he will quit his, the Peiſhwa's cauſe, and become the Company's ally.

Queſtion. In the anſwers which you have given, have you ſpoken from authority, or from your own belief only?

Anſwer. I have ſpoken from the authority of my maſter's letters. I am an ambaſſador.

Queſtion. If your maſter is ſo deſirous of friendſhip with the Engliſh, what occaſion is there for keeping up a large army at Cuttack, which he muſt do at a great expence?

Anſwer. My maſter is obliged to keep up appearances, in conformity to a plan by Nizam Ally Khan.

Queſtion. With whom is that plan concerted?

Anſwer. With the Peiſhwa, with Nana Furneſſe.

Queſtion. Is the Rajah party to that agreement between the Nizam and the Peiſhwa?

Anſwer. He is not. When Dewagur Pundit, the Dewan of Rajah Moodajee Booſla, was at Poonah, letters were received from Nizam Ally Khan, by him and Nana Furneſſe, declaring, that as the Rajah his maſter was the means of introducing the Engliſh army into Decan, Nizam Ally and Nana Furneſſe had forwarded a plan, in which he muſt take a part, and that he muſt march an army to invade Bengal.

Queſtion. When did Chimnajee Baboo, commander of the army at Cuttack, receive his diſpatches?

Anſwer. The army marched in the day of the Duſſorah, and arrived at Cuttack at the end of Byſac. *

Queſtion. In the poſtſcript of the laſt letter written to the Governor General by the Rajah, he refers the Governor General to you, concerning aids to be given to Chimnajee Booſla: what were the orders which you received upon this ſubject?

Anſwer. The Rajah writes to me, that a ſupply of 16 lacks of rupees will be needful; but that 12 lacks at all events will be indiſpenſably neceſſary. This money will not be loſt; it will be made good from the acquiſitions that will be made by the united operations of the Company's and Rajah's troops.

Queſtion. Were this Government to comply with ſuch a requiſition, what ſecurity or pledge has it, or can it have, that the army for whoſe benefit it is intended will unite with us, or that it will not act againſt us?

Anſwer. The reputation of the family of Booſla is of long ſtanding. It is not poſſible that the Rajah could ſacrifice or riſk it, or violate his faith for a conſideration of 12 or 16 lacks of rupees.

Queſtion. Would you yourſelf take upon you to be anſwerable for the fidelity of your maſter in ſuch a caſe?

Anſwer. My maſter writes that he is the firm friend of the Engliſh; to the truth of which God is witneſs. On the faith of this declaration I can venture to pledge myſelf for my maſter's fidelity.

Queſtion. Do you think this aſſurance a ſufficient voucher for this Government acting in truſt for the intereſts of the Company, and of the King of England?

Anſwer. Yes, I think it is. The Rajah himſelf has written to the Governor General, and pledged his faith. I pledged my faith.

Queſtion. Will you be perſonally anſwerable to this Government, that the force now at Cuttack will in no caſe enter our provinces, if not provoked by hoſtilities on our part?

Anſwer. My maſter's faith is in my hands, and pledged to me. On the ſtrength of that I can venture to be anſwerable, that the force now at Cuttack will in no caſe enter the Company's provinces, if not provoked by hoſtilities on their part.

Queſtion. If that be the caſe, can your maſter have any objection to the removal of the force from Cuttack, if this Government ſhould think it neceſſary? The poſition of it at Cuttack gives alarm to the people of theſe provinces.

Anſwer. He will have no objection, if this Government deſire they ſhould be removed.

Queſtion. Will you be anſwerable, that if we deſire to ſend a reinforcement to our ſettlement on the coaſt, their paſſage ſhall not be oppoſed or interrupted by the army now at Cuttack, or otherwiſe by the Rajah?

Anſwer. I will be anſwerable that they ſhall not be oppoſed or interrupted by the army now at Cuttack, or otherwiſe by the Rajah.

Queſtion. Is the Rajah at this time ſtronger in force, or richer in revenue, than he was a year and a half ago, when General Goddard was at Hoſhungabad?

Anſwer. He is not richer in revenue, but has more troops.

Queſtion. What force had the Rajah on actual eſtabliſhment at the time when General Goddard was at Hoſhungabad?

Anſwer. He had 5,000 horſe belonging to his own houſe, and 10,000 the property of the Ridey, and 7,000 Patna Jaghierdars.

Queſtion. What is his preſent ſtrength?

Anſwer. I do not know my maſter's preſent force at Naigpore; but I know that 30,000 horſe are at preſent at Cuttack.

Queſtion. Are the whole of the 30,000 horſe at Cuttack paid by your maſter, or is any number of theſe paid by the Miniſters at Poonah?

Anſwer. They are entirely under my maſter's orders, and have no connection with the Miniſters at Poonah.

Queſtion. Are there not 5, or 6,000 horſe in the army at Cuttack, called Poonah Wallahs, or denominated from Poonah?

* The day of the Duſſorah, laſt year, was in the 5th of Cautic, which anſwers to the 19th October 1779. The laſt day of Byſac 1187, anſwers the 11th May 1780.

Anſwer.

Anſwer. There are men who have come from Poonah, who may be called Wallahs; but they are all the Rajah's ſervants.

Queſtion. If Hyder Ally Cawn ſhould have entered into an alliance with the French King, and have received from him ſuch an aſſiſtance of ſhips of war and ſoldiers as would give him a ſuperiority in the war in which he is engaged with the Engliſh in the Carnatic; how do you underſtand that ſuch an event would intereſt the Peiſhwa, and the other rulers of the Maratta State?

Anſwer. The Peiſhwa, and the other rulers of the Maratta State could not be pleaſed with ſuch an event, as they would have every bad conſequence to expect from ſuch an acquiſition of power and ſtrength to Hyder Ally, who is their natural enemy, and has already conquered their country as far as the Kiſtna, and with ſuch an acceſſion of ſtrength would not ſtop there.

Queſtion. In the third of the requiſitions ſtated by Dewagur Pundit on the behalf of the Peiſhwa, it expreſſed, that no demand for the reimburſement of expences ſhall be made on either ſide; Pundit Purdhaun and the Engliſh gentlemen ſhall recover their heavy expences by uniting themſelves and jointly attacking their enemies: who do you underſtand to be meant by the term enemies?

Anſwer. Hyder Naig: there is no other enemy.

The Board proceed to conſider the Governor General's propoſitions, delivered in his minute recorded yeſterday.

Firſt, "That the ſum of fifteen lacks of rupees be "immediately ſent to Fort Saint George, in ſpecie, and "laden for that purpoſe on the Honourable Company's "ſhip the Duke of Kingſton, and the other veſſels "which are now on the point of ſailing for Madras."

Sir Eyre Coote—I agree to the propoſition.

Mr. Wheler—I am of opinion that we cannot furniſh from our preſent funds ſo large a ſupply as 15 lacks of rupees; neither am I fully convinced that the Preſidency of Madras is in immediate want of it. I am therefore for dividing the ſum propoſed to be ſent into equal ſhares, remitting the half of it by the ſhips now deſtined to carry the Company's troops, and the remainder after the change of the monſoon.

Mr. Francis—My opinion on the Governor General's ſeveral propoſitions is contained in my minute which I have already recorded.

The Governor General—I agree to the queſtion. I ſhould be glad to join with the other members of the Board in forming any means for reſtricting the Preſidency of Fort Saint George to the application of this money ſolely to their military charges.

Reſolved, That the ſum of 15 lacks of rupees be immediately ſent to Fort Saint George, in ſpecie, and laden for that purpoſe on the Honourable Company's ſhip the Duke of Kingſton, and the other veſſels which are now on the point of ſailing for Madras.

Read the Governor General's 2d propoſition, viz.

2d, "That the treaſure depoſited in the New Fort, "including the moiety lately taken from it, be all replaced "in the general treaſury, to be applied to the preceding "purpoſe, and other exigencies of this Government."

Sir Eyre Coote—I agree to the propoſition.

Mr. Wheler—I conſider the depoſit of treaſure now in the New Fort, to have been made for the purpoſe of defraying ſuch extraordinary demands as this Government from time to time might become ſubjected to, either from the effects of war, or other public calamities. I underſtand that a moiety of the original depoſit hath already been replaced in the general treaſury, with a view of applying the ſame to our preſent exigencies; and I do not believe we ſhall be enabled to defray the preſent unſatisfied and growing demands upon our treaſury, without the application of the remainder, or without every other poſſible meaſure of exertion; I am, therefore for applying it agreeable to the terms of the queſtion.

Reſolved, That the treaſure depoſited in the New Fort, including the moiety lately taken from it, be all replaced in the general treaſury, to be applied to the purpoſe mentioned in the foregoing reſolutions, and to the other exigencies of this Government. Appendix. No. 310.

Read the Governor General's 3d propoſition; viz. N^d 25. Mr. Francis's minute.

"That a large detachment of European infantry and "artillery be immediately ſent to Fort St. George by the "Duke of Kingſton and the other veſſels, which are now "on the point of ſailing for Madras; and that the "Commander in Chief be requeſted to proceed him-"ſelf immediately to the coaſt, and take the command "of the army on that eſtabliſhment."

The Commander in Chief delivers in the following minute:

Sir Eyre Coote—I cannot help feeling in the higheſt ſenſe the diſtinguiſhed terms in which the Governor General has ſolicited me to undertake the immediate command of the forces on the coaſt of Coromandel; nor am I leſs ſenſible of the honour done me by the other members of this Board, by their having joined in a requiſition ſo much to my credit.

I ſhould do injuſtice to thoſe motives which actuated my return to India, and to the expectations which both my king and my country formed from it, did I not on this occaſion expreſs the readineſs with which I now conſent to undertake a ſervice, on the ſucceſs of which the honour and intereſts of the Britiſh nation are ſo materially concerned. And I flatter myſelf I enter upon the arduous taſk with a degree of zeal and fortitude equal to what I did many years ago in a ſimilar conjuncture of the affairs of both the Company and the nation in that part of India, and that my efforts will be crowned with ſucceſs. At the ſame time I ſcruple not to confeſs that I feel myſelf embracing the road to honour and glory under a diſadvantage which I did not then experience, a diminution of perſonal activity, which the addition of years has involuntarily entailed upon me.

The other difficulties which I have to encounter in taking upon me the command of an army, diſheartened and diſpirited by the late unfortunate defeat by Hyder Ally Cawn, the Governor General, has ſufficiently elucidated; it only therefore is left for me to add the further conſideration of my having to overcome an enemy, who can bring treble the number of our forces into the field, and who, from their late conduct, appear to be in higher diſcipline than any we have yet encountered among the native Powers of Hindoſtan.

Whilſt the ſteps which are neceſſary to be taken for the ſecurity of our poſſeſſions here, and for the relief of our diſtreſſes at Madras, from their nature oblige us to relinquiſh the proſecution of the offenſive war which we had commenced againſt the Marattas from this ſide of India; I agree entirely in opinion with the Governor General, that orders ſhould be ſent, in the manner and on the principle he has pointed out, for a ceſſation of hoſtilities in the reſpective quarters on the other ſide of India, and that propoſals for peace, and an offenſive and defenſive alliance, on the terms he has ſtated, ſhould be immediately offered to them. I cannot help looking upon the preſent ſeaſon as one favourable for that purpoſe, as I conceive the late victory Hyder Ally has obtained over us, added to his conduct in latter years, whereby he has evinced a diſpoſition to encroach upon the Maratta dominions, will render them extremely jealous of his power, and induce them rather to wiſh for a connection with us, than to act in concert with him againſt us.

The very accurate and juſt deſcription which the Governor General has given, of the danger that at preſent impends the intereſts of the Britiſh nation in India, I am perſuaded will have the ſame influence upon the mind of every other member of this Board as it has had upon mine, and tend to produce that freedom of deliberation, concord, and unanimity in our councils, ſo neceſſary for the public good. In full confidence that no other view can exiſt amongſt us, I with the greater chearfulneſs undertake that part of the ſervice which falls to the lot of the ſtation I fill; and relying on the ſupport of this Board therein, moſt readily repoſe my military character and credit in their hands.

See Reference, to App. 312.

In conformity to the requeſt made at the cloſe of the Governor General's minute, I now deliver in a ſtate of our force in this eſtabliſhment, and of the diſpoſition propoſed to be made of it, for the protection of theſe provinces, and for the relief of Madras.

Commander in Chief.

The preſent ſtrength in troops at the upper ſtations at and above Chunagur is as follows:

2 Regiments of cavalry,
3 Companies of artillery.
Captain Mayaffer's detachment of D°,
1 Regiment of Europeans, ½ batt^n,
Company of rangers,
21 Battalions of Sepoys.

Propoſed diſpoſition of ſaid corps:

Gwalior to be garriſoned with 3 battalions of Sepoys,
Captain Mayaffer's detachment of artillery and the company of rangers,
The four remaining battalions at preſent with Major Camac to return, and the detachment of cavalry with him to join the 2^d and 3^d regiments.
Daranaghur, one battalion of Company's Sepoys,
1,000 of the Vizier's infantry, and ſent ſuch a number of Fyzulat Cawn's troops as may be thought neceſſary.

An army to be formed at Allahabad, or in any central poſition thought moſt eligible, of the following troops:

2 Companies of artillery,
2^d Regiment of Europeans.
10 Battalions of Sepoys,
1,000 of the Vizier's Candahar or beſt horſe. If 1,000 cannot be obtained, as many as can poſſibly join.

N. B. From the above two companies of artillery, the ſmall detachments at Dananagur, and Chunar Gur to be ſupplied.

Chunar Gur, one battalion of Sepoys as uſual.

Bahar province, the two regiments of cavalry to be ordered down there, to be joined by four battalion of Sepoys, the third company of artillery from the field, and 1,000 horſe, if they can be procured from the Rajah of Benares. Boggah battalion to make one of the 4 battalions for this ſervice.

Thus the troops at the upper ſtations to be diſpoſed of for the preſent; and there will then remain 3 battalions of Sepoys from the before-named number of 21 battalions, for other ſervices; our force with ſaid 3 battalions included at and below Berhampore will then be,

Artillery 6 companies, and the remainder of Captain Mayaffer's company. Firſt and third regiment of Europeans, and 18 battalions of Sepoys,

To be employed as follows:

At Berhampore, covering the city, or ready for any ſervice that might occur, } One company of artillery, One battalion of Europeans, and, Four battalions of Sepoys.

Madras detachment.

The proceeding of the troops by land or ſea for this ſervice, ought to be determined by the part the Maratta force at Cuttack mean to take. If they are friends, our armament for the coaſt might proceed by land; but if they are hoſtile to our cauſe, as one of the firſt objects is to aſſiſt the Preſidency of Madras as ſoon as poſſible, the detachment for that ſervice ſhould proceed by ſea; but whether the Sepoys can be brought voluntarily to embark, is by no means a certain point. If the embarkation could be adopted, the detachment ſhould conſiſt of

2 Companies of artillery,
1 Battalion of 3^d regiment completed to 300 rank and file, and,
4 Battalions of Sepoys.

This is on a ſuppoſition that the Cuttack forces are in oppoſition to us, in which caſe 4 battalions at leaſt will be wanted on the Midnapore ſide, with the preſent detachment of artillery there, and the chain of troops as above ſtationed will be able to oppoſe the enemy whenever they attempt entering the provinces: there will alſo then remain for the immediate protection of Fort William and this quarter,

3 Companies of artillery,
1 Regiment of Europeans,
6 Battalions of Sepoys;

But if it can be proved that we have no oppoſition to apprehend from the force at Cuttack, I then recommend that the army for the aſſiſtance of Madras ſhould proceed by land; viz.

2 Companies of artillery,
1 Battalion of Europeans, 300 rank and file,
8 Battalions of Sepoys, with a light field train.

They would arrive by land in the Carnatic, at this ſeaſon of the year, as ſoon as by embarkation, even if the Sepoys would without heſitation embark: for ſuch a force as mentioned could not with ſafety proceed by ſea from hence till late in November or December, when the height of the N. E. monſoon will be abated on the coaſt.

From the movement by land the different country Powers, will alſo be awed, the Nizam particularly kept in check, and Hyder's troops oppoſed if they ſhould again make the Circars their object. If this mode is adopted, as it is on the ſuppoſition that the Marattas at Cuttack are not inimical, the upper ſtations will not then want ſuch a powerful chain of troops for their defence; and from the connected poſition of the different bodies of troops ſtationed as before mentioned, any part of them when wanted on exigency, can be drawn down for the protection of Bengal in general, or of the Preſidency in particular. If the 8 battalions were to proceed to Madras by land, there would be no occaſion for four battalions at Midnapore, two would be ſufficient for the ſervice required there, and theſe might be drawn from Berrampore, that the force at the Preſidency might not be weakened.

The independent corps at Chittagong, and Ramgur light infantry, are not included in the above diſpoſition of the troops; they are ſuppoſed occupying their preſent poſts; as well as the corps of militia, at their different ſtations.

Calcutta,
September 27, 1780.

The Governor General—The ſeaſon of the year, and the marſhy ſtate of the roads through which an army muſt paſs from hence to the Carnatic, eſpecially through the diſtricts of Midnapore, Jellaſore, and the whole province of Oriſſa, will render it impoſſible to march an army by land, until late in the month of November. We have not ſhipping to tranſport the requiſite number of Sepoys by ſea; neither if we had would it avail us. The remembrance and tradition of the paſt ſufferings of thoſe who have been tranſported by that mode of conveyance, would be an inſuperable objection on the part of the Sepoys themſelves, eſpecially at this ſeaſon. I muſt beg leave, therefore to change the terms of the queſtion, and ſubſtitute for, "what we would wiſh to do," "what we can do." I ſhould agree with the General, and do agree with him, in the propoſition of ſending a conſiderable reinforcement of Sepoys, as well as Europeans, to Madras; but this muſt reſt for a future reſolution: and I mean to add on another day, a freſh motion to that effect.

For the preſent queſtion, I propoſe, from the terms of the General's minute, that two companies of artillery with their complement of Laſcars, and one battalion of one of the regiments of infantry, completed to 300 rank and file, be immediately embarked, as many as can be on board the Duke of Kingston, the reſt on any of the ſhips offered for that purpoſe by Mr. Fergusſon.

Agreed, That the Commander in Chief be requeſted to proceed himſelf immediately to the coaſt, and to take the command of the army upon that eſtabliſhment.

Reſolved, That two companies of artillery with their complement of Laſcars, and one battalion of one of the regiments of infantry, completed to 300 rank and file, be immediately embarked for the Preſidency of Fort Saint George, as many as can be on board the Duke of Kingston, and the reſt on any of the ſhips offered for that ſervice by Mr. Fergusſon.

Ordered, That returns be made to the Commander in Chief, of the number of ſhips offered by Mr. Fergusſon, and of the number of men that each ſhip can carry.

Agreed to the diſpoſition of the troops propoſed by the Commander in Chief; and ordered, that a copy of it be ſent to Brigadier General Stibbert, after the departure of Sir Eyre Coote, that he may iſſue the neceſſary orders for carrying the ſame into execution when the ſeaſon will permit.

Adjourned till to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

Bengal Secret Conſultations, the 27th September 1780; —preſent, the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Eſquire, Governor General, Preſident; Philip Francis, Edward Wheler, Eſquires; Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote.

The Board having met agreeable to adjournment, reſumed the conſideration of the Governor General's propoſitions, contained in his minute of the 25th inſtant.

Read the Governor General's 4th propoſition, and the 1ſt article of the propoſed treaty included in it; viz.

"That an immediate offer of peace be made to the "Maratta State, in the mode, and on the conditions "following; viz.

That as the Miniſters of that State have profeſſed a deſire for peace, which has been equally the wiſh of this Government, even from the commencement of the war, and as the attainment of it ſeems to have been hitherto impeded by the difficulty of managing a negociation between the principals ſituated at ſo great a diſtance from each other, to preclude all further delays, we do at the ſame time offer peace, and bind ourſelves to the obſervance of it, on their acceptance and ratification of the following conditions, viz.

Firſt, "That all acquiſitions made by our forces in "the courſe of the war, and retained in our poſſeſſion "as the property of the Company, ſhall be delivered "up and reſtored to the ſame footing as that on which "it ſtood before the commencement of the war; but "that ſuch as have been conquered and ceded to others "in virtue of formal treaties, ſhall remain and be confirmed to the perſons to whom they were ſo ceded, and "the treaties concluded with them remain firm and "inviolate."

Governor General.—In the firſt article of the treaty which I have recommended to be offered to the Peiſhwa, it is propoſed that all acquiſitions made from the Maratta State, and appropriated to the Company in the courſe of the preſent war, ſhall be reſtored and nothing reſerved to the Company but what it poſſeſſed and was intitled to by the treaty of Poorunder; but as there are ſtrong grounds to expect that Baſſein may by this time, or before the notification of our intentions to the Peiſhwa can be made, be in our poſſeſſion; and as the poſſeſſion of that place has long been an object of the Company, and may be rendered of much more importance to them, and eaſier of defence than any other territory which we poſſeſs on the continent, at a diſtance from the ſeat of our Government, on that ſide of India, although greatly inferior in point of revenue; and as Baſſein is a part of the patrimony of the Peiſhwa himſelf, and upon that account the more likely to prove an impediment to the concluſion of the treaty, unleſs an option be left to the Maratta Government to be reinſtated in the poſſeſſion of this place, if its conſent cannot be obtained to the ceſſion of it on ſuch terms as we may offer as an alternative; I would recommend, that a further clauſe be added to this article, that if the fort of Baſſein ſhall have been conquered by our forces, and ſhall have been in our poſſeſſion before the final ratification of the treaty, an option ſhall be given to the Peiſhwa, either to receive back the fort of Baſſein in the manner ſtipulated by the preceding part of this article, and that the fort with its dependencies ſhall be ceded to the Company for ever; and all the poſſeſſions and rights which were ceded to the Company by the 5th article of the treaty of Poorunder, ſhall be reſtored to the Peiſhwa in lieu thereof; that is to ſay, that the poſſeſſions of the Company dependent on Bombay, ſhall be limited to the iſland of Bombay, the iſland of Salſette, and the other ſmaller iſlands, which were obtained by treaty with Ragonaut Row, the fort of Baſſein and its dependencies, the city of Surat and its dependencies, ſubject as before to the chout, and the entire property of the city and Pergunnah of Broach, together with the trading factories which were eſtabliſhed before the commencement of the war. It is neceſſary that I ſhould remind the Board, that the diſtrict of Baſſein was eſtimated by Mr. Tayler, in his letter of the 29th October 1775, at 4 lacks annual revenue; and that the ceſſions which by the foregoing clauſe I have propoſed to yield up in lieu thereof, do amount by the ſame eſtimate to 14,59,000 annual revenue:

Appendix No. 310.

That is to ſay, the Pergunnahs of

Orpad	3,50,000
Jambooſeer	4,00,000
Occlaſeer, in part	75,000
Corial	50,000
Chicky	1,00,000
Veriow	28,000
Amrood	1,50,000

to which muſt be added the right acquired by the Company by the 5th article of the treaty of Poorunder, to a further territory of 3 lacks, hitherto unadjuſted, but reduced by our inſtructions to General Goddard, to the ſum of rupees 2,09,000. I will add, that I regard the diſtrict of Baſſein eſtimated but at 4 lacks, as of much greater value to the Company than the remote and ſcattered Pergunnahs of Guzerat, were their real value equal to it, or even much greater. It will reduce our dominions, on that ſide of India, to a compact and defenſible compaſs; free from expenſive eſtabliſhments of collectors of revenue; from diſputes of boundaries and other competitions, which private intereſt will be too apt to excite with the collectors of the adjacent lands, and other ſimilar occaſions for future diſturbances; from new military eſtabliſhments more proportioned to the diſtance of relief than the worth of the territory which they are to protect; and multiplied accumulations of expence on every approach or ſuggeſtion of future invaſion.

Sir Eyre Coote—I agree to the firſt condition propoſed by the Governor General, in his minute of the 25th inſtant, with the additional clauſe to it now propoſed.

Mr. Wheler—I agree alſo to both.

Mr. Francis—I entirely agree in the general principles laid down in the Governor's laſt minute; they are the ſame which I have invariably profeſſed, and of courſe I ſhall be at all times ready to ſupport any plan that is founded upon them.

Reſolved in the terms of the Governor General's 4th propoſition before recited, with the amendment ſince propoſed.

Secret Department, Monday.

Bengal Secret Conſultations, 2d October 1780;—preſent, the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Eſquire, Governor General, Preſident; Philip Francis, Edward Wheler, Eſquires; Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote, K. B.

The proceedings of the 25th, 26th, and 27th ultimo, read and approved.

The Governor General lays before the Board the following draft of a treaty with the Peiſhwa, formed on the reſolutions of the 27th ultimo. He thinks it incumbent upon him to add, that he had finiſhed it before he received the information of Mr. Francis's intention of bringing on the queſtion, which has taken up the time of this meeting in their public department, becauſe under ſuch a diſcouragement, he doubts whether he could have undertaken it, and becauſe he now entertains doubts of its proving effectual.

Draft of a treaty with the Maratta State, preposed by the Governor General.

We the Governor General and Council appointed for the management of all affairs of the Engliſh nation and Company, in the province of Bengal and its dependencies, do, in the name of the ſaid Company, and for ourſelves, and for all the governments, ſervants, and miniſters of the ſaid Company, and of the Engliſh nation in the empire of Hindoſtan, offer peace and friendſhip to the Peiſhwa and Rulers of the Maratta State, on the following conditions of a treaty, to which we have previouſly affixed our ſignatures and the ſeal of the ſaid Company, declaring it to be binding on our part from this day and for ever, provided the Peiſhwa ſhall ratify it on his part in the manner hereinafter ſtipulated, but in every other caſe to be from this time and for ever void.

1ſt. All ſorts, cities, and territories, which have been or ſhall have been acquired at the time of the final execution of this treaty, by the Engliſh arms ſince the commencement of the preſent war, that is to ſay, ſince the month of January 1779, and which did formerly belong to the Maratta State (excepting the city of Ahmedabad, and the diviſion of the province of Guzerat, which have been confirmed and guaranteed to Rajah Futty Sing Row Guicawar, by a treaty concluded between him and the Honourable Engliſh Company, and the fortreſs of Gwalior, which has been in the like manner granted and guaranteed by treaty to the Rana of Gokud) ſhall be immediately reſtored to the Peiſhwa, and delivered into the charge of ſuch perſons as ſhall be appointed by him to receive them, without any plea of delay or reſervation of right whatever; and it is hereby underſtood and declared, declared, that the city of Ahmedabad and diviſion of Guzerat aforeſaid, ſhall be allowed to remain in the poſſeſſion of Futty Sing Row Guicawar, and that the fortreſs of Gwalior ſhall remain in like manner the property of the Rana of Gohud, conformably to the faith of the treaties concluded with each; the obligations of which are, in all events, and under all circumſtances, perpetual and unalterable.

2d. If the fort of Baſſein ſhall have been taken by the Engliſh forces, and ſhall be in their poſſeſſion at the time of the final ratification of this treaty, we offer and agree to give in exchange for the perpetual ceſſion and grant of the ſaid fort and its dependencies, all the lands and rights which we have acquired by virtue of the 3d and 7th articles of the treaty of Poorunder, and of the treaty formerly concluded by the Preſident and Council of Bombay with Rajah Futty Sing Row Guicawar, and to confine all the poſſeſſions of the Company which are adjacent to thoſe of the Maratta State, to the iſlands of Bombay and Salſette, and the other ſmaller iſlands adjacent, the fort and dependencies of Baſſein, the city of Surat and its dependencies in the manner in which it was before held by the Company, and the entire poſſeſſion and property of the city and pergunnah of Broach, together with the factories of commerce which were eſtabliſhed before the commencement of the war; but if this offer, which is ſolely made from the deſire of peace, and for the prevention of future diſputes and competitions ſhall not be approved on the part of the Peiſhwa, then the fort of Baſſein ſhall be reſtored conformably to the general tenor and obligation of the preceding article, and the ceſſions made by the treaty of Poorunder ſhall remain as before.

3d. A proviſion ſhall be made for the maintenance of Ragonaut Row during his life, equal to that ſtipulated in the 11th article of the treaty of Poorunder, with the exception of that part of it which reſpects the place of his reſidence. This ſhall be left to his option, except that he ſhall not be permitted to reſide in Bombay, nor in any of the places dependent on the Company nearer to Bombay than the city of Surat; he ſhall receive no aſſiſtance from the Governor General and Council of Bengal, nor from any other Preſidency of the Company, nor if he ſhall chuſe to reſide in any ſettlement of the Company under the limitation aforeſaid, ſhall he be permitted to reaſſert his pretenſions to the adminiſtration of the Maratta State, without the entire and univerſal conſent and requiſition of all the members of that State, who are included as parties in this treaty.

4th. The Peiſhwa and Rulers of the Maratta State ſhall agree to an alliance offenſive and defenſive with the Company againſt Hyder Ally Cawn, and ſhall immediately employ their forces in conjunction with ours, in the invaſion of his dominions, and in the proſecution of ſuch operations againſt him as the circumſtances of the war, and the judgment of thoſe who have the conduct of it on both ſides, ſhall determine; and if in the courſe of it any acquiſition of territory ſhall be made, theſe ſhall be equally ſhared between the parties to this engagement, in ſuch manner as ſhall be moſt ſuitable to the ſituation and contiguity of the places or dominions at this time reſpectively held by both.

5th. If the Peiſhwa will not agree to the propoſed alliance, peace ſhall be nevertheleſs concluded, each party retaining what it hath acquired; or a ſuſpenſion of hoſtilities ſhall take place on both ſides during one year from the date of the treaty, for the purpoſe of negociating the terms of a future and perpetual adjuſtment.

6th. Whereas Rajah Moodajee Boojla has offered his mediation and guarantee for the furtherance and future maintenance of a reconciliation between the Peiſhwa and this Government, and we have been induced principally by his earneſt and repeated perſuaſions and ſolicitations, to make theſe liberal advances on our parts to effect it: we do therefore conſent and agree to accept of his guarantee, and have for that purpoſe, and for the further prevention of delays, cauſed this treaty to be tranſmitted firſt to him, and we deſire that he will be pleaſed to ſubſcribe thereto a declaration, witneſſed by the principal miniſter of his State, and ſanctified by the moſt binding oath of his religion, that he doth conſent and engage to become a party to this treaty, and the guarantee for the faithful obſervance of it; that he will be the common friend of the other two parties ſo long as it ſhall continue inviolate, and the enemy of that which ſhall firſt commit any infringement upon it, until a ſufficient atonement ſhall be made by the party ſo aggreſſing.

7th. This treaty being received by the Peiſhwa, it is expected that his ſeal and ſignature, and the ſeal and ſignatures of Ballajee Row, Nannah Furneeſe, and of ſuch other perſons as conſtitute the efficient Adminiſtration of the Maratta State, ſhall, within the ſpace of five months, from this date be affixed in due form to two counterparts of the ſame, and that they ſhall bind themſelves, or be otherwiſe bound, in ſuch manner as the rights and inſtitutes of their religion will allow, to the faithful obſervance thereof; after which the treaty executed by us ſhall remain with the Peiſhwa, and the other two ſhall be forwarded, one to the Governor of Bombay and the other to General Goddard, or the officer who ſhall be in command of the army of the Company which has been ſent by us into that quarter, that all hoſtilities may immediately ceaſe on both ſides, and each provide for the due execution of the reſpective parts of the treaty. Unleſs the treaty ſhall be ratified in the manner and within the time preſcribed by this article, it ſhall not be binding on our part, but be from this time and for ever void.

We the Governor General and Council of Bengal, for and on behalf of the Honourable Engliſh Company, in teſtimony of our ſincerity, and as a ſolemn pledge for the due obſervance of this treaty in all and every of the conditions and reſervations therein ſpecified, have hereunto ſeparately as well as collectively, ſet our hands, and cauſed the ſeal of the ſaid Company to be affixed, hereby binding the Company, ourſelves and ſucceſſors, in the name of God, and by the faith of our holy religion, to the true and ſtrict obſervance thereof.

Sir Eyre Coote—I approve of the draft of the treaty with the Peiſhwa, as laid before the Board by the Governor General.

Mr. Wheler—I approve.

Mr. Francis—I agree.

Agreed to the draft of the treaty laid before the Board by the Governor General.

Ordered, That the ſame be copied fair, that a counterpart of it be made in the Perſian language, that it be ſealed with the ſeal of the Company, and ſigned by the members of this Government.

Appendix. No. 311.

APPENDIX, No. 311.

To Moodajee Boojla: written 12th October 1780.

I HAVE received your letter, &c. &c. all of which I fully underſtand, and have imprinted it on my mind. You inform me, that you have aſſumed my name as your own; nothing could be more gratifying to my wiſhes, to my credit, or my friendſhip. Remember this, I ſhall ſet a value upon it, as upon the higheſt title of honour, and ſhall conſider not only our union as complete, but that of our two States, as connected by principles of everlaſting durance. There are inſtants in which the minds of men are irradiated by the divine influence, and when the ſecrets of futurity are imperfectly diſplayed to your perception: God knows whether it is from ſuch our inſpiration, that I exult in the hopes that the chronicles of theſe nations will tranſmit to the remoteſt poſterity our names together, recorded in the ſame page, and connected with events not leſs illuſtrious in your achievements than important to the intereſts of mankind. If ſuch ſhould prove the conſequence of our connection, remember with how conſtant and unremitted a perſeverance I have laboured to improve and perfect it during the courſe of ſeven years ſince it firſt began: nor have your inclinations or actions been wanting to promote the ſame end.

At your repeated inſtance I conſented to enter into an early accommodation of peace with the Peiſhwa, and rejoiced at the offer of your guarantee for the faithful and effectual maintenance of it: and I have been long waiting in anxious expectation of a meeting with your Dewan Dewagur Pundit, whom you had intimated your deſign of deputing to me with credentials and full powers, both from yourſelf and the Peiſhwa, to negociate and conclude it. But in the correſpondence which has paſſed between us, ſo much time has elapſed that the ſeaſon for action has already commenced, and the operations of war may be drawn into indefinite lengths, and produce ſuch variations in the ſtate of each party as may defeat the purpoſes of negociation; and beſides this, a new ſcene has opened, which requires a new train of meaſures and a different principle of action.

You will doubtleſs have heard of the ſudden irruption which the Nabob Hyder Ally Cawn has made in the Carnatic, and of the conſequence with which it has been immediately attended, through the want of exertion and failure of preparation to oppoſe it. At the ſame time we learn from undoubted authority, that in conſequence of an alliance long ſince concluded between him and the King of France, a large armament of ſhips of war and land forces has been diſpatched from the ports of France to join him, and are at this time either arrived, or are daily expected. The objects of this alliance are to proſecute his deſigns, in the execution of which he has been ſo long engaged, on the Maratta State, and thoſe of the French on the Carnatic.

It is equally the intereſt of this Government, of the Peiſhwa, of his friends and adherents, and of all Hindoſtan and Decan, to oppoſe attempts of ſo dangerous a tendency. The differences between the Peiſhwa and the Company have prevailed againſt my inclination from the beginning; of that you are a witneſs, and of the early deſire which I manifeſted to accommodate them: their continuance can produce no poſſible good to either party, and muſt be attended with much evil to both. The laws of nature, and the principles of true policy, require that they ſhould be upon terms of mutual friendſhip, ſince they want nothing from each other but peace; and united, may dictate peace to all nations in India.

On theſe grounds, and to prevent further delays, I have precluded the formal and tedious proceſs of negociation, and in conjunction with the counſellors of this Government, have at once formed and executed a treaty, which require only your guarantee and the final ratification of the Peiſhwa to conclude it. The terms are nearly the ſame you yourſelf have propoſed, and they are ſuch as it is the intereſt of the Peiſhwa to accept, if peace and the ſafety of his State be the real objects of his Miniſters. I ſend it to you encloſed with this, and with it two counterparts, intended for the ratification of the Peiſhwa: to each of theſe papers I hope you will add your ſanction in the forms and manner propoſed, and forward them all with the letters accompanying them to the Peiſhwa Nanna Furneeſe, to whom they are directed.

This is enough for the preſent. The plan of operations I intend ſhortly to write you in another letter; and if you continue in the intention of deputing your Dewan Dewagur Pundit to this quarter, than which nothing can be more agreeable to my wiſh, every thing which will not admit of a diſcuſſion by letter may be adjuſted to our mutual and complete ſatisfaction.

P. S. Regarding the expences of the Cuttack army, Beneram will write you the particulars. It is neceſſary you ſhould ſend immediate orders to Chumna Baboo to act in conjunction with our troops, whenever, and in any manner, we may find it expedient to call upon him. If this cannot be done, he muſt be ordered to withdraw his troops to Naugpoor, as their ſituation ſo cloſe to our borders cannot but have an unfavourable appearance in the eyes of people who are not acquainted with the real motives for their being ſtationed there; or with the friendſhip which ſubſiſts between this and the Berar Government. In my next I will inform you of the plan of operations it is intended to purſue, and the part it is expected you will take in it.

To Dewagur Pundit: written 12th October 1780.

Your friendly letter reached me the 13th September, and I clearly underſtand the contents. Beneram Pundit has alſo communicated to me the ſubſtance of two letters which he has received from you, the latter whereof, being written in the Perſian language, he ſubmitted in the original to my peruſal. Theſe are too long, and the ſubjects too important, to be abſtracted; but I have conſidered and reconſidered them, and every ſyllable of their contents is imprinted on my mind. Beneram Pundit knows how little time I have to ſpare; but he alſo knows that I have employed many hours, even days, in conſidering upon all theſe points, and upon the means of facilitating and expediting our mutual intentions. I have alſo explained to the Council all theſe matters, and in conjunction with them have reſolved on ſeveral points and meaſures of which it is neceſſary you ſhould be informed.

The ſeaſon being now arrived for acting, will not admit of time for negociation. This Government has no object in the war with the Peiſhwa; nor can it, any more than the Peiſhwa, gain any thing by it. I was forced into it, and from the beginning have ſought peace, as you well know, you being at Poonah and acquainted with the inſtructions given to General Goddard for that purpoſe. Our reputation had ſuffered the greateſt diſgrace, and the Company's ſettlements brought into danger, by the failure of an ill-adviſed expedition, ſet on foot by the Governor and Council of Bombay. It became neceſſary for this Government to exert its power and reſources in endeavouring to repair the diſgrace which had thus been brought on our reputation, and to preſerve the Company's ſettlements.

The credit of the Engliſh name has happily been reſtored; the danger which threatened the Preſidency of Bombay removed; all therefore that I wiſhed for has been accompliſhed, except peace. And why ſhould I deſire to ſee the Company involved in a war with the Maratta State, whoſe territories lie every way upon our borders, and are as it were a ſcreen between us and others, who are our profeſſed and irreconcileable enemies?

Hyder Ally Cawn has invaded the Carnatic, and by the ſame improvidence which had nearly ruined the Company's affairs at Bombay, he has been ſuffered to ravage that country, while by the diſſipation of our army he has prevented its junction and cut off a part of it. The ſame obligation which claimed our interference at Bombay, now demands our utmoſt exertion in defence of the Carnatic. Thus, from no impulſe or act of my own, from no intereſts of this Government, you ſee me again drawn forcibly into a participation of troubles, only the lot of others, but which falling on the intereſts of the Engliſh nation, which are generally under my charge, I am compelled to take the ſame part in them as if they had been excited by me.

Hyder Ally Cawn, from former connections with the French, our everlaſting enemies, and from the war which has ſubſiſted ſo many years between him and the Peiſhwa, is alike the common and natural enemy of both. He has been incited in the invaſion of the Carnatic by a league concluded by him with the King of France, in conſequence of which a large maritime and military force is now on its way, and perhaps at this time time actually arrived at ſome of the parts of his dominions. I have no doubt that by the bleſſing of God, which has always ſupported the Engliſh nation, the ſpirit of its rulers and people which has ever riſen in proportion to the danger ſurrounding it, will bear them ſingly through their preſent difficulties with conqueſt and glory; and their reſources are very great; yet it is the part of wiſdom and foreſight to make every poſſible proviſion againſt impending difficulties, and to leave as little as poſſible to the power of fortune, to which Providence in its diſpenſations is often pleaſed to leave human affairs. Should it happen, (which God forbid) that this combined force ſhould prevail over our forces in the Carnatic, let it be conſidered what an accumulation of power this will give to Hyder Ally Cawn; and, whether the Peiſhwa in the preſent diſtracted ſtate of his Government would be able to withſtand it, ſhould he, as he certainly will, reſume his former hoſtilities againſt the Peiſhwa's Government. His arms have been employed for theſe ſix or ſeven years againſt the Peiſhwa, and with ſuch ſucceſs, though unaſſiſted with any other alliance, that he has poſſeſſed himſelf of the Maratta dominions to the banks of the Kiſhena; and the ſtrong fortreſs of Merrick has been the ſole obſtacle to his further progreſs. But the capture of fortified places is to Europeans the work of art, and reducible to certainty. In the event which I have ſuppoſed, every thing is to be dreaded in the dominions of Decan, whether appertaining to the Peiſhwa or to Nizam Ally Cawn; and neither the known bravery of the Chief of Berar, nor the wiſdom which is known to have ever regulated his councils, can exempt him from a ſhare in the common lot. For all theſe powerful and united reaſons, it is neceſſary that the Peiſhwa, the Raj.h of Berar, and the Engliſh, ſhould enter into a ſtrict friendſhip and combination, and exert all their ſtrength to repel this ambitious invader. This Government is ſafe; armed by its reſources and the unconquerable defences which nature has provided for it, its ſeas, rivers, woods, and mountains, the imbecility of the nations which ſurround it on its north and eaſt borders, and its contiguity to your country, which covers it with the ſhield of friendſhip, it can have nothing to apprehend; but it can not be an unconcerned ſpectator of the dangers which threaten its remote dependencies, or its connections; therefore it is that I have repreſented to you all theſe things in ſo ſtrong a light.

You have frequently offered your mediation and guarantee between the Engliſh and the Peiſhwa, and have preſſed me in the moſt urgent terms to conclude a peace. I have not only conſented to it, but have alſo offered it on ſuch terms as I conceive will be moſt agreeable to you, to him, and to his Miniſters. Theſe I intended to have reſerved for a negociation and perſonal diſcuſſion with you, and had repeatedly ſignified my wiſhes to you on this ſubject in former letters, but the preſent occaſion will not admit of this delay; I have therefore taken my decided reſolution, and have formed a treaty on the ground of your advice and ſolicitations, in which, giving up all the advantages we have obtained by the war, I have placed every thing nearly on the ſame footing it was at the commencement of the war. This treaty executed by this Government in all the neceſſary forms I now ſend you, with a letter requeſting you will add your ratification and guarantee to it. I alſo ſend you two blank treaties to be executed by the Peiſhwa and his Miniſters, to which I requeſt you will previouſly add your ratification and guarantee The letter I have written to the Peiſhwa I encloſe with this, and as it is neceſſary you ſhould be informed of the contents, I ſend a copy of it for your peruſal: you will ſend this letter with the treaty. I rely on your friendſhip and influence to render this meaſure effectual, and to obtain the immediate ratification of the treaty in its preſent form without any deductions or additions on the part of the Peiſhwa and his Miniſters, becauſe that would be productive of delays and defeat my purpoſe in ſending them in their complete conſtruction; and I have for this reaſon made conceſſions, to which I ſhould never have ſubmitted in the progreſs of a deliberate negociation: and remember, it is by your deſire and at your repeated inſtances, and from the impulſe of my friendſhip to you, which exceeds every conſideration but that of my public duty, that I have conſented to a peace on theſe terms, and have made theſe advances to obtain it. If peace on theſe terms ſhall be accepted, it is well; if, added to peace, the propoſed alliance ſhould take place, it will be better, and every party will find its account in it: if neither of theſe can be obtained, which my firm reliance on your friendſhip and ſincerity will not allow me to doubt, I have done my duty, nor ſhall have ought to reproach myſelf with for the conſequences, which I ſhall cheerfully wait, not doubting but by the bleſſing of God all will turn out well. Appendix. No. 311.

When theſe matters ſhall have been diſcuſſed and ſettled with the Peiſhwa and his Miniſters, I ſhall be very happy to receive the viſit you have ſo long intended me, and I doubt not but the interview will be ſatisfactory to us both, and tend to our mutual advantage: for other particulars I refer you to the letters of Beneram Pundit.

P. S. The ſame as that to Moodajee Booſla in the foregoing letter.

To the Peiſhwa: written 12th October 1780.

Two years have now elapſed ſince the preſent war, which has brought conſiderable loſſes on both nations, firſt took place. God is witneſs that this was never of my ſeeking, but that on the contrary, although from a concurrence of circumſtances I have been reluctantly drawn into it, my ſole thoughts have been ever employed on the means of preventing its continuance, and I have reaſon to believe that your wiſhes have equally tended to this view, the ſole bar to which has been the difficulty of managing a negociation between the principals ſituated at ſo great a diſtance from each other. With a view to remove theſe obſtacles, Maha Rajah Moodajee Booſla has offered his mediation and guarantee to any treaty we may reſolve upon, and has propoſed to ſend his Miniſter Dewagur Pundit for the final reconciling of all differences, but as this laſt ſtep would require a proceſs of deliberation, during which the preſent hoſtilities, far from ſubſiding, might by ſome unforeſeen accident and occurrences be drawn into an indefinite length, I have taken the reſolution of making the firſt advances myſelf, and have drawn up a treaty, executed under the ſeal of the Company, and the ſignatures of the Council, and confirmed by the moſt ſolemn oaths, which I have forwarded to Moodajee Booſla, that it may be by him ratified as guarantee, and tranſmitted to you for your final ratification. In this treaty I have reſtored and ſurrendered every thing, except what is ſecured by former treaties, to Futty Sing, the Ranna of Gohud, and have left nothing for future diſcuſſion; and I deliver up every thing in my power, reſerving to myſelf only my honour and my faith to prior engagements. Should the terms of this treaty meet with your acquieſcence you will ratify it in the manner therein provided, and the one executed by us will then remain with you, that the preſent hoſtilities may immediately ceaſe, and the ſubjects of both nations regain their former eaſe and ſecurity. Be aſſured that my continual endeavours have been exerted to promote the attainment of this deſirable end, and to root out all differences and miſunderſtandings.

To Ballajee Pundit: written 12th October 1780.

Having taken into conſideration the deſire of peace which the Miniſters of the Maratta State have profeſſed, and which it has been equally the wiſh of this Government to promote, provided the attainments of it could be procured on terms by which neither the Company's credit and honour ſhall be affected, nor former treaties actually actually exiſting infringed; I have been induced from theſe circumſtances, added to others which it will be unneceſſary to mention, to propoſe a treaty of peace to be concluded between the Governor General and Council of Bengal, and the Peiſhwa and Rulers of the Maratta State, on certain conditions, mutually binding upon both parties. With reſpect to the war itſelf, I muſt obſerve in the firſt place, that it was not originally of my ſeeking, and even from the commencement of it to this period, my endeavours have been exerted to prevent its continuance; but the difficulty of managing a negociation between the principals, ſituated at ſo great a diſtance from each other, has hitherto been a bar to the accompliſhment of this end. With a view however to remove every obſtacle that has been in the way, Maha Rajah Moodajee Booſila, in ſeveral letters which I have received from him, has been very ſolicitous and preſſing for peace, offering his mediation and guarantee to the execution of any treaty we might reſolve upon, and propoſing at the ſame time to depute an ambaſſador on his part for the final ſettlement and reconciling of differences. But this laſt ſtep would require a proceſs of deliberation too formal and tedious, eſpecially in the preſent moment, which ought to be that of deciſion and action. I have therefore connected the whole of this ſubject into one point of view, weighing the good conſequences that might be derived from the mediation and guarantee of Maha Rajah Moodajee Booſila; the immediate neceſſity of putting an effectual ſtop to the depredations and ambition of Hyder Ally Cawn; and the obvious utility not only in regard of preſent intereſt, but future permanence and proſperity to the Maratta State, by making common cauſe with the Engliſh, and cementing a cloſe and compact alliance with them, offenſive and defenſive, againſt the French and Hyder Ally Cawn, at this time united in alliance, drawn up a treaty with the ſeveral articles to be obſerved, and the particular reſervations to be excepted, and have inſerted the name of Maha Rajah Moodajee Booſila as a ſubſcribing party, to the end that when it ſhall be properly executed by the Governor General and Council, it may for the greater diſpatch be forwarded to Moodajee Booſila, with two blank copies of it, that it may be previouſly ratified on his part as guarantee, and tranſmitted to the Peiſhwa for his ratification in the manner eſpecially ſet forth and preſcribed.

I ſhall now refer you to the treaty itſelf, perſuaded that you will find the terms of it liberal, equitable, and fair, preſerving the faith of treaties inviolate, and conſulting as much as may be the ſafety, honour and advantage of every party ſubſcribing to the engagement. Under theſe circumſtances I doubt not of your chearful and ready acquieſcence, together with a determination upon no pretence whatever to break or evade the treaty, or to deviate, in the ſmalleſt inſtance, from the ſtipulations therein named and provided for.

To Madajee Scindia: written 12th October 1780.

From a concurrence of circumſtances not in my power, I have been driven into a war with the Maratta State infinitely againſt my inclination; as I think it our mutual intereſts to unite conſtantly againſt all other enemies, inſtead of quarrelling ourſelves, I have been from the firſt perpetually aiming at a peace, and finding all attempts to negociate to have been conſtantly baffled and vain, I have now determined to put an end to the conteſt, at leaſt on my part, and have to that end ſent a treaty to the Peiſhwa, ready executed, and only wanting his ratification. The treaty is to give up every thing I have gained by the war, excepting what has been ceded by agreement to Futty Sing Guicawar, and the Ranna of Gohud, ſo that I ſhall remain without the leaſt benefit from the war, while I have in neceſſary form addreſſed myſelf upon this occaſion to the Peiſhwa and the Miniſters, I cannot overlook, in a matter of ſuch moment, one, whoſe perſon forms ſo material a ſupport to the Maratta State; and truſt you will think my terms too reaſonable to withhold your concurrence.

While as an enemy I may regret the Maratta arms being conducted by ſuch courage and ability as have always been conſpicuous in your conduct, yet I cannot as a man withhold my eſteem for the virtues and wiſdom you have diſplayed; as a tribute to thoſe, receive this letter; and as I have experienced you a powerful opponent, ſo let me know you are an able abetter.

To Moodajee Bhooſla—15th October.

On Thurſday the 12th inſtant I diſpatched, by the way of Benares, a letter to you, with a treaty executed conformably to your deſire, on the part of this Government with the Peiſhwa, propoſed for your ſignature as guarantee, and to be afterwards forwarded with two copies for his ratification of the latter, with other papers. Of all theſe a duplicate packet is preparing to be ſent to you by the ſame road. I early apprized Beneram Pundit of my intentions reſpecting theſe particulars, and promiſed to encloſe his letters in my packet; but as much time has been conſumed in preparing it, and I was impatient with the delay, I forgot to give him notice in time, which is the cauſe that his letters did not accompany mine: at his requeſt therefore I write this for explanation. I have given him a copy of the treaty which he will ſend you; although I hope you will before have received the original. I ſee him daily, and as I keep nothing ſecret from him, his letters and mine will afford you a complete ſtate of the affairs of this Government.

The day before yeſterday General Sir Eyre Coote embarked with a large detachment of European infantry and artillery for Madras, deſtined for the war againſt Hyder Ally Cawn, of which he will take the conduct. You cannot be a ſtranger to his name and reputation. It was to his bravery and military ſkill that we owe the preſervation of the Company's intereſts in the Carnatic, and the extirpation of the French from that country in the laſt war between that nation and ours; and, by the bleſſing of God, I truſt he will be the inſtrument of retrieving the loſſes which we have recently experienced in that quarter. He is a Counſellor of this Government, and the Commander in Chief of all the Engliſh military forces in India. I will add, that he is in his heart my friend, and therefore your's. Encloſed is a letter from him to you. I requeſt that you will favour him with your letters, and ſend him expreſs notice of what you ſhall have reſolved and done reſpecting the guarantee of the treaty, and of the part which you propoſe to act in the propoſals which I have ſubmitted to you, with your advice for the aſſiſtance of his conduct in the great affairs of which he has charge. In this you will confer a kindneſs on me.

To Dewagur Pundit—15th October.

Of the ſame tenor as the foregoing, and aſſigning as a reaſon for the General's not having written to him, that his letter to Maha Rajah was from the ſhip, and that in the hurry of departure he probably forgot to accompany it with one for him.

To the Peiſhwa—17th October 1780.

On Thurſday the 13th inſtant, (month of Shawal) I diſpatched a letter to you with a treaty completely executed on the part of this Government, and two copies of it propoſed for your ratification of them through the channel of Maha Raja Moodajee Booſla, which I hope you will have received. Leſt any accident ſhould have befallen this packet in the way, I have thought it proper for the greater certainty to ſend you a duplicate of it through the ſame channel.

General Sir Eyre Coote, who is Commander in Chief of all the Engliſh forces, and a Counſellor of this Government, embarked on Friday laſt for Madras, taking with him a large force of European ſoldiers and artillery for the war of the Carnatic againſt Hyder Ally Khan. By the bleſſing of God all the troubles there will ſoon be removed by his known military ſkill and the bravery of our troops, who want only the preſence of an able commander to lead them to conqueſt.

for

Having propoſed to you an alliance with the Company againſt our common enemy Hyder Ally Khan, and perſuaded that the wiſdom of your Miniſters will dictate to you the policy of an immediate combination of your forces with ours, for the early prevention of his deſigns, which are ſolely founded on an enmity to you, as thoſe of the French, his allies, are to us; I requeſt that ſo ſoon as you ſhall have ratified the treaty which I and the Counſellors of this Government have offered for your acceptance, if you ſhall have approved it, you will immediately cauſe letters to be written to Sir Eyre Coote to adviſe him thereof, and of whatever elſe may be neceſſary in conſequence thereof.

May God advance the progreſs of our friendſhip and of your proſperity.

To Ballajee Pundit—17th October.

On Thurſday the 13th of this month Shawal I diſpatched a letter to you with a treaty completely executed on the part of this Government, and two copies propoſed for the ratification of it on your part, through the channel of Maha Rajah Moodajee Booſla, which I hope you will have received. Leſt any accident ſhould have befallen this packet in the way, I have therefore for the greater certainty, thought it proper to ſend you a duplicate of it through the ſame channel.

Let not the novelty of this propoſal either ſurprize you or render you averſe to the ratification of the treaty; I have acted on this occaſion both as the neceſſity of yours and of our affairs has required, as I have found them too urgent for delay; I rely on your wiſdom to review this action in its proper light.

Hyder Ally Cawn, who is more your enemy than ours, has with a large army invaded the Carnatic, and from the neglects and miſmanagement of that Government has gained ſome ſignal ſucceſs. The French, our natural enemies, are daily expected with a conſiderable armament, naval and military, deſtined to act in conjunction and in alliance with him. Their object is the conqueſt of the Carnatic; his, as you muſt know, the reſumption and proſecution of his deſigns againſt the dominions of the Peiſhwa: it is therefore your intereſt equally at leaſt with mine, to provide againſt the effects of ſo formidable a combination. Therefore, relying on the concurrent policy of our reſpective States and on your wiſdom, to which it will be obvious, I have reſolved on this uncommon meaſure; I have performed my part, the reſt depends on you.

General Sir Eyre Coote, who is Commander in Chief and a Counſellor of this Government, embarked laſt Friday for Madras, taking with him a large force of European ſoldiers and artillery for the war of the Carnatic againſt Hyder Ally Khán. By the bleſſing of God all the troubles there will be ſoon diſſipated by his known military ſkill and the bravery of our troops, who wanted only the preſence of an able commander to lead them to conqueſt.

Having propoſed to you an alliance with the Company againſt our common enemy Hyder Ally Khán, and perſuaded you will approve the policy of an immediate combination of our forces for the early prevention of his deſigns, I requeſt, that as ſoon as the treaty ſhall have been ratified on your part, which the Counſellors of this Government have offered for your acceptance if you ſhall have approved it, you will cauſe letters to be written immediately to Sir Eyre Coote to adviſe him thereof, and of whatever elſe may be neceſſary in conſequence thereof.

May God advance the progreſs of our friendſhip and of your proſperity.

To Maha Rajah Moodajee Booſla—17th October. Appendix. Nos.

On Thurſday the 13th inſtant of this month Shawal, I diſpatched to you a large packet with ſundry letters and papers, of which I now ſend you duplicates, leſt by any accident the originals ſhould have miſcarried by the way. Having peruſed them, I requeſt you will be pleaſed to forward thoſe intended for the Peiſhwa and Ballajee Pundit without loſs of time. 313 & 314.

I alſo ſend a duplicate of my laſt letter to you.

APPENDIX, No. 313.

Bengal Secret Conſultations, the 2d November 1780;—preſent, the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Governor General, Preſident; Philip Francis, Edward Wheler, Eſquires.—(Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote abſent.)

AGREED, That the Governor General be requeſted to write to the Nabob Vizier, recommending to him to require from Fyzoola Cawn the quota of troops ſtipulated by treaty to be furniſhed by the latter for his ſervice, being 5,000 horſe, to be put under the immediate command of Lieutenant Colonel Muir, commanding at Futtigur. Fyzoola Cawn to furniſh his quota of troops Agreed alſo, that the Governor General be requeſted to write to the Rajah of Benares, requiring him to furniſh ſuch part of his cavalry entertained in his ſervice, as he can ſpare for the ſervice of this Government; and to inform what number he can ſupply. That a letter be written to Mr. Francis Fowke, directing him to make the ſame requiſition of the Rajah; and at the ſame time, to obviate any jealouſy which the Rajah may conceive that this may be converted to a permanent impoſition upon him, by aſſuring him, that the Board will require the ſervices of theſe forces no longer than while the preſent war laſts; after which they will be returned. Rajah of Benares to ſupply a part of his cavalry for the ſervice of the Company.

Agreed, that the following letter be written to the Reſident at Benares:

Sir,

On receipt of the intimation conveyed to us in your laſt letter of the 18th ultimo, orders were iſſued to countermand the march of the troops which were appointed to proceed to Benares, in conſequence of the delays uſed by the Rajah in the payment of his ſubſidy. To Mr. Francis Fowke, Reſident at Benares.

Deeming it juſt and proper that the Rajah ſhould be deſired to afford every aſſiſtance in his power to this Government, to whoſe protection and ſupport he owes all that he poſſeſſes, the Governor General has been requeſted to write to him to furniſh ſuch part of the cavalry entertained in his employ as he can ſpare for the ſervice of the Company; but as ſome jealouſy and apprehenſion may ariſe in the Rajah's mind, that his aid may be converted to a permanent impoſition on him, we think it neceſſary that ſuch fears ſhould be obviated, and direct you therefore to aſſure him that we ſhall require the ſervices of this force no longer than during the continuance of the preſent war, after which it will certainly be returned.

We are, &c.

Appendix. No. 318.

Read the following letter from Brigadier General Stibbert, enclosing an address to Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote from Major Brisco.

Brigadier General Stibbert, 28th October.

Gentlemen,

The enclosed letter from Major Brisco, who commands the detachment posted at Damagur, being addressed officially to Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote, I opened it yesterday on its being presented to me. As it contains some information by no means uninteresting at this juncture, I have judged it proper to lay it before you.

The season approaching when the upper Rohilcund will be considerably exposed to the inroads of the Seicks, or other adventurers from the western side of the Ganges, owing to the great number of fords which lead across that river in the dry months, I purpose reinforcing Major Brisco by a battalion from Futty Ghurr (three battalions having till lately been always stationed there) unless the Board should offer any objection to the measure. However, when the extent of country, and numerous ghauts to be defended by the Daranagur detachment, is considered, I flatter myself, gentlemen, that you will agree to this expediency. I presume that on a perusal of the Major's letter, the necessity of pressing both the Vizier and Fyzoola Khan to contribute effectually to the protection of the Rohilcund will not fail to appear to the Board.

I have the honour, &c.

Fort William, 28th October 1780. (Signed) G. Stibbert.

Enclosure in General Stibbert's letter from Major Brisco to Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote.

Sir,

I had the honour of addressing you twice on your way down to the Presidency, respecting this station, and I now beg leave to give you every intelligence of my transactions in the protection of Rohilcund.

The river Ganges is already fallen so very low, I am under the necessity of sending large detachments to guard the ghauts and passes of the river, as the Seicks and Goodiers, (enemies of this country, the nabob Vizier's dominions) are beginning to cross the Ganges, and committing depredations in Rohilcund. The troops I have detached in consequence will prevent them.

The Goodiers are an enemy in possession of the country on the opposite side the Ganges to Rohilcund, and are constantly very troublesome. The Seicks are a people who inhabit a country a great way to the northward of this, bordering on Timur Shaw's territories; and as they are a set of freebooters, they are generally at war with some of the neighbouring Powers, and frequently make visits, and want to invade Rohilcund; and if it were not for the detachment at Daranagur, they would in a very short time lay waste the whole country, and only wait an opportunity.

The Seicks and Goodries are mostly horsemen, and are a good deal like the Marattas, in that they commence hostilities wherever they go, and have made several attempts on Rohilcund at different times, three or four years back; however, at present there are no very large body of them assembled on these frontiers; there are only parties of them scattered about. But the Seicks at times can collect a very large army together, thirty or forty thousand men.

I have information that Neizop Cawn is tampering with the Seicks, and using endeavours to form a treaty with them. I do not know what designs Neizop Cawn may have, but he is making great preparations for war. &c.

On my being appointed and taking the command at Daranagur, I was not honoured with any instructions from you regarding the Nabob at Rampore, Fyzoola Cawn's troops. I have only five hundred of his horse, and the Nabob in his agreement with Government is obliged to keep up five thousand troops for assisting in the defence of Rohilcund. A few months ago three battalions were stationed here with Colonel Muir, besides a body of the Nabob Fyzoola Cawn's cavalry; and they were well employed, and had enough to do in protecting the country from invasion. The command is greatly reduced. One battalion taken away, and Fyzoola Cawn has not afforded more than five hundred men since I have been here, which is a great deal too small a force from him, as I acquainted you in my former letters two battalions were too small to command Rohilcund from invasion. I want a larger detachment from the Nabob.

I understand you intended ordering the Nabob to furnish fifteen hundred men when you recalled the battalion; and it is absolutely necessary that he should, as they are very much wanted on the frontier station where I have my detachments.

I hope to be honoured with your directions relative to Fyzoola Cawn's troops, as soon as convenient. I wait the honour of your instructions.

I have the honour to be, &c.

(Signed) H. Brisco.

Ordered, That the above letters lie for consideration until our next meeting.

APPENDIX, No. 318.

Extract of Bengal Secret Consultations, 9th October 1780.

THE Governor General lays before the Board the following draft of a letter to Brigadier General Goddard, in reply to those which have been received from him, under date the 27th May, 20th June, and 15th July, and which are yet unanswered.

Sir,

To General Goddard.

We are to acknowledge the receipt of the several letters which you have written to us under date the 27th May, 20th June, and 15th July.

The candid manner in which you have justified your conduct in your observations on the paper of Madras intelligence, transmitted to you with our letter of the 24th January, is to us convincing also of the falsehood of it; and we desire you to be assured that in sending this paper to you, and requiring your answer to it, we were actuated by no motive but that of affording you an opportunity of exculpating yourself from charges which might have some weight with the public, those sense which we have always entertained of your good conduct would not permit of their having any weight with us.

The successful enterprizes of which you have advised us of detachments under the command of Major Forbes and Lieutenant Welch, and particularly of those under the latter, did not come to our knowledge without heightening the favourable opinion which we before entertained of the merits of these gentlemen, and have not passed without leaving the impression which they deserve with us. We desire that you will present our thanks to Major Forbes and Lieutenant Welch, for their gallantry and good conduct on the occasions recited in your letter of the 27th May and 20th June, as well as to the officers and men under their command. The services performed by the regiment of cavalry and by the officers in command of it, call for our particular acknowledgments; and it is our order that you make the same known to them on the receipt of this letter.

Our orders to you of the 20th April, for the reduction of the regiment of cavalry, were founded on our belief that it was not of that use to your operations which was intended by our appointment of it, to make part of your detachment. You had not to that time made any mention to us of services performed by it, though you had particularly observed on those of the Candah's horse, and we saw not sufficient reason to maintain maintain an uſeleſs corps, which could not be ſupported but at the heavieſt expence. It has given us the greateſt ſatisfaction to find ſuch ample reaſon for entertaining an oppoſite opinion of the uſe to be derived to the public ſervice from this regiment, and we chearfully abandon our former ſentiments concerning it for others more favourable, which we take up in lieu of them and under the impreſſion of its utility, as a reward to a body of our troops, which inſtead of diſmiſſion merit encouragement; and on your recommendation we revoke our orders of the 20th April for diſbanding the regiment of cavalry with your detachment, and conſent to its continuance in the ſervice.

We adhere to the orders which we ſent to you reſpecting your demand on Futty Sing, for payment of the expence of the troops ſtationed in Ahmedabad, and we not only now confirm them, but direct that before Ahmedabad be delivered up to Futty Sing, you claim and receive from him, in behalf of the Company, full payment of the expence of the troops employed for its defence, from the time that they were left there, as well as any extra expence incurred by the Company in the capture of it.

Our commands for the entire reduction of the allowance granted to Ragoba, were ſo ſtrict and poſitive, that we cannot but be in ſome degree aſtoniſhed at the liberty you have taken, under any circumſtances, to grant him a ſtipend from your treaſury; but we at the ſame time confeſs that the reaſons which you have adduced to the juſtification of your conduct are very powerful; and if they do not entirely acquit you for inattention to our repeated orders on this ſubject, they yet go far to ſupport you under it; they are ſuch too as, including conſiderations which were not before us when our orders were ſent to you, now induce us to approve of the reduced allowance which you have granted to Ragonaut Row: you will be pleaſed to aſſure him that the orders which we gave for the reduction of his ſtipend, did not ariſe from any diſregard to his rights or to his claims to our ſupport; that he may depend on our protection during the war in which we are involved with the Peiſhwa, and on our regard for his perſonal ſafety and intereſt, ſo far as it may be in our power to provide for him after it; but we are certain that he cannot be ſurprized at our inability to ſupply him ſo largely from our treaſury, as the uſeleſs and idle expence of an Indian Prince might demand from it; that the war in which we are engaged is burthenſome to the Company, and highly ſo; and that during the continuance of it, it is incumbent on this Government to be as frugal in their diſburſements as the occaſion renders poſſible; but that we willingly allow the ſum of ten thouſand rupees for his monthly ſupport, and have given you directions to iſſue it to him, hoping that it will anſwer every neceſſary expence.

With reſpect to the plan of operations for the campaign, which we muſt now ſuppoſe to have been ſome time commenced, we muſt leave it to your judgment, guided and aſſiſted by the opinion and advice of the gentlemen at Bombay. We have only one poſitive order to tranſmit to you; viz. that if the French land an army on the coaſt of Malabar, you employ the troops under your command for the defence of Bombay, and render every aid in your power to that Preſidency. You know our general intentions, and we approve of the ſentiments delivered in your late letters; but at this diſtance we cannot venture to give orders for any plan of operations for the forces under your command, ſince on your receipt of it a new and unforeſeen cauſe may prevent you from adopting it: you muſt not therefore wait for our inſtructions; we leave you to act for the general benefit of the Company under the advice of the Preſident and Select Committee at Bombay; and to be guided by circumſtances as they may preſent themſelves.

We are, &c.

Fort William,
9th October 1780.

Mr. Francis—There are ſome parts of this letter in which I cannot concur. I have not altered my opinion with reſpect to the regiment of cavalry; and in regard to Ragoba, I am of opinion not only that our repeated orders ought to have been attended with inſtant and literal obedience; but that, excluſive of the expence, it is not prudent in us to furniſh Ragoba with a ſubſiſtence. We ſhall aſſuredly be burdened with him as long as he receives it; and while he is with us, he will always be a difficulty and an obſtacle in the way of peace. Appendix. No. 320.

Having already in diſcourſe ſubmitted my opinion to the Board, of the object to which General Goddard's army ſhould be directed as ſoon as an alliance or peace with the Marattas ſhall leave him at liberty to act, and finding that it concurs with the views and opinions of the Governor General, I ſhall omit to ſay what I was prepared to ſay on that ſubject; I think that no time ſhould be loſt in ſuggeſting it to General Goddard, and inſtructing him to prepare himſelf eventually for the execution of ſuch a ſervice the moment it can be undertaken.

APPENDIX, No. 320.

Bengal Secret Conſultations, the 5th June 1780;—preſent, the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Governor General, Preſident; Philip Francis, Edward Wheler, Eſquires.

THE Governor General informs the Board, that having himſelf examined the copy of the treaty concluded with Futty Sing Guicawar, and compared the Engliſh counterpart with the Perſian original, and it appearing to him that they differ conſiderably both in form and ſubſtance, he thought it proper to cauſe an accurate and literal tranſlation of the latter to be made for the information of the Board, and employed Mr. D. Anderſon (with whoſe knowledge of the Perſian tongue the Board are well acquainted) in this ſervice. He now lays before the Board the office copy of the treaty, with Mr. Anderſon's tranſlation, and deſires that they may be entered in oppoſite columns in the conſultations, by which their agreement or diſagreement will be moſt apparent. Beſides the general diſagreement between the Engliſh and Perſian tranſcripts of the treaty in the copy received from General Goddard, the Governor General begs leave to call the attention of the Board to the 5th, 6th, and 10th articles in particular, as he apprehends that in their preſent form, they are liable to many ſubjects of contention. The 6th and 10th articles making the exchange of ſpecific diſtricts expreſs conditions of the treaty, may admit of a conſtruction which would deprive the Company of the benefit intended by the 5th, which ſpecifies, that in any new partition, the original amount of the whole of each reſpective ſhare ſhall be preſerved; by which the Board have underſtood, that whatever partition had taken place, or ſhould hereafter take place, between the Company and Futty Sing, the final diſtribution ſhould be ſo ordered as to place each party preciſely in the ſame ſituation with reſpect to the value of the poſſeſſions allotted to each. That for example, if the poſſeſſions lately held by Futty Sing in Guzerat did amount in their yearly revenue to 57,71,200 rupees, and the Peiſhwa's ſhare of the ſame province to 40,98,800 rupees, the lands ultimately appropriated to each ſhould yield thoſe ſums to each reſpectively; but, as this partition is ſtated as a future and eventual conſequence of a requiſition on the part of the Company, and the profeſſed object of it to prevent diſputes by the intermixture of the lands appertaining to each for want of proper boundaries, it may be doubted or diſputed that the lands which originally appertained to the Peiſhwa on the north of the river Myhie, and eſtimated by the Preſidency of Bombay to yield a yearly revenue of 27,00,000 rupees, and which were given up to Futty Sing in exchange change for the poſſeſſions expreſſed in the 6th and 10th articles, amounting by the ſame eſtimate to 10,62,900 rupees, are included in the proviſion made by the 5th article. The Board will therefore probably think it both prudent and equitable to put this point beyond a diſpute, and to inſure to the Company the right which they undoubtedly poſſeſs, by the general tenor of the treaty, to that ſhare, or an equivalent which was originally poſſeſſed by the Peiſhwa, and to which they are entitled as ſtanding in his place.

The 5th article contains a technical expreſſion of a ſimilar ambiguity with that of Jumma Khamil, which has occaſioned ſo much diſpute in the treaty of Poorunder, and an inaccuracy in the conſtruction which might likewiſe ſerve as a pretext for future cavil. On both theſe points the Governor General has thought proper to conſult Mr. Ducarel, ſuperintendant of the Khalſa records, with the aid of the Naib Canongoes, the proper official judges of the firſt, and of the latter only as being neceſſarily conſulted upon the firſt, and competent to decide upon it by their general knowledge of the Perſian language. Mr. Ducarel's report is as follows:

Calcutta, 5th June 1780.

Mr. Ducarel to the Governor General.

Honourable Sir,

Agreeable to your commands, I have examined the 5th article of the treaty between Futty Sing Guicawar and the Honourable Company, as expreſſed in the Perſian language, and ſubmitted it to the Canongoes Gunga Govind Sing and Seuce Narain Muſtofy, for their opinion of the exact meaning conveyed by the words az Company—kefil mokurrurry, and amdanni muaffuch mamool.

They agree with me in opinion, that the word az, which ſignifies from or by, is a miſtake, put in place of the word beh, to, which alters the whole meaning of the above 5th article, requiring the Company to give what it is intended they ſhould receive.

The Canongoes are farther of opinion, that the words kefil mokurrurry, and amdanni muaffuch mamool (the literal meaning of which is, fixed collections and receipts agreeable to eſtabliſhed uſage) reſpecting the actual collections, and not a Jumma or demand which, though eſtabliſhed by law or uſage, may not be realized: but they think that the addition of the words receipts agreeable to eſtabliſhed uſage (which they apprehend were not neceſſary) may leave room for throwing the charges of collection into the ceſſion, or including them as a part of the produce of the lands to be ceded.

I have the honour to be,

(Signed) G. G. Ducarel.

By this letter it will appear, that it is at leaſt neceſſary to give a reviſion and correction to the treaty before it can be ratified.

Treaty between the Honourable Engliſh Eaſt India Company and Futty Sing Row Guicawar, Shemſeer Bahadar, concluded at the village of Candeela, in the Pergunnah of Dubhoy, January the 26th 1780.

The Chiefs of the Engliſh Company and Futty Sing Row Sena Khaſs Kheel, Shumſhere Bahadar, at the village of Candeela, in the diſtrict of Dubhoy, on the 19th of the month of Mohirrim, 1193 Hegyra, correſponding to the year 1180 of the æra of Adel Shaw, or 1836 of the Sumbut, have, with mutual conſent and inclination, ſettled and entered into this treaty.

The Miniſters of the Maratta State having refuſed to accept of the reaſonable terms of accommodation offered them by Brigadier General Thomas Goddard, in the name of the Honourable Governor General and Council of Fort William, and by their obſtinate perſeverance in hoſtile intentions againſt the Engliſh, compelled them to take up arms in defence of their own rights and poſſeſſions; the Honourable the Preſident and Select Committee of Bombay, with the ſanction and approbation of the Honourable Governor General and Council of Fort William, have appointed and authorized Brigadier General Goddard to ſettle and conclude a treaty of laſting peace and alliance betwixt the Honourable the Engliſh Eaſt India Company on one part, and Futty Sing Row Guicawar, Shemſeer Bahadar, for and in the name of all the Guicawar family, on the other; and the following are the articles of convention mutually entered into:

Whereas the Miniſters of Poonah not having liſtened to propoſals which were reaſonable and ſuitable to the times, the Supreme Council of Calcutta ſent General Goddard with full powers into this country: and General Goddard having alſo ſent every propoſal to the Miniſters of Poonah that could tend to terminate the diſpute and promote the welfare of both parties; but they not agreeing thereto, bound their loins with enmity, and intriguing with the enemies of the Engliſh, entertained treacherous deſigns in their minds; wherefore it became neceſſary for the Chiefs of the Engliſh Company to ſettle affairs with them: and the Gentlemen of Bombay having approved of the propoſitions and meaſures of the Supreme Council of Calcutta are empowered to form a treaty of alliance with Futty Sing Row Guicawar, Sena Khaſs Kheel, Shumſhere Bahadar, and all the Guicawars; and accordingly the ſaid Row and General Goddard have agreed together on the following articles:

Article 1ſt.

The Engliſh and Futty Sing Row agree to a league of defenſive alliance, and to protect each other againſt all foreign enemies whatever.

1ſt. A treaty between the Chiefs of the Engliſh Company and Futty Sing Row Guicawar, Shumſere Bahadar, is concluded under ſolemn engagements, that the friends of the one ſhall be the friends of the other, and the enemies of the one the enemies of the other: if any one ſhall invade the territories of the Engliſh, it ſhall be incumbent on Row Shumſhere to puniſh him; and if any one ſhall paſs into the country of the ſaid Row, the Chiefs of the Engliſh Company ſhall uſe their endeavours to repel him. In this let no deviation happen.

Article 2d.

The Miniſters of the Maratta State, by repeated violations of treaty, as well as their late conduct, having drawn upon themſelves the juſt reſentment of the Engliſh; having alſo, by undue acts of oppreſſion, proved themſelves the enemies of Futty Sing; for theſe reaſons, and becauſe the moſt firm and ſincere friendſhip has long ſubſiſted betwixt the Honourable Company and

2d. Whereas the Miniſters of Poonah have repeatedly violated the treaty, which under the ſtrongeſt engagements they entered into with the Chiefs of the Engliſh Company; and whereas they have committed various acts of hoſtility towards the Engliſh, and having alſo bound their loins with enmity againſt Futty Sing Row Guicawar, Shumſhere Bahadar, have greatly oppreſſed him; wherefore it has become neceſſary for their honour to check and reſent the injuries which have been committed by the Miniſters of Poonah:

and Futty Sing, the contracting parties mutually agree to enter immediately into an offenſive league, excluding the Government of Poonah from all ſhare of country in the province of Guzerat whatever.

Article 3d.

The Engliſh agree to ſupport and defend Futty Sing in poſſeſſion of his ſhare of the Guzerat province, and Futty Sing is to aſſiſt and ſupport the Engliſh in poſſeſſing themſelves of and maintaining the ſhare now held by the Government of Poonah.

Article 4th.

In order to accompliſh this ſervice, a firm friendſhip is now eſtabliſhed betwixt the Engliſh and Futty Sing; the latter agrees to join the Engliſh with 3,000 horſe, according to cuſtom, and as many more as he can poſſibly raiſe, to act in conjunction with them during the preſent war, whenever they ſhall call on him to do ſo.

Article 5th.

As the preſent mode of partition betwixt the Poonah Government and Futty Sing is attended with great loſs and inconvenience from the diſputes that muſt ariſe from the interference of each in collecting the revenues of the ſame places and that lay interſperſed with one another, it is agreed upon that a new ſettlement of the province of Guzerat ſhall take place for the mutual benefit and convenience of both parties; the expreſs object of which will be, an abſolute and ſpecific partition of the whole territory betwixt the Honourable Eaſt India Company and Futty Sing, according to the proportion of the revenues now reſpectively held by him and the Marattas.

Article 6th.

Ahmedabad and its dependencies, that is to ſay the country to the north of the river Myhi, now poſſeſſed by the Poonah Government, to be allotted to Futty Sing, in lieu of which the Engliſh are to be put in poſſeſſion of the Guicawar diviſion of the country ſouth of the Tappey, known by the name of Attaveiſſe, and their ſhare of the revenues of Surat.

Article 7th.

The Engliſh will give ſuch aſſiſtance of force as Futty Sing may require, to conquer and put him in poſſeſſion of the Poonah ſhare of the country to the north of the Myhi.

Article 8th.

The final partition and ſettlement of the Guzerat province being made, each party is to have the diſtinct and ſole Government and poſſeſſion of the diviſion allotted him, and to hold his ſhare independent of and unconnected with the other, except when united for their common defence againſt a foreign enemy, which they mutually and in the moſt ſolemn manner agree to do. And this partition, and this ſettlement mutually agreed to, is to be binding upon them and their poſterity for ever.

Article 9th.

Futty Sing having requeſted that the Engliſh ſupport him in withholding the annual tribute hitherto paid by him to the Poonah Government, it is ſtipulated that the Honourable Company will do ſo till a final peace ſhall be concluded betwixt them and the Poonah Government, in which the intereſts of Futty Sing it is therefore at preſent agreed, that having removed the Government of the Miniſters of Poonah from the country of Guzerat, we will conquer and poſſeſs ourſelves of the whole country of Guzerat, and the Soubah of Ahmedabad, and make ſuch an arrangement that the Miniſter ſhall not be able to receive or collect a ſingle daum from that country. Appendix No. 320.

3d. The ſhare of the country of Guzerat belonging to the Guicawar ſhall be continued and kept entire, and the ſhare of the Miniſters of Poonah ſhall be enjoyed by the Chiefs of the Engliſh Company, and Row Shumſhere Bahadur ſhall ſupport and aſſiſt the Chief of the Engliſh Company in taking it, in ſtationing tannahs or garriſons, and in keeping poſſeſſion of it. And the Chiefs of the Engliſh Company ſhall not fail to ſupport and aſſiſt Row Shumſhere Bahadur.

4th. As it is of particular importance to ſettle the country, and as a treaty of union is eſtabliſhed betwixt Row Futty Sing Shumſhere Behadur, and the Engliſh; Row Shumſhere Behadur engages that he will ſupply for the preſent war three thouſand horſe as uſual; and further, as many more as he can, at the requiſition of the Chiefs of the Engliſh Company, and will perform all that is incumbent on a conjunction of intereſts.

5th. Whereas in the diviſions held by the Guicawar and the Miniſters of Poonah reſpectively, by reaſon of the double government which exiſt in the ſame town, and the vicinity of their villages to one another, diſputes and quarrels daily take place, the collection of the revenues of the country is impeded and prejudiced, and the Ryots are diſtreſſed; the Engliſh Chiefs are for theſe reaſons deſirous of ſettling a new partition, ſo that a treaty having mutually taken place, no difference may ariſe: and with a view to the intereſt and welfare of both, a portion of country, equal to the ſhare held at preſent by the Miniſters of Poonah, according to the eſtabliſhed collections and cuſtomary receipts of revenue, ſhall, after the conqueſt of theſe diſtricts, be given in exchange to the Company, it is intended that there ſhall not be a daum difference.

6th. The city of Ahmadabad, together with the Pergunnah, that is to ſay, the whole of the country laying on the other ſide of the river Myhi which is now poſſeſſed by the Poonah Government, ſhall be conquered and given to Row Shumſhere Bahadur; and in exchange for it the Pergunnahs of Surat, Attaveiſſee, and the chout of the city of Surat, ſhall be allotted to the ſhare of the Chiefs of the Company.

7th. Whenever Row Shumſhere Behadur ſhall require troops to conquer the country comprehended under the ſhare of the Miniſters of Poonah, and laying on the other ſide of the river Myhi, they ſhall be ſupplied by the Engliſh Company.

8th. After the partition of the country of Guzerat is effected, each party ſhall have the ſole government in the diſtricts allotted to their reſpective ſhares, and ſhall have no dependance on one another, except when any perſon ſhall paſs into the country of Row Shumſhere Bahadur, in which caſe aſſiſtance ſhall be brought by the Engliſh Company: and if any one ſhall invade the ſhare of country allotted to the Engliſh Company, Row Shumſhere Behadur ſhall afford ſupport and aſſiſtance. And this partition of the country of Guzerat, which hath with mutual approbation been ſettled betwixt Row Shumſhere Behadur and the Chiefs of the Company, ſhall perpetually remain and be continued to their reſpective deſcendants and ſucceſſors: in no reſpect ſhall it be broken through by either.

9th. Agreeable to the repreſentation of Row Futty Sing Behadur, the money which he annually ſends to Poonah muſt not be ſent; he muſt keep it with himſelf. Whenever any negociation for peace ſhall take place with the Miniſters of Poonah, the intereſt and welfare of Row Shumſhere Behadur ſhall firſt be diſcuſſed. The intereſt of Row Shumſhere Behadur, and the intereſt of the Company, are one and the ſame.

shall be carefully and equally attended to with their own.

Article 10th.

In consideration of the advantage that will arise to Futty Sing from the above article, and as a proof of his sincere regard and friendship for the English, he agrees to cede to them the district of Zinnore, and the villages situated in the Broach Pergunnah, now belonging to him, both which are to remain for ever in the possession of the Company.

Article 11th.

All the countries and places made over to the English in this treaty by Futty Sing are to be delivered into their hands, and the collections accounted for to them from the day that Futty Sing is put in possession of the city of Ahmedabad; and no demand of collection for any past time is to be made in them by Futty Sing.

Article 12th.

It is agreed that two copies of this treaty be immediately sent to the Honourable President and Select Committee of Bombay for their approbation, and to be by them transmitted to the Honourable Governor General and Council of Fort William, under whose sanction it is concluded, in order to receive their final confirmation and ratification; after which one copy so authenticated is to remain with the Honourable President and Select Committee of Bombay, and another with Futty Sing.

10th. As the above article is for the advantage of Row Futty Sing Shumshere Behadur, he, from the friendship and regard which he bears towards the Chiefs of the English Company, shall make over to the Company the district of Zinnore, together with the villages of Broach, which are at present in his possession.

11th. All the pergunnahs and villages above mentioned shall be delivered over to the Chiefs of the Company from the day on which the city of Ahmedabad is delivered over to Row Shumshere Bahadur. From the day on which possession is taken of the city of Ahmedabad, the revenues of the above pergunnahs shall be enjoyed by the Chiefs of the English Company; and after the Chiefs of the English Company shall have obtained possession, no claims of collection shall be made on account of the time past in these pergunnahs.

12th. It is agreed that two copies of this treaty, written fair, shall be sent from hence, first to the gentlemen of Bombay, and by those gentlemen from Bombay to Calcutta. As the gentlemen of both places have written regarding Row Shumshere Behadur in the same terms, having perused this treaty they will return it under their seals, so that one shall remain in the possession of Row Shumshere Behadur, and the other will be deposited amongst the records of the Company with the gentlemen of Bombay.

Ordered, That the Governor General's minute, and the different translations of the treaty, be sent in circulation for the perusal and consideration of the members of the Board.

The above papers having been sent in circulation, they were returned with the following minutes:

Mr. Francis—I think that for the reasons assigned by the Governor General, the formal ratification of the treaty should be delayed.

Mr. Wheler agrees.

Resolved, That the ratification of the treaty be delayed.

The Governor General proposes that the following alterations be made in the treaty; and that the secretary, with the assistance of the Persian translator, do prepare a new draft conformable to these alterations, and lay it before the Board for approval.

Governor General's proposed corrections of the treaty with Futty Sing.

Preamble. To be rendered conformable to the original English.

Article 1st. Right in the Persian; but instead of "pass "into," write "invade."

2d. Right in the Persian; instead of "for "their honour," write "for our mu- "tual honour."

3d. To be enjoyed by the "Company," instead of, "Chiefs of the English Company." Omit, "in stationing tannahs or garri- "sons;" add at the end, "in the de- "fence and maintenance of his share."

4th. Right in the Persian.

5th.

5th. Right; but the language of the Perſian to be corrected according to Mr. Ducarel's report.

6th. Inſtead of "allotted to the ſhare of the "Chiefs of the Company," write, "allotted to the ſhare of the Engliſh "Company."

To be added, "Whatever difference "may ariſe in the revenue of the "reſpective ſhares by this exchange, ſhall be adjuſted according to the preceding article."

7th. Right.

8th. For "any perſon ſhall paſs," ſay "when "any enemy ſhall invade;" and inſtead of "if any one ſhall invade," ſay "if "any enemy ſhall invade." Inſtead of "the Chiefs of the Company ſhall perpetually remain," ſay "the Engliſh "Company ſhall perpetually remain." The reſt right.

9th. Right.

10th. With the ſame addition as to the 6th article.

11th. Inſtead of "ſhall be enjoyed by the "Chiefs of the Engliſh Company," ſay "ſhall be enjoyed by the Engliſh "Company."

Inſtead of "after the Chiefs of the "Engliſh Company ſhall have obtained poſſeſſion," ſay "and from "that day."

12th. To be conformable to the original Engliſh.

The Board approve of the propoſed alterations, and order that a new treaty be prepared accordingly.

As the Board in their late inſtructions to General Goddard have empowered him to annul the interchange which has been made by the 6th and 10th articles of the treaty with Futty Sing Guicawar; and as theſe and every other deviation from the original partition is provided for by the 5th article;

Agreed, That two drafts be formed, each duly ratified by the ſeal of the Company and ſignature of the Governor General and Council, one ſtanding in the original form with the preſcribed corrections, the other the ſame, but with the omiſſion of the 6th and 10th articles: that they may be ſent to Brigadier General Goddard; and that it be left to his diſcretion to obtain the ſignature of Futty Sing and the Preſident and Council of Bombay, adding his own to either, and delivering the other to the Preſident and Council of Bombay to be cancelled and returned to this Board.

Bengal Secret Conſultations, the 26th June 1780;—preſent, the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Governor General, Preſident; Philip Francis, Edward Wheler, Eſquires.—(Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote abſent.)

The Secretary informs the Board, that in obedience to their orders of the 5th inſtant, he has prepared two drafts of the treaty with Futty Sing Guicawar, in the manner preſcribed by thoſe orders; and now lays before them that of the two drafts, in which the treaty ſtands in its original form, agreeable to the tranſlation made by Mr. Anderſon, with the corrections reſolved on by the Board, but with the omiſſion of thoſe numbers in the original which formed the 6th and 10th articles.

Treaty between the Honourable Engliſh Eaſt India Company and Futty Sing Row Guicawar Shemſeer Bahader, concluded at the village of Candula, in the Pergunnah of Dubhoy, January the twenty-ſixth, one thouſand ſeven hundred and eighty. Appendix. No. 320.

The Miniſters of the Maratta State having refuſed to accept of the reaſonable terms of accommodation offered them by Brigadier General Thomas Goddard, in the name of the Honourable Governor General and Council of Fort William, and by their obſtinate perſeverance in hoſtile intentions againſt the Engliſh, compelled them to take up arms in defence of their own rights and poſſeſſions; the Honourable the Preſident and Select Committee of Bombay, with the ſanction and approbation of the Honourable Governor General and Council of Fort William, have appointed and authorized Brigadier General Goddard to ſettle and conclude a treaty of laſting peace and alliance betwixt the Honourable the Eaſt India Company on one part, and Futty Sing Row Guicawar Shemſeer Bahader, for and in the name of all the Guicawar family, on the other; and the following are the articles of convention mutually entered into:

Article firſt.—A treaty between the Chiefs of the Engliſh Company and Futty Sing Row Guicawar Shemſeer Behader, is concluded, under ſolemn engagements that the friends of the one ſhall be the friends of the other, and the enemies of the one the enemies of the other: if any one ſhall invade the territories of the Engliſh it ſhall be incumbent on Row Shemſeer to puniſh him; and if any one ſhall invade the country of the ſaid Row, the Chiefs of the Engliſh Company ſhall uſe their endeavours to repel him. In this let no deviation happen.

Article ſecond.—Whereas the Miniſters of Poonah have repeatedly violated the treaty, which under the ſtrongeſt engagements they entered into with the Chiefs of the Engliſh Company; and whereas they have committed various acts of hoſtility towards the Engliſh, and having alſo bound their loins with enmity againſt Futty Sing Row Guicawar, Shemſeer Bahader, have greatly oppreſſed them; wherefore it has become neceſſary for our mutual honour to check and reſent the injuries which have been committed by the Miniſters of Poonah: it is therefore at preſent agreed, that having removed the Government of the Miniſters of Poonah from the country of Guzerat, we will conquer and poſſeſs ourſelves of the whole country of Guzerat, and the Soubah of Ahmedabad, and make ſuch an arrangement that the Miniſters ſhall not be able to receive or collect a ſingle daum from that country.

Article third.—The ſhare of the country of Guzerat belonging to the Guicawar ſhall be continued and kept entire; and the ſhare of the Miniſters of Poonah ſhall be enjoyed by the Engliſh Company; and Row Shemſeer Bahader ſhall ſupport and aſſiſt the Chiefs of the Engliſh Company in taking it, and in keeping poſſeſſion of it; and the Chiefs of the Engliſh Company ſhall not fail to ſupport and aſſiſt Row Shemſeer Bahader in the defence and maintenance of his ſhare.

Article fourth.—As it is of particular importance to ſettle the country, and as a treaty of union is eſtabliſhed betwixt Row Futty Sing Shemſeer Bahader and the Engliſh, Row Sheemſeer Bahader engages that he will ſupply for the preſent war three thouſand horſe as uſual, and farther, as many more as he can, at the requiſition of the Chiefs of the Engliſh Company, and will perform all that is incumbent on a conjunction of intereſts.

Article fifth.—Whereas in the diviſions held by the Guicawar, and the Miniſters of Poonah reſpectively, by reaſon of the double government which exiſts in the ſame town, and the vicinity of their villages to one another, diſputes and quarrels daily take place; the collection of the revenues of the country is impeded and prejudiced; and the Ryots are diſtreſſed; the Engliſh Chiefs are for theſe reaſons deſirous of ſettling a new partition, ſo that a treaty having mutually taken place, no difference may ariſe; and with a view to the intereſt and welfare of both, a portion of country equal to the ſhare held at preſent by the Miniſters of Poonah, according to the eſtabliſhed collections and cuſtomary receipts of revenue, shall after the conquest of these districts be given in exchange to the Company. It is intended that there shall not be a daum difference.

Article sixth.—The city of Ahmedabad, together with the Pergunnahs, that is to say, the whole of the country laying on the other side of the river Mahé, which is now possessed by the Poonah Government, shall be conquered and given to Row Shemseer Bahadar; and in exchange for it the Pergunnahs of Surat, Attaveesee, and the chout of the city of Surat, shall be allotted to the share of the English Company: whatever difference may arise in the revenue of the respective shares by this exchange shall be adjusted according to the preceding article.

Article seventh.—Whenever Row Shemseer Bahadar shall require troops to conquer the country comprehended under the share of the Ministers of Poonah, and laying on the other side of the river Mahé, they shall be supplied by the English Company.

Article eighth.—After the partition of the country of Guzerat is effected, each party shall have the sole government in the districts allotted to their respective shares, and shall have no dependance on one another; except when any enemy shall invade the country of Row Shemseer Bahadar, in which case assistance shall be brought by the English Company; and if any enemy shall invade the share of country allotted to the English Company, Row Shemseer Bahadar shall afford support and assistance. And this partition of the country of Guzerat, which hath with mutual approbation been settled betwixt Row Shemseer Bahadar and the English Company, shall perpetually remain and be continued to their respective descendants and successors: in no respect shall it be broken through by either.

Article ninth.—Agreeable to the representation of Row Futty Sing Bahadar, the money which he annually sends to Poonah must not be sent, he must keep it with himself: whenever any negociation for peace shall take place with the Ministers of Poonah, the interest and welfare of Row Shemseer Bahadar shall first be discussed. The interests of Row Shemseer Bahadar and the interests of the Company are one and the same.

Article tenth.—As the above article is for the advantage of Row Futty Sing Shemseer Bahader, he, from the friendship and regard which he bears towards the Chiefs of the English Company, shall make over to the Company the district of Zinnore, together with the villages of Broach, which are at present in his possession: whatever difference may arise in the revenue of the respective shares by this exchange, shall be adjusted according to the fifth article.

Article eleventh.—All the Pergunnahs and villages above-mentioned shall be delivered over to the Chiefs of the Company from the day on which the city of Ahmedabad is delivered over to Row Shemseer Bahader. From the day on which possession is taken of the city of Ahmedabad, the revenues of the above Pergunnahs shall be enjoyed by the English Company, and from that day no claim of collection shall be made on account of the time past in these Pergunnahs.

Article twelfth.—It is agreed, that two copies of this treaty be immediately sent to the Honourable President and Select Committee of Bombay, for their approbation, and to be by them transmitted to the Honourable Governor General and Council of Fort William, under whose sanction it is concluded, in order to receive their final confirmation and ratification; after which one copy so authenticated is to remain with the Honourable President and Select Committee of Bombay, and another with Futty Sing.

Approved the drafts; and ordered that a fair copy of them be made in duplicate to receive the signature of the members of the Board, and to be sealed with the seal of the Company.

Agreed, that when the treaties shall have been signed, and the seal of the Company been affixed to them, they be transmitted to Brigadier General Goddard, with the following letter:

Sir,

We have for some time past had under consideration a copy of the treaty concluded by you on the 26th of January last with Futty Sing Guicawar, and transmitted to us by the President and Select Committee of Bombay in the English and Persian languages for our ratification.

On a comparison of the English counterpart of this treaty with the Persian, they appeared to us to differ so considerably both in form and substance, that we determined to remove the doubts which we had on this point, by employing some person in whose knowledge of the Persian language we had entire confidence to make an accurate and literal translation of the Persian transcript.

This translation having accordingly been prepared, we are compelled to observe that the former was very erroneous, and failed essentially in its conveyance of the sense of the Persian copy.

The Persian draft also, is not without objection. In part of the fifth article the meaning is entirely perverted, by a mistake made in the use of the word az, signifying from or by, instead of beh, signifying to; which if permitted to remain would have obliged the Company to give what it is intended they should receive: and in another part of the same article we have made an alteration in the terms, in order to prevent future cavil, with respect to the true value of the cession made to the Company by Futty Sing.

We have been induced to amend the Persian articles in a few other instances; and for a knowledge of them, as well as the alterations in the English copy, we refer you to a comparison of the new treaty accompanying this letter, with the treaty now in your possession. In our letter of the 15th May you were informed of our sentiments on the 6th and 10th articles of the treaty, and directed either to require the consent of Futty Sing to annul the exchange stipulated therein, and to give up the possession of the districts which formerly appertained to the Peishwa on the north of the river Mahé, and which were ceded to him by you, and to receive back the districts of Zinnore and Dubhoy, originally the Guicawar's share on the south of the Tappey, ceded to him by you in like manner; or allowing the exchange to continue, to assign and deliver over to the Company possession of an additional portion of land yielding a revenue equal to the difference produced by that exchange, in the manner prescribed to you by the President and Select Committee of Bombay, in their letter of the 24th February; or to enter into a specific engagement for a subsidy payable in ready money equal to that amount.

Adhering still to the orders above quoted, relative to the 5th and 10th articles of the treaty, and as the required deviation and every other that we might think it advisable to make from the original plan of our engagement is sufficiently provided for by the 5th, we have caused two drafts of the treaty to be prepared and sent in duplicate, ratified by the seal of the Company and signature of the members of this Government, in one of which the articles which formed the 6th and 10th numbers are omitted, and in the other included with the prescribed corrections; and we leave it to your discretion to obtain the signature of the President and Council of Bombay, and of Futty Sing to either of them adding your own to that which may receive their concurrence, and returning the other cancelled to the President and Council of Bombay, to be sent back to us.

Fort William. We are, &c.
26th June 1780.

Ordered, that a corrected copy of the treaty be prepared and sent with the following letter to the President and Select Committee at Bombay:

Gentlemen,

Gentlemen,

In your letter of the 7th March, the receipt of which we acknowledged on the 15th of laſt month, you informed us that you had forwarded two copies of the original treaty concluded by Brigadier General Goddard with Futty Sing, for the confirmation and ratification of this Government.

We here think it proper to obſerve, that one copy only was received, with a Perſian tranſcript affixed to it; and that the paper itſelf was unauthenticated.

A compariſon of the Engliſh and Perſian copies of this treaty ſuggeſted to us ſo many defects and errors in the former, that we have been obliged to cauſe a new tranſlate to be made of it: and as we alſo found ſome expreſſions in the Perſian draft to be faulty and ambiguous, and if allowed to remain, likely to produce many ſubjects of contention between the Company and Futty Sing, we have thought it neceſſary to prepare a new treaty in the Engliſh and Perſian language, the former conveying a juſt ſenſe of the meaning of the latter, and the latter ſo expreſſed as to prevent, as far as we are able, any cavil or diſpute hereafter with Futty Sing, ariſing from the terms of it. A corrected copy of the treaty goes enclоſed.

In our letter of the 15th May, written in reply to your's of the 7th of March, we informed you of our concurrence in your remarks on the exchange of diſtricts ſtipulated in the 6th and 10th articles of the treaty, and of the orders which we had in conſequence ſent to General Goddard reſpecting it. To theſe orders we ſtill adhere: and as the required deviation from the 6th and 10th articles, and any other which we might think it adviſable to make from the original plan of our engagement, is ſufficiently provided for by the 5th, we have cauſed two drafts of the treaty, prepared in conformity to the alterations which we deemed neceſſary in the Engliſh tranſlate, and in the terms of the Perſian copy, to be ſent in duplicate under the ſeal of the Company and ſignature of this Government to Brigadier General Goddard, in one of which the articles which formed the 6th and 10th numbers are omitted, and in the other included; and we have directed him to obtain your conſent, and that of Futty Sing, to either of them; affixing his own ſeal to that which is agreed to, and cancelling the other, which he is ordered to tranſmit to you; and we requeſt, that on your receipt of it you will be pleaſed to return it to us.

Fort William, We are, &c.
26th June 1780.

P. S. Since writing to you laſt, under date the 16th ultimo, we have had the pleaſure to receive your letters of the 31ſt March and 21ſt April, with their enclоſures.

Extract of Bengal Secret Conſultations, 15th May 1780;—preſent, the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Governor General, Preſident; Philip Francis, Edward Wheler, Eſquires.

Agreed that the following reply be written to the above letter:

To General Goddard.

Sir,

We have received from the Preſident and Select Committee of Bombay a copy of your correſpondence with them to the 24th of February.

It appears by their laſt letter in this correſpondence, that in the late treaty with Futty Sing, you have ceded to him diſtricts which they eſtimate at the annual revenue of 27 lacks of rupees; but that in return there was only yielded to the Company the poſſeſſion of a country eſtimated at ten lacks ſixty-two thouſand nine hundred; by this a difference of 16,37,100 ariſes, which appears to be an entire loſs to the Company. We are only able to account for an exchange which has occaſioned ſuch a diminution in the original value of our portion of the province of Guzerat, by ſuppoſing that your knowledge of the character of Futty Sing might ſuggeſt to you the expediency of having ſome check over him; and that the fort and diſtrict of Dubhoy, from its contiguity to Brodera, might appear to you a deſirable poſſeſſion for the Company on this account. But uninformed as we are of the other circumſtances on which the comparative advantages of the ceded diſtricts may depend, it ſeems to us, that excluſively of the difference of revenue, the exchange made muſt rather prove diſadvantageous to the Company, as we gain for lands lying at a diſtance, and rendered in a degree inacceſſible to the Marattas by the interpoſition of three capital rivers, a diſtrict immediately bordering upon theirs, and at all times open to their incurſions. Appendix. No. 320.

This conſideration we believe did not occur to you; but as it appears to us deſerving of your attention, we deſire that you will reconſider that part of the treaty with Futty Sing to which it belongs, and avail yourſelf of any advice reſpecting it which you may receive from the Preſident and Select Committee of Bombay, whom we have requeſted to aſſiſt you with it.

Such being our opinion of the exchange of the lands ſtipulated in the treaty;

We think proper to direct, 1ſt, That you either require the conſent of Futty Sing to annul this exchange, and to give up the poſſeſſion of the diſtricts which formerly appertained to the Peiſhwa on the north of the river Mahé, and which were ceded to him by you, and to receive back the diſtricts of Zinnore and Dubhoy, originally the Guicawar's ſhare on the ſouth of the Tappy, ceded to him by you in like manner; or, 2dly, allowing the exchange to continue, to aſſign and deliver over to the Company poſſeſſion of an additional portion of land, yielding a revenue equal to the difference produced by that exchange, in the manner preſcribed to you by the Preſident and Select Committee of Bombay in their letter of the 24th February; or, 3dly, to enter into a ſpecific engagement for a ſubſidy payable in ready money equal to that amount.

The treaty has been tranſmitted to us by the Preſident and Select Committee of Bombay for our ratification, and we ſhall return it to them in a few days properly confirmed, but guarding it with a reſerve providing for a new and equitable ſettlement of the province of Guzerat, according to the fifth article.

We are now to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 28th March, covering a copy of your correſpondence with the Select Committee at Bombay, in regard to your negociations with Scindia. We are entirely of your opinion, that the object of Scindia is to ſecure the perſon of Ragoba, an event which muſt of courſe add to his aggrandizement in the Maratta State, and give him an entire controul over the Miniſters; inducements ſufficiently powerful to prompt him to keep Ragoba under his ſeparate charge.

We approve of the general principle implied in your replies to Scindia's propoſals; but at the ſame time we deſire you to bear in mind, that our obligations to Ragoba are but little more than negative, being confined entirely to the preſent protection of his perſon, and a future proviſion for his ſubſiſtence: and theſe points being ſecured, we poſitively direct, that no conſideration of the ſuppoſed rights or intereſts of Ragoba be ever a bar or obſtacle to a peaceable accommodation with the Maratta State. The proviſion ſtipulated for him in the treaty of Proondur, is in our opinion adequate to his rank and wants, and places him in a ſtate of ſafety and independence; and we expect and ſhall require his conſent to ſuch a proviſion as was then made for him: upon this principle we ſhould have approved of the offers made to you by Madjee Scindia for the reſidence of Ragoba at Jaunſee, with ſuch a proviſion for his ſubſiſtence, if that fortreſs and its dependency, or ſuch portion of it as was equal to the clear revenue intended to be appropriated to his his uſe, were aſſigned to him abruptly, and independently of any other controul. We think proper to give you this explanation of our ſentiments, that you may conform to them in future, on any occaſion that may preſent itſelf to bring the war to an honourable concluſion.

We have in all our late letters informed you of the difficulty we had found in making the large remittances of caſh which we had ſent to Bombay for the ſupport of that Preſidency, and to Surat for the ſupply of your army: we are alone unequal to ſo great a charge upon our income; and have therefore in our letter to the Select Committee of Bombay of this date, deſired them to appropriate the acceſſion of revenue which may immediately ariſe to the Company from the operations and ſucceſſes of your army, excluſively to that expence. We truſt that you will be able to ſecure from the ravages and incurſions of the enemy the diſtricts which you may have obtained; and that the collections will equal the eſtimate made of them, at leaſt during the rainy ſeaſon, in which they will be leſs liable to interruption; and for ſuch further ſums as you may indiſpenſably want, we authorize you to draw bills upon us at par; but we poſitively prohibit them on any other terms.

No. 321.

Extract of Bengal Secret Conſultations, 2d October 1780.

READ the following letter from Brigadier General Goddard:

Gentlemen,

I have the honour to acknowledge your letter of the 15th May.

In anſwer to what related to the partition of the territory made with Futty Sing, I ſhall endeavour to explain the circumſtance you have alluded to as clearly as I poſſibly can; and do not doubt being able to effect that point to your entire ſatisfaction.

After the expreſs declaration contained in the fifth article of the treaty with Futty Sing, where it is provided that a new and equitable ſettlement of the province of Guzerat ſhall take place, it would have been in me a proof of an unpardonable inattention to the intereſts of my country and the Honourable Company, could I have ſuffered them to be ſo materially injured as the ſuppoſed difference of the value of the lands mutually ceded, admitting that ſettlement to be juſt, would prove it to be the caſe: nothing but the ſtrongeſt conſiderations of political expediency could have juſtified ſuch a ſtep; and had ſuch exiſted, I ſhould have deemed myſelf highly culpable in withholding from you in the firſt inſtance every minute information upon a point of ſo much importance. I acknowledge however that the neceſſity for making ſuch a ſacrifice never did exiſt; and I alſo affirm that the preſent partition of country, as far as my knowledge of the reſpective value of each ſhare, drawn from the beſt authority and information I could procure, enabled me to judge, it was not only made in an equal and juſt proportion, but from many conſiderations greatly to the benefit and particular advantage of the Company, excluſive of the general conveniences, and, when it was formed, deſirable object of the alliance itſelf.

I could have wiſhed the Honourable Preſident and Select Committee of Bombay had deferred tranſmitting you their letter to me of the 24th February till they received my anſwer; that both might have been ſent at the ſame time, in order to prevent any partial impreſſion, and by having the matter more fully ſtated, enable you to decide with more certainty and preciſion upon the ſeveral circumſtances of it. They will no doubt have corrected this, by ſubmitting it to your conſideration as ſoon as it reached them, but leſt they may have neglected to do ſo, I beg leave to tranſcribe for your peruſal, ſuch part of my letter to the Honourable Select Committee of Bombay, of the 7th of March, as relates to the ſubject in queſtion, and to which I further beg leave to obſerve, they have never thought it neceſſary to ſend any reply.

It was as follows:

"Reſpecting the ſtatement you have been pleaſed "to ſend me of the revenues of Guzerat, as ſhared "by the Peiſhwa and Guicawar, but which you do "not anſwer for being altogether accurate; I beg to "aſſure you, that from the moſt exact information I re"ceived, it is exceedingly erroneous and incorrect. I "ſhall take an opportunity of laying before you an "exact and ſatisfactory ſtatement of the collections of "this province, for your more particular information, "very ſoon; at preſent only permit me to obſerve, that "the eſtimate made of the Peiſhwa's ſhare of the diſ"tricts to the north of the Myhie, exceeded the proper "value by at leaſt fifteen lacks of rupees. I ſhall men"tion three inſtances in which they are greatly exagge"rated; firſt, reſpecting Pitlad, the whole revenue of "which may be reckoned at ſix lacks, three only of "which are accounted for to the Peiſhwa: ſecond, the "city of Ahmedabad, whoſe collections amounted to "about three lacks, and little more than half belonged "to the Poonah Circar. The revenue mentioned under "the name of Muluckgeery, the real value of which de"pended upon the force employed, and was never valued "to the Peiſhwa at more than three lacks; if to theſe "deductions be added the expences neceſſary to collect "the revenues from the Zemindars, as well as to protect "the country from the inroads and depredations of the "Cottywars, and other freebooters; it will be found "that the real value of the Pergunnahs ceded to the "Engliſh by Futty Sing, excluſive of the conveniences "and advantage of their ſituation, is equal if not ſupe"rior to that guaranteed to him by the Company in lieu "of it."

The facts being as above ſtated, and the Honourable Preſident and Select Committee of Bombay not having yet thought proper to controvert or weaken their force by any objection to the argument I had uſed, I cannot help remaining fixed in my former opinion, that the exchange of territory made by Futty Sing was equitable, and proportioned to the claims of each party, and calculated to promote the true intereſts of the Company.

I ſhall however, in obedience to your commands, further conſult with that Government on the ſeveral points you have mentioned relative to this treaty: and as the expreſs and declared intention of its formation was, excluſive of its general and political object of uniting with Futty Sing againſt the common enemy, to poſſeſs ourſelves of the full and undiminiſhed ſhare of the province formerly belonging to the Peiſhwa, ſhould any thing yet be wanting to the complete attainment of that end, I ſhall moſt earneſtly and zealouſly aſſiſt in contributing to its accompliſhment.

I cannot quit the ſubject entirely without venturing a few words upon what you are pleaſed to obſerve reſpecting the local advantage ariſing to the Company from the exchange of territory made with Futty Sing. This meaſure was ſtrictly conformable to the plan propoſed and recommended to me by the Preſident and Select Committee of Bombay; and I muſt confeſs, from many reaſons, it then did and ſtill does appear to me the moſt advantageous mode of participation that could be followed.

If the lands to the north of the Myhie are further removed from the main power of the Marattas than thoſe we gain, and rendered difficult of acceſs by the interpoſition ſition of three capital rivers; they are alſo ſeparated, and in a manner unconnected with the Company's former poſſeſſions; and in caſe of an attack, the ſame obſtructions of rivers, together with the diſtance, would unite to prevent our being able to furniſh the neceſſary aſſiſtance for their defence, except at an increaſed expence, and at extreme hazard and inconvenience, as all the country we do hold to the ſouthward would in ſuch caſe be left entirely expoſed to the inſults and inroads of the enemy; beſides, the entrance into the northern diſtricts is, at the ſeaſon for military operations, always open to the Marattas by the province of Malva; and whenever they have meant ſeriouſly to make an attack on Guzerat, it has always been by beginning their efforts to the northward.

I ſhall on this point alſo, in conformity to your directions, avail myſelf of any advice the Government of Bombay may give reſpecting it, and at preſent take leave of the ſubject of Futty Sing, by expreſſing my ſincere wiſh, that as the treaty with that Chief was entered upon by me after the matureſt deliberation and attention to every collateral circumſtance, poſſible benefit or diſadvantage to the Company; and as I promoted it with ardour, from a conviction of its great utility, which has ſince been proved, on the eve of an important and dangerous war, no deficiency in the means of attaining theſe objects, or cauſe of alteration may be adduced, by which the public faith, or my private character, may ſuffer the moſt diſtant ſhadow of reflection.

The letters which I have from time to time addreſſed you ſince that of the 28th of March, will have fully confirmed the accounts then given of Scindia's inſincerity and duplicity of conduct, and the impoſſibility of deriving any ſolid advantages from a connection with that Chief, or even of forming one, but upon terms the moſt diſgraceful and unprofitable. That his principal object is to get the perſon of Ragoba into his own hands, is obvious; but notwithſtanding the fair openings given him in the courſe of his negociation with me, he never availed himſelf of them to offer conceſſions to the Engliſh adequate to ſuch a ſacrifice on our part, or even in the ſmalleſt degree calculated to inſpire us with an inclination to make it.

The idea conveyed in your injunctions relative to Ragoba, has been the ground of my treatment of that Chief hitherto, of the plan laid down for the proſecution of the war laſt ſeaſon, and of my ſubſequent conduct towards Scindia; I ſhall continue to make it my invariable rule; and I truſt, that the honour and dignity of the nation may ſtill be preſerved unblemiſhed; and it will never be neceſſary to relax in it towards him.

It is always with the moſt real concern and the ſtrongeſt repugnance imaginable, that I am compelled to deviate in the ſmalleſt tittle from the ſtrict letter of your inſtructions. With theſe ſentiments, if I at any time do depart from it, nothing but the expediency of the caſe, and a regard for the public good, which I know to be paramount in your breaſt to all other conſiderations, could juſtify me to myſelf, or furniſh any ſhadow of excuſe to you. Should my judgment unfortunately err, I have ſo often experienced your candour and indulgence, that I know you would pardon the error of the action itſelf from the goodneſs of the intention which led to it.

When I wrote to you laſt, I informed you that I had entirely withdrawn the allowance granted to Ragoba; this was my determination; and in communicating to him the neceſſity of ſuch a ſtep, I endeavoured to reconcile it to him in terms the beſt calculated to remove every idea of its originating from any alterations in the friendly ſentiments of your Government towards him; and at the ſame time to convince him of the political juſtice and propriety which dictated it. He pleaded his poverty, and entire dependance on us, with the ſtrongeſt force of language; but as he had no other argument to make uſe of than his neceſſities, he was compelled to acknowledge the reaſonableneſs of your decree, and only ſolicited me to lay before you the diſtreſsful ſtate to which he was reduced. A few days after that, I learned that ſome jewels belonging to Ragoba had been offered for ſale in the city, and that he had diſpoſed of ſome golden female ornaments. He ſhortly after renewed his ſolicitations; he deſcribed to me his extreme diſtreſs in the moſt moving manner, informing me of his attempt to ſell the few remaining jewels left of his family; but that, availing themſelves of his neceſſities, the merchants refuſed to buy them but at a third of their value; declared that he was unable to furniſh the neceſſary ſubſiſtence for himſelf and family; and concluded, after expreſſing his grateful ſenſe of the many favours he had received from the Engliſh, and his regret at the inadequate return it had been, and was then in his power to make them, by frankly declaring, that as by his continuance at Surat he muſt inevitably experience the want of even the common neceſſaries of life, it would be expedient for him, in order to ſave his family from periſhing, to direct his courſe to ſome other quarter; and requeſted me to adviſe him in what manner he ſhould conduct himſelf in theſe trying and difficult circumſtances. This was the ſubſtance of his converſation. Appendix. No. 322.

As I was ſenſible of the truth of his repreſentations, I felt myſelf greatly embarraſſed how to act. To the feelings of humanity, I found united in his favour, many conſiderations of political convenience and neceſſity, all which I have taken the liberty of laying before you on former occaſions; but at this time they received an additional weight, as I know from good authority, that both the Miniſter and Scindia had their engines at work, and were endeavouring by the moſt fair and ſplendid offers to bribe him into a confidence of their good diſpoſition towards him, and avail themſelves of the diſſatisfaction they knew he muſt feel from finding that we conſidered ourſelves as principals in the war, without admitting him into any participation of the territories acquired by its ſucceſs. From all theſe conſiderations, I thought it an expedient and adviſable meaſure, which from its good policy, and I may add neceſſity, would meet with your approbation, to relax from the entire reducing of Ragoba's allowance before reſolved upon; and as he had, from the firſt intimation given him, diſmiſſed almoſt all his dependants, preſerving ſuch only as could not decently be diſpenſed with, to allow him monthly, for their bare ſupport and the ſubſiſtence of himſelf and family, the ſum of ten thouſand rupees, till I might receive your final and deciſive ſentiments for my further guidance; for be aſſured I ſhall not in the ſmalleſt degree depart therefrom.

I have troubled you with this minute detail, that you may be clearly informed of every circumſtance, and by that be enabled fully to diſcover the reaſons which operated with me on this occaſion; the force of which I truſt you will admit; and in this confidence I chearfully ſubmit myſelf to your judgments.

Permit me to acknowledge, with the deepeſt ſenſe of gratitude, the honourable marks of diſtinction conferred on me by the approbation you have been pleaſed to convey of my conduct, in your letter of the 19th of May, which came to hand at the ſame time with that of the 15th. I can only repeat what you have ſo often indulged me with an opportunity of ſaying, that it ſhall be my conſtant and unwearied ſtudy to make the ſole return in my power for ſuch unlimited goodneſs and confidence, by exerting myſelf on all occaſions to promote the intereſts of the Company, and the honour and ſucceſs of your Government; and that my future actions will, I truſt, prove to you the exiſtence of thoſe ſentiments in my breaſt, which language would in vain attempt to deſcribe.

My letter of the 20th ultimo fully explained the ſituation of affairs in the Maratta State, reſpecting which I have received no new material information; nor has, I believe, any change whatever taken place. I look with anxious anxious expectation for your reply to that letter, and your ſentiments on the plan of operations for the enſuing campaign, therein recommended and propoſed. The deſcription I then gave of our new acquiſitions, of which the Company now remain in full and peaceable poſſeſſion, and muſt, until the concluſion of the rainy ſeaſon, will, I hope, make good your expectations of revenue from that reſource; but it is unneceſſary to remark to you, how uncertain and precarious any dependance on their produce muſt prove during the war. When the period of military operations in the field arrives, and from the entire want of reſources in this Government, I muſt rely ſolely upon your wiſdom and vigour for the future ſupport of the army.

I have the honour to be, &c.

APPENDIX, No. 324.

Bengal Secret Conſultations, 4th September 1780.

Minute of the Governor General, 28th Auguſt 1780.

WHEN I took charge of this Government, under the former ſyſtem of it, I found it loaded with a bonded debt of one crore and one lack of rupees, which amount, in a very ſhort time after, grew to one crore and twenty-five lacks; it was my good fortune and happineſs to ſee this enormous debt wholly reduced, and a ſum accumulated in our treaſuries, which, as I recollect, amounted at one time to two crore and twenty-one lacks of rupees. Since that time our expences have been increaſing, our means declining (I will not in this place enumerate the cauſes of both) and it is now my hard lot, and a painful duty impoſed on me by the neceſſity of the times, to propoſe that we ſhould again have recourſe to the means of ſupplying our growing wants, and provide againſt the multiplying exigencies not of this State only, but of the other Preſidencies, whoſe exiſtence muſt depend upon our care of them, by taking up money at intereſt. The ſum I do not propoſe, becauſe I think it ſhould not be limited. The ſubject is itſelf of too much importance for a precipitate deciſion. I deſire only to ſubmit it at this time to the conſideration of the Board; and requeſt, that the other members of it will be pleaſed to contribute their opinions upon it, hoping that it may be reſumed, and a final concluſion drawn upon it, at our next meeting in this department.

APPENDIX, No. 325.

Conſiderations upon the preſent political State of the Company in India; written at Madras in January 1780.

THE meaſures lately purſued at Bengal and Bombay in ſupport of Ragonaut Row, having drawn on the Company the reſentment of the Maratta State, given offence to Nizam Ally Cawn, who is in friendſhip with that State, and a declared enemy to Ragonaut Row, and opened the way to a rupture with Hyder Ally, by promoting peace between him and the Marattas, and leaving him at liberty to execute the threats which he has denounced againſt the Carnatic; it is become a matter of ſerious importance with the Company, to conſider how they may beſt avert the evils that ſurround them, and what line of conduct it may be proper to adopt, for eſtabliſhing their affairs in future upon a ſolid and permanent footing.

It was hardly poſſible to have imagined a more difficult, dangerous, and unjuſt enterprize, than that of ſupporting Ragonaut Row's pretenſions to the regency at Poonah; and if the meaſure itſelf be examined without the leaſt regard to the unfortunate conſequences that have happened, it will be found diametrically oppoſite to the wiſe maxims laid down by the Company for the conduct of their ſervants, and in its nature liable to all the difficulties we now experience from it*.

Ragonaut Row at the time he was firſt taken under our protection, was a fugitive without friends or party. His ambitious views upon the Maratta Government had been accompliſhed by the treacherous murder of his own nephew Narrain Row, then Peiſhwa; after this action, he ſeized the chief power into his own hands; but ſuch was the horror which his crimes had excited, that a general confederacy ſoon appeared againſt him in favour of the infant ſon of Narrain Row, and he was driven from the Maratta dominions, and forced to fly for ſafety to the territories of the Company.

In this ſituation, and under theſe circumſtances, the Government of Bombay eſpouſed his cauſe, and waged war againſt the prevailing Powers at Poonah to replace Ragonaut Row in his uſurped authority. The Company's arms were not ſucceſsful, but by the timely interpoſition of the Governor General and Council of Bengal, a treaty of peace was made with the minor Peiſhwa and Miniſters at Poonah †; in which it was agreed that Ragonaut Row ſhould have an annual ſtipend for his maintenance from the Maratta Government, in conſideration of the Company's withdrawing their protection from him, and taking no further part in his concerns.

By this firſt ſtep in favour of Ragonaut Row, there ſeems to have been a manifeſt deviation from what the Company had preſcribed as a fundamental rule of policy to be obſerved by all their Preſidencies, viz. "to engage "in no offenſive wars or alliances with any of the country "Powers, nor interfere in any diviſions which might lead "to the interruption of the public tranquillity." But, excluſive of theſe wiſe precautions, there were other circumſtances that ſhould have weighed ſtrongly againſt this particular meaſure; and firſt, the injuſtice of taking part in the domeſtic troubles of a State, without being called upon by the ruling Power, or having received the leaſt injury to provoke our reſentment, cannot but be admitted in this caſe with peculiar force, as the party in whoſe favour we acted was marked by a crime of ſuch a nature, as ſhould, with us, have effectually deſtroyed his right, if he had ever poſſeſſed any. Secondly, this meaſure, as might have been foreſeen, was likely to be treated by the Nizam as a breach of the Company's engagements with him of 1768, by which it was ſtipulated, that the enemies of the one ſhould be conſidered as the enemies of the other; and the Nizam had declared Ragonaut Row to be his inveterate enemy; and expreſſed his intention of aſſiſting the Powers at Poonah againſt him. Thirdly, the ſupport of this Chief had a direct tendency to diſengage the Marattas from their wars with Hyder Ally, to which the Company had for ſeveral years owed the tranquillity of their poſſeſſions on the coaſt of Coromandel.

Such were the obvious inconveniences attending the proceedings of the Government at Bombay. As to the advantages expected from the alliance with Ragonaut Row, it may be ſafely affirmed, that nothing was or could be propoſed of ſufficient importance to juſtify it under the circumſtances above deſcribed.

No ſooner was the treaty of Poonah concluded by the

* This judgment may ſeem harſh, ſince the meaſure has been countenanced by the Court of Directors; but I perſuade myſelf that all the circumſtances relative to it have not been ſtated, or at leaſt not fairly ſtated, to them by their ſervants, otherwiſe they would have conceived inſurmountable objections to every part of the deſign.

† The 1ſt March 1776.

means of the Governor General and Council of Bengal, than Ragonaut Row, from an apprehenſion that the place appointed by that treaty for his future reſidence was not ſafe, fled to Bombay, and again claimed the protection of that Government; which was openly granted to him: "Ragonaut Row," ſay the gentlemen at Bombay *, "has "refuſed to accept the terms ſtipulated for him by "Colonel Upton, thinking his life would be endangered "by putting himſelf ſo entirely in the power of his "enemies, and has claimed our protection, which we "eſteemed ourſelves bound by every tie of honour and "humanity to grant him; and this the Miniſters pretend "to term an infringement of the treaty;" and well they might. What, becauſe Ragonaut Row had thought proper to reject the conditions made in his behalf, and to fancy the Miniſters at Poonah would not afford him the ſecurity they had promiſed, was it the part of a Company's Government to protect him againſt the ſuperior obligations of a ſolemn treaty? Where was the honour of ſuch a conduct? Humanity, indeed, if it were at all concerned in this caſe, might have been employed in attempting by fair and perſuaſive means to ſtrengthen his ſecurity; but upon what principle could we pretend to remedy a defect or omiſſion in the treaty, by breaking a poſitive ſtipulation of it?

The Governor General and Council of Bengal, who were the makers and guardians of this treaty, appear not to have diſavowed the protection given to Ragonaut Row, for it was continued in the moſt open manner from April 1776 to the month of November or December 1777, when, in conſequence of ſome diviſions in the Adminiſtration at Poonah, ſaid to have been favourable to Ragonaut Row, a new plan was eagerly formed at Bombay for ſupporting his pretenſions. This meaſure had the expreſs ſanction of the Governor General and Council, who approved it ſo much that they propoſed to join a body of their own troops to favour the operations from Bombay; ſix battalions of Sepoys, one company of native artillery, and about a thouſand or fifteen hundred horſe, were ordered about the end of February 1778, to march acroſs the peninſula for that purpoſe. In the mean while the gentlemen at Bombay were not ſo active as might have been expected. The ardour with which they had begun, appeared ſuddenly to have abated. Some difficulties aroſe that had not been foreſeen or provided for; they wrote a letter to ſtop the march of the Bengal troops which were on their way to join them; afterwards they deſired the troops might ſtill advance, without propoſing any object or plan of operations for them; and at length, to cloſe theſe inconſiſtencies, while the troops were advancing they undertook the cauſe of Ragonaut Row with their own force only. The event of this expedition is too diſgraceful to be touched upon; ſuffice it to ſay, that with the experience we had already purchaſed in the former attempt, with all the probable conſequences to be apprehended from this freſh provocation of the Maratta State, and of the Nizam, to renew the enterprize in favour of ſuch a man as Ragonaut Row, and with the force of a ſingle Preſidency, ſeems to have been a ſtrain of imprudence that could only be exceeded by the choice of the time for ſuch an expedition, which was after the commencement of a national war, when the ſtrength of every Preſidency was likely to be called forth againſt the common enemy, and when Bombay itſelf was ſuppoſed to be in danger of an inſtant and powerful attack from them.

Let it be remembered too in this place, that the whole of the proceedings concerning Ragonaut Row, from the firſt alliance with him in 1775 to the late unfortunate cataſtrophe, were carried on without ever conſulting with the Preſidency of Fort Saint George upon the propriety of any one meaſure, although from the ſituation of the Company's poſſeſſions on the coaſt of Coromandel, it be certain that their intereſts were more involved in that quarter than in any other; and had the Governments of Bengal and Bombay only waited to hear the objections which could have been urged againſt their proceedings from Fort Saint George, it is not impoſſible but that things might have taken a more favourable turn. Appendix. No. 325.

The ill ſucceſs of the laſt expedition in ſupport of Ragonaut Row has thrown the Company upon the very brink of thoſe dangers which were reaſonably to be apprehended from it. The Government at Bengal having refuſed to ratify the treaty by which the Bombay army was ſuffered to eſcape from the hands of the Marattas, freſh terms were propoſed. Theſe have now been in diſcuſſion four or five months without producing the deſired effect; though by every information I can learn, the Marattas are well diſpoſed to an accommodation upon the footing of the treaty of 1776, which is even more than can be expected from them, conſidering their ſucceſs: but it is ſaid that General Goddard, who is negociating with them, inſiſts upon a very large ſum of money to defray the expences of our meaſures in behalf of Ragonaut Row; and this, as they obſerve (with juſtice) is a demand of ſo extraordinary a nature, that they can by no means come into it. In the mean time, to ſtrengthen themſelves as much as poſſible in caſe of a rupture, they have, even during our negociation, actually concluded a treaty of peace and alliance with Hyder Ally, in order to engage his aſſiſtance againſt us; and the Nizam is heartily diſpoſed to enter into the combination.

Whatever be the event of theſe appearances, allowing, as I hope will be the caſe from the great moderation ſhewn by the Marattas, that the cloud which hangs over us ſhall be diſperſed, ſtill it muſt be confeſſed that our ſituation will be unpleaſing enough; for, beſides the expence, the danger, and the diſgrace into which we have ſucceſſively fallen, it is certain that the country Powers have but a very indifferent opinion of our public faith; and ſo inconſiſtent has been our conduct with reſpect to Ragonaut Row, that the Marattas themſelves, who bear the character of moſt faithleſs, declare they can place no confidence in any of our engagements, and call us a moſt deceitful people. If ſuch then have been the effects produced by our political tranſactions, it is high time ſurely to correct our ſyſtem, to ſcrutinize rigidly into paſt meaſures, and to mark ſtrongly thoſe parts wherein we have acted imprudently or with inattention to our treaties, that ſo we may avoid the ſhame of ſuch imputations in future, and recover that ſacred regard to public faith which ſhould accompany us in every part of the world, and if poſſible be the more attended to where it will do us moſt honour, among the Powers of India.

In order to aſſiſt in this neceſſary retroſpect, as far as my judgment and materials will permit, I ſhall endeavour to ſhew from our principal treaties and engagements, what objects have been propoſed or attained by our political conduct; whether thoſe objects have been conſiſtent with the true intereſts of the Company, or the plans laid down for the government of their affairs; and laſtly, in what points our preſent treaties appear defective, that we may by degrees, if it be thought neceſſary, rectify ſuch errors as ſhall be found ſtill to exiſt in them.

With reſpect to our treaties in general with the country Powers, ſuppoſing we act upon the ſtrict principles of public faith, it is evident that we lie under a great diſadvantage, ariſing from a contrary diſpoſition in the natives, who are ſwayed only by the views of intereſt or ambition, and who, notwithſtanding they are conſtantly reminding us of our engagements to them, certainly do not ſuffer the leaſt ſcruple of faith to come in competition with their deſigns, when it ſuits their convenience to execute them. I mean not to infer from this that we ought to be leſs mindful of the treaties we make with them; but that we ſhould be extremely cautious of concluding any treaties at all; and that when we do make them, we ought to confine ourſelves ſimply to engagements of peace and friendſhip, and not enter into articles which we cannot perform without embarraſſment, nor evade without a breach of faith. To illuſtrate my opinions of ſuch treaties, I ſhall recite a remarkable fact, which, as it is deſcriptive of the principles of every one of the native Powers, will ſerve better perhaps than a whole volume of reaſoning upon the ſubject.

In the year 1766, the Preſident and Council of Madras concluded a treaty of friendſhip and alliance with Nizam Ally Cawn; by one article whereof it was agreed, that the Company ſhould furniſh that Prince with a body of troops whenever he ſhould require it, to ſettle the affairs of his Government. The Nizam at that time meditated a powerful attack on the dominions of Hyder Ally, in conjunction with the Marattas; and it appears by the negociation of the treaty, that our aid of troops was to be firſt appropriated to this ſervice. The Engliſh army accordingly marched and joined the Nizam's forces in the beginning of 1767. He carried it along with him into the heart of Hyder's country; and then, without even giving the Government of Madras, or the commanding officer of the troops acting with him, the leaſt intimation of his deſign, he ſold a peace to Hyder for a ſum of money; ſaid, he had no further occaſion for our troops, and left them to return home in the beſt manner they were able, through an enemy's country: but as if this act of treachery were yet incomplete, he ſoon after found a pretence to quarrel with us; and having firſt involved us upon his own account in a war with Hyder, he joined his troops to thoſe of our enemy, and attacked us with as much inveteracy as Hyder himſelf. This extraordinary proceeding raiſed a flame which was not extinguiſhed in leſs than two years, and its progreſs was marked with nothing but devaſtation, expence, and ruin, both to the Company and the Nabob of the Carnatic. The reflection of the Court of Directors upon the conduct of their ſervants on this occaſion, was juſt enough: "The general alliance," ſay they, "with the "Soubah and the Marattas, produced the effect we ſhall "always expect from alliances among Powers uncontrolled "by the law of nations, or any principle to eſtabliſh "good faith among them *."

In examining our principal treaties with Nizam Ally Cawn, Hyder Ally, and the Marattas, it will appear that they all originated in propoſals and ſchemes of our own, tending to the further aggrandizement of ourſelves or our neighbours, and comprizing meaſures of ſuch a nature as were calculated only to involve us in the wars that followed them. But this was not the only inconvenience ariſing from our ill-judged treaties: the wars we were involved in could not be cloſed without new treaties and engagements, which contained the ſeeds of future wars; ſo that for the laſt fourteen years the Company have been proceeding in a perpetual round of treaties, wars, and negociations; and are now plunged into ſuch a multiplicity of engagements, that there is no ſafety but in returning, if it be practicable, to the point from whence they ſet out, and there endeavouring to fix themſelves. Theſe obſervations, however ſtrange they may ſeem, will be verified in the following ſhort hiſtory of our treaties.

Our firſt treaty with the Nizam was concluded at Hyderabad the 12th November 1766, and deſerves particular conſideration. We had in the year 1765 obtained the Mogul's phirmaunds, or grants, for the five northern Circars; Ellore, Rajahmundry, Muſtaphanagur, Cicacole and Guntoor, as a free gift, without tribute or tax of any kind. As theſe extenſive diſtricts were then in the poſſeſſion of the Nizam, who certainly could not be pleaſed to have them thus abſcinded from his Government, it was thought adviſable to obtain his conſent to our enjoyment of them; not from any apprehenſion of his power, which was too weak to have reſiſted any attempt to poſſeſs ourſelves of theſe countries by force; but from a deſire of accommodating our rights as much as poſſible to his inclinations, that ſo we might be ſecure from the diſturbance which he was capable of giving to us in the collection of the revenues. This was an advantage that merited ſome ſacrifice; and if it had been purchaſed by the payment of a ſum of money, in the way of friendſhip, or by any other means conſiſtent with the Company's honour, and the tranquillity of their poſſeſſions, the meaſure muſt undoubtedly have been approved. But in the treaty that was made on this occaſion, ſuch conceſſions were granted, as will appear aſtoniſhing for ſo ſmall an object. In the firſt place, the Company's right to the Circars under the Mogul's phirmaund was given up, and the Nizam's grant taken in lieu of it. 2dly. The Company were made to pay five lacks of rupees annually to the Nizam for the Circars of Rajahmundry, Ellore and Muſtaphanagur, and for thoſe of Cicacole and Guntoor, as ſoon as they ſhould be put into their hands, two lacks each; in all nine lacks of rupees per annum, which was ſuppoſed to be as much, if not more, than the Nizam ever received from them before they were granted to us. 3dly, The Circar of Guntoor, which was included in the Mogul's phirmaund, was allowed to remain as a Jagueer with the Nizam's brother, and to revert to the Company only at the deceaſe of that Prince. 4thly. The Nabob Mahomed Ally Cawn was in this treaty releaſed by the Nizam from all demands, paſt, preſent, and to come, on account of the Carnatic, for five lacks of rupees †, while the Company were taxed with a tribute of nine lacks of rupees per annum for the five Circars only. 5thly. To crown all, the Company were obliged to aſſiſt the Nizam with a body of troops to ſettle the affairs of his Government whenever he ſhould require it; an article of itſelf worth all the Circars put together, not only from its probable, but its actual conſequences; ſince we became inſtantly embroiled by it in a war with Hyder Ally, the moſt ruinous we had ever engaged in, and productive of treaties which have ſince created nothing but riſk, embarraſſment, and loſs of reputation ‡.

In this war, as I have already mentioned, our new friend and ally, to whom we had made ſuch ample conceſſions, was guilty of that conſummate piece of treachery which I have before noticed, and which ended in his joining Hyder againſt us. But our arms proving ſucceſsful in the beginning of the war, he detached himſelf from Hyder with the ſame facility that he had ſeparated from us, and having made overtures of peace, a new treaty of friendſhip and alliance was concluded with him in February 1768.

The conteſt ſtill continued between the Company and Hyder Ally, until the month of April 1769, when the Government of Madras entered into a treaty with that

* Letter from England, 25th March 1768.

† When the Mogul granted the Circars to the Company, he gave the Nabob a phirmaund to hold the Carnatic independent of the Soubah of the Decan, and this being a meaſure which muſt have diſpleaſed the Soubah, at leaſt as much as the grant of the Circars to the Company, I cannot help thinking it ſtrange, that the Nabob ſhould have obtained his conſent and a releaſe from all demands on the Carnatic, for 5 lacks of rupees, at the time the Company were ſacrificing ſo largely for the quiet poſſeſſions of a few diſtricts. It would ſeem as if we had been made to pay for the Nabob and ourſelves too.

‡ The Court of Directors ſeverely, but with great juſtice, condemned the whole of this treaty, in their letters to Fort Saint George on the 25th March, 5th April, and 13th May 1768. Theſe letters deſerve much praiſe, as containing the moſt ſenſible reflections on the paſt conduct of their ſervants, and the wiſeſt maxims in my opinion that could poſſibly be laid down for the future government of their affairs.

Power,

Power, which though it reſtored peace to the Carnatic, proved the ſource of much future embarraſſment and loſs of reputation to the Company; ſo that after a war that laid waſte the Carnatic, and coſt £. 600,000 ſterling, with the lives of a conſiderable number of men, for all which no ſort of equivalent was obtained, either in territory or money, our political ſituation became more intricate and perplexing than ever.

Having made ſo unfortunate an end of our firſt ſtep in offenſive treaties, the dictates of prudence certainly forbad us to engage in any further ſchemes of the like nature; and yet, ſcarcely had the Company been allowed time to recover from the ruinous effects of the war with Hyder Ally, when their Government at Bombay brought them into freſh troubles; firſt, by ſeizing on the iſlands of Salſette and Caranja, belonging to the Marattas (without any provocation that I could ever learn) and then, by engaging in the ſupport of Raganout Row, and entering into an open war with the Marattas in favour of that Chief's pretenſions. The motives which induced the Government at Bombay to embrace this laſt meaſure, will be beſt explained by the following extract of their letter to Madras on the occaſion; and by reciting the 4th article of their treaty with Ragonaut Row.

Extract of a Letter from the Governor and Council of Bombay, to the Governor and Council of Fort Saint George, dated 10th April 1775.

"Your honour, &c. we make no doubt are perfectly "well acquainted with the diviſions at preſent ſubſiſting "in the Maratta empire. We have deemed it for the "intereſt of our honourable employers, to embrace the "cauſe of Ragonaut Row againſt his enemies, the miniſ- "terial party; and our army, to the number of 2,500 "men, have in conſequence proceeded to Cambay to his "aſſiſtance. And though his affairs, owing to his miſ- "carriages a ſhort time before our forces ſet out, do not "wear the moſt favourable aſpect, yet we hope when our "forces ſhall join the remainder of his army, they will "be quickly retrieved," &c.

Extract of the 4th Article of the Treaty with Ragonaut Row, dated 6th March 1775.

"The Honourable the Preſident and Council of Bom- "bay, in behalf of the Honourable Company, and in "conſideration of the undermentioned grants and ceſſions "made by Ragonaut Row to the Company, do hereby "engage and agree, ſo ſoon as theſe articles of agree- "ment and treaty are fully ratified on the part of Rago- "naut Row, to aſſiſt him with a ſtrong body of forces, "with proper guns and warlike ſtores, and a field train "of artillery, which are to join his army and act in con- "junction with his forces againſt his enemies, the mini- "ſterial party, &c."

Such were the grounds of our firſt alliance with Ragonaut Row; which having immediately led to all the conſequences ſtated in the former part of theſe reflections, it becomes unneceſſary in this place to examine more particularly than I have already done, the reaſons aſſigned for abrogating the treaty of Poonah, and concluding a ſecond offenſive alliance for reſtoring Ragonaut Row to the Government; the riſe, progreſs, and reſult, of theſe tranſactions, are ſufficiently known and felt.

But as if the meaſure of our experience were not yet full, while matters at Bombay were in ſuch a ſtate, that it was yet doubtful whether the laſt treaty with Ragonaut Row would take place, the Governor General and Council of Bengal formed the ſcheme of an offenſive and defenſive alliance with the Rajah of Berar, Chief of a Maratta province, bordering on the territories of Bengal. When we ſee thoſe gentlemen whom the Legiſlature hath appointed to ſuperintend over our wars and treaties, moving by themſelves in a ſphere of action which requires ſo much ability, as well as dignity and propriety of conduct; we ſhould be naturally inclined to expect ſome inſtances of peculiar ſkill in negociation; of great diſcernment in tracing and conſulting the true intereſts of the Company; and of the moſt ſtudied attention to the faith of former exiſting treaties. Let us ſee how far their conduct may have anſwered ſuch expectations. Appendix. No. 325.

We muſt remember here, that after the Governor General and Council of Bengal had given the Preſidency at Bombay a power of concluding the ſecond treaty with Ragonaut Row, which was to place him in the adminiſtration at Poonah, there ſuddenly appeared an unaccountable ſlackneſs in the meaſures of that Preſidency, ſufficient at leaſt to alarm the Governor General and Council, who had ſent a conſiderable body of troops acroſs the country to ſupport thoſe meaſures. Finding themſelves deceived in their hopes of a more vigorous conduct on the ſide of Bombay, and their troops being now advanced into the Maratta countries, as far I believe as the borders of the Berar province, it became requiſite to ſeek ſome expedient for ſaving their credit in the part they had taken. This apparently gave riſe to the negociation which it was propoſed to open with the Rajah of Berar; and the meaſure was quickened by a circumſtance that ſhould in reaſon have delayed it—the advice received at that time of our rupture with France.

Moodajee Booſla, Rajah of Berar, is in fact no more than a vaſſal of the Maratta Government, and owes the ſame allegiance with all the other Chiefs ſcattered through that wide empire. Such a man at firſt ſight would not appear a fit ſubject to raiſe to the dignity of an ally; and therefore to remedy this defect, it was diſcovered that he had ſome diſtant pretenſions to the ſovereignty of the Maratta State; diſtant indeed, or extremely unavailing, ſince they were never advanced or ſupported (at leaſt ſo I learn) until the Governor General and Council of Bengal took that office upon themſelves.

With this man then, it was propoſed to enter into an alliance of a more extenſive and important kind than any which appears in the annals of the Company. The agent employed on this occaſion, was firſt inſtructed to make it defenſive, then conditionally to extend it to offenſive; objects of ſuch a nature as would have involved the whole peninſula in a flame.

"If," ſay the gentlemen at Bengal in their inſtructions to their Miniſter, "from Mr. Moſtyn's* advices, or the "information you can obtain on the ſpot, you are aſſured "that the Preſidency of Bombay have not entered into "any new engagement either with Ragonaut Row, or any "other party among the Marattas, which may claſh with "the tenor of the following inſtructions: if you ſhall "at the ſame time underſtand, either that a French force "is actually arrived at Poonah, or is expected; or that the "Chevalier St. Lubin† is ſtill there; or, if you are con- "vinced from other circumſtances, of the exiſtence of "the engagements which we ſuppoſe to have been form- "ed between him and the Miniſters; or even if no cir- "cumſtance ſhall have come to your knowledge that may "afford you cauſe to doubt it; in theſe caſes we authorize "you to make an offer to Moodajee Booſla, to unite with "him in a direct and open war with the miniſterial party "of Poonah." Such a latitude to cloſe in a meaſure of the firſt importance, without waiting even for the ſanction of his ſuperiors, and upon information wherein the negociator might be very much deceived, with all his diligence, was never before, I believe, given to any public Miniſter; at leaſt, when the ſtake was ſo great as that which was to be hazarded by this treaty.

But after all, what was the object of theſe bold and offenſive meaſures? There had for ſome time been at the Court of Poonah, a French agent, whoſe commiſſion was not certainly known; but it was ſuppoſed, from ſome doubtful intelligence, that he had made an agreement on the part of the French nation, to ſupply the Marattas with troops and ſtores. Allowing the fact, was this a ſufficient reaſon for plunging us into a diſtant war, againſt a powerful nation, before we knew the extent of thoſe ſupplies, to what objects they were directed, or what calls we might have for our armies in defence of our own ſettlements? Beſides, were it not unreaſonable to the laſt degree, to imagine that the French had either the means or the will to extend their influence at Poonah to any alarming length, while their own eſtabliſhments in every part of India were abſolutely ſtarving for want of ſupplies of all kinds, and in danger of ſinking under the firſt attempts that might be made upon them?

The imprudence of the propoſed alliance and union with the Rajah of Berar, appears in a much ſtronger light ſtill, if we conſider the motives intended to be offered as an encouragement to engage him in our meaſures. The Bengal agent was inſtructed at his diſcretion to enter into an expreſs treaty for ſupporting Moodajee Booſla's pretenſions to the ſovereignty of the Maratta State: and he was authorized likewiſe, if Moodajee ſhould preſs it, to engage our aſſiſtance for the recovery of ſome conqueſts made from him a few years ago by Nizam Ally Cawn; adding thereby a new enemy to the number already upon our hands.

But what contributes more than any thing I have yet mentioned, to give this whole proceeding a peculiar air of wildneſs, is, that at the very time it was in agitation, the Government at Bombay had authority from Bengal to conclude an engagement for aſſiſting Ragonaut Row in his pretenſions to the Government at Poonah. There was alſo at that time an exiſting treaty of friendſhip with the actual Power in the Maratta State (which that people in general conſidered as the legal one) conſiſting of the minor Peiſhwa and his Miniſters. And we had likewiſe a treaty of ſtrict friendſhip and alliance with the Nizam, made in 1768, which was directly ſtruck at by the propoſed meaſure of aſſiſting the Rajah of Berar in an offenſive war againſt him. Here then appears to our view the ſtrangeſt ſcene of politics that can well be conceived. Various and contending claims. Intereſts and pretenſions raiſed by our abſurd and contradictory engagements; and all of them ſupported occaſionally by our ſhifting from one to another, as our ſuppoſed intereſt leads, without regard to treaties, and in direct oppoſition to the fundamental orders and maxims of the Compan*.

Having now given my opinion of treaties in general with the country Powers, and attempted to ſhew, by a deduction from our principal treaties, that the only misfortunes ſuſtained by the Company in India, have been occaſioned by a train of very imprudent and offenſive meaſures, I ſhall proceed with great confidence to lay down the following poſitions; firſt, that all ſorts of engagements, offenſive and defenſive, with the native Powers of India, are dangerous and inconſiſtent with the views of a trading Company, as leading them frequently into meaſures much beyond their real ſtrength; and diverting thoſe reſources, to the purpoſes of war, which are intended for the purpoſes of commerce. Secondly, that the Company have already, or might have with very little more expence, a force ſufficient in itſelf to protect all their poſſeſſions from inſult, without any foreign alliance whatever; and that if they cannot depend upon their own force for this ſecurity, it were better to give up what they cannot themſelves defend, than call upon a country Power to aſſiſt them.

In theſe ſentiments I think all reaſonable men will agree, who reflect how little we have gained, and how ſeverely we have ſuffered, by our paſt alliances. It has been too much the fault of the Company's ſervants in India to conſider the Company as a great Power, whoſe extenſive poſſeſſions made it expedient for them to take an active part in the politics of the country; and to aim at preſerving a balance among the neighbouring States; an idea which led them at once, as we have ſeen, from the ſolid and immediate intereſts of the Company, in purſuit of diſtant objects which preſented nothing but inſecurity and danger.

The Company themſelves very juſtly obſerved to their ſervants, upon the treaty with the Nizam in 1766†, "If it had not been for the imprudent meaſures you "have taken, the country Powers would have formed "a balance of power among themſelves, and their di"viſions would have left us in peace:" and again‡, "Conſcious of our own ſuperiority in India, it ſeems "to be our proper line of conduct to obſerve a ſteady "neutrality till ſuch time as our own dignity and inte"reſt call upon us to interfere, and then a favourable "moment ſhould be ſeized, &c. The diſſenſions among "the Indian Powers can only ſerve to augment our "conſequence: and while we ſhew our ſtrength, and "keep it up, we ſhall be courted equally by all parties; "the moment we take a ſide we make enemies of all "but one."

To correct the imperfections which pervade the preſent ſyſtem, and to extricate the Company from the difficulties in which their wars and treaties have involved them, will certainly be a work of time; but it ſhould be an object continually preſent with them, and accompliſhed by degrees, as opportunities may offer: for I do maintain, that the only way to a permanent ſafety is, to retreat back to their former limits, to entrench themſelves within their own power, and confine their views ſolely to the preſervation and defence of what they have already acquired, without ſuffering any temptation, however great, to lead them farther§. I would even propoſe that a ſevere penalty ſhould be inflicted upon any of their ſervants who ſhall tranſgreſs theſe bounds. The Company, in their letter to Madras of the 13th May 1768, ſay, "The Dewanny of Bengal, Bahar, and Orixa, "with the poſſeſſions we hold in thoſe provinces, are the "utmoſt limits of our views on that ſide of India; on "the coaſt, the protection of the Carnatic, and the "poſſeſſion of the Cirkars, free from all engagements "to ſupport the Soubah of the Decan, or even without "the Cirkars, preſerving only influence enough over "any country Power who may hold them, to keep the "French from ſettling in them; and on the Bombay "ſide the dependencies thereof, the poſſeſſions of Sal"ſette, Baſſein, and the caſtle of Surat; the protection "of theſe is eaſily within the reach of our power, and "may mutually ſupport each other without any country

* When I ſpeak of the meaſures of the Governor General and Council of Bengal, I believe I ought to except Mr. Francis and Mr. Wheler, two of that Council, who as far as I can learn, have been uniform and conſiſtent in oppoſing the conduct of the majority. This majority till very lately conſiſted only of the Governor General and another member; ſo that all, or moſt of the important tranſactions I have mentioned muſt have been determined by the caſting voice of the Governor General: nothing can afford a more convincing proof of the faultineſs of our ſyſtem, than that the fate of the Company's extenſive empire ſhould in any circumſtances depend upon the judgment of two, and deciſion of one ſingle individual.

† Letter from the Company, 25th March 1768.

‡ Letter from the Company to the Select Committee at Madras, 10th April 1771.

§ The charters granted to the Company have no tendency to enable the Company to enter into offenſive wars; and great circumſpection is neceſſary in the alliances they enter into with the Indian Powers, leſt the aſſiſtance they afford under ſuch treaties ſhould give juſt cauſe of umbrage and reſentment to European Powers, and kindle the ſparks of a new war in Europe. We never thought that an offenſive or defenſive alliance with an Indian Prince againſt all the world, was warranted by the Company's charter or the laws of nations. In caſe of attacks, the India Company have a right not only to repel invaders, but to obtain ſatisfaction for injuries they may have ſuſtained. Letter from the Court of Directors to Madras, 25th March 1768.

" alliance whatever. If we paſs theſe bounds we ſhall " be led on from one acquiſition to another, till we ſhall " find no ſecurity but in the ſubjection of the whole; " which, by dividing your force, would loſe us the " whole, and end in our extirpation from Indoſtan."

" You will obſerve by the whole tenor of theſe diſ- " patches, that our views are not to enter into offenſive " wars in India, or to make any further acquiſitions be- " yond our preſent poſſeſſions. We do not wiſh to " enter into any engagements which may be productive " of enormous expences, and which are ſeldom calcu- " lated to promote the Company's eſſential intereſts; " on the contrary, we wiſh to ſee the preſent Indian " Powers remain as a check one upon another, without " our interfering: therefore we recommend to you ſo " ſoon as poſſible to bring about a peace upon terms of " the moſt perfect moderation on the part of the Com- " pany; and when made, to adhere to it upon all future " occaſions, except when the Company's poſſeſſions are " actually attacked; and not to be provoked by freſh " diſturbances of the country Powers to enter into new " wars."

I propoſe now to point out the defects ſubſiſting in the preſent treaties of alliance with the country Powers; and which I wiſh to be remedied as occaſion may offer, without expoſing the Company to any imputation of breach of faith. And firſt I ſhall name as defects, all articles in general which may be conſtrued into offenſive or defenſive engagements: for I am ſatisfied, excluſive of the dangers and inconveniences I have before recited, that the Company may, in another reſpect, be ſaid to make very bad bargains whenever they conclude ſuch treaties: for what advantage can they expect in either offenſive or defenſive operations that regard themſelves by a junction of the troops, or rather rabble of a country ally, with their own regular and diſciplined forces? and, on the contrary, what advantages may not ſuch an ally expect from their aſſiſtance in any undertaking whatſoever? In another view likewiſe the difference is equally ſtriking; the loſs of European officers and ſoldiers to the Company is an hundred-fold greater than the loſs of natives can be to any ally; and this is a circumſtance of no ſmall moment in the eſtimate of ſuch bargains.

Our treaty with Hyder Ally, made at Madras in April 1769, contains an article of defenſive alliance, which has ſince been productive of infinite embarraſſment to the Company's ſervants.—It is the ſecond article, which runs in theſe words, " In caſe either of the contract- " ing parties ſhall be attacked, they ſhall, from their " reſpective countries, mutually aſſiſt each other to " drive the enemy, out &c." At that time Hyder had reaſon to apprehend a powerful attack on his country from the Marattas, and propoſed the above article with a view of engaging our ſupport. The Company's ſervants were aware of the deſign, and endeavoured all in their power to evade it; but as Hyder would come to no accommodation on any other terms, it was thought expedient to yield in the then ſituation of affairs: and the article was inſerted accordingly. Every thing that was foreſeen ſoon after happened: the Marattas invaded Hyder's country upon all ſides: Hyder claimed aſſiſtance from us in terms of the treaty: excuſes were made, under the pretence that it was neceſſary to wait for orders from the Company: the Nabob too ſeemed extremely averſe to our joining Hyder; and went ſo far as to propoſe that we ſhould even aſſiſt the Marattas againſt him. The King's Miniſter Plenipotentiary, who was then at the Nabob's Court, ſupported theſe opinions, and ſtrongly preſſed the Government to adopt them, which was a little remarkable, conſidering that this officer of the crown was ſent out, as he himſelf declared, to ſupport the honour of the Company and the Nation; and to enforce it particularly in the obſervance of treaties. However, notwithſtanding the pains taken by this gentleman, and by his ſucceſſor in office, to inſtigate the Company's ſervants into a war againſt the man whom they were bound by treaty to aſſiſt, they were too firm to be moved, and this firmneſs deſervedly gained them the applauſe of their maſters; though it would have been ſtill more commendable, if circumſtances had permitted them, to carry it a little further, by ſending ſuccours to Hyder agreeably to their engagements: but the Nabob's averſion to the meaſure was certainly a great obſtacle; and indeed, without his hearty ſupport and concurrence, nothing of this kind could well have been attempted.

Appendix. No. 325.

The Company in their letter to the Select Committee at Madras, dated the 10th April 1771, ſpeak of this defenſive alliance in the following terms:

" We cannot but conſider the defenſive alliance (with " Hyder) as a ſource of infinite evils; and we hope that " no temporary conſideration will in any future time " induce our ſervants to embarraſs us with claims, the " fulfilling of which may tend to wound our commer- " cial intereſts, and endanger the public tranquillity; " and the refuſal whereof may in any degree be con- " ſtrued as an impeachment of our honour."

With reſpect to the treaty with the Nizam, concluded in February 1768, there are ſome defects for which it ſeems difficult to account; ſince the Government at Madras could not plead the ſame political neceſſity for embarraſſing the Company with claims that operated in the caſe of their treaty with Hyder. They had juſt obtained a deciſive advantage in the war, and by marching a detachment of troops towards the Nizam's capital, had in a manner compelled him to ſue for peace. This was the time therefore to get rid entirely of thoſe inconvenient articles in their former treaty of 1766, which had brought them into ſo many difficulties; and this ſeems indeed to have been their profeſſed intention at the beginning of their new agreement: but before they reach the end of it, they loſe ſight of the object and ſtipulate freſh articles of the ſame tendency, though not quite ſo impolitic as thoſe of 1766. Thus in the 5th article they ſaddle the Company with an annual peiſcuſh, or tribute, for the northern Circars, which now by that treaty is riſen to the enormous ſum of five lacks of rupees per annum: and in the 6th article it is ſaid, that, " The Company, and the Nabob Waw Law Jaw, " willing however to ſhew their voluntary attachment " to the Soubah, will always be ready to ſend two bat- " talions of Sepoys, and ſix field pieces, manned by " Europeans, whenever the Soubah ſhall require them, " and the ſituation of their affairs will allow, &c."

The Nizam has not yet indeed made any demand of the aſſiſtance above ſtipulated; but when he does require it, the Company may probably be as much embaraſſed as they were by the claims of Hyder; and if they comply with ſuch a requiſition, they may again ſee the ſame troubles that followed their compliance with the like article in the treaty of 1766.

As to the peiſcuſh, there is at this time nearly the amount of three years, or 15 lacks of rupees, due to the Nizam; and the non-payment of it for ſo long a term has excited apprehenſions in his mind, that we mean to withhold it altogether; though in fact the deficiency has been occaſioned by an unexpected failure in our receipts from the Circars, and by the great expences of the war, which has diſabled us from making the neceſſary payments. This ſtipulation however is in itſelf not only burthenſome, but diſgraceful; and by being inſerted in a public treaty, without any reſervation whatever, the non-payment of it ſubjects us to the charge of a breach of faith.

The propoſed treaty with the Rajah of Berar, ſhould it have taken place, or be ſtill intended, either in whole or in part (of which I am not able to learn) will inevitably create embarraſſment without end. A defenſive alliance, even with ſuch a man, under all the circumſtances I have mentioned, would be full of danger, without producing one ſingle advantage to the Company. The country Powers are not capable of diſtinguiſhing between a defenſive and an offenſive treaty: and were we to defend the Rajah of Berar with our troops againſt the attack of any other Power, we ſhould unavoidably make an enemy of that Power, juſt as effectually as if we had entered into an offenſive war, to deſpoil him of his poſſeſſions, or overturn his Government. As to any advantage that might be expected on our ſide by introducing ten or twenty thouſand Maratta horſe into the provinces of Bengal to defend them in caſe of an invaſion, I am humbly of opinion, that any ſtipulation of this kind were better let alone; for excluſive of the pay of ſo large a body of cavalry, which muſt be provided for, it is to be feared that ſuch defenders would do more miſchief than any invaders we could poſſibly be troubled with*.

Having thus pointed out what I conceive to be great imperfections in the ſubſiſting treaties with Hyder Ally and the Nizam, and in the propoſed alliance with the Rajah of Berar, I ſhould proceed alſo to examine our engagements with Ragonaut Row and with the Maratta State; but as theſe will probably undergo conſiderable alterations in the event of a new treaty upon the ſettlement of the preſent differences, it may be proper only to obſerve in general, that the Marattas have always been conſidered as the worſt allies that are to be found among the Indian States. Although they have appeared to ſome advantage in their late tranſactions with us, they certainly have themſelves no idea of abiding by any public engagement longer than it may be for their intereſt ſo to do. In wars, their ſole object is devaſtation and plunder; and in this reſpect they make ſo little diſtinction between friends and enemies, that it is almoſt as dangerous to act with them as againſt them.

Should the ſyſtem, which I have ventured to recommend, of a perfect neutrality, be diſapproved, and the Company think it neceſſary to proſecute the idea adopted by their ſervants, of taking part in the diſputes of the country Powers; the ambitious deſigns of the Marattas point out Hyder Ally as the perſon to be ſupported againſt them, becauſe he is the ſole Power of any conſequence remaining, who has not ſubmitted to their yoke, and becauſe his country is ſituated between their poſſeſſions and the Carnatic; and ſhould it ever fall into the hands of the Marattas they would probably become very troubleſome neighbours, both to the Nabob and the Company. This ſupport, however, if it be given at all, ought not I think to be expreſſed in the common form of a defenſive alliance, which may leave it in his option to call for our aſſiſtance whenever he is attacked, but rather promiſed in theſe general terms: "That "while he remained in peace and friendſhip with the "Company he might be aſſured we ſhould never join "his enemies againſt him, and that if he be at any time "in danger of being overpowered by them, we ſhall "then give him aſſiſtance as far as our circumſtances "and ſituation may permit;" or if this be going too far, let it be a general inſtruction to the Company's ſervants, without pledging themſelves at all, to give him aſſiſtance in caſe they ſee him at any time in danger of being totally ſubdued by the Marattas, leaving the quantum and nature of it to their diſcretion.

I have now gone through all that I have to ſay on the ſubject of foreign treaties and alliances. Our home politics, in which I include the engagements ſubſiſting between the Company, and ſuch Princes as are cloſely united with them in friendſhip and intereſts, form a diſtinct branch, which is conducted upon principles very different from thoſe of our foreign alliances, though as yet without any regular ſyſtem whereby the preciſe nature and extent of theſe engagements can be aſcertained, or any line drawn for the Government of thoſe in whoſe hands the preſervation of them is inrruſted.

The firſt and moſt diſtinguiſhed of our connections, is that which has been long formed with the preſent Nabob of the Carnatic. The cauſe and progreſs of this alliance have been often traced, and are now ſo generally known, that it were ſuperfluous to dwell upon them. It began upon a principle of mutual advantage, and has been cementing during a ſeries of more than 30 years, by the exchange of all ſorts of good offices; ſo that at this time or at leaſt very lately, it might be ſaid to have ripened into a ſincere and equal attachment. Much indeed were it to be wiſhed that all our alliances had been formed on the ſame principles, and that we had never taken advantage of our ſtrength to eſtabliſh a ſuperiority which might perhaps have been as well or as permanently acquired by more juſtifiable means. Our influence in the Carnatic is founded on the free will and conſent of the Nabob; from his confidence in our attachment and our power, he requeſted of his own accord that the Company might garriſon his forts and maintain troops at his expence, for the protection of the Carnatic. Such a confidence ought never to be abuſed: to have deſerved it, reflects honour upon our moderation; to abuſe it, would be to throw an indelible ſtain upon our character and memory.

I have often wondered that a connection of more than 30 years ſtanding ſhould have ſubſiſted, without any ſpecific treaty or agreement; for I do not remember that any was ever yet formed between the Company and the Nabob; poſſibly it may be owing to this circumſtance that their friendſhip has continued ſo long. Where expreſs ſtipulations are eſtabliſhed as the ground of an alliance, the parties are ſo much upon their guard, and ſo watchful of the conduct of each other, that jealouſy and diſtruſt too often aſſume the place of confidence and good will. Theſe inconveniences are more likely to be felt where the intercourſe is frequent and even conſtant, as that which has always exiſted between the Nabob and the Company. By maintaining a connection upon the mutual exchange of good offices, without expreſsly defining the views and wiſhes of either party, ſuch a latitude is given, as cannot fail of producing confidence and friendſhip. In theſe caſes miſunderſtandings when they happen, are removed by liberal explanations and arguments drawn from general queſtions, and not by the conſtruction of words and phraſes which may admit of various opinions, and be ſtrained occaſionally to the views and purpoſes of either party.

But although it be allowed that ſuch advantages have ariſen from the nature of our connection with the Nabob; yet in another view, it muſt be confeſſed, that the want of ſome preciſe line for the guidance of the Company's ſervants in their intercourſe with him hath been and muſt continue to be productive of much embarraſſment: for example, the Nabob has always been conſidered and treated by the Company as an independent

* It may perhaps appear extraordinary that the moſt important negociations that were ever yet ſet on foot in India, ſhould have been all entruſted in the hands of military officers: the negociation and treaty of 1766 with the Nizam, were conducted by General Caillaud; the negociation and treaty concluded at Poonah in 1777, were entruſted to Colonel Upton; the negociation of the propoſed treaty with the Rajah of Berar, upon the death of Mr. Elliott, the gentleman firſt employed, was tranſferred to General (then Colonel) Goddard; and the negociation of peace, now or lately on foot with the Marattas, was entruſted to the ſame officer. That military officers are poſſeſſed of as much zeal for the public ſervice as any other men, cannot be queſtioned; but they have no opportunities of acquiring the leaſt knowledge of the commercial or political intereſts of the Company, and the habits of their profeſſion give them too ſtrong a bias to the ſide of war. The Company upon the occaſion of General Caillaud's being employed to conclude the treaty with the Nizam in 1766, writes as follows, "We "muſt obſerve to you, that we think it very extraordinary, that the whole negociation with the Soubah ſhould have been conducted by a "military officer, unaccompanied by a civil ſervant: when Mr. Pybus's illneſs was known, another ſhould have been immediately appointed, "for it is highly diſpleaſing to us, and contrary to our orders, that a military officer ſhould be alone employed in negociations of our "commercial or political intereſt."

dent Prince; an union of intereſts and of meaſures has generally taken place between them, and at his requeſt, a certain force is continually kept up under the Company's authority for the defence of the Carnatic: it has not however yet been ſettled how far the Nabob in virtue of his independency, or the Company in the character of his friends and protectors, ſhould direct and ſuperintend the intereſts of the Carnatic. If this privilege belong ſolely to the Nabob, and he (as is natural to ſuppoſe) ſhould wiſh to exerciſe it, then the Company may without, and even againſt their conſent, be drawn into meaſures directly affecting their own intereſts and poſſeſſions; for it is not poſſible in any caſe to ſeparate their cauſe from that of the Nabob without totally giving up all concern in his affairs. On the other hand; if the Company in virtue of their character, as protectors of the Nabob's Government, claim the right of directing the intereſts of the Carnatic, then they infringe the acknowledged independency of the Nabob, and become in fact the rulers inſtead of the defenders of his country. It ſeems reaſonable indeed that the Company, who have taken upon themſelves the office of Protector, ſhould be allowed the lead in all political tranſactions that affect the Carnatic, and this the Nabob has hitherto generally admitted; but there are inſtances on record, where he has claimed the privilege of acting for himſelf, even in oppoſition to the advice and remonſtrances of the Company's Government, and it is upon theſe occaſions that the Company's ſervants will always find themſelves perplexed, until it be abſolutely determined how far they or the Nabob are to yield upon any differences in opinion.

There are other embarraſſments of a different nature attending the cloſe connection we have with the Nabob, which do not come ſo properly within my preſent purpoſe to mention; but it is certain, that all the inconveniences we ſuffer are amply compenſated by the advantages derived from an excluſive influence in the Nabob's country, ſufficient to eſtabliſh a decided ſuperiority, and to prevent all competitors, European or native, from hurting the commerce or diſturbing the poſſeſſions of the Company. It is unqueſtionably to this influence that we are indebted for a great part of our proſperity, for our ſucceſs againſt the French in India the laſt war, and for the deciſive ſtroke made againſt them ſo early in the preſent war, to which, as affairs have ſince turned out, we owe perhaps our preſent exiſtence in the Eaſt.

Under theſe circumſtances, if our gratitude alone be too weak a tie to bind us to the Nabob, a ſenſe of intereſt ſhould teach us the importance of ſo uſeful an attachment: and by ſhewing how much we have profited and may ſtill profit by it, inſtruct us on the other hand how different our ſituation would have been, and may ſtill be, if that attachment ſhould ever be diſſolved, or transferred to our rivals.

But it has been often urged, that the benefits reſulting from this connection are reciprocal, and that the Nabob having received the ſame advantage from our alliance and ſupport that we have derived from his friendſhip, is equally bound upon principles of gratitude and of intereſt to remain ſtedfaſt in his attachment to the Company. There can be no doubt that the Nabob owes the poſſeſſion and ſecurity of his Government to the Company; and he has never been wanting in acknowledgments for their favour and protection; though it be certain that the ſupport of the Company was originally given to him, not upon his account, but their own: and that having effectually anſwered their own purpoſes by eſtabliſhing him in his Government, the numerous gifts and favours he has ſince beſtowed on them ought to be conſidered rather as earneſts of his attachment, than returns for benefits received. Appendix. No. 325.

Such being the ſtate of our connection with the Nabob, it were extremely to be wiſhed, that nothing had been ever done by us which might tend to impreſs on his mind any unfavourable ideas of our juſtice, or the ſincerity of our attachment. There is reaſon however to believe, that the late tranſactions relative to Tanjore, have produced this effect in a remarkable degree; and as I conceive it to be properly connected with my preſent ſubject to touch upon thoſe meaſures, I ſhall do it with all due deference to the reſpectable opinions that have been already advanced, and more with a view to the juſtice and policy of our conduct, than to any perſonal regards whatſoever.

While the province of Tanjore was ſubject only to the claims of the Mogul, and to ſuch demands and pretenſions as were uſually advanced by the Nabobs of the Carnatic, the Company had properly no other concern in that Government than to maintain a friendly correſpondence with the perſon who might happen to be the Rajah; nor did they ever pretend the ſmalleſt right to interfere in its affairs until the year 1762, when their ſervants made a treaty between the Nabob and the Rajah, which gave riſe to all the ſubſequent meaſures relative to Tanjore.

This treaty, to which the Company became guarantees, was framed by their ſervants in the character of arbitrators: but the claims of theſe Princes upon each other were not voluntarily ſubmitted to their deciſion; and it would be difficult to conceive any other equitable ground upon which they could act as arbitrators *. A proper attention to this circumſtance is abſolutely neceſſary to form a right judgment of the treaty of 1762. It is indiſputable from the records of the Company, and avowed indeed by thoſe who made and have defended this treaty, that the Company's ſervants in adjuſting the pretenſions of the Nabob and the Rajah, decided entirely by their own ideas of juſtice, and obliged both parties to conform to their deciſions. An authority of this kind is without doubt neceſſary to an arbitrator; but it can be founded only on his being voluntarily choſen by both parties to adjuſt their differences; and their being mutually bound to each other, and to him, to abide by his award, whatever it may be. If this formality were obſerved in ſettling the treaty of 1762, the conduct of the Company's ſervants muſt be deemed unexceptionable in every part; but if it were wanting altogether, or there were any material defect in it, then their proceedings, under the maſk only of juſtice, became highly injurious to both parties, and might have been diſputed with as much propriety as an individual might diſpute any attempt to wreſt from him his undoubted property.

That the Nabob gave no ſuch previous conſent, as I have mentioned, to the appointment of the Company's ſervants as arbitrators of his differences with the Rajah, or any promiſe to be bound by their deciſions, is evident from his correſpondence with the Governor at that period. By this it appears, that the Company's ſervants were deſirous of interpoſing their mediation to adjuſt the claims of the Nabob and the Rajah. That both parties in conſequence ſtated their reſpective demands; that the Nabob's went much further than the Company's ſervants ſeemed inclined to allow; and that the Company's ſervants thereupon framed their objections, which were anſwered by the Nabob, in a manner that ſuffi-

* An indifferent perſon reading the accounts of this treaty, and particularly that publiſhed in a book called Lord Pigot's Defence, would ſuppoſe that Lord (then Mr.) Pigot, who was the prime mover in the treaty, was ſome great monarch, and that the Nabob and the Rajah of Tanjore were his vaſſals, whoſe differences he condeſcended to adjuſt in his own way; for in the book above mentioned, after ſpeaking with much encomium on Lord Pigot's deciſion upon the merits and claims of the reſpective parties, the writer goes on to obſerve: "To reward "the fidelity of the one, and check the ambition of the other, Lord Pigot adopted the only effectual meaſure. He guaranteed the kingdom of Tanjore to "Pertaub Sing and his deſcendants;" which is repeated alſo a ſecond time with peculiar emphaſis, page 40, and 41.

ciently ſhewed his diſlike to their proceedings. Upon the whole, there appears not the leaſt room to doubt, that nothing but the decided influence and ſuperiority which the Company's ſervants had then lately acquired by the expulſion of the French from the country, and his fears of giving offence to them, could have prevailed with the Nabob to ſet his name to a treaty which he conſidered as depriving him of his moſt eſſential rights.*

With reſpect to the Rajah of Tanjore, ſo far were the Company's ſervants from conſulting his inclinations before hand, that when they had brought the Nabob's demands down to what they thought reaſonable, they drew out the treaty between him and the Rajah; got the Nabob firſt to ſign it, and then ſent it in this ſtate to Tanjore by their agent, with inſtructions to him, "to "endeavour to prevail on the Rajah to accept the terms "propoſed †." But what appears ſtill more extraordinary in this tranſaction is, that the Company's guarantee was affixed to the treaty before it was ſent to the Rajah for his acceptance, with this expreſſion, "We do hereby "promiſe to guarantee the performance of the ſaid treaty, "being thereunto invited by both parties:" from whence it ſeems reaſonable to conclude, that the ſame guarantee was likewiſe tendered to the Nabob for his acceptance, with the articles of the treaty; and that both of the parties, inſtead of inviting the Company's ſervants, were invited, or rather obliged by them, to accept of their proffered guarantee: yet it is upon this guarantee ſo obtained, that the Company have built their right to interfere in all the ſubſequent meaſures that have been purſued with reſpect to Tanjore; and finally, upon the conqueſt of that country made by the Nabob, with the aſſiſtance of their own ſervants, to take it into their hands and reſtore it to the Rajah.

The advocates for the treaty of 1762, have urged chiefly in its defence, that it was expedient in point of policy to keep Arcot and Tanjore in the hands of ſeparate Princes. Suppoſing it to be ſo, if the Princes of Arcot and Tanjore had claims upon each other, was it the part of juſtice for the Company's ſervants, becauſe they were ſtronger than either, to ſettle them in their own way, and with a view to the advantage of their maſters? Allowing the Nabob's claims upon the Rajah of Tanjore to have been in ſome points extravagant, and according to our notions of equity, unjuſt; upon what ground could the Company's ſervants pretend to regulate them by their own ideas of propriety? Admitting the Nabob to have been the dependant of a dependant of the King of Debli; ſtill with reſpect to the Company, he was ſovereign and independent, and their ſervants had no more right to adjuſt his pretenſions, than they had to adjuſt thoſe of the King of Debli himſelf‡. Does it ſeem probable that the Nabob, by his own free will, would have concluded ſuch a treaty as that of 1762, with the Rajah of Tanjore? If not, ſo far as the Company's ſervants acted on that occaſion againſt his voluntary conſent, ſo far they acted without authority; and by whatſoever name they may term the part they took in this treaty, whether it were that of friends, mediators, or guarantees, their conduct will always be liable to the imputation of an unjuſt interference.

The occurrences which intervened between the concluſion of the treaty of 1762, and the firſt expedition againſt Tanjore in 1771, are ſufficiently known. Much argument has been employed, both to prove and to arraign the juſtice of aiding the Nabob in that expedition; but as the meaſure itſelf proved nothing deciſive againſt the Rajah, and was cloſed by a new treaty between him and the Nabob, in which the Company's ſervants had no part, I ſhall only obſerve upon the ſubject, that from an attentive peruſal of this whole proceeding, and of the orders and opinions of the Company as they may be gathered from their correſpondence, it appears to me, that the war againſt the Rajah was fully juſtified by repeated provocations, and that the Court of Directors themſelves conſidered the treaty of 1762, as violated by his offenſive conduct, and their guarantee of courſe aboliſhed, ſome time before the expedition and treaty of 1771 took place. How elſe ſhall we account for their orders of 1769 and 1770, wherein they complain of the Rajah's withholding his aſſiſtance from the Company and the Nabob when they were acting in defence of the Carnatic againſt Hyder Ally, and after ſpeaking of former contributions made by the Rajahs of Tanjore in like caſes, enjoin their ſervants "to give the Nabob ſuch "ſupport in his pretenſions as may be effectual; and if "the Rajah refuſed to contribute a juſt proportion to "the expences of the war, then to purſue ſuch meaſures as the Nabob may think conſiſtent with the "juſtice and dignity of his Government?" In another letter they ſay, "the plain fact is, that the King of "Tanjore, who is tributary to the Nabob, ought to have "furniſhed his quota towards carrying on the war, which "he has not done."

With regard to the ſecond expedition againſt Tanjore in 1773, which terminated by the capture of the place, it were to be wiſhed, that the Company's ſervants had been fully inſtructed by their conſtituents, before they were called upon to execute that meaſure; as it was, being left to their own diſcretion, and having the power of the Company in their hands, whether they uſed that diſcretion with wiſdom or not, their actions were to all intents and purpoſes as binding on the Company as if they had been performed by the expreſs authority of the Court of Directors. They were required by the Nabob to aid him as auxiliaries againſt the Rajah of Tanjore; in that character they made public engagements with the Nabob, and ſent their troops to aſſiſt him in reducing the fort of Tanjore, and placing that conqueſt in his hands. As the whole of their meaſures on this occaſion had the force of a public treaty, upon what claim of right do the Company by their own authority abrogate theſe proceedings in oppoſition to the will of the Nabob? Engaged by their ſervants as auxiliaries, how could they aſſume the character of principals? But as principals and equals even in this tranſaction, they could juſtly abrogate nothing without the Nabob's conſent. They go then ſtill higher: they act as the Nabob's ſuperiors, and not only take from him the country which their ſervants had conquered, and put into his hands, but even place the Nabob in a worſe ſituation, and the Rajah, at leaſt with reſpect to him, in a better than before the conqueſt was made.

As to the ground on which the Company built their claim of interference in this caſe, viz. the treaty of 1762, to which their ſervants had made them guarantees, I have already ſhewn upon what idea that treaty was concluded, and what ſtrong reaſons there were to believe, that one

* The idea of the Nabob's being forced to ſign the treaty has been ridiculed; but if ſuch an influence were employed as he could not reſiſt without hazarding the affections or perhaps feeling the reſentment of thoſe who had the power to hurt him, it carries to my mind as much the idea of force as if he had been compelled by a ſtronger arm than his own to affix his name to the treaty.

† Vide inſtructions to Mr. Du Pré, dated 20th September 1762.

‡ There are ſeveral Rajahs or Zemindars in the Carnatic, over whom the Nabob exerciſes the ſame rights that he formerly claimed, and ſtill claims over the Rajah of Tanjore; yet the Company never pretended to examine or queſtion thoſe rights, and would now probably think it a great injuſtice, however they may have been acquired, to interfere with them in ſupport of thoſe whom the Nabob holds in dependance. This pretence aſſumed by the ſervants of the Company to adjuſt the claims of the Nabob, tempts me to put the following caſe: ſuppoſing the Nabob or any other Indian Prince were ſufficiently powerful, to inquire into and adjuſt the rights of the Company, either by their own fluctuating notions of equity, or even by the fixed and juſt ſtandard in uſe with more enlightened people, how many complaints ſhould we not make, and how many wars wage, in defence of our claims;—and is there the ſmalleſt difference between this caſe and that of which I am now ſpeaking?

of the parties had been as it were compelled to enter into it; I have alſo, and I think, upon good reaſons, urged that the treaty of 1762 was conſidered by the Company themſelves as violated by the conduct of the Rajah of Tanjore, even before the commencement of the firſt expedition againſt him in 1771; but if the Company, after they had in effect declared thoſe engagements at an end; after their ſervants had made one expedition to Tanjore, which ended in a new treaty between the Nabob and the Rajah, wherein that of 1762 is not even mentioned; after a ſecond expedition had been undertaken, which ended in the capture of the place: I ſay, if the Company, after all theſe tranſactions, think proper to revive the guarantee of 1762, which was a diſcretional act of their ſervants, what reaſon can be given why the engagements with the Nabob of 1771, and thoſe of 1773, which were alſo diſcretional acts of their ſervants, ſhould be diſregarded and ſet aſide? And why are thoſe ſtipulations which were made by their ſervants in favour of the Rajah of Tanjore, who had no particular claim upon the Company's friendſhip, to be approved and revived in a manner the moſt diſtinguiſhing to him, and thoſe reiterated engagements which were made with the Nabob, who had ſo many claims upon their friendſhip, to be diſavowed, and abrogated in a manner the moſt diſgraceful to him?

But the guarantee of 1762, even allowing it to have been in force, could only entruſt to the Company the care of the ſtipulations included in the treaty ſo guaranteed. The operation of this guarantee therefore in its fulleſt extent, could not place the Rajah of Tanjore in any other ſituation than that in which it found him in 1762. In that ſituation, he was wholly independent of the Company, and the Nabob had ſtill ſome claims upon him, which were not given up by the treaty: how different becomes his ſituation now he is reſtored to his Government by the Company. The conditions of his reſtoration were, "that he ſhould admit a Company's garriſon in his fort; "that he ſhould aſſign revenues ſufficient to maintain "this garriſon: that no troops except thoſe of the Com- "pany ſhould be permitted to reſide within the city of "Tanjore, and except alſo a few native guards, which "were not to be exceeded or augmented by the Rajah "on any account or pretence whatſoever; and that he "ſhould make no treaty with foreign Powers without "their concurrence." This is in fact a ſituation of dependance, though diſtinguiſhed by the Company under the flattering names of friendſhip and alliance; and when we add, that the Company have ſince requeſted and obtained profitable grants of land in the Tanjore country, the whole tranſaction carries with it an appearance extremely unfavourable, and gives to the Nabob too much reaſon to complain that juſtice and friendſhip have been ſacrificed to the mere views of intereſt and policy.

With reſpect however to the policy of this meaſure, I ſhall never be induced to think it eligible in that view, to maintain ſo cloſe an alliance with two princes whoſe diſagreements never can be reconciled, and whoſe reſpective ſituations are ſuch as cannot fail of producing further diſputes in which we muſt neceſſarily take part. The Nabob ſuperior in power, and the moſt naturally our ally, poſſeſſes by much the greateſt portion of the Carnatic, and the Rajah of Tanjore is alſo by our alliance ſupported as a Power within that of the Nabob, his province being in the heart of the Nabob's poſſeſſions. In this ſituation, though dependant on the Company, he conſiders himſelf wholly independent of the Nabob: and from the tranſactions that have paſſed, the intereſts of the two princes are become totally oppoſite and incompatible with each other. If any diſpute happen between the Nabob and the Rajah, and the Nabob in revenge of a juſt offence ſhould think proper to attack the Rajah, which he may do with his own troops, independent of us, and without breaking any one engagement, then by our ſtipulations with the Rajah we are bound to act in his defence, and to conſider the Nabob as his enemy. If we aid the Nabob, as we ought in a juſt cauſe, then that part of our troops which is maintained for his ſupport, may be employed againſt that part which is entertained for the defence of the Rajah. On the other hand, ſhould the Rajah have any juſt cauſe of offence againſt the Nabob, it will be expected of us, as his friends and allies, to obtain redreſs: here again we may be involved, either with him or the Nabob. With reſpect to foreign Powers, our engagements to the Rajah become ſtill more hazardous. The French had lately, and the Dutch and Danes now have, ſettlements within his territories; to thoſe ſettlements the Rajah's ſervants or renters are perpetually flying for protection againſt his Government: and as our troops only are employed in the Tanjore country, the Rajah on theſe occaſions calls upon us to ſupport his authority. Once already have we been on the point of embroiling ourſelves with the Dutch: and very lately an inſult was offered upon the Daniſh ſettlement at Tranquebar, by ſome of our Sepoys employed in the collections under the authority of the Rajah's managers. With regard to the Indian States we are likewiſe in the ſame predicament from this alliance. If the Rajah's country be attacked by Hyder Ally or the Marattas, we muſt defend it, not only with the troops appointed for its protection, but totis viribus, otherwiſe it will inevitably be conquered. How then are we to act in this caſe? Our ſtrength chiefly conſiſts in the military eſtabliſhment kept up for the defence of the Nabob, and paid by him: but the Nabob has now no intereſt in the Rajah's country, nor can we imagine he will eaſily be induced to ſpend his money, and expoſe his own poſſeſſions in fighting the Rajah's battles; and indeed this is one of thoſe caſes in which it would be [illegible] what has paſſed, to deſire his aſſiſtance; much [illegible] uſe influence or compulſion for obtaining it. In a word, ſo far from thinking it politic to ſupport an independent intereſt within the Carnatic, oppoſite, and even inimical to that of the Nabob, it appears to me to be a ſyſtem productive of nothing but confuſion and danger; nor can we poſſibly maintain it long without making enemies of both the Princes we are bound to defend; without involving ourſelves in infinite troubles; and hazarding ſtill further than we have already done, the honour of our public engagements.

Appendix. No. 325.

Either the Rajah ſhould have been left in the ſituation in which we found him before the treaty of 1762, that is, before we had any public engagements in his behalf, or all the acts which the ſervants of the Company have deemed it neceſſary in various conjunctures to purſue, relative to Tanjore, ſhould have been confirmed. In this laſt event the Nabob would now have been in poſſeſſion of Tanjore, and the Company, beſides preſerving the faith of their engagements would have had only one inſtead of two intereſts to ſupport. It has been ſaid, that ſuch an increaſe of territory, might have made the Nabob too powerful, and placed him beyond the controul of the Company; but the idea in this caſe is fallacious. To have added any territory out of the Carnatic (that is in the Belaghaut or above the paſſes) to the dominions of the Nabob, would have no doubt been impolitic: but it is unqueſtionably more ſafe, as well as more advantageous, for the Company to have only one intereſt on this ſide the paſſes, let that intereſt be ever ſo powerful, than to have two diſtinct intereſts, both perpetually claſhing, and both upheld by our ſupport. If the Nabob had continued to poſſeſs Tanjore, would not the Company have maintained the ſame checks over him in that province that they now hold throughout the whole Carnatic, by having garriſons in all his forts? by having his perſon and family in their power? and laſtly, by having the little army which he keeps in his immediate pay commanded by their own officers? But what ſtill more effectually deſtroys the idea of the Nabob's becoming too powerful by the acceſſion of Tanjore, is, that when he actually poſſeſſed that country, and even had a large garriſon

riſon of his own troops in the fort, he allowed himſelf to be deprived of it, and ſaw it given to his avowed enemy, in a manner the moſt humiliating and diſgraceful to himſelf, without even a ſemblance of oppoſition.

I have dwelt the longer upon the affairs of the Nabob ſeparately, and as they are connected with thoſe of Tanjore, becauſe as he is the oldeſt, and properly ſpeaking, the only natural ally of the Company, it is fit that his ſituation, his grievances, his embarraſſments, ſhould be perfectly known and underſtood. If it ſhall appear from a cool and candid examination of paſt meaſures, that he has been treated with a ſeverity ill ſuited to the long and faithful attachment he had confeſſedly borne to the Company: if it ſhall appear that we have in any inſtances uſed our power unjuſtly to exact compliances from him, which he might have otherwiſe thought it diſhonourable to grant: if it ſhall appear, that we have raiſed into our favour and alliance, a man whom he, and whom the Company have conſidered as a dependant on him, who was obnoxious to him, who had deſervedly on more occaſions than one drawn on himſelf the Company's diſpleaſure, and who never made any effort to deſerve their friendſhip*: if it ſhall appear that we have done this in a manner the moſt diſtinguiſhing to that man, the moſt humiliating and diſgraceful to the Nabob: and laſtly, if it ſhall appear that theſe acts have beeen committed at the expence of our public faith, pledged to the Nabob in repeated and poſitive engagements: I am at a loſs to conceive how we ſhall be able to atone for ſuch accumulated injuſtice. Certain it is, we ought to loſe no time in making every reparation in our power; and though we have as yet been ſlow in our attempts towards it, I hope we ſhall not confirm and add to the injuries we have committed, by neglecting any longer to redreſs them.

I propoſe now to return to the general ſubject of theſe ſheets, and to bring it to a concluſion, after making a few remarks upon the ſyſtem at preſent eſtabliſhed for the government of the Company's political affairs in India.

It has been obſerved in the courſe of my reflections, that ſome inconveniences have ariſen from the want of a free and equal communication of meaſures and ſentiments among the three principal Preſidencies of the Company, Bengal, Madras, and Bombay. This communication is ſo neceſſary in all tranſactions that relate to wars or engagements with the country Powers, that there is no poſſibility of preſerving any degree of union and conſiſtency of action without it. The clauſe in the late regulating Act of Parliament, which gave a controlling power to the Governor General and Council of Fort William in certain caſes, has been the chief foundation of this evil, not from any defect in the clauſe itſelf, but from its being ſtrained to purpoſes which the Legiſlature never could have intended it. The power therein conveyed was meant, as I have always underſtood, ſolely to eſtabliſh among the ſeveral Preſidencies an uniform plan of action with reſpect to their wars and treaties; for when the Preſidencies were in theſe reſpects independent of each other, it had ſometimes happened, that the Company's ſervants at one ſettlement were making war againſt a Power with whom their ſervants at another, were under engagements of peace and friendſhip. In order to remedy the abſurdity of this ſyſtem, the wiſdom of the Legiſlature judged it expedient to fix a controlling power in one of the Company's Governments, ſufficient to reſtrain the reſt from making wars or treaties without its concurrence, and conſequently to eſtabliſh that general uniformity of action ſo requiſite in affairs of this nature.

Such appear to have been the ground, extent, and meaning of the controlling power, but the Governor General and Council of Fort William, have given it a much greater latitude. Inſtead of confining themſelves to a reſtraining power in two points, they have aſſumed and exerciſed upon different occaſions an active compelling power, extending to all the political tranſactions of the Company at the other Preſidencies. They have formerly promulgated among the Indian States, that the ſervants at the other Preſidencies are appointed to manage the Company's political affairs under "their general controul "and directions;" and they have in virtue of this aſſumed power interfered with the Governments of Madras and Bombay, in a manner the moſt hurtful to their conſequence that can be imagined, and as it were with the ſole degrading them in the eyes of the ſeveral Powers around view of them†.

The effects of this uſurpation are, I conceive, extremely injurious to the intereſts of the Company. The Governor General and Council of Fort William have annexed to it ſuch a degree of ſuperiority over the other Preſidencies, that they iſſue orders to them in the ſame ſtyle as the Court of Directors; nor will they condeſcend to aſk or to be guided by the opinions of the Company's ſervants at Madras or Bombay, in points even that relate ſolely to the intereſts of theſe Preſidencies, though they themſelves are not in a ſituation, even if they had experience and time ſufficient, to acquire a knowledge of them: the conſequence is, that with partial views only they form plans, and adopt meaſures that comprize the general intereſts of the Company; and when they come to be put in execution, it is found that they claſh with ſome intereſt or ſome engagement at another Preſidency, which had been overlooked. Thus the ſcheme of ſupporting Ragonaut Row in his pretenſions had a direct tendency to involve the Carnatic in a war, and interfered with an expreſs treaty made by the Government at Madras with Nizam Ally Cawn, yet the Governor General and Council of Bengal never aſked the advice or opinion of thoſe who were immediately charged with theſe intereſts and engagements; probably they knew not or had forgot that any ſuch exiſted. Again the Governor General and Council of Bengal formed in like manner a ſcheme of an offenſive and defenſive alliance with the Rajah of Berar, and authorized their agent to put it in execution; though one article of the propoſed alliance could not have been made without a direct breach of the ſame treaty with the Nizam, to which I have above alluded, nor of courſe without involving the Preſidency who executed the treaty, in a war againſt that Power.

I cannot help remarking on this occaſion, but with the greateſt deference and ſubmiſſion to that moſt reſpectable body which determined otherwiſe, that the ſituation appointed for the reſidence of the controlling power, has not been happily choſen; nor can I perceive a ſingle advantage that naturally intitles it to ſuch a pre-eminence, except it be one to poſſeſs more wealth and a larger territory than any other eſtabliſhment in India; this might

* When I obſerve the Rajah never made any effort to deſerve the Company's friendſhip, I ſpeak of the period of his independance; for ſince he was reſtored to his Government, I cannot conſider any conceſſions he may have made in that light: however even lately, when he was applied to for a grant of the diſtrict of Nagore, a ſhort time only after his reſtoration, he complied with a very ill grace, ſaying, that although he had done ſo much for the Company, and his country was ſo much impoveriſhed, ſtill he was forced to grant them large Jagueers (vide letter from him to the Governor, received 16th May 1778.) This Jagueer which he was forced to grant amounted to about £. 20,000 per annum, whereas the Nabob granted to the Company at one time as a proof of his friendſhip, a Jagueer of near £. 150,000 per annum.

† A ſtriking inſtance of this happened very lately: the Government at Madras endeavoured to obtain from Nizam Ally Cawn a relief from the great burthen of peiſcuſh, annually paid for the northern Circars. The Nizam at firſt ſhewed a ſtrong diſinclination to comply with the demand, and even expreſſed himſelf on the occaſion in terms of much reſentment; but the agent whom the Government of Madras employed at his Court, gave hopes that by perſiſting in the demand, the Nizam might be brought to a compliance. In the mean time the Governor General and Council of Bengal upon ſome imperfect information they had received of the proceeding, thought proper to interpoſe their authority; and without even waiting for any explanations from Madras, they addreſſed a letter directly to the Nizam, acquainting him in effect that the Government at Madras had acted improperly, and that he was not to regard any thing that had been done.

be a conſideration ſufficient to determine a preference where the advantages were in more eſſential points equal to thoſe of any other place; but I am humbly of opinion, that the proper ſeat for a controlling power is that Preſidency which is moſt central with reſpect to the other Preſidencies, and moſt central in reſpect to the country Powers, with whom we have our chief intercourſe. Fort Saint George indiſputably claims theſe advantages over the other ſettlements. It is nearly equidiſtant from Bengal, Bombay, and Bencoolen. It has a more frequent, ſafe, and ſpeedy communication with England, and with the other Preſidencies, than any other ſettlement can have. It is the place to which the greateſt part of the India ſhips, outward bound, with military ſtores, recruits, &c. are ordered to touch before they proceed to the other parts of India and China; and it is the place to which all naval or land armaments ſent out by the king for the ſervice of India are directed, and from whence all their operations are planned and executed, forming by theſe means a much more reſpectable appearance in the eyes of the natives than Bengal itſelf. With regard to the country Powers, its ſituation is no leſs advantageous. The Company and the Nabob's poſſeſſions at Fort Saint George join to the territories of the Nizam, and of Hyder Ally Cawn: and the capitals of theſe two Powers are ſo near, that letters paſs to them from Madras in eight or ten days; to Poonah, the capital of the Marattas, letters can paſs directly by land in twenty days, or by the way of Bombay in almoſt the ſame time. I muſt not omit likewiſe, that military operations againſt either European or Indian Powers can no where be carried on with ſo much eaſe and expedition as at Fort Saint George, on account of its vicinity to the European ſettlements and to the territories of the principal Indian States*.

Bengal certainly does not poſſeſs any of the advantages I have mentioned in any degree equal to Fort Saint George. Calcutta is inconveniently ſituated for communication either with the other ſettlements or with Europe; and as to the country Powers I have mentioned, it is in a manner quite removed from the ſcene of their politics or military operations, and ſo diſtant from them, that I believe, until the Government of Fort William was inveſted with a controlling authority, and began in conſequence to aſſume a leading part in the general political intereſts of the Company, the Indian States paid very little regard to it; becauſe though it maintained a formidable force, that force was too remote to be of any immediate conſequence, either in promoting or checking their views.

The kingdom of Bengal is of ſuch wide extent, that the Government of it in all its branches, civil, military, political, and revenue, will be found a ſufficient taſk for any five, or even any ten men of the firſt abilities. To engage them in the concerns of other Preſidencies is to take off a portion of their time and attention from the objects committed to their chief care, and to employ it in directing intereſts at a diſtance, which are, and muſt be certainly more ſafe in the hands of thoſe who are immediately appointed to the charge of them, and whoſe ſole duty is to ſtudy them. But the controlling power lodged in the Governor General and Council of Bengal, though it were confined in its exerciſe (which it is not) to wars and treaties only, would engage them in a ſcene much too extenſive for men who are entruſted with the government of ſo great a kingdom, becauſe they cannot uſe this power to advantage, without attending to the political concerns of the Company in every part of India, and watching the gradual changes which they undergo from a variety of occurrences, too trivial perhaps to be noticed, but by thoſe who are eye witneſſes of them, or thoſe who have ſufficient leiſure to mark them in a ſeries of voluminous correſpondence. Appendix. No. 326.

I ſhall now conclude the ſubject of theſe ſheets by obſerving, that as I have been induced by public conſiderations only, to preſent a faithful view of our political ſtate in India; and to recommend ſuch meaſures as are in my judgment beſt calculated to remedy the errors and defects of our late proceedings, ſo I ſhall think myſelf amply rewarded for the pains I have taken, if it be my good fortune to have propoſed any thing which may meet the approbation of thoſe whoſe opinions I reſpect, or contribute in any degree to reſtore peace and proſperity to the affairs of the Company.

APPENDIX, No. 326.

Extract of the general Letter from Fort Saint George to the Court of Directors; dated 3d April 1780.

Par. 10. WHEN we reflect upon all that has paſſed from the firſt treaty made with Ragonaut Row by the Preſidency of Bombay in 1774, to the preſent time, we are clearly of opinion, that no means ſhould have been left untried to bring about a peace upon terms of the moſt perfect moderation. If it ever were in General Goddard's power to promote an accommodation upon the footing of the treaty of Poorunder, we think he ſhould have gladly embraced the opportunity; becauſe after the diſaſter which the Bombay troops met with, and the diſgraceful capitulation made in conſequence by Meſſrs. Carnac and Egerton, nothing could in our idea be more deſirable for the Company, both in point of honour and ſafety, than to obtain a releaſe from the ſevere terms of that capitulation, and a renewal of the treaty of Poorunder. We think too that ſuch conceſſions, or even leſs favourable ones, acquired in this manner, are infinitely preferable to any that can be obtained by force of arms. If the object of a war with the Marattas be the conqueſt of territory, we do not apprehend that the Company in the end will be any gainers, even by the moſt ſucceſsful expeditions that can be made; for beſides the vaſt expence of blood and treaſure which always attends diſtant military projects, there is too much reaſon to fear that ſuch remote acquiſitions can only be retained by the ſame mode in which they are won; and that the Company may in their defence be ſubject to a ſtate of perpetual warfare.

11. The only ſituation, we humbly conceive, in which the Company can carry on their affairs in ſecurity, is that of peace and friendſhip with all the country Powers, which never ſhould be diſturbed but when they are compelled to draw the ſword for the defence of their preſent poſſeſſions: to this their power is very equal: but the moment they paſs theſe bounds, and engage in the diſputes between the Indian States, or in any diſtant plans of conqueſt, their force, by being divided, is much too weak either for offenſive or defenſive meaſures; and in ſuch caſe their ſettlements and territories muſt inevitably become expoſed to the mercy of the firſt powerful invader. We do not conceive that your armies were ever meant for any other purpoſe than the defence and protection of your poſſeſſions; or that your reſources could ever be thought adequate to the ſupport of remote and offenſive wars: if any ſuch ideas prevail, they will be inſtantly

* When the Governor General and Council of Bengal determined in February 1778, to ſend troops to aſſiſt the military operations on the Bombay ſide, they ordered them to march acroſs the peninſula: I ſuppoſe chiefly, if not ſolely on account of the averſion which the Bengal Sepoys have to go on ſhip-board. This body of troops did not reach Surat till May 1779, that is fourteen months after they were put in orders to march. Beſides the riſk of paſſing through ſuch an immenſe tract of the Maratta dominions, the extra expence of ſending theſe troops by land, muſt have been at leaſt 20 or 25 lacks of rupees; whereas the whole armament might have been tranſported from Fort Saint George (where our Sepoys have not the ſame averſion to go on ſhip-board) in leſs then a month, and at the expence of about one lack, or one lack and a half of rupees.

removed by comparing the preſent ſtate of the reſources in Bengal with their condition two years ago; and then reflecting, that excluſive of about 20 lacks of rupees, which were ſent to this Preſidency, and expended in the reduction of Pondicherry and Mahé, the remainder of the treaſure there accumulated, or a very conſiderable part of it, has gone to the ſupport of General Goddard's detachment, conſiſting only of ſix battalions of Sepoys, one company of native artillery, and about a thouſand horſe.

12. We have thought it our duty to deliver our ſentiments freely upon the ſubject of your affairs on the other ſide of India; becauſe, being no further concerned in them than as acting in ſupport of the meaſures which have been adopted by the Preſidencies of Fort William and Bombay, the opinions we give are likely to be free from that partiality which men naturally feel in favour of their own meaſures; and we advance them with the more confidence on this occaſion, becauſe we find them perfectly conſonant to the general maxims which you have laid down for the government of your affairs.

13. We have adviſed your Honours from time to time of the diſpoſition and movements of Hyder Ally Cawn: this Chief, by means of our wars with the Marattas, is now grown to a formidable height of power; and his genius is ſo aſpiring, his reſources ſo various, and his authority throughout every part of his dominions ſo completely eſtabliſhed, that he has become an object of the firſt importance in the political ſyſtem of India. Before we were engaged in diſputes with the Marattas, that nation turned all its views to the reduction of Hyder's power, and waged inceſſant war for that purpoſe during many years. Hyder, by his ſuperior and active genius, was able to withſtand their attacks, which though very powerful, were of no long continuance; and whenever the Marattas quitted his country he always found means to recover himſelf ſo far as to be prepared for their next invaſion. In this perpetual ſcene of warfare between the two firſt Powers of India, your affairs were every where carried on in perfect peace and ſecurity, your forces extremely reſpected, and your friendſhip courted by the parties at war, and by every other State in India. This then was preciſely the ſituation in which we think you ſhould and might eaſily have continued: nothing could poſſibly have altered it but the engagements entered into by the Preſidency of Bombay with Ragonaut Row, and the different attempts formed in conſequence to overturn the reigning Government at Poonah. The views of the Maratta State became by thoſe means inſtantly turned from Hyder to the Company. They withdrew all their forces from his country to defend themſelves againſt the attacks of Ragonaut Row and his allies. Hyder availed himſelf of this opportunity to recover the conqueſts that had been made from him by the Marattas, and to recompenſe himſelf by conqueſts upon them; and the Marattas at length ſeeing no proſpect of relief from their wars with the Engliſh, were forced to conclude a treaty with Hyder, which they made offenſive, that they might have the benefit of his aſſiſtance againſt us.

C. C. 1779. No. 168.

14. Such have been the effects produced by our diſputes with the Marattas; and if the country Powers were capable of taking all the advantages which a combination might give them againſt us, we ſhould ſeverely feel the weight of their united operations; but fortunately for the Company, their jealouſy of each other is too ſtrong to admit of any ſincere or permanent agreement; and we think even now, notwithſtanding the provocations which the Marattas have received by our meaſures in ſupport of Ragonaut Row, were we to grant them any reaſonable terms of accommodation, they would inſtantly turn their arms againſt Hyder and leave us once more to the enjoyment of that tranquillity which we experienced from their former conteſts with this Chief.

APPENDIX, No. 328.

Letter from the Governor General at Fort William to the Secret Committee of the Honourable Court of Directors of the Honourable United Eaſt India Company, 2d December 1780.

Honourable Sirs,

IN the preſent alarming ſituation of your affairs which their diſtance, the long and momentous interval which will have paſſed before you can receive the knowledge of them, and the diſſentions which are ever attendant on public calamities, will be too apt to exaggerate, you will probably expect that I ſhould inform you of my particular ſentiments concerning them; and I am the more deſirous of conforming to this ſuppoſition, from a belief too ſtrongly founded, that the meaſures neceſſary to the preſervation of your poſſeſſions and intereſts in India, will be inevitably productive of one conſequence of which you ought to be early apprized, that you may be enabled to obviate it in the proviſions which I underſtand will fall regularly under your conſideration ſoon after the probable receipt of theſe diſpatches. I bear too high a reſpect for the characters to which I addreſs myſelf, to treat them with the managements of a preparatory and gradual introduction of an unpleaſing report; and as it is the only point of ſubſtantial information which I ſhall have to convey to you in this letter, I ſhall therefore make it the firſt ſubject of it.

The conſequence to which I allude is the neceſſity to which I foreſee that we ſhall be compelled of making a large reduction, and poſſibly a total ſuſpenſion, of your inveſtment for the enſuing year. I cannot pronounce what our ability may be beyond that period; this will depend on contingencies too variable and remote for preſent conjectures. In juſtification of the meaſure itſelf which I have predicted, I muſt remark that it will be leſs an act of the Board than, as I have before intimated, the reſult of an unavoidable neceſſity, in which no option will be left us, but either to ſacrifice the temporary profits of the Company, or to hazard for ever the exiſtence of all that they poſſeſs, for the ſake of retaining them. It will be impoſſible at the ſame time to provide for the vaſt expence which will be required for the ſubſiſtence and defence of both your other Preſidencies, and for an inveſtment, in addition to the increaſing exigencies of this Government, and all from its own unaſſiſted reſources.

We have been already reduced to the mortifying extremity of borrowing money at intereſt, by which we have raiſed the ſum of 64,44,601. 1. 6. This reſource cannot laſt: it muſt ceaſe at a certain period, and that perhaps not diſtant; but the exigency which called it forth will ſtill remain the ſame, and muſt be anſwered. We have no other fund from which we can defray it, with the preſent appropriation of our means; for excluſively of the foreign calls, our own internal expences have accumulated, and will yet increaſe, notwithſtanding all the care and economy that we may uſe to check them, as we muſt replace all the native troops which we have detached to the relief of the Carnatic, and as it is to be apprehended that our revenue may ſuffer by the large drafts which we ſhall be obliged to make of our current ſpecie.

I will confeſs that I am myſelf more alarmed at the novelty of the meaſure, than convinced of any real detriment of which it will prove to your intereſts, when I conſider, that your ſhips are detained in their outſet for months by the want of hands to navigate them, and liable without any exemption or diſtinction to the ſame hardſhips as the neceſſity of the public ſervice impoſes on common veſſels of trade; that they arrive too late to be diſpatched in the ſame ſeaſon; that equal delays often attend them in their return, which is accompliſhed with hazards ſo great, that at leaſt a part of their cargoes cannot fail, without great negligence of our national enemies, to fall into their hands; and in that ſenſe ſo much of your inveſtment may be affirmed to be provided for their benefit, equally with your loſs. I can venture to aſſure you that every precaution will be taken by this Adminiſtration, with the advice of the Board of Trade, to prevent the inconveniences to which the buſineſs of your inveſtment may be liable in its renewal, from its having been diſcontinued. Reſpecting the expedients which may be recommended for ſupplying the deficiency of your inveſtment in the caſe of its ſtoppage beyond the next year, upon theſe I do not preſume to offer my opinion; they will not eſcape your penetration, and I know that they will be ſuggeſted by a judgment and experience in theſe points, ſuperior to my own.

I do not know whether your ſupracargoes at Canton will ſtand in any need of our aſſiſtance, I ſhould think not; but it is unneceſſary to add, after what I have herein premiſed, that it will be equally out of our power to afford it.

I wait in anxious expectation of an anſwer from the Government of Berar to my diſpatches which conveyed the treaty propoſed for its guarantee, and the ratification of the Adminiſtration of Poonah. This may arrive in the courſe of another week: I have every reaſon to believe it will be entirely conſonant to my own wiſhes. With the aid, or even neutrality of this Power, I have no doubt of being able to make the reſources of this Government equal to every ſervice which may be exacted from them, both for maintenance of the actual peace of theſe provinces, and the reſtoration of your affairs in the Carnatic, however deſperate they may now appear, if they continue under the conduct of your preſent Commander in Chief.

I cannot venture to pronounce what may be the determination of the Adminiſtration of Poonah: conſidered as a State, it has certainly every cauſe to dread the aggrandizement of Hyder Ally Cawn, its natural enemy: as a faction, though not wholly unintereſted in the event of his ſucceſs, it may be influenced by other cauſes; by the ties of confederacy; by its own weakneſs; by the jealouſy of Ragonaut Row; by the aſcendant of Mahdajee Sindia, and his ſeparate views, which are incompatible with peace; and perhaps by national reſentment—yet I think it probable that the example of the Government of Berar may contribute to turn the ſcale in our favour. But I have no grounds for ſuch an expectation in any recent act or appearance.

Maratta. Permit me to offer a brief reflection on the preſent ſtate of your preſent political affairs: I have been told that the Maratta war has been, I know not on what ground or ſuggeſtion, attributed to me: your honourable court is poſſeſſed of the fulleſt evidence of the contrary. The occaſion of the war was planned and executed without the knowledge or previous concurrence of this Government, which has had no other participation in it than in providing, by an extraordinary exertion, for the ſupport of the meaſures undertaken by the Preſidency of Bombay, if theſe ſucceeded; and for its preſervation if they failed: our detachment arrived ſeaſonably for the laſt of theſe objects, and for the redemption of the national honour, which had been without it irretrievably loſt.—I had indeed flattered myſelf that the war would have ſoon terminated in ſuch advantages as would have amply atoned for the paſt calamities which had attended it. Whatever conviction I may entertain of ſuch a concluſion, it is now reduced to an argument of unavailing ſpeculation, in which every perſon is at liberty to form his own opinion.

Another and more intereſting occaſion has now called for the exertion of this Government in the preſervation of that of Fort Saint George: this at leaſt will not be imputed to the Government of Bengal. If the extorted and palliated confeſſion of the Nabob Nizam Ally Cawn may be credited (and we have the evidence of the moſt public notoriety to confirm it) it was the ſole effect of a confederacy formed at his inſtigation, and dictated by his reſentment of the infringements made by the Select Committee of Fort Saint George on his rights, obtained by the treaty ſubſiſting between him and the Company, and his natural apprehenſion of hoſtilities intended by that Government againſt him. Whatever be the cauſe, ſuch have been the effects; and it is our duty to do all that may be in our power to avert them. This we have already done to a degree as great as the time and our means would admit: we exhauſted our treaſury: we have deprived ourſelves of the flower of our army for their relief: we have abandoned our own meaſures in the criſis of their ſucceſs: we have formed a powerful detachment which will be in a condition to march in a few days from this date; and have uſed means, which though new and untried were the moſt likely to prove of ſpeedy and of certain effect, to win allies to their cauſe, even of our preſent enemies. I hope it will not appear the aſſumption of an undue merit, to obſerve that, extenſive as the aids are which we have already afforded them, and at a ſeaſon in which the rules of your ſervice have hitherto interdicted the navigation of theſe ſeas in conſideration of the dangers attending it, they arrived in ſafety at Fort Saint George in leſs time than two months from the date of the calamity which furniſhed the occaſion for them, computed from the return of the army under Sir Hector Munro to the mount, on the 14th September, to the arrival of the laſt ſhip of the fleet, the Duke of Kingſton, at Fort Saint George on the 5th of November.

We ſhall continue to employ the ſame vigilant attention to your intereſts: and I have no fears for the event while I have the happineſs to poſſeſs my preſent means, with the ſame able and willing aſſiſtance which fortune has given me in my preſent aſſociate of this Government.

I moſt humbly beg leave to conclude this letter with a recommendation of Major Popham to your favour: the ſervices which he has rendered in the expulſion of the Marattas from the dominions of your ally the Rana of Gohud, and eſpecially in the capture of the important fortreſs of Gwallier, have given him a claim to my ſolicitation in his behalf; and you will permit me to obſerve, that in whatever mode you may be pleaſed to ſtamp your approbation of his ſervices, you cannot have a more deſerving ſubject for it, nor a ſeaſon in which the zeal of your ſervants will better entitle them, on every principle of policy, as well as juſtice, to ſuch rewards and encouragements. Major Popham.

I am, with the greateſt reſpect,
Honourable Sirs,
Your moſt obedient and
Fort William, faithful ſervant,

Bengal Conſultations, the 25th September 1780.—At a Council; preſent, the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Governor General, Preſident; Philip Francis, Edward Wheler, Eſquires; Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote, K. B.

READ the following letter from Bombay:

Gentlemen,

Having this day received a packet to your addreſs from the Honourable Company, by the way of Buſſora, we take the opportunity of tranſmitting it by a country ſhip fortunately on the point of ſailing.

We have alſo forwarded to Admiral Hughes the intelligence therein contained, and earneſtly recommend to him to bring round his Majeſty's ſquadron to this coaſt as expeditiouſly as poſſible; as it might be attended with the utmoſt danger to the Company's poſſeſſions, ſhould ſuch a formidable French armament make its appearance, now that we are engaged in a war with the Marattas.

We have taken a copy of the diſpatches from the Honourable Company, which we ſhall tranſmit by another opportunity. The letter referred to by the Committee of Correſpondence in the firſt part of their letter has never come to our hands.

APPENDIX, No. 329.

Extract of general Letter to Bombay, dated 12th April 1780.

21. HAVING taken into our particular and moſt ſerious conſideration the ſtate of the Company's military force at your ſettlement, we have reſolved to appoint an able officer to the command of the troops at Bombay.

22. And having the higheſt opinion of the zeal, experience, and military abilities of Colonel Thomas Goddard, we have thought fit to appoint Colonel Goddard Commander in Chief of the Company's forces at Bombay, and granted him a commiſſion of Brigadier General in our ſervice.

23. We have alſo requeſted his Majeſty to grant a commiſſion of Brigadier General, with local rank, to Colonel Thomas Goddard, which we doubt not will be granted accordingly.

27. It is our order, that Brigadier General Goddard have a conſtant ſeat as third in our ſaid Council and Select Committee. We likewiſe direct, that Mr. Henry More be the fourth member of our Select Committee at Bombay.

28. As a further mark of our approbation of the conduct of Brigadier General Goddard, we have directed that the pay and allowances received by him from Bengal, as Commander in Chief of the detachment ſent from that ſettlement, be continued to him and paid by our Governor General and Council, ſo long as thoſe troops ſhall remain under General Goddard's command on the weſtern ſide of India; he muſt alſo receive the pay and allowances of third of our Council and Select Committee at Bombay. But if our Governor General and Council ſhall recal the Bengal detachment, the pay and allowances received by General Goddard on that account muſt be diſcontinued, and ceaſe immediately upon the return of the ſaid detachment, as it will then be no longer under his authority or command; and after that period General Goddard muſt receive the pay and allowances of our Commander in Chief of our troops at Bombay.

Secret Department, Tueſday. At a Council; preſent, the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Governor General, Preſident; Philip Francis, Edward Wheler, Eſquires; Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote, K. B.

READ the following letter from the Preſident and Select Committee at Bombay.

Gentlemen,

Bombay, 17th Auguſt. Encloſed is duplicate of our letter, dated the 30th ultimo.

The Preſident ſoon after laid before us a plan for the operations of the enſuing campaign, which we take this firſt opportunity of tranſmitting to you, together with a copy of the letter we ſent to General Goddard, conveying our ſentiments of the plan, and the meaſures we propoſe purſuing on our part in conſequence.

The Preſident's minute and our letter containing a full ſtatement of the preſent ſituation of affairs, as relative to the Maratta war, as well as of the propoſed meaſures; it would be uſeleſs repetition to give them in detail here, and we therefore beg you will be referred to the papers in the packet.

We ſhall however explain ourſelves more fully to you on the ſubject of the excluſive appropriation you have deſired us to make of the receipts from the late acquiſitions, for the payment of the army under General Goddard.

If with our former reſources, we were under a neceſſity of requiring in addition a conſtant and ſtated ſubſidy from you, to ſupport the charges of this Preſidency, that neceſſity will not in any ſhape be leſſened, but very conſiderably augmented, by the late increaſe of our poſſeſſions; if the revenues are to be diverted to another channel, and ſo long as our receipts continue to fall ſhort of our expences, we ſhall not only ſtand in need of this ordinary ſupply from Bengal, but alſo of further aid, in proportion to any extraordinary and unprovided for demand which we may have to anſwer; or, to bring the matter exactly to a point, ſuppoſing an aggregate made of the expences of this Preſidency, and of the army under General Goddard, oppoſed to our receipts and revenues, the deficiency can be ſupplied from no other reſource but your Treaſury.

If it ſhould appear theſe receipts are unequal to the ſingle demands of this Preſidency, it can be no relief to your Government to leſſen General Goddard's demand upon you by increaſing ours, which is equally preſſing, but only varying the proportion of the reſpective ſupply to each. If you find both expences too heavy to ſupport, we have foreſeen that contingency, and pointed out a remedy, which will not be found in the meaſure you have propoſed to us; which, excluſive of the diſtreſs it will occaſion, is humiliating to this Government in the higheſt degree, when neither the army we are to pay, or the application of the money we are to furniſh, are under our controul.

We have already upon different emergencies, afforded to General Goddard conſiderable aids of money, not without involving ourſelves in great difficulties; and if our means are increaſed by the late acquiſitions, we ſhall moſt readily contribute more liberal aſſiſtance: but too much confidence muſt not be placed in the immediate receipts from that ſource, conſidering that the diſtricts from whence this revenue is expected were not taken into the Company's poſſeſſion till nearly the end of May laſt; and we have yet no knowledge but from country accounts, of what ſums they may afford, nor dependance upon making the collections, but from the protection that is given to the country. We requeſt theſe circumſtances may be attended to, when the eſtimate now ſent by the Board in conſequence of your letter of the 1ſt May, comes under conſideration.

To prevent the diſtreſs that would reſult from a deficiency in the ſupplies from you occaſioned by an overrated computation of the ſums to be produced by that reſource, we ſubjoin extracts of letters from the Chief of Surat, containing the laſt information on that ſubject.

"The Honourable Company's Tannahs are fixed in the 16th June.
"ſeveral Pergunnahs belonging to the Peiſhwa Govern"ment, as alſo in the different ceſſions to the Honourable "Company from Futty Sing Guicawar; and every en"couragement given to the inhabitants to return to their "villages, and reaſſume the cultivation; and from pre-
"ſent appearances, I flatter myſelf the Honourable "Company will be able to recover a handſome revenue
"therefrom the next ſeaſon."

"Your Honour, &c. may reſt aſſured, that every Auguſt 2d.
"attention ſhall be uſed on my part, for procuring as "large a revenue from the late acquiſitions as may lay "in my power, but the whole will depend on the "enemy's being prevented from entering the Per-
"gunnahs."

The importance and abſolute neceſſity of the expedition into the Conkan is very fully explained in the Governor's minute: it is, in ſhort, eſſential to the ſucceſs of the war; and the conqueſt of Baſſein would only be an addition to our burthens, unleſs the country is firſt ſecured, nor could the army be ſubſiſted otherwiſe. The preſent poſition of the army under General Goddard puts it out of his power to effect this in time, and we have therefore undertaken the execution of this ſervice, which we will venture to pronounce, is more calculated to produce a favourable criſis to the war, than any other which could at preſent be adopted. Our endeavours muſt be entirely defeated were we to throw our reſources out of our own hands; and we ſhall truſt, that when you are informed of the general tendency of our late meaſures to relieve you from your preſent intolerable burthens, and the vigorous exertion for which we are now preparing, you will at leaſt provide for the payment of the Bengal troops, even if the lowneſs of your treaſury ſhould diſable you from aſſiſting us further; and we ſhall in the mean time appropriate the receipts from the new Pergunnahs to the general purpoſes of the war, and admit General Goddard to ſuch a participation as we can poſſibly afford.

you

If you ſhould judge it an expedient meaſure, upon the grounds of the Governor's minute, we requeſt you will negociate a loan in Calcutta to the amount of ten lacks of rupees, on the bonds of this Government, and ſend the amount in ſpecie to Bombay, for the purpoſes therein explained.

We hope that the line of conduct we have recommended to General Goddard, to be obſerved for the preſent towards Futty Sing, will meet with your approbation.

We acquainted you, in our letter of the 30th ultimo, with the conduct of the Nabob Hyder Ally to the Reſident at Onore; and it is proper we ſhould mention, that as the Nabob did not return any anſwer to the Preſident's propoſals of ſending a gentleman to him, we countermanded Mr. Horſley's intended journey.

In our diſpatches of the 2d January, we tranſmitted the information we had received from General Goddard of the correſpondence carried on by the Dutch Chief at Surat with the Poonah Miniſters. The General has, in a ſubſequent letter which you will find in the papers now ſent, ſtrongly preſſed us to take public notice of the conduct of Mr. Vande Graaf, which we have deferred doing, till we receive your inſtructions, for which there will be ſufficient time before an opportunity will offer for Batavia, if you ſhould think it proper for us to make a repreſentation to the Dutch Governor General. Tranſlation to the intercepted letters are now encloſed, and the original of that from Mr. Vande Graaf is in our poſſeſſion, and ſealed with his official ſeal, as a Director at Surat.

We have directed Mr. Henſhaw to obtain the moſt authentic teſtimonials he can at Goa, of the ſeveral facts relative to the ſeizure of the Engliſh veſſel at Mangulore; which when received ſhall be tranſmitted to you.

Encloſed is a duplicate of our letter of the 14th inſtant; and the original packet from the Honourable Company therein mentioned, is now forwarded by the Duke of Grafton.

We are, with reſpect, &c.

Bombay Caſtle, 17th Auguſt 1780. (Signed) William Hornby, &c. Select Committee.

Ordered, That the encloſures in the above letter be entered after the conſultation, and that the letter itſelf do lie for conſideration.

Preſident's Statement of the preſent Poſture of Affairs, and Propoſal of a Plan for the Operations of the enſuing Campaign.

1. The preſent ſeaſon which obliges both our troops and thoſe of the enemy to remain inactive, affords us an opportunity, uninterrupted by caſual intervening circumſtances, of reviewing the general poſture of our affairs as relative to the Maratta war, the advantage or difficulties of our preſent ſituation; and of conſidering how far the one may be improved, or the other relieved.

2. The war the nation is at preſent engaged in with France and Spain; the uncertain diſpoſition of the principal Powers in India who yet remain neuter in the conteſt between us and the Marattas; and the reduced ſtate of the Company's finances in India, while Government at home is calling on them for extraordinary ſupplies, in aid of the public neceſſities, ſufficiently evince the expediency of bringing this Maratta war to as early a concluſion as poſſible.

3. At preſent however there ſeems no likelihood of effecting this deſirable purpoſe by treaty, all attempts that have been made of this kind having hitherto failed. We need not be at a loſs for the reaſon why the very moderate terms demanded by the Governor General and Council laſt year, could not be accepted by Nana and by Scindia; and that reaſon ſtill ſubſiſts in its full force. The public faith engaged to Ragoba for his ſecurity, and the views of both Nana and Scindia in deſiring to obtain poſſeſſion of his perſon, form an obſtacle which in a ſeparate treaty with Nana ſeems inſurmountable, and with Scindia, is certainly of no ſmall difficulty. I do but touch on theſe ſubjects, for ſince the commencement of hoſtilities between General Goddard and Mhadjee Scindia, all preſent expectations of a peace by treaty with Nana and Scindia, jointly or ſeparately with either, has been at an end. The Governor General and Council have not even been pleaſed to inform us, whether they have empowered General Goddard to enter into further negociation ſince the termination of that which they authorized him in June laſt to commence with the Government at Poonah, and with Futty Sing, after the recommencement of hoſtilities, nor with their views in any future negociation for peace.

4. In the mean time their ſentiments with regard to the operations of war, and the direction of them to its final termination, we muſt conclude correſpond with ours; not indeed from any direct communication of theirs to us on this momentous ſubject, but from their approbation of my plan for the conduct of the war, delivered in this Committee laſt year *; according to which, the partition of Guzerat with Futty Sing, and the reduction of Baſſein, which with its diſtricts would connect our poſſeſſions in one continued line from hence to the Myhie, were to be the objects of the war, and the boundaries of our views in regard to the acquiſition of territory for this Preſidency.

5. All treaty for the preſent being at an end, and whenever recommenced, there being ſuch difficulties as to render the concluſion of a peace by this means very doubtful, I confeſs I have but little hope of it, unleſs by ſucceſs in vigorous meaſures directed to certain objects, and ſtrictly confined to them. What they are, as far as we are informed, and what they ought to be, according to our repeated reſolutions and opinions, is above expreſſed in a few words, and already in part accompliſhed. The reduction of Baſſein, and its dependent diſtricts, alone remains to complete our views; and when effected will bring us to that period, when, if the enemy refuſe to accept of a peace, they muſt continue the war with us on our own terms, as we ſhall then be in poſſeſſion of a revenue equal to all our expences, on a plan of mere defence, which the nature of the country will make eaſy to us; while our ſituation will render our force in the higheſt degree formidable to them during the war, and at all times reſpectable.

6. It is true however, that neither the revenue of all this territory, nor much more, will ſuffice both for the ſupport of General Goddard's army, and of our own eſtabliſhment, which beſides we may fear will be growing more and more burthenſome, on account of the expectation our troops naturally entertain of being ſupported on the ſame footing with the Bengal army, which though given way to at firſt, only as a temporary indulgence, will ſoon be grounded on the plea of precedents; and when our officers have once formed their expences upon this (extravagant) plan, the inefficacy of oppoſing regulation to eſtabliſhing habit and cuſtom, will be felt here as it has been already experienced in other Governments.

7. By the advices laſt received from the Governor General and Council, we learn, "that their diſtreſs for "money is ſuch, that they ſhall be unable to make "adequate remittances for the ſupport of this Preſidency, "and the pay of the army under General Goddard."

This

Appendix. No. 330.

Appendix. No. 330.

This diſtreſs may continue ſo long, or increaſe ſo far, as to overbalance by many degrees all the advantages derived from the aſſiſtance of the Bengal detachment. And the only ſecurity we can have againſt the evil, is in the diſpatch we uſe in putting our affairs into ſuch a poſture as to diſpenſe with this dangerous aid.

8. This we could never have done but by making ſuch an augmentation of our military force, as we have with this very view reſolved on, and which, if the events of the next campaign do not much diſappoint us, we may hope will enable us to ſend back the Bengal and Madras battalions as early as we can receive the neceſſary communications in reply to the letters already written to Bengal on this ſubject, and the ſeaſon will well permit; that is to ſay, by February or March next.

9. In a word then, peace, either formally or ſubſtantially, ſhould be the firſt object of our wiſhes. The ſecond, (and hardly of leſs importance to this Government than the firſt) to ſend back the troops of the other Preſidencies, which we have no preſent means nor future hope of being able to maintain, unleſs by ſupplies from Bengal, which we are plainly told are no longer to be depended on.

10. We have ourſelves ſcarce ever felt greater diſtreſs for money than at this time, and muſt ſtill expect to feel for ſome months; and I am well aware of the impediment we may meet from this cauſe, in the execution of any plan that can be propoſed; yet this is no reaſon with me againſt our entering on action, but indeed the contrary; for if we can by any means advance, we may ſtill as we proceed hope to find ſome relief to our neceſſities, which, while we remain inactive, muſt be ſtill increaſing on us till we are unable even to attempt a remedy. The expence of our preſent eſtabliſhment muſt be borne, whether our troops are kept in action or in idleneſs; and this expence alone is ſufficient to ſink us: the only difference therefore is, that by the former we have a proſpect of relieving our neceſſities; by the latter, none; for no reſource remains for us, but ſuch as we may find in our own efforts. Theſe I flatter myſelf will prove ſucceſsful; but if they do not, we ſhall have the conſolation of having made them, and ſhall be ſubject to no reproach for want of foreſight, or for inactivity or delay; and ſhall at leaſt put off the moment in which we are to give up all our hope to the laſt. We muſt therefore, in ſpite of all difficulties, reſolve to ſtruggle on towards the accompliſhment of the end we have in view, and determine to be ſtopped by nothing but abſolute impoſſibilities. I am not without hopes too, that the Governor General and Council will, notwithſtanding the lowneſs of their treaſury, fall on ſome expedient for aſſiſting us, when they are informed of the tendency of our meaſures to render all ſupplies from them for the future unneceſſary, and to relieve our employers from the intolerable burden the Bengal army on this ſide of India has proved to them.

11. Before I proceed to propoſe the ſentiments I mean to ſubmit to the Committee, relative to the operations of the enſuing campaign, it is neceſſary to take notice of ſome circumſtances of our connection with Futty Sing, to which the laſt letter from Bengal refers, as well as of all other particulars of our preſent ſituation which are to be taken into conſideration in order to form a juſt judgment with regard to our future meaſures.

12. The Governor General and Council have been pleaſed to inform us, that they ſhall conform to the caution given them by us, relative to the apparent diſproportion between our ſhare of the partition of Guzerat and Futty Sing's, in their final ratification of the treaty with him. They likewiſe ſeem inclined to think that excluſive of the above-mentioned diſproportion, the exchange of territory agreed on with him muſt rather prove diſadvantageous to the Company, becauſe, as they ſay, "We gain for lands lying remote and rendered in a degree inacceſſible to the Marattas by the interpoſition "of two capital rivers, a diſtrict immediately on their "borders and open to their incurſions."

13. They have accordingly recommended three ſeveral ways of finally adjuſting the partition of the province; viz.

1ſt. Either to annul the exchange altogether, and both parties to poſſeſs their ſhare according to the former diviſion between the Peiſhwa and Futty Sing; for this I apprehend to be the meaning of the Governor General and Council, who ſeem to have miſunderſtood the ſituation of Zinnore and Dubhoy, and to have conſidered them as having both formerly belonged to Futty Sing, and to have ſuppoſed likewiſe that he had poſſeſſed no part of the province to the ſouthward of theſe places.

Or, 2dly. Futty Sing to make up the diſproportion by further ceſſion of land to the Company.

Or, 3dly. By paying an equivalent ſubſidy in ready money.

14. The Committee will recollect, that General Goddard in his reply to their letter of the 24th February, expreſſes his opinion poſitively, that the diviſion in point of revenue is already in our favour; and till we have an opportunity of informing ourſelves with certainty on this point, it will be highly impolitic to alarm Futty Sing with the appearance of inſtituting freſh claims: and, as the Governor General and Council have kept this matter open for future adjuſtment, I conceive that for the preſent this is ſufficient; and it will be adviſable to wait a more convenient ſeaſon than the preſent for the diſcuſſion.

15. With regard to the objection which the Governor General and Council have ſtated to the ſituation of our diviſion of the province, it ſeems to me totally without foundation. General Goddard has in the principal of the exchanges with Futty Sing, conformed ſtrictly to the plan which was originally concerted with him, and approved by the Governor General and Council. The ſouthern part of Guzerat will, after the reduction of Baſſein and its diſtricts, connect in one continued line with the reſt of our territory. The mountains which ſtretch northward from thence are a ſecurity to it from the ſouthward and eaſtward; and the Myhie, which forms our boundary to the northward, and the Nerbuddah and Tappy which interſect our portion of Guzerat, and are navigable higher than any other rivers of the province, give a clear advantage to this part of the country over that north of the Myhie, from which, if we were poſſeſſed of it, we ſhould be cut off by Futty Sing's diviſion to the ſouthward, and during great part of the fair ſeaſon ſhould have but a tedious communication with it by ſea, on account of the north weſt winds which then prevail, and the difficulties of the navigation in the gulf of Cambay; while on the ſide of Malva and Candeiſh, it lies equally expoſed with the other, as well as to the depredations of the numerous bands of freebooters who are in poſſeſſion of the country to the N. W. By which and by the various oppreſſions it has ſuffered from its many maſters, within theſe laſt thirty years, it is totally changed from what it formerly has been; a melancholy inſtance of which may be ſeen in the preſent ſtate of the once flouriſhing city of Ahmedabad.

16. The Governor General and Council therefore having deſired that we would afford General Goddard the aid of our advice on this ſubject, and in a manner that ſeems to refer the deciſion on it to us, I would propoſe that we ſhould recommend to General Goddard to adhere by all means to the firſt intention of reſerving the ſouthern part of the province to ourſelves, and likewiſe for the preſent, wave entering on the more exact adjuſtment of the reſpective proportions of the Company, and of Futty Sing in the diviſion of it. The revenue we ſhall be in immediate receipt of, as we are now ſituated in that quarter, and the further views we have to proſecute on this ſide rendering it moſt prudent in my opinion to avoid a ſubject that may give cauſe of diſſatisfaction to Futty Sing, to whom (if neceſſary) I think it might even be expedient to confirm any advantage he may have, according to the preſent partition, rather than to hazard a breach or even coolneſs with him, that would oblige us in any degree to withdraw our attention from the proſecution of the objects which ſo preſſingly demand it to the ſouthward.

17. I have the pleaſure to obſerve that General Goddard's ſentiments with regard to the reduction of Baſſein, as the firſt operation of the enſuing campaign, entirely concur with ours, and he has deſired "to receive "from us the earlieſt communication of the plan we "would recommend for carrying it into execution, the "manner, time, and every thing elſe that may be "conducive to its early ſucceſs." He is even ſo anxious for undertaking this important enterprize, that he ſeems to wiſh to come down by ſea, as ſoon as ever the ſeaſon will permit of his embarking his troops from Surat, where he informs us he is providing every material neceſſary for conſtructing the works and carrying on the ſiege, which can eaſily be conveyed by water; but depending entirely on us for aſſiſtance of ſuch artillery, ſtores, and ammunition, as may be requiſite, and alſo for the neceſſary ſupplies of proviſions.

18. The General informs us likewiſe that Scindia and Holkar are certainly ſeparated, the former being gone to Eugene, and the latter to Indore; and that he has recommended to the Governor General and Council to aſſiſt in a plan of detaining them in the northern provinces, while we purſue our views here, by cauſing a powerful diverſion of their forces on the ſide of Malwa: and we muſt ſuppoſe, that it is to this purpoſe that the operations of the detachment under Captain Popham, in conjunction with the Rana of Ghode, are now directed, though we have heard nothing from the Governor General and Council on this ſubject, and know nothing of the proceedings of that detachment but by the intelligence of private correſpondents.

19. By the ſucceſs which has attended the detachment ordered by General Goddard againſt Gunneſe Punt, in driving him entirely out of Guzerat, and in taking poſſeſſion of the forts to the ſouthward of it, the General's quarters are now extended to the borders of the diſtricts dependent on Baſſein, and the revenue from our diviſion of Guzerat is ſecured for the next ſeaſon. Scindia and Holkar are the only enemies who can moleſt us from the northward; and even if their attention ſhould not be engaged on the ſide of Bengal, yet there is no reaſon to ſuppoſe that they will be able to aſſemble their troops and ſettle the terms on which they are to afford their aſſiſtance to Nana, ſo as to attempt any thing againſt us next ſeaſon earlier than they did the laſt; that is to ſay, before the end of February: and indeed Scindia's operations during the laſt campaign ſeemed rather directed to cover his own country than to attack ours; and if that be ſtill his view, we ſhall have nothing to apprehend from him on the ſide of Guzerat while our troops are employed on this.

20. General Goddard, however, I dare ſay will be able to provide ſufficiently for the protection of that province when he comes this way, as in caſe of neceſſity a ſtrong reinforcement from the garriſon of Surat and Broach may take the field to join ſuch troops as the General may think proper to leave behind him to the northward.

21. In the mean time I conſider the poſition of General Goddard's army, till the ſeaſon for action commences, as very advantageous, by ſecuring the Pergunnahs from which we are to expect ſo large a part of our reſources for the next year againſt the incurſions of the enemy from the ſouthward: this advantage will ſtill be maintained, and even extended, by his bringing down his army to the attack of Baſſein by land, as he will in fact by this means take in the whole country as he advances; he will too be in readineſs for undertaking the ſiege of Baſſein immediately on his arrival there; whereas if he comes down by ſea to Bombay, ſome time will be neceſſary to furniſh him with the neceſſary apparatus for the ſiege. And after the reduction of the place, his army will require to be fitted out afreſh for the field, in which we are under great diſadvantages from the nature of our preſent limits; and in the mean time the country between the hills and the ſea lying open to the enemy, they may do conſiderable damage to our northern Pergunnahs by incurſions from the Concan. Appendix No. 330.

22. At the time General Goddard propoſed coming down by ſea to the attack of Baſſein, he was unacquainted with the footing we had gained on the Continent, nor can he yet be informed of the purpoſes to which we may be able to apply this advantage in favour of his operations againſt Baſſein, and his march to the ſouthward; theſe I flatter myſelf are of the moſt deciſive kind, and will I think appear ſuch with ſo great a degree of evidence, as I proceed to explain the part I propoſe our troops ſhould take in the next campaign, that I do not doubt of the concurrence of the Committee.

23. By poſſeſſing ourſelves of Callian we have ſecured one of the moſt favourable openings into the Conkan, ſituated at eaſy and nearly equal diſtances from the principal paſſes leading to and from the Decan; it muſt be by poſſeſſing theſe, and by a reſpectable body of troops to cover the country, that we muſt endeavour to exclude the enemy from it, and render it uſeful to ourſelves. I would accordingly propoſe that five battalions ſhould be aſſembled at Callian, and all neceſſary preparation made for them to take the field as early as the ſeaſon will permit, it being a point of the laſt importance to have this body of troops in readineſs to protect the harveſt before the enemy can begin their operations: I do not pretend now to fix the preciſe time for their entering on action, which muſt depend on the ſeaſon and on many particulars of local knowledge, which can only be judged of on the ſpot; I therefore ſhould think it ſufficient for the preſent to appoint the officer we pitch on for this command, together with the commanding officer of artillery and the Commiſſary, who ſhould now be made acquainted with our views in forming this army, and be employed as may ſeem neceſſary in making the requiſite preparation in their ſeveral departments. Theſe views, according to my idea, are to ſecure to ourſelves the poſſeſſion of the country, and by that means a plentiful ſubſiſtence for our troops during the campaign, to guard the paſſes from the Decan into the Conkan, and otherwiſe cover the country till General Goddard's arrival, and then to cover the ſiege of Baſſein.

24. By the appointment of the above-mentioned officers, and communicating our plan of operations thus early, I make no doubt of having every thing put in the neceſſary degree of forwardneſs in the ſeveral departments, without any unneceſſary increaſe of expence.—The officers we entruſt with this command will acquire, before the ſeaſon for action opens, a thorough knowledge of the country, in which the enemy have a vaſt advantage over us at preſent, and may prepare by many ſmall enterprizes and movements for the main ſervice on which he knows he is to be employed, and thus greatly facilitate its future ſucceſs.

25. The advantage we ſhall derive from the poſition of our troops and of General Goddard's army, ſeems to me to be of the greateſt conſequence, it will ſecure to us the produce of an extenſive and plentiful tract of country, at a time when our diſtreſs for money will render ſuch a reſource doubly valuable; the enemy will be obliged to fight for an entrance into the Conkan if they preſume to attempt it, which I think they hardly will, as they will then be ſhut up between the two armies; we may conſider the country therefore as ours from the moment our troops take the field, if we are beforehand in this reſpect with the enemy.

26. With an army from hence in the field to prevent the enemy from entering the country on this ſide, it will not be very material whether General Goddard is a little ſooner or later in undertaking the ſiege of Baſſein. Our army in the Conkan will ſecure his unmoleſted march to the ſouthward, he will find a plentiful country to ſupply his army as he comes along, and we hope to meet with little oppoſition in the complete reduction of it with ſo reſpectable force both in numbers and ſituation.

27. The troops will better bear running in arrears while they are kept employed on actual ſervice and ſubſiſted from the country, than they will while they are idle in garriſon, and have no other dependance than their pay; in this reſpect therefore money will be leſs neceſſary to us, though we may feel the want of it in others; but the reputation of ſucceſs, and the near proſpect of bettering our finance, will of themſelves keep up a credit that may prove a reſource which we ſhall hardly obtain by any other means.

28. A further conſideration worthy of attention is this, that the difference of a month earlier in the field may make the difference of a whole year or more in point of revenue, or in the aids of ſubſiſtence to be expected from the country, for if the enemy are able to conſume and deſtroy the produce, it is certain that nothing can be had from it till a new crop comes in; and we may likewiſe reckon as our loſs, the detriment the future revenues muſt ſuffer by the depopulation of the villages.

29. The fall of Baſſein, our indiſputed poſſeſſion of the country and paſſes, and the actual ſtrength of the two armies, will certainly ſpread an alarm at Foonah, that may not improbably be expected to form a criſis, that may be improved to the great work of peace, but will certainly at leaſt ſerve to ſecure the tranquillity of our more diſtant poſſeſſions, as the enemy will hardly venture to ſend their forces from Decan, while they ſee ours aſſembled ſo near the capital.

30. In order to heighten to the utmoſt the impreſſion this ſituation may make on the enemy, and at the ſame time to keep alive the reliance Ragoba has ſtill had on us for aſſiſtance; it might perhaps be worth while to let him try his fortune in the ſouthern parts of the Conkan, between this and Goa, with ſuch forces as he could collect, and backed by a ſmall detachment of ours. He has yet ſome partizans in arms in the country. Monackjee Funera has ſent to me, offering aſſiſtance, and I know that there are now overtures making to Ragoba on this ſubject by the Rajah of Callapore, whoſe country gives an opening into the Decan, on the banks of the Kiſtna, not far from Meritz; Ragoba might then be able to form ſome eſtabliſhment for himſelf, in which, while the war continued, he would be eaſily ſupported by us, engage much of the enemy's attention, and render the work of peace more eaſy than it is at preſent. This, however, is rather thrown out as a hint, that may be purſued at its proper ſeaſon, than as a part of the preſent plan.

31. If inſtead of ſtepping forward in the war, we confine ourſelves merely to maintaining our garriſons in Callian and Bellpore, and waiting there General Goddard's arrival from Surat, we muſt be ſatisfied to ſee the enemy poſſeſſed of the country, as ſoon as ever the ſeaſon will allow them to take the field, and our garriſons inſulted with impunity, and ſtraitened for every neceſſary of life. The enemy will ſupport themſelves by means of the reſources we have failed to avail ourſelves of, and may prepare for General Goddard's march to the ſouthward, by laying waſte the whole country ſo completely, as not to leave a blade of graſs between him and Callian. By like means, in a much leſs diſtance, only 18 miles, Mhadjee Scindia effectually ſtopped General Goddard's progreſs laſt ſeaſon; and in the preſent inſtance we have the more to apprehend from this mode of defence on the enemy's part, as it may go near to ſtarve us on our iſlands; and thus, beſides our own diſtreſs, diſappoint General Goddard in the dependance, he expreſsly ſays he has on us for proviſions, which it will be impoſſible for us to furniſh, unleſs by ſecuring the country, from whence it is produced.

32. If when the enemy is once come down into Conkan, theſe dangers appear ſo preſſing, as to induce us to ſend over our troops to act againſt them, we ſhall find, that for want of ſome little neceſſary preparation they will be landed in ſo crippled a ſtate that they will be unable to act, or but to little effect; much of the miſchief will be already done; and the enemy, who might eaſily have been keep out of the country, being once in it, will render it ſo difficult a matter to ſupply ourſelves, either with the neceſſary cattle for carriage and draft, or with proviſions, as will perhaps put it out of our power, but certainly render it very difficult to expel them; General Goddard indeed may ſtill come down by ſea, and though under manifeſt diſadvantages, he may reduce Baſſein, the acquiſition of which would burthen us with another chargeable garriſon, without enlarging our means of maintaining it; for General Goddard, if he come down by ſea, will have to fit out his army anew for taking the field; and if the enemy are in poſſeſſion of the country, will be as little able to effect it as we ſhall, for an increaſe of our numbers will only prove an increaſe of difficulty. Theſe conſiderations, I think, make it evident that the reduction of Baſſein will be performed with infinitely greater advantage if General Goddard come by land, than in the other mode of bringing down his army by ſea.

33. After ſtating thus at large the reaſons on which I found my recommendation of the above-mentioned meaſures, I ſhall not diſſemble the objections to which they ſeem moſt liable.

34. It may perhaps be thought that at a ſeaſon when we may probably expect to be attacked by an armament from France, we ought not to carry our views beyond our own defence till that danger is paſt. My anſwer to this objection is, that in the firſt place it is probable that our troops cannot take the field in the Conkan before the ſeaſon for an attack on this iſland by the French is paſt; and ſecondly, that this ſcene of action is propoſed to be confined ſo much to our own neighbourhood, that they will always be at hand to return to our aſſiſtance at a few hours warning. From the advices laſt received, we have no reaſon to think the probability of ſuch an attack at all increaſed; but even if it were far greater than any one I ſuppoſe can at preſent think it, I confeſs, no more probability ſeems ſufficient to juſtify us in remaining inactive. Under ſuch circumſtances as we are now in, we have it not in our choice to make peace either with the French or the Marattas, and therefore muſt remain ſubject to the riſk of a joint attack from them; for which very reaſon it ſeems neceſſary that we ſhould exert ourſelves with greater vigour, in order to eſtabliſh our ſuperiority over one, before the arrival of the other. I am by no means inſenſible to the danger we might be expoſed to from an attack by the French while we are engaged with the Marattas. But I think this danger better guarded againſt by puſhing hardily through the difficulties that preſs the moſt nearly on us, than by timid precautions, which provide againſt only one of our fears, and that the moſt remote.

35. An objection of far greater weight than that above-mentioned, in my opinion, is founded on our preſent want of money to carry on a plan of active ſervice into execution. The balance of caſh on the firſt of this month was only about 40,000 rupees; and from that time to the end of October, I ſee no probability of our receiving more than three, or at moſt three lacks and a half. Our ordinary expences for the ſame time cannot be eſtimated at leſs than one lack and a half per month, which, with one lack to be ſent from Tellicherry, one lack for the neceſſary preparation for our troops to take the field according to the above plan, and one more for their unavoidable expences, will bring our charges within the ſame time to nine lacks of rupees — We may flatter ourſelves with the hope of ſupplies from Bengal; but we cannot depend on them, and therefore muſt look for ſuch reſources as are to be had within ourſelves; and in my opinion there never was an occaſion which demanded our moſt ſtrenuous exertion more than the preſent, for we are now ſo critically ſituated, that in the ſtate of our affairs for the enſuing year, and even the fortune of the war, will depend on the forwardneſs in which we may be for action at the very firſt opening of the ſeaſon. Whatever reſources therefore may preſent themſelves after October next, if in the mean time we are unable to find caſh for our neceſſary preparatory expences, they will come too late for our purpoſes; the enemy will be in poſſeſſion of the country before us; we ſhall be obliged to act againſt them under all the diſadvantages of an unfurniſhed army, and experience all the difficulties which their great ſuperiority in cavalry enables them to oppoſe to us; and if at laſt we drive them paſt the mountains, we ſhall have poſſeſſed ourſelves only of a depopulated and exhauſted country that will yield us neither revenue nor ſubſiſtence.

36. In circumſtances of ſuch preſſing neceſſity, and with objects of ſo great magnitude in view, I ſhould not doubt of the propriety of our reſolving on the moſt deſperate remedies, if none others were left. I flatter myſelf however that we have yet one reſource within our power, which will furniſh us with an immediate ſupply of ready money within the time above-mentioned. There is now in our warehouſe copper to the value of about ſeven or eight lacks, which I would propoſe ſhould be peremptorily ſold, to be paid for in ready money within three months, under a penalty of fifteen per cent. in default of payment at the ſtipulated terms. It would be neceſſary likewiſe, that it ſhould be ſold in large lots, not leſs than 1,000 maunds each, in order that the whole might be purchaſed by reſponſible men, who might be depended on for making good their engagements. I think too we ought to make this ſale without delay, as the arrival of ſhips that may now be expected, may reduce the price of our copper much below the price it may now fetch.

37. Notwithſtanding the preſent ſcarcity of money, it is generally believed that there are lodged in this place large ſums of gold and ſilver, which, ſince the troubles in the Maratta empire, ſome of the richeſt Bramins have depoſited here as a place of greater ſecurity than any other they could pitch on, on account of the nature of our Government, and the eſtabliſhed rights of private property among us. Theſe people are not indeed merchants, but copper being conſidered here as a ſort of precious metal, they would I believe exchange the money for it, if they ſaw proſpect of ſufficient advantage in it; we muſt expect therefore that it would ſell low, comparatively to the price we have lately ſold at, on the long credit uſually allowed at our ſales; yet I think we ſhall ſtill get at leaſt a ſaving price for the Company. And I am perſuaded every one who conſiders the ſtate of our affairs with any degree of knowledge or attention, muſt be ſatisfied that a preſent command of money for the purpoſes of the war, is of greater moment than any differenee of price in the ſale of our copper, which can never be put in competition with any one of the objects now in contemplation; excluding the enemy from the Conkan; ſecuring the immediate poſſeſſion of it to the Company, together with the ſubſiſtence of our armies and garriſons; completing our line of territory; bringing the war as near as poſſible to a termination, and relieving our eſtabliſhment from the expence of the Bengal army.

38. I entirely concur with the Governor General and Council, that as much as poſſible of our revenue, and the whole of that ariſing from the new acquired pergunnahs, ſhould be ſet apart for the purpoſes of the war.—Our aid however from this ſervice till after October, will be nothing. From that time till the end of December, I hope we may be able to procure about ſix lacks from Surat and Broach, which will juſt ſerve to ſupport our own indiſpenſable expences. After the commencement of the next year, I flatter myſelf our ſupplies from the northward will be conſiderable enough to render our ſituation ſomewhat eaſy. And ſuppoſing our buſineſs in the Conkan effected, and that we are relieved from the burthen of the Bengal and Madras battalions, I think we ſhall ſee the affairs of the Company on this ſide of India in a fair and proſperous train. Appendix No. 330.

39. As ready money will be abſolutely neceſſary for the payment of the troops of the other Preſidencies before they are ſent home, and the neceſſities of the Governor General and Council ſeem ſo preſſing as to oblige them to turn their views even to us for aſſiſtance, which I cannot think we ſhall be able to furniſh from any funds which we ſhall be in receipt of ſo ſoon as next month; and the whole property of this place being already in a manner inveſted in the Company's bonds, ſo that we cannot expect to be able to procure any further ſums at intereſt here; I think it would be expedient to requeſt of the Governor General and Council to negociate a loan in Calcutta to the amount of ten lacks of rupees on the bonds of this Government, and to ſend us round the amount in ſpecie; with which we ſhould, I think, find ourſelves ſufficiently in caſh to aſſiſt in diſcharging the arrears of the Bengal and Madras troops previous to their departure.

40. The extent and importance of this ſubject has led me into great length. I wiſh therefore, before I quit, to bring my opinion, together with the principal facts and arguments on which they are founded, within one general and comprehenſive view.

41. I think it abſolutely neceſſary to bring this Maratta war to as ſpeedy a concluſion as poſſible; at the ſame time I ſee little preſent hope of peace by means of treaty or negociation: I would wiſh therefore to ſee the war confined ſtrictly to what I conceive ought to be the objects of it, by the attainment of which we may either compel the enemy to peace, or reduce the war on our part to a mere plan of defence, for which the revenue we ſhall be in poſſeſſion of after the reduction of Baſſein and its dependant diſtricts, will amply ſuffice (if we are once relieved from the burden of the Bengal and Madras troops, to the expence of which, added to that of our own eſtabliſhments, much more than the revenue of all the territory we hope to acquire, would prove adequate). The reduction of Baſſein and its dependant diſtricts then I think ſhould be proceeded on, without ſuffering our attention to be diverted from this by any other object. But as the poſſeſſion of Baſſein alone without the country, will only be increaſing our charge at a time when we need every reſource to enable us to ſupport our exertions, I would have our operations ſo planned as to provide at once for the reduction of Baſſein and of the country which we muſt depend on for ſubſiſtence, and thus diſappoint the enemy in the only plan of defence in which they can hope for ſucceſs; for theſe purpoſes it ſeems indiſpenſably neceſſary that we ſhould take our meaſures ſo that our troops may be in the field ſome time before the enemy; and I accordingly propoſe to make ſuch appointments of officers, and ſuch a communication to them of our plan as ſeems neceſſary, in order to prepare for its execution. Senſible of the difficulties we have to ſtruggle with from the low ſtate of our finances, I think it neceſſary to take our meaſures in ſuch a manner as may moſt effectually tend to the relief of our neceſſities; but I do not think thoſe neceſſities, nor the difficulties ariſing from them, any ſufficient reaſon for inaction. If our want of money is now great, it is likely to become much greater, unleſs relieved by our own efforts. If theſe are now difficult to us, they will ſoon be impoſſible, and if they are ſo already, we are then already undone; yet even in this caſe we owe to ourſelves and to our conſtituents to bring this point to the proof, that nothing may remain unattempted that hereafter may be thought likely to have afforded a remedy. I am far however from thinking our affairs ſo deſperate, and have propoſed ſuch meaſures as to me ſeem likelieſt to put our affairs in a proſperous train, together with my reaſon for what I propoſe the Committee

mittee will judge both of one and the other, and likewiſe conſider whether there is any other plan more ſuitable to all the circumſtances of our preſent ſituation. If the Committee concur with me, I think we cannot be too early in communicating our meaſure to General Goddard and to the Governor General and Council, who though "unable to make adequate remittances both for the ſup-"port of this Preſidency and the pay of the army under "the command of General Goddard," we may be confident will not neglect to provide for their own troops at leaſt, at a time when we are ſtraining every nerve to bring the war to ſuch a period as will relieve them not only from their preſent heavy charges on this ſide of India, but from all other in time to come.

1ſt Auguſt 1780. (Signed) William Hornby.

(A true copy.)
(Signed) Edwd Ravenſcroft, Secry.

Copy of a Letter from General Goddard; dated at Surat the 6th Auguſt 1780, and received the 14th following.

Gentlemen,

I have the pleaſure to acknowledge your letter of the 3d inſtant. I am ſorry at the neceſſity which you have informed me has induced you to appropriate the two lacks of rupees ſent round from Bengal on the Besborough, to the payment of the arrears due to the detachment furniſhed by your Preſidency, becauſe it is a proof that your own wants are exceedingly preſſing, and diſappoint every expectation I might have formed of relief and aſſiſtance from you in diſcharging a part of the expences of the late campaign. I could not indeed build any thing on this hope, from the frequent deſcriptions you had given me of the low ſtate of your finances, nor did I think it the leſs incumbent on me to provide an adequate fund to the payment of the arrears due whenever it might be in my power, and for that purpoſe I meant to have taken the firſt opportunity of remitting a ſum of money to Bombay, which can always be done without any loſs, and generally with ſome advantage of exchange.

Reſpecting what you mention of Colonel Hartley and the paymaſter, being unable to inform you of any proviſion having been made for the payment of your troops by me, it is not at all ſurpriſing, as I was myſelf at that time unacquainted with the extent of the reſources it might afterwards be in my power to command, and of courſe could not ſpeak with any certainty either to the amount of the ſum itſelf, or to the time when it might be allowed me to furniſh it. Upon the march of your detachment, low as my finances were, I thought it neceſſary to make every poſſible exertion, and advanced what could be then ill afforded from the general ſtock, Rs 1,10,000. I at the ſame time told Colonel Hartley I ſhould take the firſt opportunity of remitting whatever ſum might be requiſite to clear off the arrears; which I meant to do when an application might be made ſtating their amount, and the improved ſtate of the treaſury put it in my power.

The Paymaſter, in his eſtimate given you, has generally ſaid it will require upwards of three lacks to pay off the arrears; of this ſum he has already received from you two lacks, and the Paymaſter of the Bengal detachment has by my orders diſcharged bills on his account to the amount of near Rs 1,40,000. This ſum exceeds Mr. Lewis's ſtatement; but as he has never delivered in any accounts of his office from the firſt formation of Colonel Hartley's detachment, I am at a loſs to know whether he confines his eſtimate to the arrears of the troops actually returned to the Preſidency, or extends to every expence of thoſe troops while in the field. I am therefore induced to beg you will be pleaſed to call upon Mr. Lewis for an account of the expenditure of ſuch ſums as he has already received, and direct him to tranſmit me the regular accounts of his diſburſements to the lateſt period poſſible, by which the balance due, if any, may be exactly aſcertained previous to my compliance with the application you ſay you have have left him to make to me for what further ſum may be wanting.

Although the Honourable Governor General and Council will moſt probably have themſelves tranſmitted you their ſentiments upon the exchange of territory in the late treaty with Futty Sing, as it may not have reached you I beg to tranſcribe extract of their letter to me on that ſubject.

"We have received from the Preſident and Select "Committee of Bombay, a copy of your correſpondence "with them to the 24th February.

"It appears by their laſt letter in this correſpondence, "that in the late treaty with Futty Sing, you have ceded "to him diſtricts which they eſtimate at the annual re-"venue of 27 lacks of rupees, but that in return there "was only yielded the Company the poſſeſſion of a country "eſtimated at 10,62,000 rupees, by which a difference of "16,37,100 Rs ariſes, which appears to be an entire loſs "to the Company: we are only able to account for this ex-"change, which has occaſioned ſuch a diminution of the "original value of our portion of the province of Guzerat, "by ſuppoſing that your knowledge of the character of "Futty Sing might ſuggeſt to you the expediency of hav-"ing ſome check over him, that the fort and diſtrict of "Dubhoy from its contiguity to Brodera, might appear "to you a deſirable poſſeſſion for the Company on this "account; but uninformed as we are of the other cir-"cumſtances on which the comparative advantage of the "diſtricts may depend, it ſeems to us that, excluſively of "the difference, the exchange made muſt rather prove "diſadvantageous to the Company: as we gain for lands "lying at a diſtance, and rendered in a degree inacceſſible "to the Marattas, by the interpoſition of capital rivers, "a diſtrict immediately bordering upon theirs, and at all "times open to their incurſions.

"This conſideration, we believe, did not occur to "you; but as it appears to us deſerving of your atten-"tion, we deſire that you will reconſider the part of the "treaty with Futty Sing to which it belongs, and avail "yourſelf of any advice reſpecting it, which you may "receive from the Preſident and Select Committee of "Bombay, whom we have requeſted to aſſiſt you with it.

"Such being our opinion of the exchange of the land "ſtipulated in the treaty, we think proper to direct,

"1ſt. That you either require the conſent of Futty "Sing to annul this exchange, and to give the poſſeſſion "of the diſtricts which formerly appertained to the "Peiſhwa on the north of the river Myhie, and which "were ceded to him by you, and to receive back the "diſtricts of Zinnore and Dubhoy, originally the Gui-"cawar ſhare on the ſouth of the Tappey, which were "ceded to him by you in like manner:

"Or, ſecondly, allowing the exchange to continue, to "aſſign and to deliver over to the Company poſſeſſion of "an additional portion of land, yielding a revenue equal "to the difference produced by that exchange, in the "manner preſcribed to you by the Preſident and Select "Committee of Bombay, in their letter to you of the "24th February:

"Or, thirdly, to enter into a ſpecial engagement for "a ſubſidy payable in ready money equal to that "amount

"The treaty has been tranſmitted to us by the Pre-"ſident and Select Committee of Bombay for our ratifi-"cation, and we ſhall return it to them in a few days, "properly confirmed; but guarding it with a reſer-"vation, providing a new and equitable ſettlement of "the province of Guzerat, according to the 5th article."

You will perceive by it the information on which they ground their objections to the preſent partition and alteration they have propoſed, contained in your letter of the 24th February, to which period only they had received a copy of our correſpondence from you. I have therefore thought it neceſſary to ſend them an extract of my anſwer to you of the 7th March upon the ſame ſubject.

Since writing this letter, I have made every minute inquiry into the amount of the peiſhwa or revenue north of the Myhie, and have reaſon to be convinced, from the particular information I have received, and a compariſon of the ſeveral accounts I have been able to obtain, that the ſtatement you tranſmitted was greatly exaggerated, as indeed you acknowledged yourſelves you could not depend on its accuracy; that the corrections I offered in my former letter relative to the valuation of Amedabad Pitlad, and the article of Muluchgary, was juſt and well founded upon real and indiſputable facts, and that upon the whole, the exchange of lands was not only fair and equitable, but attended from concurring circumſtances with particular advantages to the Company. The ſuppoſed revenue of Muluchgurry is too variable and precarious to be a deſirable object of any Government, except one like that of the Marattas, which is founded upon violent meaſures and rapine. Even the ſmall ſum collected from that ſource, which I will venture to ſay, has not for the laſt ten years exceeded two lacks annually, requires a conſiderable force to collect it, and beyond that, as no means but compulſion, and the full exertion of that claim which the ſtrong may be ſaid to poſſeſs over the weak, could be uſed with any proſpect of advantage (the Rajahs and independent Zemindars not acknowledging any ſubjection) every increaſe of revenue from that quarter muſt depend upon, and will be in proportion to the numbers and ſucceſs of the troops employed to enforce it. A juſt and equitable diviſion of country between the Engliſh and Futty Sing, proportioned to the value of the diſtricts before poſſeſſed by the latter and the Poonah Government, being the avowed intention and expreſs object of the treaty, I have aſſured the Honourable Governor General and Council, that I ſhall cheerfully and zealouſly co-operate with you in every meaſure that may be found requiſite after a minute and cloſe inveſtigation to effect that end, towards which I have myſelf thought it improper and impolitic to take any immediate ſtep, and ſhall therefore be happy to receive your further ſentiments upon a ſubject of ſo great importance.

Reſpecting the opinion paſſed by the Honourable Governor General and Council, of the local advantages, excluſive of the conſiderations ſuſtained by the Company in the exchange of territory, I beg leave to tranſcribe for your peruſal the ſentiments I have expreſſed to them on that ſubject, and do not doubt, from the opportunity you poſſeſs of obſerving the ſtate of the country, and your knowledge of the juſt grounds upon which I have founded my remarks, but that the opinion I have given will meet with your concurrence.

" This meaſure was conformable to the plan propoſed " and recommended to me by the Preſident and Select " Committee of Bombay. And I muſt confeſs, for " many reaſons it then did and ſtill does appear to me " the moſt advantageous mode of partition that could " be adopted.

" If the lands to the northward of the Myhie are further removed from the main power of the Marattas " than thoſe we gain, and rendered difficult of acceſs by " the interpoſition of three capital rivers, they are alſo " ſeparated, and in a manner unconnected with the " Company's former poſſeſſions, and in caſe of an attack " the ſame obſtructions of river, together with the diſtance, would unite to prevent our being able to furniſh " the neceſſary aſſiſtance to their defence, except at an " increaſed expence, and at an extreme hazard and inconvenience, as all the country we do hold to the " ſouthward would in ſuch caſe be left entirely expoſed " to the inſults and inroads of the enemy; beſides, the " entrance into the northern diſtricts, is, at the ſeaſon " for military operations, always open to the Marattas by " the province of Malwa; and whenever they have " means to make an attack upon Guzerat, it has always " been by beginning their efforts to the northward." Appendix. No. 330.

The Governor General and Council having further informed me that they have ſignified to you their deſire of appropriating every exceſs of revenue which may immediately ariſe to the Company from the operations and ſucceſs of the army under my command, and excluſively to the ſupport of that expence, I take the liberty of requeſting that you will be pleaſed to give the neceſſary orders to your Chiefs at Surat and Broach for that effect. The low ſtate of my treaſury, and no other ſource of recruiting it now offering, but by drawing bills upon the Government of Bengal at a conſiderable loſs, and even that but temporary and precarious, I hope you will approve of the propoſals I beg leave to make, that inſtructions may be given to the gentlemen at both theſe ſtations, whenever the ſum collected may amount to one lack, to pay it into my hands.

Copy of a Letter from the Select Committee to General Goddard.

Sir,

The ſeaſon for action now approaching, the Preſident has laid before us a ſtatement of the preſent ſituation of affairs, relative to the Maratta war, and his ſentiments in reſpect to the operations of the enſuing campaign, with a general plan of meaſures moſt ſuitable to the circumſtances in which we now are.

We loſe no time in tranſmitting to you an abſtract of the Preſident's minute on thoſe points which are requiſite for your immediate information, and in adviſing you of the meaſures which appear to us moſt expedient to be purſued at this juncture.

The Preſident's ſtatement of our preſent difficulties is juſt in every particular, and we entirely concur with him in the neceſſity of the moſt vigorous exertions on our part for averting the further diſtreſs we ſhould be expoſed to by inactivity, and for bringing the Maratta war to as ſpeedy a concluſion as poſſible; nor can we indulge any hopes of effecting either of thoſe, or of improving our ſituation, but by the timely execution of the meaſures he has propoſed, and ſtrictly confining our attention and efforts to the objects already defined and explained to you as the boundaries of our views in regard to the acquiſition of territory for the Preſidency.

The plan of operations propoſed for the enſuing campaign appears calculated with every probability of ſucceſs to anſwer theſe important ends, and to be concerted with all poſſible attention to our preſent circumſtances and means of execution; and we have accordingly determined to ſend an army into the Conkan as early as the ſeaſon will poſſibly permit, under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Hartley, to anticipate the enemy in ſecuring poſſeſſion of the country and paſſes into the Decan, whilſt the army under your command moves down to the ſiege of Baſſein, when our forces may be employed in covering the ſiege, or as occaſion may require. The advantages of this plan are ſo obvious, and ſo clearly explained in the Preſident's minute, that we ſhall not repeat them here; and ſhall only obſerve, that we ſee no other poſſible method of ſecuring ſubſiſtence for the army, for which you have acquainted us you ſhall entirely depend on us.

It will be eſſential to the complete execution of the plan for ſecuring the country before it is ravaged and deſtroyed by the enemy, that the Bengal army ſhould move down by land to the ſiege of Baſſein, and we think more eligible in every other reſpect than tranſporting it by ſea; not only by the ſaving of much time and expence; but as it will tend to diſtract and impreſs the enemy with an opinion of our ſtrength, excluſive of the argument that may be drawn in ſupport of our opinion from the averſion the Bengal Sepoys entertain for the ſea, the chance of accidents, and the diſguſts they may conceive to the ſervice, if embarked contrary to their intentions. What is urged on this head we doubt not will fully convince you, that the reduction of Baſſein will be performed with infinitely greater advantage, as well as other very important points provided for more effectually, if the army is moved down by land, rather than in the other mode of tranſporting it by ſea: and we truſt, that when you have attentively conſidered the reaſons on which our opinion is grounded, any further recommendation will be needleſs to induce you to adopt the meaſure of marching the army by land to the ſiege of Baſſein.

We cannot point out the exact time for your commencing the ſiege, as that will depend on the weather, but according to the uſual courſe of the ſeaſons, we imagine you will be able to put the army in motion the 1ſt of October. We however recommend to you to commence your march as ſoon as you ſhall judge it practicable, and the rains ſufficiently abated to permit the paſſage of the rivers; whilſt, as already mentioned, we ſhall exert our utmoſt endeavour to preſerve the country in a condition to afford the neceſſary ſupplies to the army during the march and the continuance of the campaign in this quarter.

We ſhall furniſh the artillery ſtores and ammunition requiſite for the ſiege agreeable to your deſire, and lodge them at Danavie, where they will be in readineſs for ſervice immediately on your arrival, and we ſhall provide veſſels for tranſporting them to the place where they are to be landed, and for keeping your communication open to ſea.

We underſtand there is now a large force in Baſſein, ſaid to conſiſt of 8 or 10,000 men; and as the enemy muſt for ſome time have expected our attack, we conclude they are not unprepared for the event. You will no doubt ſee the importance of making an effectual diſpoſition for the protection of Guzerat during your abſence to the ſouthward. So principal a part of your reſources depending on the receipt from the late acquiſitions, to enable you more ſufficiently to provide for their defence, we now ſend directions to the Chiefs of Surat and Broach to afford you ſuch reinforcements from the garriſon as can be ſpared, if you ſhould judge ſuch aſſiſtance neceſſary, and make a requiſition to them on that head.

The Governor General and Council have in a late letter given their ſentiments on the exchange of territory made with Futty Sing according to the late treaty, and recommended other modes of partition which are particularized in the Governor's minute, as well as the objections that lay againſt thoſe modes; but circumſtanced as matters now are, we are perſuaded you will agree with us in opinion, that it will be more expedient for the preſent to avoid a ſubject that may give diſſatisfaction and raiſe doubt in Futty Sing, and to wave any further diſcuſſion of the matter till a more convenient ſeaſon.

Our diſtreſs for money is ſo very great, that we ſhall find the utmoſt difficulty in furniſhing the neceſſary ſum, even for the ſlender equipments of the body of forces to be ſent into the Conkan, a ſervice on which ſo much depends; and at a time when our own neceſſities preſs ſo hard upon us, our embarraſſment is doubly increaſed by the intimation we have received from the Governor General and Council, that their own diſtreſs will put it out of their power to make adequate remittances for the ſupport of this Preſidency, and the pay of the large army under your command; on which account they deſire that every acceſſion of revenue which may ariſe to the Company from the ſucceſs of that army, may be ſet aſide, and appropriated excluſively to that expence: we ſhall not, however, renounce our reliance on more effectual ſupport from Bengal, when the Governor General and Council have received our late repreſentations, and are informed of the levies made with your advice for the defence of our new poſſeſſions, for which it was neceſſary we ſhould make proviſion, as their defence muſt in the end devolve on us: but when they ſee the vigorous exertion we are making to bring the war to an advantageous criſis, we confidently hope they will ſtrain their extenſive reſources to ſecond our endeavours, or at leaſt that they will provide for the payment of the Bengal army, and make this excluſive appropriation unneceſſary as it is impoſſible. In the mean time, the revenue ariſing from the new acquiſitions ſhall be ſet apart for the general purpoſes of the war; and we ſhall be very ready to afford you, out of this or any other reſource, ſuch ſums as we can poſſibly ſpare from our own occaſions, to aſſiſt in defraying the charges of the forces under your command.

We have received your letter of the 8th ultimo.

The information you before gave us on the ſubject of Mr. Vaande Graaf's correſpondence with the Poonah Miniſter, has been already tranſmitted to the Governor General and Council, and will be followed by your letter above mentioned; when, if they ſhould judge it proper to take public notice of his conduct, we ſhall have ſufficient time to make a repreſentation to the Dutch Governor General before any opportunity will offer for Batavia.

Secret Department. Thurſday.

The following letter having been received from Bombay ſince the laſt meeting of the Board, it and its encloſures were circulated on the 20th inſtant, for the peruſal of the members of the Board.

Gentlemen,

We encloſe duplicate of our letters of the 14th and 17th ultimo, and of the ſeveral papers forwarded with thoſe letters. Bombay, 10th September.

General Goddard arrived here ſoon after to conſult with us on ſome points previous to the commencement of operations, which being adjuſted, he only waits for more favourable weather to embark again for Surat, in order to ſettle the neceſſary arrangements for the defence of the northern provinces during his abſence, and to march down the troops to be employed in the ſiege of Baſſein.

We tranſmit with the other papers, a copy of the letter he delivered after his arrival, and of our reply, which contain every thing material that has been determined; and by the latter you will obſerve the meaſures we have taken for aſſiſting General Goddard to defray the expences of the army.

We ſend by the Nancy ketch a box of army accounts, recommended to our care by General Goddard, and for which a receipt is encloſed.

Having lately received an extraordinary letter from the Governor General at Goa, we think it proper to tranſmit a copy thereof for your notice, as we ſhall hereafter of our reply.

We beg leave to notice to you that whatever advices you may have occaſion to forward to this Preſidency before the end of February, will be conveyed to us

us with more expedition and ſafety by the way of Anjengo than by any other route.

Ordered, That the box of army accounts accompanying the above diſpatch be ſent to the Accountant General.

Ordered, That the enclofures in the above letter from Bombay be entered after the conſultation.

ENCLOSURES.

Copy Tranſlation of a Letter from the Captain General at Goa to the Governor and Council at Bombay.

Honourable Sir, and Sirs,

It being true and inconteſtable that the crown of Portugal for many lawful cauſes, ſince allowed as rights, made the conqueſt of the Eaſt Indies:

That the fortreſs of Baſſein and Tannah, with all the other forts, countries, and juriſdictions, from Choul up to Dumaun, and in poſſeſſion of the ſame crown and its State of India for the ſpace of two hundred years:

That notwithſtanding, that the Marattas forty years paſt, without juſt cauſe, invaded and by violence ſeized ſome forts and lands of the State, which they held in the northern province, detaining them by force of arms:

It is nevertheleſs indubitable that the crown of Portugal loſt not the ſovereignty and rights which it had and has in all the ſaid forts, lands, and countries relating thereto, notwithſtanding it is deprived of the poſſeſſion thereof agreeable to the true and inconteſtable law of rights. The ſovereignty is always preſerved whilſt the crown reſerves to itſelf the right of reverſion, and never diveſts itſelf of intentions of reannexing them, nor has it omitted to uſe every means poſſible to incorporate them again with its dominions. It waited only for a fortunate conjuncture, ſuch as now offered, when the interior diviſions and civil wars of the Marattas had divided the ſupreme authority into two parties, and the ſubaltern Powers into as many heads and chiefs as there are officers and governors of forts, and from this ſituation, the crown thought to have got poſſeſſion thereof through the channel of negociation.

The State has for years kept an emiſſary at Poonah, charged with the public buſineſs, and more eſpecially with the claim of reſtitution of the forts, villages, and other lands of its ancient juriſdiction; it was in part concluded on, and orders given for paſſing the Sunnuds for the delivery of ſundry lands.

In the reſtoration of the above forts and countries, the crown of Portugal has claim in a preference to all ſovereigns, eſpecially to that of the crown of England, founded on ſpecial right, for by the articles of peace and treaty of marriage of her Serene Highneſs Donna Catharina, Infanta of Portugal, with Charles the Second King of England, and from the declarations wherewith the delivery of the iſland of Bombay adjacent to the province of the north was made, having been given in dowry with ſaid Donna Catharina; it is expreſsly declared, that the crown of Britain at no time whatever ſhall impede the juriſdiction of the other iſlands of Baſſein and other countries, nor deprive the State of India of the commerce and liberty which they have in them, and that the Engliſh never ſhall claim in the Portugueze juriſdiction more than what was ceded to them by the ſaid marriage treaty, as fully appears from the conditions under which was delivered to them the ſaid iſland, inſerted in the act of poſſeſſion received from them under date 18th February 1665.

By this ſame ſolemn convention entered into by the two crowns, that of Portugal has a clear right to be aſſiſted by the Engliſh at any ſuch time as they deſigned to regain the province of the north; for in the ſaid treaty of peace the King of England obliges himſelf to ſuccour that of Portugal on all occaſions which require it, as is declared in the royal orders of the 9th April 1662, whereby we are ordered to deliver the iſland of Bombay, as follows:

"By the other articles of this treaty you (Vice Roy of India) will be informed of the union we celebrate, and of the obligations that the King of England is under to aſſiſt us in all urgent occaſions that may ariſe and require it; if the ſituation you are in makes it neceſſary to avail of the Engliſh aſſiſtance, you will do it."

From whence may with evident certainty be inferred, that the Engliſh ought to ſuccour the State in the difficult enterprize of regaining the north, and that by no one title can they pretend to aſſume to themſelves the ſovereignty of theſe countries without breach of the laws of nature and of nations of the treaty of peace, and of the faith and ancient friendſhip which always ſubſiſted between the two crowns.

But the contrary has taken place, from the public and conſtant information received, that your Excellency and your noble Council have planned and undertaken an expedition, and have taken the field with a moſt numerous army, under the ſpecious pretext of aſſiſting Ragoba, and with him at the head, have blockaded and poſſeſſed themſelves of the fortreſs of Parnel, and propoſe extending their conqueſts to the forts of Baſſein, Choul, and other places of the ancient juriſdiction of Damaun, garriſoning the forts conquered with troops, and recovering the revenue and cuſtoms dependent thereon.

This intelligence is very afflicting to me, and I am convinced that your Excellency and the other gentlemen of your noble Council, when you met to reſolve thereon, were guided more by the Aſiatic intereſts of the Britiſh nation, than by regard to that public faith that ought to be obſerved in promiſes authorized by ſolemn treaties: and for the conſervation of the royal dominion, the crown of her moſt faithful Majeſty has in thoſe forts, lands, and diſtricts of the province of the north, I require of your Excellency, Honourable Governor, and the other gentlemen of your noble Council of Bombay, that you deſiſt from an undertaking ſo foreign to the intentions of his Britannic Majeſty, and ſo injurious to the good faith of the Engliſh nation, friend and ally of the crown of Portugal.

In caſe your Excellency and the other gentlemen of your noble Council do not comply with my demand, I hereby make a moſt formal proteſt, not only to preſerve to the crown of Portugal its ſovereignty in all the forts, diſtricts, and lands of the province of the north, which it has no intent to give up, nor to depart from its royal right in all the countries of the ſaid province, but to have and repoſſeſs them on a fit opportunity with all loſſes and damages ſuſtained.

I proteſt likewiſe againſt your Excellency, Honourable Governor, and the other gentlemen of your noble Council, as violaters of the public peace of the two nations, in a manner ſo inconſiſtent with, and ſo oppoſite to the defenſive alliance ſubſiſting between her moſt faithful Majeſty my miſtreſs and his Britannic Majeſty.

I likewiſe alſo proteſt for all the prejudice ſuſtained by the State of Portugueze India; and I beg you to reflect on the loſſes your Excellency and the other gentlemen of your noble Council are cauſing to ſaid State, and of which I ſhall quickly adviſe and inform her moſt faithful Majeſty: to the end that ſhe may indemnify herſelf for the ſame, as to her ſeems beſt, out of the great and important pledges that the crown and nation of Great Britain has in her kingdoms; far more conſiderable than the prejudices that your Excellency, and the other gentlemen of your noble Council, have created and intend to create, without reflecting on the danger to which you expoſe all thoſe intereſts which you derive from your alliance with Portugal.

Your Excellency, and the other gentlemen of your noble Council, ſhould reflect that on this conduct you are

are ſubjecting your bank in Europe to the riſk of loſing the many millions which it draws from Portugal for the ſupport of its public credit—That you are likewiſe ſubjecting your nation to the loſs of its trade in Portugal and Algarve, ſhould her moſt faithful Majeſty once determine to retaliate upon the Engliſh in Europe, the loſſes which reſult to her in Aſia from the preſent projected conqueſts.

Laſtly, I cannot diſpenſe with acquainting her moſt faithful Majeſty of what I have above obſerved from the full belief that the King and the whole Britiſh nation will deem your Excellency and the other gentlemen of your noble Council, reſponſible for every conſequence reſulting on this account.

God preſerve, &c. &c.

Copy of a Letter from Brigadier General Goddard to the Select Committee at Bombay, dated 10th Auguſt 1780.

Gentlemen,

I had the pleaſure of addreſſing you the 4th inſtant, which has been diſpatched by the Hart and boat, and will I truſt reach you ſafe.

I have nothing new or material to communicate to you relative to the deſigns or ſituation of the Maratta leaders, further than the report of the great preparations making at Poonah by the Miniſter, and the repetition of the ſtory of laſt year, that he is to be aided with powerful foreign allies in the operation of next ſeaſon againſt us.

This expectation will, it is probable, prove as fallacious and ill-founded as the former, but there is reaſon to believe, from the ſilence he has obſerved, having hitherto made no overture or attempt towards an accommodation whatever, that he is meditating ſome effort of importance; and that he is buoyed up with hopes from ſome quarter not yet fully diſcovered by us, of retrieving the loſſes of the laſt by the ſuperiority he expects to obtain in the enſuing campaign.

I am from theſe conſiderations induced to be moſt earneſt in my wiſh, of ſeizing the firſt poſſible opportunity to commence the operations of the war by attacking Baſſein. The rainy ſeaſon is now approaching to a concluſion, at leaſt the violent and ſtormy months, which from obſtructing the navigations would have proved the greateſt obſtacle to that enterprize, are now paſt.

I cannot help being of opinion, that by a vigorous and unexpected effort we may anticipate the hoſtile preparations of our enemies, and have accompliſhed that ſervice before they are in a condition to act in any effectual manner againſt us in that or any other quarter. Your ſuperior information and knowledge of the ſituation of Baſſein will enable you to judge how ſoon any operations againſt the place will be practicable; but in this point of ſo great and real importance to the ſucceſs of the preſent conteſt, I muſt venture to offer it as my opinion, that conſiderations of the difficulties we may expect to encounter in the attempt ought to give way whenever circumſtances are ſuch as to preſent any reaſonable proſpect of ſucceſs.

Upon this principle I beg leave to conſult, and to requeſt you will communicate to me your ſentiments and inſtructions upon the following points.

As I am exceedingly deſirous, and think it eſſential to the conduct of the enſuing ſervice to have an opportunity of perſonally concerting with you the plan of its operations, previous to their commencement, I ſhall, whenever the ſeaſon permits, ſet out for Bombay, and this I hope will be during the preſent month, as the veſſels for the Surat ſtation are expected ſhortly to arrive.

The troops which can be ſupplied from this place without expoſing in any ſhape your poſſeſſions in this quarter, and which I would recommend as neceſſary to be employed againſt Baſſein, are the Madras European artillery and infantry, and battalion of Sepoys. The difficulty of the roads from the deep and rapid rivers, and the country being ſo much overflowed, will not for ſome time admit of marching any of the Bengal troops along the coaſt, but I propoſe tranſporting a ſtrong detachment of them by water, conſiſting of a force at leaſt equal to two battalions.

Theſe circumſtances I think it neceſſary thus early to ſubmit to your conſideration, that the requiſite veſſels may be ſent up for their tranſportation as ſoon as poſſible.

The force you can furniſh from Bombay, with the Madras detachment, and a numerous artillery, would I conceive amply ſuffice for the reduction of Baſſein; but I have reſolved upon the further reinforcement of the Bengal Sepoys, from an idea it is probable the principal ſcene of the war will be transferred to your neighbourhood, and that a reſpectable force will become requiſite in that quarter to ſecure the Gauts, and to carry on ſuch further operations againſt the enemy as circumſtances ſhall render practicable and eligible.

With reſpect to the neceſſary train of artillery and ordnance ſtores, I ſuppoſe it will be in your power to make every proper and ample proviſion of them at Bombay: I would however propoſe, if it meets with your approbation, to carry with me the four eighteen pounders employed at the ſiege of Ahmedabad, as I have had an opportunity of trying and proving their utility and excellence, and think they may be employed to great good purpoſe on the approaching ſervice. In order that nothing may be wanting for carrying into immediate and effectual execution the propoſed attack, I have alſo ordered to be prepared under my own inſpection many materials for the uſe of the Engineer's department at the ſiege, ſo that no obſtruction can ariſe to the inſtant commencement of operations, from any delay in putting them in readineſs. For the tranſportation of theſe and ſuch other ſtores as you may think requiſite to be conveyed from this place, the Chief of Surat will eaſily ſupply the neceſſary boats whenever you ſhall be pleaſed to give him your inſtructions for that purpoſe.

The next and moſt material point to be adjuſted, is the place for the troops from the northward to land, and as your knowledge of the ſituation of Baſſein and the country round it, puts it in your power to judge of the moſt eligible and convenient ſpot for that purpoſe, I ſhall be entirely guided in that particular by your advice and determination; it will ſave a good deal of time and prevent delays, which muſt neceſſarily ariſe by diſembarking at Salſette, and afterwards croſſing over to the continent, if the troops and ſtores from your Preſidency could effect a junction with me off Terrapore, in which caſe the whole might be landed immediately to the northward of Baſſein on the ſouthern ſhore of a river, which I underſtand empties itſelf into the ſea about ten or twelve miles from Baſſein. But of the propriety of this plan, the ſuperior informarion you have of the ſituation of the country will enable you to form the beſt judgment; and I beg to repeat that I ſhall act conformable to ſuch mode as you may chuſe to recommend.

I diſpatch this letter expreſs by Hircarrahs, whom I have promiſed to reward if they uſe expedition, and I hope to receive your anſwer in order that I may make the neceſſary arrangements previous to my departure.

Should I find it expedient to ſet out before your anſwer arrives, I ſhall take ſuch meaſures with Mr. Boddam, your Chief at Surat, and leave ſuch inſtructions with the officer in command of the troops, as may effectually prevent any impediment or delay to the immediate execution of your orders and intentions relative to this ſervice.

I have the honour to be, &c.

Surat, Auguſt 10th 1780. (Signed) Thomas Goddard.

Copy of a Letter from General Goddard, dated at Bombay the 24th Auguſt 1780.

Gentlemen,

I have the honour to reply to your letter of the 6th Auguſt, encloſing abſtract of the Honourable Preſident's ſtatement of the preſent poſture of affairs, and cannot find words expreſſive of the ſatisfaction I have received from the clear and ample information it gives of their ſituation and proſpect, as well as the general propriety of the plan he has recommended for the operations of the enſuing campaign, which appears to me formed with a due regard to preſent circumſtances, and to provide for every future probable occurrence as far as the extent of human foreſight and wiſdom can poſſibly reach. I ſhall however venture to trouble you with a few remarks on this important ſubject, in which the very ample and minute detail entered into by the Preſident, will greatly relieve me from the neceſſity I might otherwiſe be under of commenting more at large on the meaſures proper to be adopted at this ſo critical a period, and on which the future good or bad fortune of our preſent conteſt with the Maratta State ſeems entirely to depend.

I beg leave to call your attention to the ſentiments contained in an addreſs I had the honour to deliver in to this Committee laſt November, which the event has ſince proved to have been juſtly founded, and of which the Honourable Preſident in his minute ſeems now ſo fully ſenſible.

The diſappointment I met with in my endeavours to negociate a peace, and the unreaſonable, I may add, inſolent demands made by the Poonah Miniſter, preſented obſtacles to its attainment, which I was convinced at that time were inſurmountable; and furniſhed me with arguments for urging the immediate proſecution of active and vigorous meaſures, as the only means by which we could ever hope to recover the Company's affairs on this ſide of India from the embarraſſment they were then under, or obtain terms of advantage or honour in any future accommodation.

To the objection of expence which the low ſtate of our finances would ill enable us to ſupport, and towards which you declared your inability of affording an adequate, or indeed any ſupply, I ventured to make uſe of the ſame reaſoning which the Preſident now urges in ſo clear and pointed a manner, and ſuggeſted the neceſſity of an immediate commencement of hoſtilities, to enable us to provide a fund for the future maintenance of our armies, which while they remained inactive, exceeded our abilities to ſupport; and being ſubſiſted at an expence little inferior to what they would require on active ſervice, could only tend to exhauſt the reſources we were poſſeſſed of, and deprive us even of the power of defence when the period ſhould arrive in which we might be called upon to ſtrain every nerve and ſinew of war againſt an elated and preſumptuous enemy.

You, gentlemen, were convinced by the propriety and force of the arguments; and I am happy that it is in my power at this day to congratulate you on the ſucceſs which I have been enabled, by your vigorous exertions and timely aſſiſtance, to obtain hitherto in the proſecution of the meaſures formerly reſolved upon in concert with you.

The Honourable Preſident has founded his plan for the operations of the enſuing campaign upon the baſis of that mutually agreed on laſt year, and which the Honourable Governor General and Council have been pleaſed to ſignify their approbation of, as beſt calculated to promote the intereſts of the Company, and produce that great and deſirable object to which their inclinations have been always ſo ſtrongly and manifeſtly directed, an advantageous and honourable peace.

The poſſeſſion of Baſſein, which only remains to complete your views of territorial acquiſition, and the command of the paſſes leading to and from the Decan, which will be requiſite to give value and ſecurity to thoſe poſſeſſions, are from conſiderations of immediate benefit, as well as the future deciſive and favourable conſequences to be expected from them, the principal objects of our preſent purſuit and attainment. Appendix No. 330.

In a letter which I had the honour of addreſſing you from Surat, previous to the receipt of yours, encloſing the Preſident's minute, I propoſed the immediate embarkation of the troops from thence, in order to undertake the ſiege of Baſſein. My reaſon for this I gave you at the ſame time, which was founded upon the ſtriking advantage we ſhould derive by poſſeſſing ourſelves of that fortreſs previous to the poſſibility of any army's being aſſembled to oppoſe us, and the command that ſtrong hold would inevitably give us of the whole country below the ghauts. Nothing would then remain to be done but to ſecure the paſſes leading into the Decan; which ſervice, after leaving a ſufficient garriſon in Baſſein, we might have effected with our whole united force, or at leaſt ſuch conſiderable body as might have given us an aſſured ſuperiority over the numerous troops which the Miniſter will certainly collect to oppoſe us whenever our forces ſhall begin to be in motion.

The idea of anticipation, by the plan you have adopted of ſending Lieutenant Colonel Hartley with the forces of your Preſidency to ſecure the ghauts, is now ſufficiently deſtroyed, becauſe a commencement of hoſtilities on our part will be a ſignal to the Maratta Government to aſſemble their forces from all quarters; and as they have, during the preſent inactive ſeaſon, diſcovered no inclination for peace, I muſt conceive, that ſenſible of our hoſtile deſigns, they are in a ready and prepared ſtate to reſiſt them; and it is not even improbable that if the alarm is given by any early movement of our troops, they will march ſo large an army into the Conkan, and with ſuch expedition as to demand the attention of our whole force; and retard at leaſt, if not entirely fruſtrate, the preſent accompliſhment of our views againſt Baſſein. The Honourable Preſident however has not fixed the preciſe time for entering upon action, which he ſays, muſt depend on the ſeaſon: and I would alſo propoſe, that your further determination on this point ſhould be made with a particular attention to the period when it will be practicable to move the troops from Surat, which you obſerve, according to the uſual courſe of the ſeaſon, cannot be before the 1ſt of October.

Upon the plan of operations you have adopted, I entirely concur with you in the expediency of marching the troops down by land; and as they are in a ſtate of complete preparation, I ſhall readily embrace the inſtant occaſion of the roads being in any degree paſſable to put them in motion.

In my laſt letter to you from Surat, I took occaſion to declare my opinion, that whenever we ſhould begin our operations againſt Baſſein, the principal efforts of the enemy, would be directed to that quarter, which would become the ſeat of war during the campaign. The vicinity of that place to the Maratta capital, and the imminent danger to which Poonah muſt be expoſed whenever we open ourſelves a paſſage to the Decan, by ſecuring the ſeveral commanding paſſes that lead towards it, confirms ſuch belief almoſt to a certainty.

I therefore muſt aſſure myſelf, although the terms in which you have deſcribed the ſervice intended for your troops do not expreſsly declare ſo, that you propoſe to leave me the entire direction of their military operations, in ſuch manner as I may find expedient to advance the general plan previouſly concerted with your Government.

The diviſion of force, with a powerful enemy in the field, which we have every reaſon to expect, is at all times attended with inconvenience, and ſeldom produces any adequate good conſequences to the manifeſt danger it threatens. Such diviſion may however be ſometimes proper, and even requiſite; but the officer who commands upon the ſpot, and has informed himſelf of the ſtrength, ſituation, and deſigns of the enemy, can be the only competent judge when it is to be attempted with ſucceſs. The idea of two armies acting ſeparately and independently of each other, while employed againſt one common enemy, in proſecution of the ſame general plan, and in the ſame tract of country, is too abſurd, and combats too much againſt every principle on which the ſyſtem of war is founded, to make it neceſſary I ſhould trouble you with further remarks on the ſubject.

The few obſervations I have made on this head are derived merely from conſiderations of military expediency, and theſe I deem at this time ſufficient, becauſe I cannot help being firmly perſuaded it is your intentions that the troops from your Preſidency, ſerving on the continent, ſhould act under my immediate orders and direction whenever the army under me ſhall arrive in the neighbourhood of Baſſein, or at ſuch place as the operations of the one may be materially affected by thoſe of the other.

I would not be thought, from what I have before advanced againſt the too early movement of your troops, to ſuggeſt the ſmalleſt objection againſt that part of the plan propoſed by Mr. Hornby, or the ſervice which it is intended they ſhould perform; on the contrary, I am convinced it will tend to facilitate and render more expeditious and unmoleſted the progreſs of the troops from the northward.

It will effectually diſtract the attention of the enemy: it offers the moſt reaſonable, the only poſſible means of preſerving the country from deſolation; and will, I truſt, help to ſecure that effectual ſupply of proviſions of which we ſhall ſtand ſo much in need.

The ſeaſon of the year would however obviate the danger of our feeling the ſame effects from the devaſtating hands of the Marattas, which we ſo ſeverely experienced in a diſtance only of 18 miles, laſt April, when the ſcorching winds and ſun ſo powerfully aſſiſted the efforts of Madjee Scindia, and burnt up every blade of graſs upon the ground; but even there, I beg leave to obſerve, that other conſiderations than the difficulties this occaſioned, operated effectually to ſtop my progreſs; and that had not political reaſons, which my letters written at that time to the Committee fully explained, detained me on the confines of the Guzerat, I ſhould have found it a much eaſier taſk to advance than to have continued ſo long as I did on the ſame barren deſolated ſpot.

I obſerve with real concern and diſappointment the diſtreſs for money which you ſo ſtrongly repreſent, becauſe my own cannot be inferior, and the Honourable Governor General and Council have depended upon the reſource of the new-required revenue for the greateſt part of my ſupply.

I have been compelled for ſome time paſt to draw bills upon them at a conſiderable loſs, which nothing but the moſt urgent and extreme neceſſity could juſtify, to provide for the mere ſubſiſtence of the troops; but even this reſource has proved inadequate, and the army is greatly in arrears: it is now no longer to be depended upon. I am firmly perſuaded of your readineſs to afford me every aſſiſtance in your power, and in that confidence, urged by the preſſing and immediate neceſſities of the ſervice, hope you will find it practicable to comply with my requeſt of appropriating the firſt payment of the revenues of the country dependent on Surat, which is paid in advance, to the ſole uſe of the army now under my command.

In a letter tranſmitted you from Surat ſome time ago, on the ſubject of the treaty made with Futty Sing, I delivered you my opinion fully, regarding the ſentiments expreſſed by the Governor General and Council on the exchange of territory made with him, and am happy to find it correſponds with thoſe contained in the Preſident's minute, and recommended by you. It is therefore unneceſſary to take up your time with further obſervations on that point at preſent.

You may rely upon my taking every effectual meaſure in my power, for protecting the province of Guzerat from the inſults and depredations of the enemy, during the abſence of any part of the troops to the ſouthward, which with the aid of reinforcements from your garriſons of Surat and Broach, will eaſily be accompliſhed, except Scindia ſhould himſelf return with a large army, in which caſe the force that can be ſpared for the defence of the province might be unequal to keep the field; but all apprehenſions from that quarter of Scindia (and from no other can there be any cauſe to fear) will, I truſt, be removed by the plan which the Government of Bengal may find it expedient to adopt to detain him in the province of Malva.

It remains now, that I ſay a few words reſpecting Ragoba. The Preſident in his minute has ſuggeſted a mode of employing him to the ſouthward, but which he adds, is rather thrown out as a hint that may be purſued at a proper ſeaſon, than as compoſing part of his preſent plan.

It may not however be improper juſt to take notice of it, in treating of the ſubject of Ragoba, as it tends to recommend the line of conduct it may be moſt expedient for us to follow regarding him. The two Chiefs mentioned by the Preſident, have been long partizans of Ragoba, and have been lately in arms againſt the Miniſter; it is true they defeated ſome troops that were ſent againſt them, but they obtained no deciſive or material advantages: if Ragoba was to join them, which however I am perſuaded he will not venture to do, their force would receive no augmentation, and the Miniſter would detach a more reſpectable army againſt them, the conſequence of which muſt end in their defeat, and irrecoverable ruin of Ragoba, who would either fall into the hands of the Miniſter, or, which is more probable, fly to Hyder for protection: the diſappointment Ragoba has met with from us, in not being decreed any participation of the revenues of the conquered country, has affected him a good deal; and if he was once to execute the deſign of leaving us, he would not be induced to return to his former aſylum. It ſeems now no longer a conteſt for empire with him; he has ſeen all the hopes he might once have entertained of being ſupported by powerful partizans in the empire, diſappointed, and all he can now have any wiſh for, muſt I ſhould think in a great meaſure be confined to ſubſiſtence, and ſafety to himſelf and family; while he confines his views to theſe preſents, even thoſe who were jealous of his pretenſions to power, may relent, and deſpair might alſo have the effect of making him rely upon their promiſes and profeſſions.

I am therefore induced to give it as my opinion, that Ragoba ſhould remain immediately under our own eyes, and that no partial or inferior attempts ſhould be made in his favour, which might end in diſappointment, and perhaps fix upon us the imputation of having relieved ourſelves from the weight of a tax we did not chuſe to pay, by reſigning him to deſtruction. The final opinion I have been led to form reſpecting Ragoba's connection with us, is this, that though he can bring no material aid, or render any eſſential ſervice to us in the proſecution of the war, from the extreme contempt and hatred he is held in by all the principal leaders, that his preſence will be of infinite uſe in improving our ſucceſſes, when any future plan of negociation is entered upon, and the great work of peace through his means be more ſpeedily and effectually finiſhed, than if the Miniſter was entirely relieved from any apprehenſion on his account.

I ſhall conclude my remarks upon the preſent poſture of affairs, the clear and full inveſtigation of which ſubject in the Preſident's minute, leaves me ſo little room to enlarge, by venturing a few words on the obſervation he has made, concerning the want of information from the Honourable Governor General and Council, relative to their views in any future negociation for peace with the Poonah Government; and on this point I ſhall take upon me to ſpeak only from the circumſtances he has himſelf premiſed, and the concluſion which muſt indiſputably be deduced from them.

The Honourable Governor General and Council have all along conſidered the attainment of a permanent and honourable peace as the grand and primary object: their inſtructions to me in June laſt, which were imparted fully to this Government, pointed only to this end: ſince the failure of that negociation, they have repeatedly declared their ſtrong deſire of effecting a reaſonable accommodation; they have approved and authorized the plan concerted laſt year for proſecuting the war, which had then become neceſſary; and have concurred with you in the object to which its operations ſhould be directed.

Their views once accompliſhed, I conſider myſelf authorized, from the nature of their former inſtructions, which have never been revoked, and their repeated wiſh expreſſed for peace, to conclude ſuch terms of amity with the Maratta State, by the advice and concurrence of this Government, as the ſucceſſes of the war may entitle us to expect; as may be beſt ſuited to every concurrent circumſtance at the time when ſuch opportunity of accommodation offers itſelf, and calculated to promote the true intereſts of the Company in general, and the proſperity and ſucceſs of this Preſidency in particular.

I have the honour to be,
Gentlemen,
Your moſt obedient
humble ſervant,

Copy of a Letter to General Goddard; dated the 5th September, 1780.

To Brigadier General Goddard.

Sir,

We were very highly pleaſed to find by the letter you laid before us at our meeting on the 28th ultimo, that the general plan of operations propoſed for the enſuing campaign coincided ſo entirely with your ſentiments, and having already fully deſcribed the ſervice intended for the Bombay detachment under Lieutenant Colonel Hartley, it only now remains to explain the powers we have judged it expedient to give you over this detachment, for the proſecution of the general plan.

We are inclined to the opinion, that if it can ſtill continue to protect the country, at the ſame time that it covers the ſiege of Baſſien, it will be making the moſt advantageous uſe of it; but as the ſiege will be the grand object, and when once undertaken, our ſucceſs muſt be provided for to the utmoſt, we ſhall commit to you the entire direction from the time that you may arrive in the neighbourhood of Baſſein with the army under your command, and we ſhall accordingly direct Lieutenant Colonel Hartley to pay ſtrict obedience to all ſuch orders as you may think proper to give him from that time.

We ſhall likewiſe continue your command over this detachment during the remainder of the campaign in the Conkan for the proſecution of the concerted plan, though we wiſh that ſo long as you may judge it adviſable to have a covering army, the Bombay detachment may be employed in that manner; and if you ſhould at any time think it neceſſary for them to join, we would ſtill wiſh to have our troops kept up in the ſame manner as when they were acting ſeparate, in order that they may be maintained in a condition to act ſeparately again, if it ſhall be hereafter found neceſſary. For the ſame reaſon, we ſhall be glad they may be as little as poſſible ſubdivided or ſcattered into ſmall detachments; and we muſt remark that the ſecuring the crop of grain in the country for which this detachment was principally formed, will depend on their being kept in a condition and ſtation to protect it. Appendix. No. 330.

We ſhall give orders to Lieutenant Colonel Hartley to correſpond punctually with you as ſoon as you approach Baſſein, and we ſhall alſo direct him to continue to correſpond with us; we ſhall wiſh to receive the readieſt and moſt direct communication from all quarters of the ſtate of affairs. We cannot foreſee any circumſtance at preſent which can render it neceſſary for us to give any ſpecial directions to Lieutenant Colonel Hartley, while he may be acting ſeparately from you under your orders; but ſhould any ſuch occaſion occur, we ſhall give you the earlieſt notice.

The time for our troops taking the field will depend chiefly on the weather; but imagine it may be early in next month, about which time we ſuppoſe you will be able to put the forces in motion from the northward.

The battering cannon and heavy ſtores for the ſiege will be embarked in proper boats, and kept in readineſs in Salſette river, to join you as ſoon as you can poſſibly have occaſion for them.

As you propoſe bringing down the Europeans by ſea, and it will be a prudent meaſure to have them near the Preſidency at the opening of the ſeaſon, we now ſend up the Revenge and Bombay grab for the accommodation of yourſelf and ſuite to Surat, and to bring down the Europeans, with the neceſſary convenience and expedition, and they may be cantoned on Salſette till there may be occaſion for their ſervices.

Our ſituation in point of money has been fully explained to you; but in order to afford you every aſſiſtance in our power, we now ſend directions to the Chief and Council at Surat to make good to you the firſt collections from our pergunnahs under their management, for the ſole uſe of the army under your command; and to leſſen your expence of ready money we ſhall give you a credit on the Bombay treaſury for ſuch ſums, as you can diſcharge by aſſignment.

We hope ſoon to congratulate you on your arrival again in our neighbourhood; and are, Sir,

Your moſt obedient
Bombay Caſtle, humble ſervants,

The following letter from Brigadier General Goddard having been alſo received ſince the laſt meeting of the Board, it was circulated on the 20th inſtant for the peruſal of the members of the Board.

Gentlemen,

My laſt addreſs to you was dated ſo long ago as the 15th July; from which period to the time of my departure for Bombay in the middle of laſt month, nothing of any importance occurred to communicate to you. Brigadier General Goddard, 6th September

That you may be fully informed of every material tranſaction that has ſince happened, and clearly comprehend the preſent ſituation of affairs, together with the plan of operations propoſed for the enſuing campaign, I beg leave to tranſmit for your peruſal, copy of a letter, No. 1, I received from the Select Committee previous to my departure from Surat; and of the Preſident's minute, No. 2, which they ſent me encloſed; I alſo ſubmit to you my reply thereto, No. 3, delivered in to the Committee upon my arrival at Bombay. The contents of theſe papers, as they touch upon every point that appears of moment on the preſent occaſion, almoſt renders unneceſſary my further remarks, ſince you will from a peruſal of them be at once able to judge of the propoſed plan of operations, which is founded upon the principles of what I have already ventured to lay before you, both with reſpect to the object of the war itſelf, and the means by which it may be moſt eaſily and certainly attained.

To attempt to point out to you the advantages we muſt must derive from profecuting the war upon the fyſtem now laid down, would be only a repetition of ſentiments frequently delivered to you; and indeed would be further ſuperfluous, as you have already ſignified your ſenſe of it in your concurrence with Mr. Hornby's plan originally, and your approbation of the meaſures reſolved upon at the opening of the laſt campaign, of which thoſe at preſent entered into are intended as a completion; and cannot fail, with the effectual aid and ſupport of your Council and endeavours, to produce the end ſo much deſired, "a termination of our preſent conteſt by an ho- "nourable and advantageous treaty."

You will underſtand both from the expreſſions uſed in Mr. Hornby's minute and the letters I have myſelf written you on the ſubject, that the plan adopted by the Committee is conformable to the ſentiments I had avowed to them relative to the general objects of the war, and is partial only with reſpect to the part they have aſſigned their own troops in the Conkan previous to my arrival before Baſſein, which meaſure was determined upon and in ſome degree entered into before I received any communication of their intentions.

Senſible of what ſerious importance it is to the public cauſe to preſerve a confidence and good underſtanding with this Government, I ſhall make that object my moſt earneſt and principal ſtudy, and I truſt the readineſs with which I have concurred in proſecution of their views for the public ſervice at this time, as well as the warmth and zeal with which I ſhall co-operate with them for the ſame good purpoſe hereafter, will obtain its reward in your future favour and approbation.

I ſhall, in purſuance of the plan fixed upon, take the earlieſt opportunity of putting the troops from Surat in motion, which I apprehend on account of the uncommon quantity of rains that have fallen this year and ſtill continue to fall, cannot poſſibly be before the 1ſt October. I hope, however, there will be no neceſſity of delay after that period, and as I propoſe returning to Surat in a few days; and the army is already prepared to take the field, no other impediment but the inclemency of the ſeaſon, and the conſequent difficulty of the march along the coaſt from the ſwelling of the numerous rivers that empty themſelves into the ſea from the hills that are adjacent, can poſſibly occur to protract my operations: I ſhall not fail to give you immediate notice of my movements, and of the diſpoſition of force I may find it neceſſary to make for the protection of the Company's territories in Guzerat.

The ſentiments of the Committee relative to the partition of territory made with Futty Sing, preciſely correſpond with thoſe I have already ventured to give you upon the ſame ſubject; and I flatter myſelf you will admit of their preſent juſtice and propriety.

I need not, I am convinced, call your attention to that part of the Committee's letter which relates to the ſupplies of money, ſetting forth their diſtreſs, and the impoſſibility of an excluſive appropriation of the revenues ariſing from the new-acquired pergunnahs to the payment of the army under my command, as its own importance will give it a claim to your immediate and particular notice. Their reſolution of ſetting them apart for the general purpoſes of the war, involves ſuch a variety of charges and ſo extenſive a field of expence, that excluſive of the precarioufneſs and at preſent inadequate extent of the revenue itſelf, leaves, I muſt confeſs, but little hopes of benefit or effectual aſſiſtance from it. Let me therefore repeat my earneſt ſolicitations that you will exert every endeavour to remedy the evils already felt, and prevent thoſe ſtill more ſevere which we muſt inevitably experience, unleſs you ſtrain every reſource at this time to adminiſter relief. I have ſo often troubled you with repreſentations on this ſubject, and you are yourſelves ſo well informed of the circumſcribed means poſſeſſed by this Government towards extricating themſelves and me from our preſent diſtreſs, that I feel at once the impropriety of enlarging further on it. I cannot help however anticipating the accompliſhment of that event predicted in the concluſion of Mr. Hornby's minute, "when you ſhall be relieved from all future expence in ſupport of this Government," which I think the favourable train of their affairs at this juncture, ſeconded by vigorous and united efforts, cannot fail of producing before the termination of the enſuing campaign.

I come to that point which of all others appears to me the moſt intereſting, and demanding your particular attention and conſideration: I mean when the ſucceſsful operations of the war ſhall have brought us to that happy criſis ſo much to be deſired, and which we have beſides every reaſon to expect capable of being improved to the great work of peace.

Although the inſtructions I have received from you, and the ſentiments you have been pleaſed to communicate from time to time on this ſubject, leave me at no loſs regarding the objects you would look to in a treaty, or the meaſures I ought to purſue for their attainment; yet it does not appear that the gentlemen of this Government deem themſelves ſufficiently informed of your views to afford that full and unreſerved participation of ſentiments I could wiſh to receive from them whenever a negociation ſhall be ſet on foot. I have in a few words explained my idea of your intentions in reply to Mr. Hornby's remarks, "of this Committee having received no communication of your views, in any future negociations for peace, ſince June 1779;" and I flatter myſelf that you will approve of what I have ſuggeſted on that occaſion. I repeat it, that I feel myſelf poſſeſſed of ſufficient grounds, from the inſtructions and information already received, to proſecute your views, in a treaty with the Maratta State, ſhould an opportunity offer of doing ſo previous to the arrival of any further directions from you for that purpoſe. But as a ſufficient time will certainly intervene, betwixt your receipt of the preſent diſpatches and the period of negociation to which I have alluded, to obtain a full communication of your ſentiments, I beg leave to expreſs my wiſh, that in order to prevent every poſſibility of inconvenience or delay from any miſconception of your inſtructions or intentions, you will pleaſe to tranſmit a clear and definite explanation of them for our mutual direction and guidance, as early as poſſible, that you may be informed of every particular circumſtance, and of the ſteps now taken or propoſed to be taken. I alſo encloſe you copy of a letter, wrote me by the Select Committee, No. 4, previous to my ſetting out for Surat; from which place I ſhall again addreſs you, and have the honour to be, with the greateſt reſpect, &c.

Bombay, (Signed) Thomas Goddard.
September 6th 1780.

The accompaniments of the above letter being only copies of the papers received from the Preſident and Select Committee of Bombay, and entered on the proceedings of the 3d ultimo and this day, there is no occaſion to record them in this place.

Read another letter, as follows, from Brigadier General Goddard:

Gentlemen,

I had the honour to addreſs you from Bombay, the 6th inſtant, encloſing copy of my correſpondence with the Select Committee; the opinion we had mutually formed of the preſent poſture of affairs; and the plan of operations propoſed to be followed for their improvement and ſucceſs the enſuing campaign. As this diſpatch was ſent round by the Nancy, Bengal armed veſſel, I make no doubt but it will reach you ſafe; and as it contained every particular and poſſible information, both with reſpect to the preſent ſtate of the war, and our intentions for its future proſecution, I find it unneceſſary, nothing material having ſince intervened, to trouble you farther at this time on the ſubject.

Brigadier General Goddard, 24th September

In

In purſuance of the plan determined upon at Bombay, the detachment of Madras Europeans, infantry, and artillery, embark this day; and as nothing prevents me but the ſeverity of the weather, and the conſequent height of the rivers and nullahs on the road, I flatter myſelf this obſtacle will now ſoon be removed, and that I ſhall have the happineſs ſhortly to acquaint you with the whole army's being in motion.

Permit me to congratulate you upon the ſignal ſucceſs of your arms under Captain Popham, and the honour they have acquired in the capture of the ſtrong fortreſs of Gwalior, which opens ſo favourable and promiſing a proſpect to the operations of the war in the northward.

I have within theſe few days been favoured with your letter, in triplicate, of the 15th May, on the ſubject of Mr. Farmer's repreſentation, which has been attended to, and his claim admitted by the Government. I beg leave to acquaint you, that I have received no letter from your Government of a later date than the 17th May.

I have the honour to be,
With the greateſt reſpect, &c.

APPENDIX, No. 331.

Extract of a Letter from the Preſident and Select Committee of Bombay to the Honourable the Governor General and Council; dated 23d September 1780.

HAVING ſince then received ſome very intereſting intelligence from Mr. Henſhaw at Goa, we now encloſe copy of his letter, which we immediately communicated to General Goddard, and preſſed him to uſe all poſſible expedition in bringing down the army for the ſiege of Baſſein. And we ſhall likewiſe take every meaſure in our power to anticipate the Portugueze in their views of getting poſſeſſion of that important place.

Copy of a Letter from Mr. Robert Henſhaw to the Honourable William Hornby, Eſquire, Preſident and Governor, &c. &c. dated Goa, 9th September 1780.

Honourable Sir,

I ſend away this boat, expreſs, to acquaint you of ſome meaſures of this Government, in regard to their poſſeſſions (as they term them) north of Bombay. I yeſterday learnt of their having actually received orders from Poonah, to the Governor of Baſſein, for receiving a Portugueze garriſon therein, and hoiſting Portugueze colours. In conſequence, two of their frigates are getting ready, working night and day for this purpoſe, and upwards of five companies of Europeans, and near one thouſand Sepoys (irregulars) are now here at this village, ready to embark the moment the veſſels get over the bar. It is given out they are going to Damaun. Their hope is to be before hand with us; but I anxiouſly wiſh them diſappointed. I beg your Honour will return a Patamar boat to me, having none to forward any intelligence or packets from Madras. It is very long ſince I heard from Stewart.

I am with the higheſt eſteem and gratitude,
Honourable Sir,
Your moſt obliged and grateful humble ſervant,

APPENDIX, No. 332.

Appendix. Nos. 331 & 332.

Copy of a Letter from Brigadier General Goddard to the Honourable the Governor General and Council; dated the 15th October 1780.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour to encloſe you copy of an extract from the Honourable Company's commands, dated the 12th April laſt, which has been tranſmitted me by the Honourable Select Committee of Bombay.

The marks of diſtinction they have been pleaſed to confer upon me are in no reſpect more honourable and grateful than in the opportunity they give of continuing to merit your favour and approbation, by an implicit obedience to your commands, and the hope of conducting to a ſucceſsful termination, under your auſpices, the ſervice you have entruſted to my care and direction.

It is with pleaſure I can inform you, that every thing at preſent promiſes the moſt favourable iſſue to our firſt attempt upon Baſſein: the Madras Europeans are ſafe arrived at Durwa Point upon the iſland of Salſette, where the ſtores requiſite for the ſiege are all collected, with boats, &c. ready to tranſport them to the oppoſite ſhore, whenever the army under my command ſhall arrive; and as from the accounts brought me by my hircarrahs, of the condition of the roads, which from the unuſual heavy rains that have fallen this ſeaſon, have continued impaſſable longer than was expected, I have reaſon to hope it will now be in my power to overcome every remaining difficulty. I propoſe putting the army in motion the 16th inſtant, and ſhall march with all the expedition in my power to Baſſein: I ſhall write you immediately upon my arrival at that place; and ſhall not fail to addreſs you, ſhould any thing material happen on the road.

No change has taken place in the ſituation of affairs ſince I laſt had the honour of writing you; and from the reports that prevail here, of a large body of troops from Bengal having croſſed the Jumna, on their way to Gohud, I am encouraged confidently to hope that Scindia and Holkar will find themſelves too much employed in the defence of their northern poſſeſſions to have any leiſure to attend to what is tranſacting to the ſouthward.

I have provided as far as I could, conſiſtently with the plan of operations, and the grand objects to be purſued this campaign for the protection and ſecurity of the Company's territories in Guzerat, which from the preſent appearance of a favourable crop, and the extent and value of their collections, promiſe ſo large an acceſſion of revenue this ſeaſon, as to render the ſecurity of them a point of the moſt ſerious importance to our future ſucceſs; and unleſs Scindia and Holkar ſhould themſelves invade the country with a very large army, I am under no apprehenſion that it will be in the power of the enemy to make any impreſſion upon it.

To the detachment already ſtationed at Ahmedabad, and the two battalions left at Zinnore, which provide for the ſafety of the country north of the Nerbuddah, a body of troops, conſiſting of two Bombay battalions of Sepoys, will alſo be formed in the neighbourhood of Surat, to be in readineſs to move to repel any attack of the enemy from the ſouthward; and theſe it is intended ſhall be all directed to unite, ſhould the approach of any large army of the Marattas render it neceſſary.

The common object to which the ſervice of theſe ſeveral detachments is thus directed, requiring that their operations ſhould be under one general controul, in order that they may be ordered to act conjunctively, or ſeparately with each other as circumſtances ſhall render moſt expedient, I have thought it neceſſary to leave Major Forbes, an officer of experience and long ſervice, and of whoſe courage and military talents I have had repeated and recent proofs, in the command of the whole; and I flatter myſelf his conduct in it will be ſuch as to merit your approbation, and anſwer the good opinion I have been led to form of him.

Appendix. Nos. 333 & 334.

I ſhall addreſs you when any thing material occurs; and have the honour to be,

With the greateſt reſpect,
Gentlemen,
Your moſt obedient,
and moſt humble ſervant,

APPENDIX, No. 333.

Extract of a Letter from Governor and Council of Bengal, in their Secret Department, to the Court of Directors of the Eaſt India Company, dated the 7th January 1781.

Par. 8. WE think it proper to ſend for your information an extract of a letter which we have received from the Preſident and Select Committee at Bombay, under date the 23d September, accompanied by a letter to them from Mr. Henſhaw, their reſident at Goa; it goes therefore a number in this diſpatch; but we deem the report therein conveyed to us unworthy of our ſerious attention. We are generally inclined to believe, that although a connection may ſubſiſt between the Portugueze and the Marattas, its effect cannot be important: they have no rank among the Powers in India; they have no means of ſubſiſting their army in the field; and no ſuch advantages are likely to be yielded to them as can weigh againſt the ſtrong conſideration of the alliance which has long ſubſiſted between our nation and theirs. The claims which they prefer are claims of form, and perhaps would be preferred by any other nation having them, whether they were or were not juſtly founded.

9. With reſpect to the ſuppoſed intention of aſſerting and maintaining the claim on Baſſein by force, it ſeems to us nugatory; and it cannot be effectual, ſince we have received certain advices that Brigadier General Goddard with his army was before Baſſein on the 18th November laſt; and we are informed, that there was no force, excepting that in garriſon, to oppoſe his early capture of the place.

APPENDIX, No. 334.

Letter from Bombay, 11th January 1781, to the Honourable the Secret Committee of the Honourable the Court of Directors for Affairs of the Honourable United Company of Merchants of England trading to the Eaſt Indies.

Honourable Gentlemen,

Par. 1. OUR laſt advices, dated the 25th July, were forwarded by the way of Buſſora, and we have the honour to addreſs you, in duplicate, by the ſame route, accompanied by tranſcript of our ſaid advices.

2. Since the above date, the following letters have come ſafely to hand.

Received the 14th Auguſt. Company's letter, and letter from the Committee of Correſpondence, both dated the 24th March 1780.

Received the 1ſt October. Letter from Chairman and Deputy Chairman, dated 9th July 1779.

Company's letter, and letter from the Committee of Correſpondence, dated 12th April 1780.

Letter from the Committee of Correſpondence, dated 29th April 1780.

3. The neceſſary communications were immediately made to the other Preſidencies, and to the Admiral, in conſequence of the advices contained in theſe ſeveral letters; and the diſmiſſions ordered in the Honourable Company's commands of the 12th April took place on receipt thereof.

4. Mr. Draper begs leave to return his humble and hearty acknowledgments for the very favourable orders reſpecting him; and to aſſure his Honourable Maſters, he will uſe his beſt endeavours, that his future conduct in the ſervice may prove equally acceptable to them, as that they have been pleaſed to notice.

5. In conſequence of Mr. Carnac's diſmiſſion, and the death of Mr. Moore, Mr. Stackhouſe has become a member of this Committee, agreeable to the Honourable Company's orders, dated 10th April 1778.

6. We immediately ſignified to General Goddard, then with the army at Surat, your appointment of him to the chief command of the forces under this Preſidency, who has expreſſed himſelf exceedingly ſenſible of the honourable marks of diſtinction you have been pleaſed to confer upon him; and hopes to diſcharge the duties of that important ſtation with honour to himſelf and ſatisfaction to you. He has ſent advice of this appointment to the Governor General and Council, in order to receive their particular ſentiments regarding it; but has not as yet aſſumed the exerciſe of his command.

7. Our laſt advices left both our troops and thoſe of the enemy inactive: the ſeaſon of the year neceſſarily occaſioning an intermiſſion of hoſtilities, the Preſident made uſe of this opportunity to lay before us a review of the general poſture of affairs, as they related to the Maratta war. The advantages as well as difficulties of our ſituation, and a plan of meaſures for immediate proſecution, evincing, by the moſt accurate ſtatement of our ſituation, the neceſſity of bringing the Maratta war to as early a concluſion as poſſible.

8. By a well-founded concluſion from paſt events, and an attentive conſideration of the views and intereſts of the ſeveral leading men in the Poonah Government, we gave up all preſent expectation of effecting this deſirable purpoſe by treaty; nor were we empowered, or informed that General Goddard was empowered, to enter into any further negociation. We could not therefore entertain any hopes of peace, unleſs from ſucceſs in the moſt vigorous meaſures; which, preſſing as the difficulties were under which we laboured, ariſing eſpecially from the very low ſtate of our finances, we reſolved to adopt, and to purſue ſteadily the execution of the plan formed upon the grounds of your orders, and entered upon our diary under the 30th March 1779, according to which the reduction of Baſſein and its dependencies alone remained unaccompliſhed to complete our views in regard to the acquiſition of territory.

9. The principle of conduct recommended to us by the Preſident, and upon which we reſolved to proceed, was, in ſhort, by a vigorous purſuit of the war, ſtrictly confined to the objects already defined, either to compel the enemy to peace, or reduce the war on our part to a mere plan of defence, and thereby to put ourſelves in a condition as early as poſſible, to ſend back the troops of the other Preſidencies, for the expence of which no reſources within our moſt ſanguine hopes could prove in any degree adequate.

10. As the poſſeſſing Baſſein without the country would only be burthening ourſelves with an expenſive garriſon, and increaſing our charges without enlarging our reſources, the meaſures propoſed were ſo planned as to provide at once for the reduction of Baſſein, and the protection of the country, ſo far as our means would permit; as it was of the utmoſt importance to prevent, if poſſible, the enemy from conſuming or deſtroying the produce, which would not only diſappoint us of the revenue for a whole ſeaſon, but of all aids of ſubſiſtence expected from the country. By the poſſeſſion of Callian we had already ſecured footing, and a very favourable opening into the country, affording alſo a convenient ſtation for aſſembling our troops, and making early preparations for taking the field.

11. This ſervice could only be effected by troops from Bombay,

Bombay, the poſition of the Bengal army rendering it impoſſible to General Goddard. We therefore, after due communication with him, ſent a ſtrong detachment into the field under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Hartley, as early as the ſeaſon would permit, whilſt the General undertook his march from Surat, which the ſeverity of the weather did not permit him to commence until the 16th of October; and even then, the army met with ſuch difficulties and obſtructions, from the extreme badneſs of the roads, and the numerous rivers, that they did not reach their ground before Baſſein until the 13th of November, where he was joined by reinforcements and ſtores from Bombay; and Colonel Hartley, according to his inſtructions, was from that time to act under the General's orders, and be employed in covering the ſiege, or otherwiſe, as might be found neceſſary.

12. The General repreſented, that finding the place very ſtrong, and defended by a numerous garriſon, under the command of Viſſagee Punt, he determined to carry on his operations with regularity and precaution.—On the 28th in the morning he had completed a battery of ſix guns, and ſix mortars, within 900 yards of the place, and under cover of the fire, carried on his approaches to the ſpot where he erected the grand battery of nine 24 pounders, which was opened the 9th ultimo in the morning, within 500 yards of the wall; beſides which a battery of 20 mortars of different ſizes was opened upon one of the flanks of the parapet: theſe were ſerved with ſuch effect, that on the 10th in the morning, a practicable breach being nearly completed, a meſſage was ſent from the fort, offering to ſurrender; and we have the pleaſure to acquaint you, that after ſome demur on the part of the enemy, which obliged the General to renew the fire from the batteries, the place ſurrendered the next day at diſcretion; the garriſon marched out and laid down their arms in front of the fort, being only allowed to carry away their own private effects. We beg leave to congratulate you moſt cordially on this important acquiſition, which has been ſo long the object of our wiſhes. And what adds greatly to the ſatisfaction we feel on the occaſion is, the very ſmall loſs ſuſtained in the ſiege; one officer only, Lieutenant Sir John James Gordon, having been wounded, who is ſince dead, and about 12 men killed and wounded, of whom four only were Europeans.

13. A conſiderable quantity of ammunition was found in the fort, and 220 pieces of cannon, and 10 braſs mortars; of which 19 pieces of braſs cannon, ſeveral of a very large calibre, 128 pieces of iron ordnance, and all the mortars, have been reported ſerviceable.

14. It is not material to give a detail by this conveyance of the operations of the detachment under Lieutenant Colonel Hartley; which, upon the whole, we doubt not facilitated the ſucceſs of the ſiege, which was carried on without interruption whilſt Colonel Hartley took up the attention of a large body of the enemy, ſent, we apprehend, to attempt the relief, with which he was ſucceſſively engaged for the three days preceding the fall of the place; immediately after which General Goddard moved to his ſupport; but two days before he joined, the enemy had retired to a conſiderable diſtance.

15. We ſignified to Lieutenant Colonel Hartley the mark of favour you intend him; and he aſſures us he ſhall ever conſider your approbation as the higheſt honour, and that whenever an opportunity offers, he ſhall not fail of ſhewing to the utmoſt his zeal for your ſervice.

16. After the reduction of Baſſein, the General repaired to Bombay, to conſult with us reſpecting his further operations; but by that time a very material change had taken place in our political ſituation.

17. The Select Committee at Fort Saint George had adviſed us, in a letter dated 28th July, received the 13th September, that Hyder Ally had invaded the Carnatic with a large army, and that they could only act upon the defenſive. They gave their opinion, that the war ſhould be carried into Hyder's poſſeſſions on the coaſt of Malabar; and expreſſed hopes that we ſhould be in a ſituation to act with vigour againſt him, at leaſt when the Maratta war was at an end. We did not fail to give them a faithful account of our condition and inability to co-operate with them in any degree, until the Maratta war was brought to a concluſion, and had no further account of their proceedings until the arrival of the fleet on the 19th ultimo, when the Admiral delivered us a letter from the Select Committee, confirming reports we had before heard of a moſt dreadful diſaſter having befel a conſiderable part of their army under the command of Colonel Baillie. The account we now give of this unfortunate affair is in their own words. Appendix. No. 334.

18. With theſe alarming accounts we received a letter from the Governor General and Council, dated the 9th of October, adviſing that they had come to a determination to offer peace to the Marattas; and enclоſing copy of a treaty of which they had agreed for that purpoſe, to which they refer us in ſo many words for the knowledge of every particular; having therefore no further information to afford, we think it eſpecially neceſſary to tranſmit a copy of this paper, with which we received a peremptory order to ſuſpend all hoſtilities and military operations againſt the Marattas, immediately on receipt of a requiſition in writing to that effect, and a notification from the Peiſhwa that the like order had been given on his part to the officers commanding his armies: but in the mean time, and until the receipt of ſuch requiſition and notification, they earneſtly recommended to us a vigorous proſecution of the war, and ſending the like order to General Goddard. The copy of the propoſed treaty ſent to us has no date; but the letter accompanying it as above mentioned, is dated the 9th of October, and what we have now communicated contains the whole ſubſtance of the information given us by the Governor General and Council reſpecting this meaſure.

19. When Hyder Ally, by his invaſion of the Carnatic, had commenced open hoſtilities againſt the Company, a body of his troops alſo joined the Malabar Powers in the attack of Tellicherry: finding the defence of this ſettlement an inſupportable burthen, and the Maratta war requiring that every reſource of this Preſidency ſhould be confined to that object alone, we ſaw the expediency of abandoning Tellicherry altogether; but after the opinion given by the Select Committee at Fort Saint George, of the neceſſity of carrying the war into Hyder's poſſeſſions on this coaſt, we did not think it proper without firſt conſulting them to give up a place which might be of much conſequence towards the ſucceſs of ſuch a meaſure whenever circumſtances may permit of its being carried into execution, and which might alſo have a material effect upon their preſent operations. We at the ſame time ſtated our inability to furniſh the neceſſary ſupplies of men, money, and ſtores, to ſuſtain a ſiege which promiſed to continue ſo long, as the army in the Carnatic continued to act on the defenſive; and ſubmitted to them, whether the fort of Tellicherry was of ſuch importance to the ſucceſs of the war as to be equal to the expence of maintaining it; in which caſe we deſired to know, whether they would take that charge upon their Government; for as we then acquainted them, we were not able to ſupport it, further than by ſending a temporary relief until their anſwer could be obtained.

20. The Select Committee, in their anſwer ſubſequent to the diſaſter of the 10th of September, recommended the evacuating of the place; and we had lodged previous orders at Tellicherry for the garriſon to act in this point according to the anſwer from Fort Saint George, which for that reaſon we deſired might be immediately communicated to the Reſident, that meaſures might be taken for withdrawing from the place under the countenance and protection of his Majeſty's ſquadron, which we expected would arrive there nearly at the ſame time with the anſwer from Fort Saint George.

21. The Admiral, when he arrived at Tellicherry, was poſſeſſed of the Governor General and Council's intentions of offering peace to the Marattas; and on being conſulted conſulted by the Reſident and factors reſpecting the meaſures for withdrawing the ſettlement, he gave it deciſively as his opinion, from the great difference which had ariſen in the ſtate of the Company's affairs, both as to war and policy, ſince the date of our inſtructions, the place ought not to be abandoned until further orders from Bombay; and to enable them to hold out until then, he offered ſupplies of ammunition, military ſtores, proviſions, men and money; and immediately diſpatched a letter to us, ſtrongly urging the neceſſity of maintaining the place at this time, and under the preſent circumſtances of the Company's affairs; and requeſting and deſiring we would take this matter under our moſt ſerious conſideration, and ſpeedily diſpatch ſuch a reinforcement of troops and other requiſites as might be fully ſufficient to drive the enemy from before the place; when, if we ſhould not think the ſettlement worth keeping, it might be evacuated, the Company's effects ſaved, and the honour of the national arms preſerved.

22. The Admiral accordingly landed a detachment of 100 marines, and ſuch ſtores as were judged adequate by the commandant to the defence of the place, until a reinforcement could be ſent from Bombay; and alſo left the ſhips Ponsborne and Contractor, to aſſiſt with the Company's cruizers ſtationed there in keeping the port open. We cannot omit mentioning the further proof the Admiral gave of his zeal for your ſervice, by offering to land a body of men from the fleet, to aſſiſt in ſtorming the enemy's works, but which Major Cotgrave thought proper to decline.

23. The Admiral, in his paſſage up the Malabar coaſt, has conſiderably weakened Hyder Ally's marine force, by cutting out one ſhip from Callicut road; and at Mangalore, with the boats of the fleet, he deſtroyed two grab ſhips, a large ketch, and took another ketch of ten guns. He then proceeded to Bombay with the whole fleet, which now conſiſts of only five ſhips of the line, and one frigate; three ſhips being returned to England, one frigate ſent to China, and the Nymph ſloop to the Cape. The Sartine frigate was loſt at Callicut. The ſhips at Bombay are proceeding in their refitment with all poſſible expedition.

24. Such was the ſtate of affairs when after the reduction of Baſſein it became neceſſary to determine what further meaſures were to be purſued, and we requeſted the Admiral and the General to meet us in Committee for that purpoſe.

25. The Admiral declared it to be his opinion, that the ſafety and preſervation of the Company's ſettlements on the coaſt of Coromandel, and of the army under Sir Eyre Coote, depended on this Preſidency being able to make ſome vigorous effort againſt the poſſeſſions of Hyder Ally on this coaſt; and urged in ſtrong terms the neceſſity of a ſpeedy peace with the Marattas, to enable us to act with our whole force againſt Hyder Ally, who now threatens deſtruction to the Carnatic, and even to Fort Saint George itſelf, if aided by a body of French, which there appeared a great probability might be introduced into the country.

26. We allowed much weight to the ſentiments delivered by the Admiral, and that in the unhappy ſituation to which affairs at Fort St. George are reduced, a peace with the Marattas was moſt ardently to be wiſhed for, and which we ſhall labour moſt zealouſly and ſtrenuouſly to obtain; but until that event takes place it muſt be admitted as an abſolute impoſſibility, that we can make any effectual attack againſt the poſſeſſions of Hyder Ally on the Malabar coaſt, for were we to relax in our operations againſt the Marattas, or to weaken the army ſo far as to diſable it from acting with vigour againſt them, this Preſidency might ſoon be reduced to as bad a ſituation as Fort St. George; or the Marattas relieved from all apprehenſions from this quarter, might unite with Hyder Ally in the invaſion of the Carnatic, and complete the ruin of that Preſidency.

27. A purſuit of the Maratta war with all poſſible vigour as recommended by the Governor General and Council, promiſed with the moſt rational expectation to promote a ſpeedy accommodation, ſooner than any other plan of conduct; and indeed our own ſafety, as well as the general ſafety of the Company's poſſeſſions, made it neceſſary that we ſhould either find employment for the Marattas or bring them to terms. In theſe circumſtances therefore it would be in the higheſt degree imprudent and impolitic, by a diviſion of our forces to diſable ourſelves from purſuing the line of conduct ſo neceſſary for the public ſafety.

28. At the ſame time we were very earneſt in our wiſhes to preſerve Tellicherry, until at leaſt we can form a better judgment what probability there may be of the Marattas accepting the proffered terms, or of the war being otherwiſe brought to a concluſion; and on conſulting the General reſpecting the ſtate of the army, we found we could furniſh a very defenſive garriſon for Tellicherry without diſabling him from an active proſecution of the war againſt the Marattas; and we have therefore determined for the preſent to maintain it.

29. Immediately on the reduction of Baſſein and before the receipt of the letter from Bengal of the 9th of October, we had on the Preſident's propoſal recommended to the General, to acquaint the Poonah Miniſtry that if they were deſirous of peace on equitable and moderate terms he was ſtill ready to enter into treaty with them; at the ſame time ſupporting the offer with ſuch motions of the army as might ſeem moſt likely to enforce the acceptance of it; keeping ſtill in mind the main object of the campaign, the complete reduction of the Conkan or country below the Gauts, in which were ſeveral forts of difficult acceſs, the poſſeſſion of which would be of great importance to preſerve it in tranquillity: the General did not altogether coincide in the idea, but ſeemed to think that greater advantages might be derived from the fall of Baſſein, and although he did not abſolutely propoſe to penetrate into the Decan, he gave it as his opinion, that with all the force we could collect, the firſt military effort would be to ſecure the paſſes of the Gauts, there to take poſt, and either advance or continue to act on the defenſive, as may be found moſt expedient, carrying the terror of our arms as near to the enemy's capital as poſſible, without riſking too far the ſafety of the troops or endangering their return. This ſtep he thought moſt likely to produce a peace, and ſupported his propoſal by remarking the unprepared ſtate of the Poonah Government to reſiſt our arms, ariſing from the abſence of their two principal officers, Scindia and Holkar, who we do not find have yet moved to this ſide, as well as the improbability of their receiving aſſiſtance from any other Power hoſtile to the Company.

30. As we were equally ſolicitous to reduce the Maratta Government to terms, and the Governor General and Council left the conduct of the war to General Goddard, we have only in general terms recommended to him to purſue his operations with all poſſible vigour, and to the utmoſt extent he may find practicable with the force under his command.

31. While the neceſſary preparations are forwarding for the moſt vigorous operations, a detachment of the army is employed in the attack of Arnaul, a fort on the ſea coaſt to the northward of Baſſein; and the Admiral at our requeſt has ſent two of the king's ſhips to aſſiſt in this ſervice.

32. We have the pleaſure to acquaint you, that your poſſeſſions to the northward have remained in perfect tranquillity, and we expect to receive a conſiderable revenue therefrom this ſeaſon, which however will be far from equal to our neceſſities, now preſſing to a degree never before experienced, as we are obliged to appropriate a part for the expences of the Bengal army.

* 33. By a letter communicated to us by General Goddard, we learned with great ſatisfaction that the detachment under Captain Popham ſurprized and took the important fortreſs of Guilier on the 4th of Auguſt laſt, but we are not able to give any farther advice of the operations of that detachment, or to what object they are directed.

Encloſures in Sir Edward Hughes's Packet to Lord Hillſborough, Secretary of State.

No. 9.

To Sir Edward Hughes, K. B. Rear Admiral of the Red, and Commander in Chief of His Majeſty's Ships in India.

Sir,

WE have the pleaſure to acquaint you with the ſafe arrival of Sir Eyre Coote, with a detachment of Europeans from Bengal. And we learn by private advice, that eight battalions of Sepoys are marching from thence to the Preſidency.

We encloſe you copy of a letter from our Reſident at Ganjam, which will inform you of the intelligence we have received reſpecting French cruizers.

We are likewiſe to inform you, that the Governor General and Council having thought proper, by the power veſted in them, to ſuſpend John Whitehill, Eſquire, Charles Smith, Eſquire, has ſucceeded to the government of the Company's affairs on this coaſt.

We have the honour to be,

No. 10.

Fort Saint George, 12th November 1780.

Dear Sir,

I muſt take a future opportunity of replying to ſuch parts of your letters of the 2d July, and 14th September, as may not be anſwered by what follows in this.

Before I left Bengal, your letters to the Governor General and Council, containing copies of the advices which you had received from England, of an armament being in readineſs to ſail from France to act againſt us in India, and informing them of your reſolution to leave this and proceed to the Malabar coaſt to counteract the enemy, as you expected they would firſt make an attempt in that quarter, either to diſtreſs our ſettlements there, or form a junction with Hyder Ally Cawn, had arrived. By the anſwers which were written to them, and which I hope have reached you in ſafety, you will be informed of the call that was made upon me to proceed hither in order to take upon me the command of the army at this Preſidency; a call, which you may ſuppoſe as the intereſts of the public were ſo eſſentially concerned, I embraced with that alacrity which my heart has ever dictated to me on ſuch occaſions. By the ſame diſpatches you are alſo informed of the reſolutions which the Supreme Council had come to, of making peace with the Marattas, a meaſure which in the preſent ſituation of our affairs was equally neceſſary and to be wiſhed for. I truſt therefore that the propoſals we have made towards bringing about an accommodation will be attended with ſucceſs. If you can be ſerviceable in this buſineſs I am confident you will.

I took my departure from Bengal on the 13th ultimo, and arrived here on the 5th inſtant. I have brought with me fifteen lacks of rupees for the ſervices of the war, two companies of European artillery with their complement of Laſcars, a battalion of Europeans conſiſting of 370, and about 40 gentlemen volunteers. I did flatter myſelf, that with this addition to the ſtrength of our army here, I ſhould have been in force ſufficient to have taken the field againſt Hyder; but ſo very ſhort have I found it of my expectations, and in ſo diſtracted and unprepared a ſtate, affairs in general, that however willing I feel myſelf to check him in his career of ſucceſs, it is now impoſſible: firſt, becauſe of the monſoon which has ſet in with very heavy rains, and obliged me for the preſent to order the troops into cantonments; and next, becauſe the fall of Arcot, the capital of the Carnatic, into the hands of Hyder, which happened two days before my arrival, has put him in poſſeſſion of not only a moſt formidable aſylum for his whole army, but a conſiderable quantity of very uſeful military ſtores, either for maintaining the footing he has already obtained, or for proſecuting his further views of conqueſt. By the beſt information I can obtain, his army does not conſiſt of leſs than a hundred thouſand black infantry; between two and three hundred of European infantry, under the command of a Mr. Lally; thirty thouſand horſe; a large train of artillery; not leſs than a hundred pieces of cannon of different calibres, and ſo well ſerved, as in the late ſiege of Arcot, to have frequently diſmounted the guns on our batteries. This is not a circumſtance collected from mere report, but communicated to me by the officers and others who are arrived from the garriſon of Arcot, under articles of capitulation. All theſe circumſtances conſidered, and added to the difficulties which we ſhould, after leaving this place, unavoidably experience on the ſcore of proviſions, I ſee no probability of having it ſpeedily in my power to act offenſively againſt Hyder, unleſs I ſhould have the happineſs to hear ſoon that peace is concluded with the Marattas, and that they have united their forces with General Goddard, and invaded his poſſeſſions on the other ſide of India.

Appendix No. 335.

I encloſe you a copy of my letter to Brigadier General Goddard: you will perceive from it that he is under my orders; but you will obſerve alſo, that as I write without any certain intelligence, either of his ſituation, of the progreſs of his late expedition againſt Baſſein, or of the ſtate of our negociations with the Marattas, I am obliged to leave him in a great meaſure to his own diſcretion: I only point out to him that I now conſider the Maratta war as a very ſecondary buſineſs, and that he will direct his whole views towards diſtreſſing the poſſeſſions of Hyder on the Malabar ſide, as, until the detachment of eight battalions of Sepoys, which I have been adviſed from Bengal, are under orders of march for this place, under command of Colonel Pearſe, arrive, it is the only hope I have, by obliging Hyder to divide his force, of enabling me to act offenſively againſt him, and to drive him from the Carnatic.

After theſe obſervations, and convinced of the zeal with which Sir Edward Hughes is inſpired for the ſervice of his king, and for the honour and intereſts of the Britiſh nation, I know it is unneceſſary for me to expreſs even a wiſh of his concerting ſuch meaſures as his line of ſervice may enable him, and he may deem eligible, towards diſtreſſing Hyder on the ſea coaſt of Malabar, and of his co-operating with General Goddard in every inſtance that may be in his power, and whereby the grand object of their mutual exertion may be promoted.

I have, purpoſely to convey this diſpatch to you, ſent round the Indus ſchooner, Captain Jones, belonging to Bengal; and which, as I ſhall be extremely anxious to receive early intelligence of both your own and General Goddard's plans, I hope you will return as ſpeedily as poſſible, as well as ſend me the earlieſt information to the ſame effect, in duplicate and triplicate, by the ſafeſt and moſt expeditious land conveyance.

I truſt that by our joint endeavours we may yet re-

Dear Sir,

Your moſt obedient and moſt humble ſervant,

To Brigadier General Goddard, or the officer commanding the Bengal detachment.

Sir,

I encloſe you a letter from the Governor General and Council, of which they communicated to me the contents, but ſent me no copy; I therefore opened it, that I might be enabled to ſend you an exact duplicate by land from hence, and which I ſhall ſend to-morrow.

I have alſo, to give theſe diſpatches every chance of reaching you with ſafety and expedition, ſent a duplicate by the veſſel which carries this, and which ſhe is to put on ſhore at Nagore, from whence I have written to the Reſident there, Mr. Huddleſton, to forward it to Mr. Torleſſe at Anjengo, and to whom I have likewiſe written to expedite it with all poſſible care to you.

The terms of the Governor General and Council's letter, placing your detachment under my orders, are in themſelves ſufficiently clear and deciſive to render all definition by me unneceſſary. I ſhall therefore, without further preamble, proceed to communicate to you in as conciſe a manner as poſſible, the ſtate in which things are in here, and what ſhare I could wiſh you to take, in order to aſſiſt in extricating them from the difficulties with which they are loaded.

I ſhall in the firſt place inform you, that I left Calcutta on the 13th of laſt month, and arrived ſafe here on board the Kingſton Indiaman, the 5th inſtant, having brought along with me a detachment from the Bengal army, conſiſting of two European companies of artillery with their complement of Laſcars, one battalion of European infantry amounting to 370, and 40 gentlemen volunteers. With ſuch an addition to the ſtrength of the army which I expected to find here, I had little doubt of being in force ſufficient to cope with Hyder in the field; but to my great concern the pleaſing view I had formed of entering immediately upon action, has, from a combination of untoward circumſtances, become altogether viſionary. Inſtead of eight or ten complete Sepoy battalions which I laid my account with meeting, I can hardly muſter from their remains enough of effective men to complete three. The cavalry, both Nabob's and Company's, when collected together, will not be a thouſand ſtrong. The complement of Europeans, which after leaving a very ſmall garriſon in this fort, I could carry into the field, would not exceed 1,400. No proviſions to be had any where in the country five miles beyond Madras, which has been ravaged, and is now infeſted by Hyder's horſe in large bodies; and at this preſent time the inhabitants are living on the ſupplies which have lately come from Bengal.

Under theſe circumſtances you may imagine that it would be no eaſy matter to equip an army for either a long or active campaign, which could command no other reſources for ſubſiſtence than what it had immediately within itſelf. With ſuch powerful obſtacles as theſe to encounter, I confeſs my mind has received ſome ſmall relief from its diſappointments, by the neceſſity which the ſetting in of the monſoon has furniſhed me with, of throwing my little army into cantonments, which however I have formed contiguous to where it was encamped, that I might not give an unfavourable impreſſion, by appearing to quit the field. When the detachment of eight battalions of Sepoys under orders of march from Bengal, under the command of Colonel Pearſe joins, (which however it will not do in leſs than four months) I ſhall be competent to any thing: but ere that time, I conceive matters will be brought to a criſis one way or another, for Hyder has advanced with ſuch rapid ſucceſs, that I muſt not remain ſo long inactive.

Having made you acquainted with what immediately concerns myſelf, I ſhall now inform you of what belongs to Hyder.

He is in poſſeſſion of Arcot, the capital of the Carnatic, which he took two days before my arrival. The Pettah he took by ſtorm, and the citadel capitulated. His infantry are computed at a hundred thouſand, of which there are twenty thouſand in regular battalions, and well diſciplined; between two and three hundred Europeans under the command of a Mr. Lally, and 30,000 cavalry, together with a very formidable train of artillery, not leſs than 100 pieces of cannon, and which at the ſiege of Arcot were ſo well ſerved, as repeatedly to have diſmounted our guns on the batteries. By the capture of this town and garriſon he has got poſſeſſion of an aſylum for his whole army, and of a very large quantity of military ſtores, which will prove very uſeful, not only in maintaining what he has already acquired, but in aſſiſting his further views of conqueſt. Theſe are circumſtances which threaten us with the moſt ſerious conſequences.

I hope that ere this reaches you, you will have been informed of the reſolutions which the Governor General and Council had come to, of offering peace to the Marattas, and that the terms have been received and proved acceptable to the Court of Poonah; that matters are in a fair train of being amicably accommodated; and that I ſhall ſoon receive the agreeable tidings of their having united their forces with you to act againſt Hyder. However this may be, and as in the preſent ſituation of our affairs, I conſider it as a very ſecondary buſineſs; I muſt earneſtly deſire that you will of yourſelf endeavour by every poſſible means to diſtreſs Hyder's poſſeſſions on your ſide India; and if there is any expedition which you are of opinion might, in concert with the Admiral, be ſucceſsfully undertaken againſt any of Hyder's principal places, and would produce the effect of obliging him to ſend part of the large force he has here to the ſecurity of his own country, I depend on your military experience and activity for ſpeedily executing it, I ſhould then I think be able, even with the force I now have, to drive him from the Carnatic. I write to Sir Edward Hughes on this ſubject, who I am perſuaded will cheerfully cooperate with you in any meaſure that may promiſe ſucceſs to the general operations of the war. As I have no late accounts where you now are, nor any advices concerning either your own or the tranſactions of the Marattas in your expedition againſt Baſſein, I have it not in my power to point out to you any direct line for your plan of operations. I muſt therefore rely on your local knowledge of circumſtances and diſcernment, for purſuing ſuch a conduct as may ſerve to promote the great object I have above ſuggeſted.

As nothing can be more material to the mutual ſucceſs of our operations in the war than particular and frequent intelligence, I muſt beg you will be conſtant in your communications upon every occurrence which may be in any ſhape uſeful for me to know; and you may depend on my being punctual in my correſpondence from hence.

As the firſt ſtep which has occurred to me might be of ſervice to your operations, I have ſent orders to Major Cotgrave, in command of a detachment from the troops of this Preſidency formerly ſtationed at Tellicherry, and lately ordered to march from thence to Anjengo to obey any

any orders you may ſend him to join you if neceſſary; if not, his detachment would be of great ſervice here: I would therefore, if ſafe, adviſe his coming to Pallamcotah where he will receive further orders. I have the honour to be, with much eſteem and regard,

Sir,

Fort St. George, 12th Nov. 1780.

Your moſt obedient humble ſervant,
(Signed) Eyre Coote.

APPENDIX, No. 336.

Bengal Secret Conſultations, the 9th October 1780.

THE Secretary lays before the Board drafts of letters to the Preſident and Select Committee of Bombay and to Brigadier General Goddard, grounded on the Reſolutions of the Board of the 27th ultimo.

To Bombay.

Gentlemen,

We have received the ſeveral letters which you have written to us under date the 29th May, 6th June, 30th July, and 14th Auguſt, with the accompaniments to each. We are alſo to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 17th Auguſt, which has reached us within theſe few days, and to which we propoſe to ſend a ſeparate reply in a very ſhort time.

At ſo great a diſtance as this is at which we are placed, from the ſcene of General Goddard's operations, it is impoſſible for us to preſcribe any fixed plan of action for the army under his command: we have therefore left it to his judgment, guided and aſſiſted by your opinion and advice, to employ our troops after the reduction of Baſſein, which we ſuppoſe by this time accompliſhed, or nearly ſo, for your defence againſt the French, if neceſſary for the general benefit of the Company's intereſts and annoyance of the enemy. The line of conduct marked out by the Company's inſtructions, and to which you ſeem to adhere in your late letters, is the rule by which we deſire you to be guided; but we are happy to leave the plan of operations to your determination and to that of the commander of our troops, not doubting but that your judgment and information will determine on the beſt that can be purſued.

We are now, gentlemen, to inform you of a reſolution which we have paſſed, but which we deſire may be kept inviolably ſecret while it be in the power of our enemies to oppoſe and defeat the ſucceſs of its object. Without further preface then, we make known to you the determination which we have paſſed, to offer peace and friendſhip to the Maratttas. The encloſed copy of the treaty on which we have agreed for this purpoſe, will convey to you the knowledge of every particular; and we hereby require and command you, immediately to ſuſpend all hoſtilities and military operations againſt the Marattas on the receipt of a requiſition in writing to that effect, and notification from the Peiſhwa that the like order has been given on his part to the officers commanding his armies; but in the mean time and until your receipt of ſuch requiſition and notification, we earneſtly recommend to you a vigorous proſecution of the war as far as your troops may be engaged in it.

A ſimilar order has been ſent to Brigadier General Goddard.

We are, &c.

Fort William, the 9th October 1780.

To General Goddard.

Sir,

In our letter to you of this date already written we have replied to ſuch parts of your letters hitherto unacknowledged as appeared to us to require an anſwer. The purpoſe of this letter is diſtinct and particular; it is meant only to convey to your knowledge a reſolution which we have formed, and orders for your guidance grounded on it; and we direct that for ſome time to come the whole be kept inviolably ſecret, and not permitted to paſs beyond your own information. Appendix. Nos. 336&338.

We have reſolved to offer terms of peace and friendſhip to the Maratta State, and for your knowledge of ſuch part of the treaty as may affect the motions of your army we herewith ſend you an atteſted copy of the treaty which we have determined to propoſe.

And we hereby poſitively require and command you immediately to ſuſpend all hoſtilities and military operations againſt the Marattas, whenever you may receive a requiſition in writing to that effect, and a notification from the Peiſhwa that the like order has been given on his part to the officers commanding his armies; but in the mean time and until ſuch requiſition and notification be received by you, we direct that you proſecute the war with the utmoſt vigour, and act in all circumſtances as if the foregoing information had not been ſent.

We are, &c.

APPENDIX, No. 338.

Extract of a Letter from Sir Edward Hughes, K. B. to the Earl of Hillsborough; dated Bombay, the 2d January 1781.

BY the Ponsborne I received letters from the Select Committee of Fort Saint George, encloſing alſo a letter directed to me, dated the 2d October laſt, from the Governor General in Council of Bengal, in anſwer to mine to them of the 14th September laſt; a copy of which letter, No. 2. is herewith encloſed for your Lordſhip's information, as containing matter of much importance to the affairs of the Company in particular, and of the nation at large.

On the 24th November in the evening, in ſight of Callicut road, a port of Hyder Ally's, I ſaw at an anchor there His Majeſty's ſhips Exeter, Burford, Eagle, and Sartine, the two laſt engaging two ſhips lying cloſe to the ſhore with Hyder's colours flying on board them, but being ſtill anxious to proceed to the relief of Tellicherry, one of the Company's ſettlements on this coaſt, that had been beſieged nine months by the combined forces of the Nairs, aſſiſted by a detachment of Hyder Ally's troops; and its garriſon, by the information I had received at Anjengo, reduced to great want of every article eſſential to its longer defence, I continued my courſe to that place with the Burford in company which joined off Callicut, and arrived in Tellicherry road on the 27th, where I found two of the Company's armed ſnows, and a tranſport ſhip which had brought ſome ſtores and ammunition to the garriſon; in the mean time the armed boats of the ſhips in Callicut road cut out and brought from thence one of Hyder Ally's ſhips, and forced the other on ſhore; but in the courſe of their operations the Sartine being warped into ſhoal water to cannonade the ſhips, ſtruck on the rocks at low water, and filled ſo that ſhe was totally loſt, part of her ſails, topmaſts, booms, and ſome other ſtores, being all that could be ſaved out of her.

On the 28th I went on ſhore to Tellicherry at the requeſt of the Chief and Council at that place, to deliberate with them on what was beſt to be done in the then ſituation of that place; and prior to our meeting I received from them the letter of which No. 3 is a copy, and No. 4 a copy of my anſwer, by which your Lordſhip will obſerve that I ſtrongly urged the propriety of maintaining the place, and tendered them every aſſiſtance in my power for that purpoſe.

On the 28th and 29th the ſeveral ſhips of the ſquadron with the Company's ſhips Ponsborne and Contractor, tractor, merchant ſhips, joined me in Tellichery road, and on the 1ſt of December His Majeſty's ſhip Coventry joined me, laſt from Bombay; this ſhip I had ſent from Madras in February laſt with my public diſpatches, and a packet from that Preſidency to the Court of Directors, to be landed at Suez under the care of Mr. Wooley, who was charged with the conveyance of them over land; the Coventry did not get up the Red Sea quite as far as Suez, on account of contrary winds, but landed Mr. Wooley at Coſſier, a port not far diſtant from Suez, who proſecuted his journey to Cairo; and I hope the packets arrived ſafe in England.

By the Coventry I received a letter from the Select Committee of Bombay, dated the 13th November, of which No. 5 herewith enclоſed is a copy; by which your Lordſhip will obſerve that the Maratta war was ſtill uppermoſt in the minds of that Preſidency, notwithſtanding the known diſtreſs of the Company's affairs on the coaſt of Coromandel, and of their own ſettlement of Tellicherry.

After much correſpondence with the gentlemen of Tellicherry, of which No. 6 is a copy of the reſolutions of a council of war held there; No. 7 a copy of a letter from me to them; and No. 8, their anſwer thereto; will enable your Lordſhip to form a judgment; they came to an unanimous reſolution, to maintain the place until further orders from Bombay, provided a reinforcement of an hundred marines with their officers, and a thouſand barrels of powder, were landed from the ſquadron, and the Company's ſhips Pondborne and Contractor left in the road to keep the poſt open for ſupplies of proviſions; and having landed the marines and powder accordingly, I ſailed from Tellicherry road towards Bombay on the 5th of December, with all the ſquadron, except the Coventry left as a convoy to the trade up the coaſt, taking with me the Company's two armed ſnows.

On the 8th of December being off Mangalore, the principal ſea-port of Hyder Ally on the Malabar coaſt, I ſaw two ſhips, a large ſnow, three ketches, and many ſmaller veſſels, at an anchor in the road, with Hyder's colours flying on board; and ſtanding cloſe into the road found them veſſels of force and all armed for war; on which I anchored as cloſe to the enemy's ſhips as poſſible with ſafety, ordered the armed boats of the ſquadron to attack and deſtroy them, under the cover of the Company's two armed ſnows and the prize ſhip taken in Callicut Road, which were anchored in four fathoms water, and cloſe to the enemy's ſhips; this ſervice was conducted on the part of our boats with a ſpirit and activity that do much honour to the officers and men employed in them, and in two hours they took and burnt the two ſhips, one of 28 the other of 26 guns full of men for their defence; one ketch of 12 guns was blown up by the enemy at the inſtant our boats were boarding her; another ketch of 10 guns which cut her cables and endeavoured to get to ſea was taken; the third ketch with the ſmaller veſſels were driven on ſhore; and the ſnow only eſcaped into the harbour, having thrown every thing over board.

On this ſervice the ſquadron loſt Lieutenant Gom of the Burford and 10 men killed, Lieutenant Sutton of the Superb, Lieutenant Maclellan of the Eagle, and 51 men wounded: there were ſeveral of the enemy's ſhips and veſſels within the harbour, but ſo little depth of water on the bar at the entrance, that even the Company's ſnows could not go in without being lightened; and under the muzzles of the enemy's guns, with a garriſon of 4,000 men, who could wade to our boats when within the harbour, I did not think it practicable to deſtroy them by our boats alone without a very great loſs of men, and therefore early on the 9th I proceeded with the ſquadron for Bombay; and the ſame day was joined by the Coventry from Tellicherry road, which brought me letters from the Select Committee of Fort St. George and General Sir Eyre Coote, under dates the 12th and 15th November, of much importance to our affairs in this country, eſpecially the copy of Sir Eyre's letter to Brigadier General Goddard; copies of which, Nos. 9, 10, and 11, I now have the honour to enclоſe with this for your Lordſhip's information, by which, amongſt other misfortunes, your Lordſhip will obſerve the loſs of the capital of the province of Arcot, and the almoſt ruined ſtate of the army on the Madras eſtabliſhment.

On the 20th December I arrived here with the ſquadron in this harbour, and the ſame day iſſued orders for preparing the ſhips for docking and refitting with all poſſible expedition; on the 23d I met the Select Committee at their deſire, and entered with them into deliberation on the preſent ſtate of the Company's affairs both on the Coromandel coaſt and on this ſide of India; the the reſult of which your Lordſhip will ſee in No. 12, of this packet, being a copy of the minutes of our conſultation; at the ſame time I received from the Preſident, a copy of the letter from the Governor General and Council of Bengal to this Preſidency, with the copy of the treaty propoſed by the Governor General and Council of Bengal to the Peiſhwa and the Maratta Adminiſtration; of which letter and treaty I have the honour to enclоſe copies, Nos. 13 and 14, for your Lordſhip's information.

On the 24th I received a letter deſiring the aſſiſtance of his Majeſty's ſhips Worceſter and Coventry, on an expedition againſt the Maratta town and fort of Arnaul, ſituated on a ſmall iſland at the entrance of a river of that name, which forms the northern boundary of Baſſein; a copy of which letter, No. 15, I have the honour to enclоſe with this; and I ordered the Worceſter and Coventry on that ſervice accordingly, on which they are now employed, co-operating with the Company's armed veſſels, and a part of General Goddard's army, under Colonel Parker.

I have taken the liberty to trouble your Lordſhip with this minute detail of my tranſactions with His Majeſty's ſquadron under my command, as well as the moſt eſſential parts of my correſpondence with the ſeveral Preſidencies ſince my laſt addreſs to your Lordſhip, becauſe I think it neceſſary in the preſent ſituation of our affairs all over India, that your Lordſhip ſhould be furniſhed with every poſſible information.

The Marattas have as yet made no requiſition on their part to the Preſidency of Bombay, notwithſtanding the propoſed treaty has been received fourteen days ago at Poonah, their capital, diſtant only four days journey from Bombay; and until ſuch requiſition is made, this Preſidency is authorized by the Governor General and Council of Bengal, to proſecute the war againſt the Marattas; which they appear to me more diſpoſed to do, than to march the army under General Goddard into the dominions of Hyder Ally, to make the diverſion General Sir Eyre Coote thinks ſo neceſſary for the preſervation of the Carnatic againſt him, and which, indeed, they cannot do till a reconciliation with the Marattas takes place.

I beg leave to aſſure your Lordſhip that I will loſe no time in repairing and refitting His Majeſty's ſquadron under my command for ſervice and that the force entruſted under my direction ſhall be employed in the beſt manner I can for the defence of the Company's trade and ſettlements in this country; and I have the honour to enclоſe for your Lordſhip's farther information, Nos. 16 and 17 copies of the lateſt intelligence I have been able to procure from the Mauritius, by which your Lordſhip will judge of the naval and military force already accumulated at that place, and the expectations our enemies there have of ſtill greater additions to both.

No. 3.

To Sir Edward Hughes, Knight of the moſt honourable Order of the Bath, Rear Admiral of the Red, and Commander in Chief of His Majeſty's ſhips in the Eaſt Indies.

Sir,

1ſt. We were honoured with your letter of the 26th inſtant; and you may depend on our exerting ourſelves

in

in giving the ſquadron under your command every ſupply and aſſiſtance that our preſent ſituation will afford.

2d. The Honourable the Select Committee of Bombay were pleaſed to write us under the 23d September, that the war in which they are engaged with the Marattas requiring the utmoſt exertion of that Preſidency, and not permitting them to divert their reſources to any other object, they were not able to ſend us any further aſſiſtance after the diſpatch of the Royal Charlotte; and therefore unleſs the enemy ſhould withdraw from the attack, or the Government of Madras undertake to furniſh the neceſſary ſupplies of men and ſtores for our defence, they ſhould be under an abſolute neceſſity of abandoning this place.

3d. They further informed us, that they had then wrote fully to the Select Committee at Madras on the ſubject, and encloſed us a copy of their letter. Alſo, that the Select Committee at Madras had recommended to them that the Malabar Powers ſhould be excited to raiſe commotions, and revolt againſt Hyder's Government: that it would be a good meaſure ſhould we find the ſettlement was to be maintained; otherwiſe it would be only needleſsly expoſing the Nairs to his reſentment; and that therefore we were to act in this point according to the anſwer from the Select Committee at Madras.

4th. In conſequente of the above orders from the Select Committee of Bombay, we addreſſed a letter to the Select Committee at Madras, under the 9th ultimo, giving them an account of the ſtate of the Malabar country from the time Hyder Ally conquered it till the preſent period, with our ſentiments of the practicability of exciting a revolt among the Nairs, and their inclinations to co-operate, ſhould ſuch a meaſure be adopted. A copy of our letters accompanies this for your obſervation.

We have yet received no anſwer to the above letter from the Select Committee at Madras; but by your ſquadron have received one under the 13th ultimo, to which we beg leave to refer you.

In compliance therefore with the orders of the Select Committee of Bombay to communicate to you the ſituation of our affairs, on your arrival we ſhall proceed to lay the ſame before you.

We are, Sir, to inform you, that although we are confined within the limits of the diſtricts of this ſettlement, and have been from the firſt commencement of hoſtilities on the part of the Nairs, ſubject to Hyder; and ſince, by Hyder's troops under the command of an officer named Sader Cawn; that they have never yet been able to make any material impreſſion on our lines; and could the Preſidency of Bombay have afforded us, or could at this preſent period afford us, the ſupport of a battalion or two of Sepoys, with a proportion of Europeans, that we ſhould have been enabled to have acted offenſively againſt the enemy, and to have obliged them to retire. We have little doubt alſo, that had the ſtate of affairs on this coaſt admitted of ſuch ſupport, that it would have been productive of thoſe events ſo much wiſhed for by the Preſidency of Madras, as ſeveral of the Malabar Powers are at this period ripe for a revolt againſt Hyder's Government, and only wait for the moment when they ſhall find us in a ſituation to ſupport them, or rather indeed to ſupport ourſelves, in the maintenance of this ſettlement.

You, Sir, from the papers now before you, will perceive that the two Preſidencies, however much they wiſh to maintain and ſupport this ſettlement, doubt the practicability of it, engaged as they both are in a war with the Marattas and Hyder Ally; and therefore direct, that if driven to the lamentable neceſſity (for ſuch indeed we muſt term it, all circumſtances conſidered) to abandon the place to the enemy.

Your known zeal, Sir, for the intereſt of the Company, from which the national is in no ways diſtinct, has led our ſuperiors to direct we ſhould conſult and adviſe with you in our preſent ſituation: and as your knowledge of the preſent deſigns and intentions, both of the Supreme Council at Bengal and the Preſidency of Madras, as to their operations and views in the proſecution of the preſent war with Hyder Ally and the Marattas, renders you a far better judge than we can be in what degree the intereſt and honour of the Company may be affected by abandoning this ſettlement at this period; we hope to be favoured with your advice and opinion on this important ſubject. Appendix, No. 338.

We think it incumbent on us to make known to you, that the Eaſt India Company have been in poſſeſſion of this ſettlement ſince the year 1708, and have now to the number of 30,000 inhabitants living under their protection; all of whom, as well as thoſe Malabar Powers who have afforded us ſupport in our preſent troubles, and who have proved themſelves ſtaunch in the intereſt of the Company, and have even rejected all overtures made them by Hyder, look up to the Company for protection, and whoſe ruin muſt be complete if ever this ſettlement falls under Hyder's Government. Although it is our moſt earneſt deſire to put in execution the wiſhes of the Preſidency of Bombay in reſpect to this ſettlement, as far as we can judge of them, yet we ſhould feel the moſt ſenſible concern, if by any change in the preſent political ſyſtem of affairs, of which we are unacquainted, the defence and protection of this ſettlement might be conſidered of importance; which conſequently makes us ſo deſirous of obtaining your advice and opinion on the ſubject.

After this ſtatement of our ſituation, it is neceſſary to ſay ſomething as to the preſent ſtrength of the enemy now acting againſt us; that you, Sir, may be able to form a better judgment what meaſures are neceſſary to be taken, ſhould you adviſe and recommend the ſettlement being maintained until the further pleaſure of the different Preſidencies can be known, or until your ſquadrons return to Madras, ſhould it then be judged neceſſary to give it up. The troops under Sader Cawn, Hyder Ally's officer, from the beſt information we can obtain, conſiſt now only of about 3,000 Sepoys, and about 30 pieces of cannon; the Nairs, Moplas, and Tivas with him, are ſuppoſed to be about 6,000 men; but we have occaſion to believe, that ſince your attack upon Callicut, and appearance here, that he has drawn off about 2,000 men. Major Cotgrave, who is in command of our troops, and who has had a long experience of the enemy's condition and ſtrength, is well convinced, that they muſt fly before us the moment we can act on the offenſive; and would conſider himſelf in an ample ſituation ſo to do, had he an addition to his preſent force of 1,000 Sepoys, or half the number of European troops. If therefore, Sir, you ſhould be of opinion that it is political and adviſable, engaged as the Company at preſent are in a war with Hyder, to oblige his troops to retire from before this place, you will now be able to judge what aſſiſtance it would be neceſſary to afford from His Majeſty's ſquadron now under your command. Major Cotgrave is of opinion the ſervice would be very ſoon effected, and attended with every favourable conſequence we could wiſh or expect from it. As to the ſupplies of ſtores, we ſhall be able to hold out for ſome months to come, after the receiving the powder you have on board the ſquadron; and in reſpect to the article of rice, as we hope to collect from the ſhips under your convoy between two and three thouſand bags, we ſhall in this particular alſo be able to ſupply our garriſon until ſome of the Bengal ſhips may appear.

We have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your moſt obedient,
and moſt humble ſervants,

No. 4.

Gentlemen,

I have received your letter of the 28th of this month, in which after your promiſed aſſiſtance of a ſupply of every thing you can afford to His Majeſty's ſquadron under my command, you are pleaſed to inform me, that the Select Committee of Bombay, to which you are ſubordinate, had been pleaſed to write you under date the 23d September laſt, "that the war in which they "were engaged with the Marattas requiring the utmoſt "exertion of that Preſidency, and not permitting them "to divert their reſources to any other object, they "were not able to ſend any farther aſſiſtance after the "diſpatch of the ſhip Royal Charlotte, and therefore, "unleſs the enemy ſhould withdraw from the attack, or "the Government of Madras undertake to furniſh the "neceſſary ſupplies of men and ſtores for your defence, "they ſhould be under the abſolute neceſſity of abandon-"ing the place;" and in the third paragraph of your ſaid letter, you are pleaſed to inform me of your further inſtructions from the Preſidency of Bombay, under the ſame date, ſignifying that the Preſidency of Madras had recommended it as an eligible meaſure to excite the Malabar Powers to raiſe commotions and revolt againſt Hyder's Government, if you found the ſettlement in a condition to be defended, otherwiſe it would be only unneceſſarily expoſing the Nairs to his reſentment; and that therefore you were to act in that point according to the anſwer from the Select Committee of Madras. In your fourth paragraph, you are pleaſed to inform me, that you had written to the Preſidency of Madras, giving them a ſtate of the Malabar country, from the time Hyder Ally conquered it to the preſent period, with your ſentiments of the practicability of exciting a revolt amongſt the Nairs, and their inclinations to co-operate with you; to which you have as yet received no anſwer: and you then proceed, in compliance as you ſay with the orders of the Select Committee of Bombay, to communicate to me the ſtate of your affairs on my arrival here, and to conſult and adviſe with me under that ſituation, as my knowledge of the deſigns and intentions of the Supreme Council of Bengal and the Preſidency of Madras, as to their operations and views in the proſecution of the preſent war with Hyder Ally and the Marattas, renders me a far better judge than you can be, in what degree the intereſt and honour of the Company may be affected by abandoning your ſettlement at this period, and that you hope to be favoured with my advice and opinion on the important occaſion. In the ſubſequent paragraphs, you have ſtated, with a due ſenſe of honour and humanity, the ſituation of 30,000 inhabitants living under the Company's protection in your ſettlement, all of whom, as well as thoſe Malabar Powers who have afforded you ſupport in your preſent troubles, and who have proved themſelves ſtaunch in the Company's intereſts, and have even rejected all overtures made to them by Hyder Ally, look up to the Company for protection, and whoſe ruin muſt be complete if ever your ſettlement falls into Hyder's hands.

You then proceed to give me a ſtatement of the force of the enemy employed againſt you, and of the means which you think would be ſufficient to enable you to act, not only defenſively but offenſively againſt Hyder Ally and the Nairs.

Having deliberately conſidered every matter contained in your letter, as well as the inſtructions you have received from the Preſidency of Bombay, as the letter of the 13th of laſt month from the Preſidency of Fort St. George, and alſo the ſtate and condition of the ſettlement and its inhabitants as you have repreſented it; and having alſo maturely weighed the great difference which has ariſen in the ſtate of the Company's affairs, both as to war and politics, ſince the date of your laſt inſtructions from Bombay, and the letter from Fort Saint George; I am clearly of opinion that you ought not to evacuate the ſettlement until you have farther orders from Bombay; and to enable you to hold out againſt the enemy until ſuch farther orders arrive, I will order you a ſupply of ſuch a proportion of ammunition, military ſtores, and proviſions, as can be ſpared from the ſquadron under my command, and immediately diſpatch letters to the Preſidencies of Bombay and Fort Saint George, to urge them to furniſh you with ample ſuccours; and if you ſtand in need of money for the immediate ſervice, I will direct a ſupply to be furniſhed you for your bills on the Preſidency of Bombay.

No. 6.

At a Council of War held in Tellicherry, 28th November 1780; preſent, Major John Cotgrave, Captain David Muirhead, Captain William Seward, Acting Captain Thomas Smith, Lieutenant Peter Campbell.

Major John Cotgrave, commanding officer of the forces, lays before the Council a letter which he this day received from the Select Committee of Madras; wherein he is ordered to return to the coaſt of Coromandel with the Madras troops. He alſo acquaints the Council of an offer made this day by Sir Edw^d Hughes, K. B. and Commander in Chief of His Majeſty's ſhips in the Eaſt Indies viz. that for the preſervation of the Honourable Company's ſettlement of Tellicherry he will exert his utmoſt, and offers to land from eight hundred to one thouſand men from the ſquadron under his command, for the ſpace of two or three days, if Major Cotgrave thought, with their aſſiſtance, he could diſpoſſeſs the enemy of their poſts and drive them away.

The opinion of the Council is, that this ſervice could not be effected in ſo ſhort a time: and even was it poſſible to do it, the poſts could not be maintained, having ſo few troops in this garriſon, nor could the works be deſtroyed without a vaſt deal of labour and time.

The Admiral further ſaid, for the honour of the Britiſh nation, he thought it of the utmoſt importance to defend this ſettlement to the laſt extremity; and if the Major thought he could do it in one month, with the aſſiſtance of one hundred men from the ſquadron, he would land them, and immediately on his arrival at Bombay repreſent to the Board, and inſiſt on their ſending ſo ſtrong a reinforcement to put its ſafety beyond doubt. And the Admiral ſtill further added, from the alteration in the Company's affairs ſince the date of the letter from the Select Committee to Major Cotgrave, he was certain it would be more to the advantage of our honourable maſters, that Major Cotgrave, with the Madras troops under his command, ſhould remain and defend Tellicherry in preference to returning to the coaſt of Coromandel, agreeable to orders received.

The opinion of the Council is, that with the aſſiſtance of two hundred men (Europeans) ſeven hundred barrels of gunpowder, four hundred coolies (able bodied men) to work daily, a plenty of proviſion, and eight or ten twelve pounder guns, the ſettlement may be defended againſt the preſent enemy.

Gentlemen,

I have received the pleaſure of your letter of yeſterday, and applaud your reſolution of maintaining your ſettlement, and am happy that it has been in my power to contribute ſuch aſſiſtance as you and Major Cotgrave

judge

judge will be adequate to your defence until a reinforcement from Bombay can arrive.

The detachment of marines conſiſting of one Captain, four Lieutenants, and one hundred and eight rank and file, will be landed this afternoon about 4 o'clock; and I beg leave to recommend both the officers and men to your particular attention and kindneſs.

There are 37,000 ſtar pagodas on board the Superb, the whole or any part of which you may have for the public ſervice for your bills drawn on your Preſidency; and you will be pleaſed to ſend a proper perſon on board the Superb to receive it.

With my letter of this date to Major Cotgrave, I have ſent a copy of my order to Captain O'Farrel, who commands the detachment of marines, with a requeſt that he would communicate it to you for your information.

So ſoon as my diſpatches for Anjengo and Bombay are ready, I will ſend them to you that you may diſpatch the Pattamar boat with them.

To Sir Edward Hughes, Knight of the moſt honourable Order of the Bath, Rear Admiral of the Red, and Commander in Chief of His Majeſty's Ships in the Eaſt Indies.

Sir,

We have been honoured with your letter of yeſterday's date, and one of this morning, encloſing copy of the orders you have given to the Ponſborne and Contractor.

It is with particular ſatisfaction we have received your approbation of our maintaining this ſettlement till further orders; and we hope with the aſſiſtance you have been pleaſed to afford us, to be able to preſerve it,

We are much obliged to you, Sir, for your offer of money, and in conſequence have received of Arthur Cuthbert, Eſq. the ſum of 22,000 ſtar pagodas, for which we have given him bills on the Preſidency.

Major Cotgrave has communicated to us copy of your order to Captain O'Farrel, and you may be aſſured that every attention and kindneſs in our power ſhall be ſhewn to the officers and men.

We have directed Captains Willm Robinſon and Joſeph Alderſon, of the Drake and Eagle cruizers, to obey your orders.

We wiſh you a ſpeedy paſſage to Bombay, and ſucceſs in your operations.

We have the honour to be,

Select Committee.

To Sir Edward Hughes, Knight of the moſt honourable Order of the Bath, Rear Admiral of the Red, and Commander in Chief of His Majeſty's Ships in the Eaſt Indies.

Sir,

The Coventry now proceeding to join the ſquadron, and Captain Mitchell having made an offer of his ſervices on the paſſage, we have requeſted him to do his utmoſt to take or deſtroy any veſſels he may meet with belonging to Hyder Ally or the Marattas, with both which Powers the Company are now at war, and to diſtreſs the common enemy by every means in his power; which we flatter ourſelves will meet with your approbation. Appendix. No. 339.

We have alſo recommended to him to touch at Tellicherry, and give the garriſon every ſupport and countenance in his power during his continuance there. We are quite ignorant of the ſtate of affairs there, and in a ſtate of anxiety, not having any accounts from thence later than the 10th of Auguſt, in conſequence of which we have already addreſſed you in duplicate, under the 23d September.

General Goddard is juſt arrived before Baſſein, and operations will ſoon be commenced againſt that place. We have a ſtrong body of forces near the foot of the Ghauts which we hope will prevent the enemy from venturing into the low country, or interrupting the ſiege of Baſſein.

We hope this will meet you on the coaſt of Malabar, and that we ſhall ſhortly have the pleaſure of ſeeing you at Bombay. In the mean time we remain, with the higheſt eſteem and reſpect,

APPENDIX, No. 339.

Extract of Bombay Select Conſultations, the 12th December 1780;—preſent, the Honourable William Hornby, Eſquire, Preſident and Governor; Daniel Draper, Nathaniel Stackhouſe, Eſquires.

THE Preſident lays before us the following plan of meaſures he would propoſe to be now purſued in conſequence of the reduction of Baſſein; and the ſame being deliberately conſidered is entirely approved, and muſt be immediately tranſmitted to the General, with a ſtrong recommendation from us immediately to purſue the meaſures therein propoſed, which we flatter ourſelves will coincide with his ſentiments. President's plan of operations propoſed by him laid before the Committee.

The ſurrender of Baſſein makes it unneceſſary to ſend the large ſupply of gunpowder requeſted by General Goddard in his letter of the 10th, and which we could but ill afford to ſpare.

The Preſident's Plan of Operations he propoſes to be purſued in conſequence of the Reduction of Baſſein.

The reduction of Baſſein being now happily accompliſhed, I think it will be proper that the General ſhould be recommended immediately to acquaint the Poonah Miniſtry; that if they are convinced of the ſuperiority of our arms, and are deſirous of peace on equitable and moderate terms, he is ſtill ready to enter into treaty with them on this ſubject; at the ſame time ſupporting the offer with ſuch motions of his army as may ſeem moſt likely to enforce the acceptance of it, keeping ſtill in mind the main object of the campaign, the complete reduction of the Conkan. It is not improbable that Nana may accept the offer of a treaty with a view to gain time; this can only be known by the event, and need give him no advantage. We ought, I think, to be perſuaded of his ſincerity, and without delaying the buſineſs we have to accompliſh, encourage as much as poſſible the idea of the certain and inevitable concluſion of peace; for a perſuaſion of this ſort would prove one of the moſt powerful motives with all the Killedars in this country to make their terms, and would be an encouragement to the inhabitants to return, and would thus contribute to ſettle the country more ſpeedily and advantageouſly under our Government than it can otherways be done; ſo that whether Nana meant peace, or only only procraſtination, we ſhould draw our advantage from his accepting the offer of a treaty. The General ought, I think, to move his army immediately to the ſouth eaſt, without remaining at Baſſein now it is taken, becauſe great promptitude in his motions would tend to confound the enemy and improve the impreſſion made by the fall of Baſſein; he need not however be in too great a hurry, but ſhould, I think, ſhew himſelf before Mowle, Byramgur, Shetgur, and all the way along the foot of the Ghants to the ſouthward, where there are a line of forts juſt below the Ghauts, and of very great importance to the tranquillity of the country, ſummoning them to ſurrender, but not ſuffering himſelf to be detained by ſuch as are abſolutely inacceſſible, and ſeem determined on reſiſtance; but of the firſt that could be taken after ſlighting the ſummons, a ſevere example ſhould be made; as after the reduction of Baſſein, which may be conſidered as the capital, reſiſtance in the other places of leſs note ought not to be held juſtifiable, and if theſe little places are encouraged by an ill-timed lenity to hold out, we may probably find our conqueſt of Baſſein very unprofitable to us for a conſiderable time to come. While the General is advancing he will be ſuppoſed ſtill to have an expedition in view to Poonah, and ſo long as this idea laſts we ſhall have leiſure for effecting our real purpoſe of completing the reduction of this country, as the enemy will hardly defcend the Ghauts with their main army, but will probably reſerve it for what they will think a purpoſe of infinitely greater conſequence, the defence of the capital, and expect to meet us with advantages in the Decan far ſuperior to any they can hope for below the Ghauts.

Bombay, 12th December 1780. William Hornby.

Enclоſure in Sir Edward Hughes's Packet to Lord Hillſborough, Secretary of State.

No. 12.

Bombay Caſtle, 23d December 1780.—At a Select Committee; preſent, the Honourable William Hornby, Eſquire, Preſident and Governor; Rear Admiral Sir Edward Hughes, K. B. Daniel Draper, Eſquire, Brigadier General Thomas Goddard, Nathaniel Stackhouſe, Eſquire.

The Admiral now meeting the Committee in conſequence of our deſire ſignified to him yeſterday by the Secretary, the ſtate of the Company's affairs, ſo far as they can be affected by our reſolutions, is taken under our moſt attentive conſideration, the ſeveral neceſſary Papers having been previouſly read.

The Admiral declares it to be his opinion, that the ſafety and preſervation of the Company's ſettlements on the coaſt of Coromandel, and the army under Sir Eyre Coote, depend on this Preſidency being able to make ſome vigorous effort againſt the poſſeſſions of Hyder Ally on this coaſt; and urges in ſtrong terms the neceſſity of a ſpeedy peace with the Marattas, to enable us to act with our whole force againſt Hyder, who now threatens deſtruction to the Carnatic and even Fort Saint George itſelf, if aided by a body of French which there now appears a great probability may be introduced into the country.

The Select Committee then proceeded, aſſiſted by the Admiral and the General, to conſider the ſeveral important matters before them, and the ſentiments delivered by the Admiral, in which they allow there is great weight; and having duly weighed every circumſtance, the following is the reſult of their deliberation, in which the Admiral and General concur.

That in the unhappy ſituation to which affairs at Madras are now reduced, a peace with the Marattas is moſt ardently to be wiſhed for, that we may have it in our power to make a vigorous attack againſt the poſſeſſions of Hyder Ally on this coaſt; but at the ſame time it muſt be admitted as an abſolute impoſſibility that we can make any effectual diverſion in their favour until the Maratta war is brought to ſome concluſion, as this Preſidency might ſoon be reduced to as bad a ſituation as Madras; or the Marattas united with Hyder might complete the ruin of that Preſidency were we ſo far to weaken our army as to diſable it from acting with vigour againſt them or to relieve them from further apprehenſions of the effects they have experienced of our force.

A purſuit of the Maratta war with all poſſible vigour, as recommended by the Honourable the Governor General and Council, promiſes to promote a ſpeedy accommodation ſooner than any other plan of conduct, till when it will not be in our power to act with vigour or effect againſt Hyder; and indeed our own ſafety as well as the general ſafety of the Company's poſſeſſions abſolutely requires that we ſhould either find employment in this quarter for the Marattas, or bring them to terms of accommodation.

In theſe circumſtances therefore it would be in the higheſt degree imprudent and impolitic, were we by any diviſion of our troops to diſable ourſelves from purſuing the line of conduct ſo neceſſary for the general ſafety.

Whilſt the neceſſity of our co-operating with the Preſidency of Madras againſt Hyder is ſo obvious and apparent, we can eaſily conceive how much it will add to their diſtreſs and diſappointment, if inſtead of giving our aſſiſtance, we abandoned the only place of ſtrength we poſſeſs in his dominions, the attack whereof at this time occupies a part of his force, which in that caſe might be added to the numbers of the enemy now in the field againſt them; we are therefore very earneſt in our wiſhes to maintain Tellicherry, at leaſt until we can form a better judgment what probability there is of the Marattas accepting the proffered terms, or of the war being otherwiſe brought to a concluſion. We are ſtrengthened in this diſpoſition not only by the reaſons which militate againſt withdrawing the ſettlement at this particular time, but alſo by the difficulties we can foreſee would ariſe even in the execution of an attempt to evacuate the place, which no doubt would be oppoſed by the auxiliary Nairs, as well as the numerous inhabitants, whoſe ſafety is involved with our continuance there; ſo that we think the garriſon could not be withdrawn with ſafety until rendered ſufficiently ſtrong firſt to diſlodge the enemy: this meaſure may be taken under conſideration on the return of the fleet, when we ſhall be better able to judge what probability there is of our wiſhes for peace being accompliſhed.

On conſulting with the General reſpecting the ſtate of the forces, we are of opinion we can furniſh a defenſive garriſon for Tellicherry, without diſabling him from an active proſecution of the war againſt the Marattas; and two battalions of Sepoys being judged fully ſufficient for that purpoſe, and to relieve the Madras Sepoys now there, which is abſolutely neceſſary, and likewiſe Captain Seward's, as recommended by the Reſident and factors; reſolved accordingly, that two complete battalions be ſent down by an early opportunity, which we ſhall take care to provide; and that Major Cotgrave with the Madras Sepoys be returned to Anjengo: on the arrival of the troops from Bombay, Captain Seward's battalion may be detained for a further time if judged neceſſary: we are inclined to think it may not be impracticable before the Madras detachment is returned to make an effort with ſucceſs, to diſlodge the enemy from their works.

If it ſhould be found neceſſary, in order to furniſh the force for Tellicherry, a part of the Sepoys may be drafted from the northward, the importance of defending our poſſeſſions there being leſſened by the probability of their being reſtored to the Marattas and the moſt conſiderable part of the revenues for this ſeaſon will ſoon be collected.

We can only in general recommend to General Goddard to purſue purſue his operations againſt the Marattas with all poſſible vigour, and to the utmoſt extent he may find practicable with the force under his command, and we think nothing would tend more to the ſpeedy accompliſhment of a peace, than ſome deciſive advantage gained over the enemy in the field.

The firſt immediate object of his operations being the reduction of Arnaul, and the General repreſenting that His Majeſty's ſhips and ſeamen might be of great uſe in the undertaking, the Committee at his inſtance now make a requeſt to the Admiral to ſpare two ſhips for this ſervice. The Admiral on their requiſition readily agrees to ſpare the Worceſter and Coventry, upon its being repreſented to him, that the ſervice will not in all probability detain them more than ſeven or eight days, and that the diſtance is ſo ſmall they may be recalled in 24 hours, ſhould it be found neceſſary.

The neceſſary orders muſt be given to the commander of the Company's ſhips now on the Arnaul ſtation.

N° 15.

Select Committee,

To Sir Edward Hughes, Knight of the Bath, Rear Admiral of the Red, and Commander in Chief of His Majeſty's ſhips in the Eaſt Indies.

Sir,

IT being judged abſolutely neceſſary to proſecute the war againſt the Marattas with all poſſible vigour, in order to bring them to terms of accommodation; and the reduction of the fort of Arnaul being a material object in which the Commander in Chief has repreſented, that the aſſiſtance of His Majeſty's ſhips might be of eſſential ſervice; we were induced by this conſideration, and our experience of your zeal for the Company's intereſt, to requeſt, when we had the honour to meet you this morning, that you would ſpare two of His Majeſty's ſhips to co-operate with the Company's forces and veſſels in this undertaking, which in all probability will not detain them more than ſeven or eight days, and the diſtance is ſo ſmall, that they may be recalled within 24 hours ſhould you find it neceſſary.

Arnaul is a fort ſituated upon a ſmall iſland at the entrance of a river of that name, which forms the northern boundary of the iſland of Baſſein, from which place it is only diſtant about twelve miles. The poſſeſſion of that place is therefore highly neceſſary to ſecure Baſſein from interruption, whilſt the Company's troops may be employed in a more diſtant quarter; nor will it in that caſe be prudent to leave in the hands of the enemy a place of ſtrength immediately adjoining the Company's poſſeſſions, and without which the conqueſt of Baſſein is not complete.

We thank you for the readineſs with which you conſented to ſpare the Worceſter and Coventry for this ſervice, which we flatter ourſelves will with their aſſiſtance be effected without any material difficulty. We ſhall give inſtructions to Commodore Neſbit, now commanding the Company's ſhips on that ſtation, to communicate to the commanding officer of His Majeſty's ſhips every information in his power that may be uſeful in the execution of this ſervice, and to obey all ſuch orders as may be given him. We alſo beg leave to requeſt, that you will give inſtructions to the naval officers to co-operate with General Goddard, who on his part will exert every effort in his power in concert with them, to enſure ſucceſs to this enterprize. We have the honour to be, with the greateſt reſpect and eſteem, Extract of Bombay Select Conſultations, the 11th February 1781;—preſent, the Honourable William Hornby, Eſquire, Preſident and Governor; Daniel Draper, Eſquire, and Nathaniel Stackhouſe, Eſquire.

THE Preſident now lays before us an extract of a letter he wrote to the General under the 8th inſtant; and as we entirely concur with him in the propriety of what he has therein ſuggeſted; ordered, that it be entered after this conſultation, and another copy immediately tranſmitted to the General, leſt any accident ſhould have happened to the original.

Preſident. the Honourable William Hornby, Eſquire, letter from him to General Goddard approved.

Extract of a Letter from the Preſident to General Goddard.

With reſpect to your going to Poonah, I do not know what effect it may have in bringing the Marattas to terms or of accepting the propoſals made to them by the Governor General and Council of Calcutta, through Moodajee Bouncello; but I think and recommend that you ſhould take Raja Matchee, as it may be very uſeful in many reſpects, both for lodging your proviſions, &c. and as a place to which you may return, ſhould it be found neceſſary; indeed I think it would be riſking too much the going with your army too far into the Decan in the preſent poſture of affairs with enemies on all ſides; for ſhould the French appear at this place, we have no force here to oppoſe them, ſhould any unforeſeen accident happen to your army, and the ſquadron have left this place; all which are matters of ſuch conſequence, that ſhould not be forgot by you, nor do I think the appearing at or before Poonah will be of any conſequence; as it is an open town, they will certainly abandon it, and fly to ſome of their ſtrong holds or forts; and I underſtand that all the merchants and people of conſequence with their property have been for ſome time removed.

8th February 1781.

To the Honourable the Secret Committee of the Honourable the Court of Directors of the United Company of Merchants of England trading to the Eaſt Indies.

Honourable Gentlemen,

1. We addreſſed you laſt in duplicate, under the 11th of January, via Buſſorah; and Mr. Lateuch has acquainted us, that he tranſmitted you another copy: we now ſend a further tranſcript.

2. We have now to adviſe, that the period limited by the Governor General and Council for the acceptance of the terms offered to the Poonah Durbar, expired the 9th of this month, without their having declared their acceptance of them; and conſequently they remain no longer in force. General Goddard, after the reduction of Baſſein and Arnaul, marched to the gauts, forced the enemy's poſt, and gained poſſeſſion of the paſs of Bhore Gaut; ſoon after a Maratta agent came into the camp, but without any powers or credentials from the Miniſter himſelf, and expreſſed in general terms the deſire of the Marattas for peace; and aſked what conditions we expected. In the firſt and every ſtage of this intercourſe (for it did not amount to a negociation) the Maratta profeſſed entire ignorance of the terms offered, by the Governor General and Council, through the medium of the Rajah of Berar; on which account, and to convince them of our pacific diſpoſition, we deſired the General to ſend a copy of the articles directly to the Miniſters; having no doubt at the ſame time, but that he was perfectly acquainted with the particulars. The General did accordingly tranſmit them, with a letter of the moſt friendly profeſſions, and received a reply containing a poſitive refuſal to accede to the offered terms; which he ſays were not approved by the Rajah of Berar, who had for that reaſon ſent them back to the Governor General and Council: and the Miniſter alſo ſays, that conditions for another Power muſt be included in whatever treaty may be made with the Marattas; by which we underſtood he meant Hyder Ally. It is to be obſerved, the Miniſter ſent to the General the firſt advice we received of the arrival of the French fleet on the coaſt of Coromandel, which muſt have reached the Maratta camp after the firſt overture had been made, and probably influenced him in his ſubſequent determination. As we have thus loſt all immediate proſpect of a peace with the Marattas; and every object we had propoſed to acquire in the courſe of the war being accompliſhed, we have taken meaſures, in concert with General Goddard, to confine our future operations to a mere plan of defence, and the ſecurity and preſervation of our preſent acquiſitions; to reduce as much as poſſible the enormous charges attending the army, and to yield what aſſiſtance we can to the Preſidency of Fort Saint George: the General will accordingly make a ſuitable diſpoſition to protect and cover our poſſeſſions, and for the defence of Bombay, in caſe of neceſſity; and we are preparing to ſend back all the Fort Saint George troops ſerving on this coaſt: by which our military charges will be greatly reduced, and the army under General Coote ſtrengthened with a very conſiderable reinforcement. The meaſure, which we have taken for the general ſafety of our poſſeſſions, makes it doubly neceſſary that you ſhould comply with our repeated requeſts for a ſupply of European recruits. We are concerned to be at the ſame time under a neceſſity of putting our former reſolution into execution, of withdrawing from Tellicherry, as fully explained in our laſt letter, which will be done as ſoon as ſhipping can be prepared for tranſporting the Fort Saint George troops, in which we have requeſted the aſſiſtance of the Admiral.

We have received advice from the Select Committee at Fort Saint George, and have ſeen other authentic accounts, of a French ſquadron which appeared off that place on the 25th, 26th, and 27th of January, conſiſting of and commanded by Chevalier D'Orves. The commander of a country veſſel which was taken and ranſomed, and who was on board the French admiral, gives an account, that there did not appear to be any conſiderable number of military on board, and they have no tranſports. By a private letter from Fort Saint George, dated 1ſt of February, we find they proceeded to the ſouth, without making any attempt on the five Indiamen then in the road, with a number of veſſels laden with grain and proviſions; the deſtroying of which might have been eaſily accompliſhed, and would have been ſeverely felt. They arrived at Pondicherry the 29th of January; but it is ſuppoſed they have neither a ſtock of proviſions, nor can procure a ſupply ſufficient to enable them to continue long upon the coaſt of Coromandel.

It is ſaid the arrival of the French fleet has not prevented General Coote from purſuing his operations: the General has retaken Carangoly, and the enemy withdrawn the troops, with which for many weeks they have been beſieging Vellore, Permacoil, and Wandewaſh. Hyder Ally was alſo employed in moving his heavy cannon and ſtores from Arcot; but it ſeemed to be the general opinion, he will not withdraw his army before he has hazarded a battle.

The fleet under Admiral Hughes will ſail for the coaſt of Coromandel about the 20th of next month.

We are with great reſpect,

APPENDIX, No. 342.

Extract of Bombay Select Conſultations, the 15th February 1781.

RECEIVED the following letter from General Goddard.

Goddard General's letter from.

Gentlemen,

I beg leave to make you acquainted with a circumſtance that has occurred, which though of the moſt important nature, and on a ſubject at preſent the moſt intereſting to us of all others, I find it impoſſible to form any certain judgment of what may be the probable reſult, or how far it may be conſidered as favourable to our views. I ſhall however proceed without further preface to make you acquainted with the particulars.

Yeſterday, the 12th inſtant, a man arrived from the enemy's camp, ſent, as he previouſly intimated to me, from the Maratta Miniſter. His name is Runſoor Senoy; and I underſtand that he was many years ago employed by the Poonah Government to tranſact their affairs with the Preſidency of Bombay where he reſided a long time in the character of their Vackeel. Upon admitting him to a conference, I found that the letter he had brought was not from Nana Purneſſe himſelf, but from Byroo Pundit, a perſon who Runſoor informed me, and indeed I had heard myſelf from other authorities, was a good deal in the Miniſter's confidence. I expreſſed my ſurprize that he ſhould have neglected to provide himſelf with the credentials of his being really employed by Nana, and without which I told him it was improper for me to enter into any converſation with him. He made many apologies for the neglect, principally founded upon the doubts the Miniſter pretended to entertain of the friendly diſpoſition of the Engliſh towards him; and added ſuch ſtrong verbal aſſurances of the ſincere intentions of the latter, that though not convinced by his arguments, I thought it moſt expedient for the public good to acquieſce in his propoſal of being heard at this time, and give this proof of my readineſs to concur in any proper meaſures for terminating the difference now ſubſiſting, rather than by too nice a regard to ceremonious forms, throw any obſtacle in the way of a reconciliation that was ſo much the object of our deſire and intereſt.

The letter from Byroo Punt was in general terms acquainting me with the earneſt deſire of the Miniſter to conclude a peace: and his having diſpatched Runſoor Senoy to converſe with me upon certain points, to which if my anſwer proved favourable, he would immediately ſend an ambaſſador to me with full powers from the Sircar to conclude a treaty.

Runſoor began by declaring on the part of Nana his ſincere and friendly intentions towards the Engliſh, and his deſire of immediately entering into an alliance with them. He did not condeſcend upon any particular or ſpecific conditions for effecting this alliance, but affected to conſider it as a point that might be attained without any difficulty, if both parties were but ſincere in their deſire deſire of accompliſhing it. On this head I thought it ſufficient on my part to make the ſame general aſſurances which the Miniſter had communicated to me through him, and he ſeemed to be perfectly ſatisfied with them.

The other point, and that on which he laid the greateſt ſtreſs, related to Hyder Ally; here he ſaid the Miniſter found himſelf a good deal embarraſſed; he had lately received letters from Sir Eyre Coote propoſing to him to conclude a peace with the Engliſh, and unite his forces with theirs againſt Hyder. He affirmed on this head, that however willing he was to conſider Hyder Ally an enemy to the Maratta State, which he had always proved himſelf, and at this time was in poſſeſſion of a country belonging to the Sircar, and yielding a revenue of ſixty lacks of rupees, it was impoſſible for the Miniſter to commence hoſtilities againſt him immediately, on account of engagements they had lately formed together; that he therefore propoſed to write to Hyder, acquainting him with the arrival of the Engliſh army at the top of the gauts; that he had thought it expedient to enter into an alliance of friendſhip with them, in which he intended that Hyder alſo ſhould be included; and the reſult of this plan, he added, would be, that as Hyder's anſwer would furniſh him with a ſufficient pretext for breaking with him, the united arms of the Engliſh and Marattas ſhould take the field immediately after the rains, and march into his country. The reaſon he gave for delaying the operations to that period was, that before an anſwer could be received to the letter he now propoſed writing, the ſeaſon of action would be nearly over, and the rains at hand, which muſt render it impoſſible for an army to keep the field. He further added, that even admitting, that it was in every other reſpect convenient for him to break with Hyder and enter upon action immediately, the ſeaſon is already too far ſpent to enable us to make any conſiderable progreſs. Runſoor concluded this ſubject with declaring, that it was not the intention of Nana to defer the concluſion of the treaty betwixt the Engliſh and the Maratta State, which he wiſhed ſhould be executed immediately, and that what related to Hyder ſhould remain ſecret in a ſeparate private treaty; beſides which, if any doubts were entertained of the Sircar's ſincerity, he offered to deliver up to the Engliſh a man of the firſt conſequence as a hoſtage, in which caſe he alſo would expect the ſame.

Having maturely conſidered the important objects to which this propoſal relative to Hyder muſt lead, and the neceſſary attention it deſerved in the preſent ſtate of our affairs, I expreſſed in general terms my ſatisfaction with the ſentiments thus communicated to me by the Miniſter, and the mutual advantages which muſt accrue from the proſecution of the plan he had laid down. At the ſame time I thought it prudent to avoid entering more particularly into the ſubject, by pointing out any mode of attack, either with reſpect to time or place, or indeed by propoſing any conditions of mutual benefit as the baſis of our compact againſt Hyder. Theſe points I conceived could only be diſcuſſed with any propriety when a public Vackeel ſhould arrive; when it appeared that any reaſonable dependance could be placed upon the ſincerity of the Maratta Government, and when your ſentiments ſhould be tranſmitted to me on the important ſubjects now communicated, and your inſtructions founded on them be received for my future guidance. The man returned to the enemy's camp early this morning: and as the Miniſter is encamped beyond Tilliagong, the time neceſſary for going there and returning, together with that requiſite for the diſcuſſion and preparation of the important points to be afterwards adjuſted, will occaſion a delay of eight days, at the expiration of which he declared a public Vackeel would arrive in my camp.

The time thus limited will cauſe no inconvenience, or even delay in my operations, as I hope that interval will be uſefully employed in receiving the neceſſary ſupplies of proviſions from Bellapore, and give you leiſure to weigh fully the ſubjects on which I have ſolicited your ſentiments, and which I ſhall wait for with the greateſt impatience. Appendix. No. 342.

In the courſe of converſation with Runſoor, he gave me to underſtand, though it is a circumſtance by no means probable, that the propoſals from Bengal had never been received by Nana, but that Moodajee Booſla, through whom they were ſent, finding no ſatisfactory offer made relative to Ragoba, had returned them. Suppoſing this to have been actually the caſe, the copy of theſe propoſals will no doubt have been ſent them by Moodajee, and as it appears they do not mean to produce the original, there is reaſon to ſuſpect that either Moodajee muſt have been averſe to it, and deſignedly prevented the ſucceſs of the propoſed compact againſt Hyder, or that the Marattas themſelves have ſuppreſſed theſe propoſals, with a view of obtaining more favourable conditions in a preſent treaty with us; though this laſt ſuggeſtion is, I muſt confeſs, very unlikely and improbable.

Upon the whole, and indeed their own declarations confirm this opinion, the variety of channels through which application have been made to them, while it tends to perplex and confound, fills their minds with diſtruſt and diffidence of the powers veſted in any individual with whom they may treat, and an apprehenſion of the invalidity of the terms which may be concluded upon under ſuch circumſtances.

This ſubject leads me to mention another fact which Runſoor communicated to me, and affirmed to have been one very principal reaſon why the Miniſter had deferred for ſome days ſending him to me. I know the various artifices practiſed by theſe people, and therefore do not put much confidence in his aſſertion; but as Admiral Sir Edward Hughes is on the ſpot, who can ſatisfy you with reſpect to the truth of it, or otherwiſe, I ſhall only mention the circumſtance, and refer you to him for further information.' Runſoor told me that a Muſſulman, named Bapoo Cout, arrived in the Maratta camp, ſent, as he ſaid, from Admiral Sir Edward Hughes, with a verbal meſſage to the following effect: "that the Governments "of Bengal and Bombay had violated peace, and waged "an unjuſt war againſt the Maratta State; that he, (the "Admiral) was veſted with full powers, and deſirous of "putting an end to hoſtilities, by reſtoring to them what "had been taken, and therefore wiſhed to be ac- "quainted with their complaints." No anſwer was given by the Miniſter, but the man ordered to depart immediately.

I have fully weighed this circumſtance in my own mind, and if Runſoor's information is true, am convinced that this man muſt have acted without authority; ſince Admiral Sir Edward Hughes would never have ſent a meſſage of any particular nature, to a Power with whom we were actually engaged in war, and propoſing to conclude a treaty upon the inſtructions received from the Governor General and Council, without firſt communicating his intentions to your Committee and to myſelf, who are intruſted with the management of this alliance, as an oppoſite conduct from the appearance it carries of diſunion and differing intereſts cannot but be productive of the greateſt inconvenience and detriment to the public ſervice.

I have wrote you ſeveral letters on the ſubject of ſupplies of proviſions for the army, to which I know it is unneceſſary further to call your attention. In a letter of this date I have enclоſed for your peruſal an addreſs from the Commiſſary General, and now beg leave to ſubmit to your conſideration another from Mr. Horſely, the Commiſſary of your detachment. The propriety of his requeſt, and the juſtneſs of the arguments which he uſed to enforce it, both with regard to what relates to himſelf, and the future proſecution of the ſervice, ſtrikes me in ſo forcible and particular a manner, that I find it unneceſſary to add any thing to what he has repreſented, Goddard, Brigadier General, the manner in which he treated the Maratta agent, approved.

We can only expreſs our approbation of the manner in which the General appears to have treated the Maratta agent, but do not think it material to enter into any further diſcuſſion on the ſubject of the General's letter, till an agent arrives with proper credentials from the Miniſter himſelf, and there appears a greater certainty of a negociation taking place.

An extract of thoſe paſſages relative to the Admiral has been delivered to him, which we ſuppoſe he will of courſe explain.

Extract of Bombay Diary, the 7th March 1781.

Wedneſday 7th.

Received the following letter from General Goddard, with the encloſed paper.

Goddard, General, letter from.

Gentlemen,

Having received early this morning the Miniſter's expected reply to my letter ſent him the 1ſt inſtant, I loſe no time in communicating it to you; and that you may be enabled to judge more fully of the real diſpoſition and intention of the Maratta Government, I have encloſed an exact tranſlation of his letter to me, together with a copy of mine, to which his is an anſwer.

This letter I can but conſider as an abſolute refuſal of the offers of the Government of Bengal, and proves beyond a doubt what I have all along had reaſon to ſuſpect, the exiſtence of an alliance and connection with Hyder Ally, which has for its principal object a mutual league againſt the Engliſh nation; and that Hyder is expreſsly alluded to in that part of the Miniſter's letter, when he ſays that if I am fervent in my deſire of friendſhip, it is requiſite that I make a treaty, which ſhall include the propoſals of ſuch perſons who are allied to and connected with the Sircar.

Having therefore no grounds to expect that the Miniſter will in the moſt diſtant degree be inclined to enter into our preſent views againſt Hyder by any further attempt to negociate on my part, and indeed thoroughly perſuaded that no terms could now in policy be propoſed to the Maratta Government, that had not the mutual proſecution of the war againſt Hyder for its expreſs and ſole object, the preſent expediency and neceſſity of which could alone juſtify any further ſacrifice on our ſide, I have determined to conſider the Miniſter's anſwer, as it is certainly intended by him, deciſive with reſpect to the preſent negociation, and to make no new propoſals or advances, which could only increaſe his confident preſumption, ſubject us to the mortification of a ſecond refuſal, and beſides promiſe no reaſonable proſpect of ſucceſs; ſince, if Nana Furneſſe was really deſirous of peace, he would have availed himſelf of the opening now given, and at leaſt have communicated in writing, or ſent a perſon to declare what the terms are on which he is ready to conclude a treaty, and in ſome reſpects have explained the nature of the propoſals he wiſhes ſhould be included for the benefit of the perſons who he ſays are allied to, and connected with the Councils of the Sircar.

I requeſt to be favoured with your particular ſentiments on this occaſion, and your opinion of the propriety or good policy of proſecuting any further plan of negociation under the diſcouraging circumſtances that now preſent themſelves; which unleſs ſome unforeſeen event occurs, I ſhall not myſelf think of attempting till I receive your anſwer to this letter.

I have under my conſideration your letter of the 12th ultimo, relative to the future operations of the war, in the conduct of which I ſhall be generally guided by the opinion you have therein expreſſed, and which concurs with the ſentiments formerly delivered to you by myſelf.

I ſhall however be glad to receive any further communication of your particular ideas on this important point; and have the honour to be,

Gentlemen,
Your moſt obedient,
and moſt humble ſervant,
Thomas Goddard.

Head Quarters, Condolah,
5th March 1781.

Draft of a Letter from General Goddard to Nana Furneſſe, March 1ſt 1781.

Letter from General Goddard to Nana Furneiſe.

Notwithſtanding you are already fully acquainted with the friendly ſentiments of the Engliſh, and their earneſt deſire for peace with the Maratta State, which have been particularly communicated to you through the means of Runſoor; yet, in order to convince you ſtill more of the ſincerity of my intentions, and that you may not poſſibly urge in excuſe for neglecting the intereſts of the Sircar at this important and dangerous time, your ignorance of the favourable and very friendly diſpoſition of the Engliſh towards you, I now encloſe the propoſals of the Honourable Governor General and Council of Bengal, for concluding a treaty of perpetual alliance with the Maratta State, original of which has been tranſmitted by them to you, through the mediation of Moodajee Booſla, the Rajah of Berar.

Should the original propoſals not have been received by you through Moodajee, I think it proper to declare to you in the name of the Honourable Governor General and Council of Bengal, that I am inveſted with full powers in their name, and in behalf of the Honourable Company, to agree to the conditions propoſed in the paper I now ſend you, provided they are accepted of by you in the manner and within the time preſcribed by the Honourable Governor General and Council of Bengal.

You will perceive from the date of the propoſals, that the five months limited will expire in nine days from the date of this letter, that is on the 9th of March, correſponding to the 13th of Rubba ul Divil in the 1195 year of the Hegira.

I therefore think it neceſſary to declare to you, that if before that time you do not agree to the propoſals, I am not authorized to grant or to treat on thoſe terms afterwards, and they will therefore become then and for ever after void and of no effect.

If the propoſals now made meet with your concurrence, it is neceſſary that a perſon be ſent from you, fully authorized by the Sircar to negociate, as with no other can I in future hold correſpondence.—What more?

Tranſlation of a Letter from Nana Furneſſe to General Goddard. Received 5th March 1781.

Letter from Nana Furneſſe to General Goddard.

Your agreeable letter having been received, I am made acquainted with the contents.

You have wrote, "that Mr. Haſtings and the Govern- "ment of Calcutta ſent a treaty to the Miniſter of the "Peiſhwa, through the mediation of Moodajee Booſla, "which perhaps may not have arrived, and on that ac- "count you have ſent a copy; from a peruſal of which "every particular will be made known." You alſo add, "that Mr. Haſtings and the Government of Calcutta "have inveſted you with full powers to conclude and "ſettle the buſineſs of theſe parts."

Before this, Moodajee wrote the Sircar; that Imad ul Dowlah and the Chiefs of Calcutta had ſent him a treaty, but as it did not meet with his approbation, it would

anſwer

anſwer no end to ſend it to the Sircar; and that therefore he had returned it to Mr. Haſtings.

At preſent the copy of that very treaty which you have ſent me, has been read from the beginning to the end by your friend, and it is certain that the contents therein written are not proper or fit for the approbation of the Sircar. If you are ſincere and fervent in your deſire of friendſhip, it is therefore incumbent upon you to make a treaty that ſhall include the propoſals of thoſe perſons who are allied to, and connected with the councils of the Sircar.

It is not my deſire that the violence of war ſhould continue to rage on both ſides, and the inhabitants be ruined. But betwixt the Government of the Peiſhwa Pundit Purdhaun and the Engliſh Company, a firm and conſtant intercourſe of friendſhip and alliance long ſubſiſted: on whoſe part this has been interrupted and deſtroyed, that friend well knows; there is no neceſſity for me to point it out. What more ſhall I write?

A true tranſlation.

Extract of Bombay Select Conſultations, the 24th March 1781.

By Pattamars received the two following letters from Brigadier General Goddard. The original of that of the 12th inſtant has never been received.

Goddard, General, letter from.

Gentlemen,

I had the honour of addreſſing you the 5th inſtant, informing you of the reſult of the overtures I had made to the Miniſter; ſince which nothing new or material has happened. Every doubt and uncertainty with reſpect to the Miniſter's real determination, being now removed by his poſitive refuſal to accede to the terms offered by the Honourable Governor General and Council of Bengal, and an abſolute bar put to our hopes of effecting a peace with the Maratta State at this time, upon any conditions ſince thoſe already rejected have actually become void with the expiration of the period limited for their remaining in force, and were we even diſpoſed to make ſtill more liberal advances and conceſſions, there does not appear any reaſonable hope of ſucceſs to our endeavours; it becomes incumbent upon us in this ſituation to determine upon ſome plan of future operations that may remedy, by every poſſible means, the diſappointment given to the views of the Bengal Government, and provide as far as circumſtances will admit for the general intereſts of the Company's affairs, and the preſervation of their valuable ſettlements and acquiſitions in India. I ſhall therefore preſume to lay my ſentiments before you on theſe momentous points, that you may take them into your ſerious and full conſideration, and ſuch ſyſtem of conduct be immediately adopted, as ſhall appear beſt calculated to promote thoſe deſirable purpoſes.

Before the commencement of the preſent campaign, the expreſs objects of our military operations were declared to be the conqueſt of Baſſein and its dependencies, the expulſion of the enemy from the Concan, and beſides, providing for the defence of our new acquiſitions in Guzerat, the ultimate, and as it then appeared, every probable hopes of terms of honour and advantage to the Company. Upon this plan hoſtilities have been proſecuted, and every part of it has been hitherto attended with the wiſhed-for ſucceſs, except our expectations of attaining a peace, the cauſe of which diſappointment we unfortunately find to be ſo remote from any powers of remedy we may poſſeſs, as to have defied all our paſt, and to throw an invincible obſtacle in the way of any preſent, efforts to remove it. If under ſuch circumſtances it may be permitted to indulge any particular cauſe of ſatisfaction, I muſt confeſs I cannot on this occaſion avoid deriving a ſecret pleaſure from the conſcious reflection that no means have been left unattempted by us, either to produce the pacific diſpoſition in the Miniſter we ſo much wiſhed for, or, failing in that, to obtain a thorough knowledge of his real views and deſigns. Appendix. No. 342.

In this latter aim I think we have perfectly ſucceeded, and however much reaſon and good policy may condemn the idea, I cannot help being now confirmed in the belief that, encouraged by the ſucceſs of Hyder, or ſeduced by his promiſes, the Maratta Miniſter has determined to adhere to the engagements mutually formed, and ſteadily perſevere in the alliance, I am not perhaps far wrong, when I ſay, general confederacy of the Powers ſouth of the Nerbuddah, againſt the Engliſh; it is only therefore by a ſeaſonable and effectual check to the progreſs of Hyder that we can hope to bind the Maratta Miniſtry to peace. It may not be improper here to make ſome remarks upon the effects which an immediate proſecution of further vigorous meaſures might be expected to produce in their councils; eſpecially as from the poſſeſſion of the gauts, and the vicinity of their capital, it is evident that we could march and poſſeſs ourſelves of it in 6 or 7 days at furtheſt, but it is alſo well known that ſhould we determine upon this ſtep, they have reſolved to ſet fire to it themſelves, ſo that neither would the acquiſition of it be of any value to us, nor would it advance us one ſtep towards an accommodation with the Peiſhwa, which alone, in the preſent ſituation of affairs, would in any degree juſtify ourſelves penetrating into the Decan: and indeed were there not other weighty conſiderations at this time to demand our moſt ſerious attention, and did no other wars employ our arms in India, I am far from thinking that a plan of conqueſt on this ſide, beyond what has been already purſued, is for the intereſts of the Company; and conceive that the preſervation and ſecurity of the poſſeſſions we have acquired, would be an object far more beneficial in its conſequences than the glare of additional conqueſts, which, from their diſtance and relative ſituation, beſides involving an enormous and ruinous expence, would be too hazardous and difficult to maintain.

The ſyſtem of defence, which under ſuch circumſtances would be an object of choice, is now a meaſure of neceſſity; and if while proſecuting it, we can at the ſame time be ready to guard againſt any attempts of the French on this ſide, and be aſſiſting to the operations of Sir Eyre Coote againſt Hyder on the other coaſt, we ſhall accompliſh three objects the moſt beneficial to the Company's intereſts at this period, and provide, as far as lies in our power, for the general ſafety of their valuable poſſeſſions in India.

I ſhall firſt ſpeak to the latter point, viz. our affording relief to Sir Eyre Coote: and ſince the obſtinacy and enmity of the Maratta Miniſter will not admit of our doing it in the extent we could have wiſhed, we muſt make every effort to do it to the extent we poſſibly can, conſiſtent with the ſafety and exiſtence of this ſettlement: I therefore beg to propoſe, as the only ſtep left in our power, that the Madras detachment, ſerving in the army under my command, be ſent back to the ſervice of the coaſt of Coromandel; that it ſtop at Tellicherry, and, reinforced by the troops under Major Cotgrave, proceed to Anjengo, from whence Colonel Brown, the officer commanding the whole, will direct his march through the Travancore country, and in conjunction with the Rajah, make a powerful diverſion towards Dindigal, conformable to the plan already propoſed for the operations of Major Cotgrave's detachment, by Sir Eyre Coote; or be ready to follow ſuch further inſtructions as the latter ſhall find it neceſſary to ſend to meet him at Anjengo.

This, gentlemen, is all that, in the preſent critical and dangerous ſtate of affairs, I am of opinion can be attempted in favour of Sir Eyre Coote conſiſtent with your own immediate ſafety: for, in order to effect this, it will be requiſite to ſpare at leaſt one battalion; or, if Captain Seward is withdrawn, two battalions from the troops of your Preſidency to relieve Major Cotgrave, and the remainder, in conjunction with the Bengal battalions, will not be more than ſufficient for the defence and protection of your own acquiſitions, the relinquiſhing of which at this time, unleſs for the eſſential and ſolid objects of advantage propoſed by the Honourable Governor General and Council, which we have eſſayed and found to be unattainable, would be moſt impolitic, and probably involve the ruin of all the Company's ſettlements on this coaſt.

I ſhall now make a few remarks reſpecting the future diſpoſition of the troops for the purpoſes of a plan of defence. It is very evident, that while we keep poſſeſſion of this gaut, the Miniſter will not venture to detach any conſiderable body diſtant from the capital: there is therefore no reaſon to be apprehenſive of our valuable acquiſitions in Guzerat being materially diſturbed; and I conſider the force already there under Major Forbes, joined by a body of Futty Sing's troops in caſe of an attack, as fully adequate to their defence and preſervation. While we are in poſſeſſion of this gaut, it is alſo plain Nana Furneeſe will not ſend any conſiderable force into the Concan; at any rate he will not venture to detach any guns, and the bodies of cavalry that may moleſt the open country, will in all probability retire before the ſetting in of the rains.

I would therefore propoſe, as a plan the moſt expedient and adviſable, that two or more battalions of Sepoys, with a proportion of artillery, be ſtationed upon this gaut in a ſtrong fortified poſt; and the remainder of the army encamped during the rains in ſome part of the Concan, the moſt convenient for the purpoſe of moving with expedition to the ſupport of this gaut, or to aſſiſt in the defence of Bombay, as circumſtances may render expedient.

As it will be of the utmoſt importance to keep up a ſafe and regular communication from Bombay with this poſt; and its ſecurity will become an object of the firſt conſequence, in order effectually to check and overawe the Maratta Power, I would recommend that ſome place for encamping the army be fixed upon, as near to Bhore gaut as poſſible; and therefore, provided no objections exiſt in point of ſituation, or conveniency of ſupplies, which are at preſent to me unknown, I am of opinion that Panwell, or even Chouk, which is half way between Panwell and this place.

On this particular point it is not however ſo neceſſary to come to any immediate determination; and I have at preſent introduced it principally to give you a clear and preciſe idea of the general plan I beg leave to recommend to your conſideration, in order that you may come to ſome ſpeedy deciſion, and avail yourſelves of the preſence and aſſiſtance of Sir Edward Hughes, in deliberating upon a plan of ſo great importance to the intereſts of the nation in India, and particularly in executing that part of it which relates to the immediate tranſportation of the troops.

I beg leave to expreſs my earneſt wiſh to be favoured with an immediate anſwer to this letter, as indeed I have been conſiderably diſappointed in not receiving a reply to mine of the 5th inſtant, duplicate of which I have diſpatched by this opportunity, leſt ſome accident ſhould have befallen the original.

I have the honour to be,
Gentlemen,
Your moſt obedient,
humble ſervant,
Thomas Goddard.

Goddard, General, letter from.

Gentlemen,

I was yeſterday favoured with your two letters of the 8th and 9th inſtant, the former enclosing a letter from the Secretary to the Honourable Governor General and Council to my addreſs; and thank you for the ſteps you have taken relative to the bills of exchange which came enclosed.

I moſt ſincerely felicitate you upon the favourable intelligence which you have communicated to me, of the ſtate of affairs on the coaſt, and have not any doubt but the moſt fortunate and deciſive ſucceſs will ſoon follow ſo auſpicious a beginning.

In reply to what you are pleaſed to obſerve in your letter of the 9th inſtant, relative to Colonel Hartley's detachment, I did ſuppoſe the events that immediately followed the reduction of Baſſein, both reſpecting the ſituation of that detachment in particular, and the operations of the army in general, were ſo well known to you, that any particular explanation of them would never have been wanted from me. It is true, the Bombay detachment, at the period you mention, was placed, and has ever ſince continued, under my command; but the ſmalleſt reference to the peculiar circumſtances that firſt occaſioned my march to join it at Vijrabhoy, to the ſervice on which the troops were employed immediately after, to the object propoſed, of driving the Marattas out of the Concan, and to the expediency, nay even neceſſity of making no diviſion of force where the enemy had already ſhewn themſelves ſo dangerouſly powerful, will be ſufficient to convince you that no partial purpoſes of collection could poſſibly have been attended to by me, without the greateſt inconvenience and hazard to the public ſervice.

This explanation on my part will probably account fully for the neceſſary failure that may have happened to your expectations of ſupplies ſince the reduction of Baſſein; but as the ſeaſon for collection had commenced at leaſt two months before that period, the greateſt part of which no enemy whatever moleſted the country, I ſhould conceive the hopes you were led to form, during that time, of being relieved by the produce of the Concan, cannot poſſibly have met with the ſame diſappointment.

On the ſubject of further negociation with the Maratta Miniſter, and what relates to Tellicherry, as well as the general plan of meaſures to be purſued, I have already troubled you with my particular ſentiments, and wait to receive your opinion and determination on them.

In the mean time, as it will be abſolutely neceſſary in the event of maintaining a ſtrong poſt upon the top of the gaut, (a meaſure, the expediency of which cannot I think admit of a doubt) to leave for its more perfect ſecurity, ſome guns of a heavier metal than any at preſent with the army, I muſt requeſt of you to give immediate orders to be ſent to Bellapore, to be ready to accompany the firſt eſcort coming from thence, two 18 and alſo four 12 pounder pieces of ordnance, with their tumbrils, and a large proportion of ammunition, &c.

The danger of the road rendering my diſpatches to you very precarious, and liable to be intercepted, I have not encloſed you a formal return of the ſtate of the army, but tranſcribe you the following abſtract of its preſent actual ſtrength, excluſive of European officers.

I ſhall conclude this letter with informing you of an action that happened at Chouke the 16th inſtant, with a body of Marattas under the command of Purrjy's Ram Boa, and the eſcort coming from Panwell, conſiſting of the 5th battalion of Bengal and the 1ſt of Bombay Sepoys, and the Candahar horſe.

The

The former to the amount of between 12 and 15 thouſand horſe and foot, made a moſt bold and daring aſſault upon the eſcort, a very ſhort time after coming to their ground early in the morning; but after repeated efforts, from which however they did not altogether deſiſt till about noon, were obliged to relinquiſh the attempt without making any impreſſion upon the detachment, though not without conſiderable loſs to themſelves both of men and horſes. The good conduct and military ſkill of Captain Mackay, who commanded, in the diſpoſition he made of his force, was equalled by the ſpirit and intrepidity of the officers under him, who exerted themſelves in a moſt extraordinary and gallant manner. I beg leave to expreſs my warmeſt ſenſe of their merits and ſervices on this occaſion, which I flatter myſelf will appear deſerving of your approbation.

One company of Sepoys belonging to the Bengal battalion, who had routed a party of horſe, and purſued them too eagerly and incautiouſly, were ſuddenly turned upon and attacked by them, and ſuſtained ſome loſs; I have not yet aſcertained the exact number of killed and wounded. In the night of the 16th Captain Mackay advanced a few miles, and having been joined by a reinforcement I ſent from Campoly the morning of the 17th, arrived ſafe in camp that evening with the whole of his convoy, which I have the pleaſure to tell you was a very large and conſiderable one. I have the honour to be with reſpect,

Gentlemen,
Your moſt obedient
humble ſervant,
Thomas Goddard.

P. S. The above abſtract of the ſtate of the army under my command, includes only the troops preſent with me in the field, beſides which there are two Bengal battalions with Major Forbes, in Guzerat, their four grenadier companies excepted, which accompanied the army. Six Bengal with two Bombay Companies of Sepoys compoſe the garriſon at Ahmadavad, the whole amount of whoſe ſtrength may be computed at twelve hundred men. The ſtate of the two Bombay battalions which have joined Major Forbes, and of the reſt of your troops in Guzerat and at the Preſidency, as well as thoſe compoſing the garriſons of Baſſein, Callian, and Bellapore, you are ſufficiently acquainted with to form a certain eſtimate of their ſtrength; and it is not in my power to give you a more particular return of them at preſent than you are already poſſeſſed of.

APPENDIX, No. 343.

Extract of Bombay Select Conſultations, the 27th March 1781;—preſent, the Honourable William Hornby, Eſquire, Preſident and Governor; Daniel Draper, and Nathaniel Stackhouſe, Eſquires.

Goddard, Gen. the political plans ſuggeſted by him, the ſame as repeatedly recommended by us.

GENERAL Goddard's definition of the objects of the war, and of our political views on this ſide of India, is exactly the ſame as has been repeatedly expreſſed by us in all our proceedings and plans of conduct, and by which we have been invariably guided in all our operations.

We entirely concur with the General, and indeed the propoſition came firſt from us, as appears by our minutes of the 9th, that a ſyſtem of defence is now a meaſure of neceſſity, and our own difficulty is in the choice of meaſures for purſuing that ſyſtem. Various objections occur againſt keeping ſo large a force at the head of the gauts during the monſoon; the danger and difficulty of affording them ſupplies, the vaſt expence of ſtores and ammunition, and the danger of leaving ſo large a part of our force in a ſituation where perhaps we could not command their ſervices, if there ſhould be a neceſſity for them at Bombay, or be able to give them aſſiſtance, if they ſhould be hard preſſed. After all, it does not appear that maintaining a poſt at the head of the gauts will anſwer the purpoſe of keeping the enemy out of the Conkan, for it is evident by the General's letters on the table, that notwithſtanding the preſent ſituation of the army, a very large body of the enemy is now in the country, by which a large convoy was expoſed to imminent danger. If the General could have adopted our propoſal of making himſelf maſter of Razemabdy, the poſſeſſion might have been maintained with a ſmall body of men, and it would have afforded ſecure lodgement for the troops and ſtores, without the expence attending the propoſed ſcheme of raiſing works and fortifying a poſt, building magazines, caſemates, &c.

Goddard, Gen. his plan for obtaining a poſt at the head of the gauts, not approved of.

The danger of it pointed out;

Upon the whole, we think that if at any time hereafter it may be judged expedient to poſſeſs ourſelves of the gauts, they may be again ſecured or taken poſſeſſion of with much leſs loſs, difficulty, and danger, than would attend maintaining a poſt there during the rainy ſeaſon: and it is therefore reſolved to recommend to the General to drop this idea, and to employ the army the remainder of the ſeaſon in protecting the Conkan, and if poſſible, to reduce Paih, or ſome other of the ſtrong holds, which might afford convenient and ſecure ſtations for part of the troops during the rains; and the ſecurity of which in our hands will protect and encourage the inhabitants in their cultivation the enſuing ſeaſon.

Appendix, No. 343.

and the likewiſe with a view of keeping the enemy out of the Conkan

His not having poſſeſſed himſelf of Razemabdy lamented.

To be recommended to him to give up the idea of maintaining a poſt on the gauts during the monſoons; but to employ the army in reducing ſome of the ſtrong holds.

As it will be impoſſible for the Maratta horſe to act in the Conkan during the rains, we apprehend there can be no danger; and it muſt be accordingly ſuggeſted to the General to canton the army in two or more diviſions, at the moſt convenient ſtations for covering the country, which we judge may be about Panwell, Callian, or Viſrabbey, from which places the troops may with eaſe be tranſported to Bombay in caſe of neceſſity; or form a junction againſt the opening of the ſeaſon, without danger from the enemy.

Goddard, Gen. recommendation with reſpect to the diſpoſition of the army in the rains.

Fort St. George, the detachment from thence ſerving on this coaſt to be returned.

We ſhall, agreeable to the General's propoſal, take immediate meaſures for returning the Madras detachment; and are glad to have it in our power to aſſiſt that Preſidency, though in the preſent reduced ſtate of our eſtabliſhment we wiſh circumſtances would permit of our detaining the Europeans. The General muſt in conſequence be deſired to give immediate orders for returning the Madras detachment to Bombay, in readineſs to embark.

Bombay, the troops ſerving with the army to be under orders into garriſon previous to the ſetting in of the monſoon.

We alſo propoſe, previous to the ſetting in of the monſoon, to withdraw the Bombay troops into garriſon, which will cauſe a further conſiderable reduction in the expences of the army; and we conceive the Bengal detachment will be fully ſufficient to ſecure the country, and ſtrong enough to reſiſt any attempts that can poſſibly be made by the enemy at that ſeaſon of the year.

Tellicherry, the reſolution for withdrawing this ſettlement finally determined on.

We muſt now, with whatever reluctance, put in execution our former reſolution of abandoning Tellicherry, which, as already full explained in our proceedings, it is abſolutely out of our power to maintain any longer, ſince we have no longer any hopes of bringing the Maratta war to a concluſion. When the Madras detachment arrives from the army, which, as the ſeaſon is late, the General muſt be deſired to expedite, we ſhall conſult with Colonel Brown about the plan to be obſerved in withdrawing the garriſon, and the expediency of landing his force, in order to make an effort to diſlodge the enemy, which we apprehend will be neceſſary before the place can be evacuated; and will alſo enable us to do it with leſs loſs of credit and riſk to the inhabitants.

Meaſures to be purſued for carrying this reſolution into execution. An effort to be made to diſlodge the enemy, previous to our evacuating the place.

Ordered that the Commander of the Royal Admiral be directed to get his ſhip in immediate readineſs for ſea, to aſſiſt in tranſporting the Madras detachment to Tellicherry and Anjengo.

Royal Admiral to be got ready for ſea immediately.

Read the letter from Admiral Hughes, entered under the 19th inſtant.

King's ſhips.

Reſolved,

Sir Edwd Hughes, reſolutions to be communicated to him; to be required to aſſiſt us with ſhips to carry our reſolutions into execution.

Reſolved, that our reſolutions of this day reſpecting the Madras detachment and the withdrawing of Tellicherry be communicated to the Admiral, and a requeſt made to him to order one or more of his Majeſty's ſhips to aſſiſt on theſe ſervices. Whatever ſhips he may think proper to order, may take on board the marines he left for the defence of Tellicherry.

Apology made for ſeamen borrowed from the fleet not being yet returned.

The ſeamen will be returned on the arrival of the Revenge, now daily expected, or if the Bombay grab ſhould not have ſent up her proportion, the ſhips the Admiral may ſend to Tellicherry may receive them there; and an apology muſt be made to the Admiral for their detention, which was neither foreſeen or ordered by us.

Adjourned.

Extract of Bengal Select Conſultations, the 28th March 1781.

Signed the following letter to General Goddard, agreeable to the above minutes:

To Brigadier General Goddard.

Sir,

We have received a duplicate of your letter of the 12th inſtant, the original of which never came to hand, and the duplicate did not reach us till the 24th, at the ſame time with your letter of the 21ſt. We are ſorry to find our letters of the 8th and 9th met with equal delay in the paſſage.

Your definition of the objects of the war, and the extent of our views in point of acquiſition, entirely coincide with our opinion and the plan of meaſures originally formed for the proſecution of the war, and by which we have been invariably guided in all our proceedings and deliberations; nor have we a wiſh or view beyond the ſecurity and preſervation of our poſſeſſions in Guzerat and the Concan.

Upon this principle, and conſidering every other circumſtance neceſſary to be attended to, we are entirely of the opinion before expreſſed to you in our letter of the 9th inſtant, that our meaſures ſhould now be confined to a defenſive plan; and we have accordingly directed our deliberations ſolely to the choice of meaſures for purſuing a ſyſtem of defence.

Various and ſtrong objections occur againſt keeping ſo large a part of our force at the head of the gauts during the monſoon: the danger and difficulty of affording them ſupplies, the vaſt expence of ſtores and ammunition, and the imprudence of hazarding a body of troops in a ſituation where perhaps we might not be able to command their ſervices in caſe of neceſſity, or to give them aſſiſtance if they ſhould be hard preſſed; nor by a fair concluſion from paſt events can it be urged, that maintaining a poſt at the gauts will anſwer the purpoſe which alone could juſtify ſuch a meaſure, namely preventing the enemy from ſending a force into the Conkan; for it is evident, that notwithſtanding the preſent poſition of the army under your command, the enemy have by the other paſſes detached a very conſiderable body of horſe into the Conkan, and, as we underſtand, with guns, by which a large convoy was expoſed to imminent danger. The poſſeſſion of the fort of Razemachy would have removed ſome part of theſe objections, as it would not only have given us a firm footing on the gauts, but might have been maintained with a ſmall body of men, and would have afforded ſecure lodgement for the troops and ſtores without the heavy expences incident to the propoſed ſcheme of making a fortified poſt, with ſtore-houſes, magazines and lodgements, for a large garriſon, conſtructed with a ſufficient degree of ſtrength and ſolidity to reſiſt the attacks of the enemy, and the impreſſion of the weather during the monſoon.

Upon the whole, we are of opinion, that if at any time hereafter it may be judged expedient to gain poſſeſſion of the gauts, they may be ſecured or forced with much leſs difficulty and danger than would attend maintaining a poſt there during the rainy ſeaſon; and we muſt therefore recommend to you to drop that idea, and to employ the army during the remainder of the ſeaſon, in completing the reduction of the Conkan, and getting poſſeſſion of Paeb, or ſome other ſtrong holds, which would afford convenient and ſecure ſtations for part of the troops during the rains, and in our hands would protect and encourage the inhabitants in their cultivation for the enſuing ſeaſon.

As it will be impoſſible for the Maratta horſe to act in the Conkan during the rains, or for ſome time after, we apprehend there can be no danger in cantoning the army in two or more diviſions, at the moſt convenient ſtations for covering the country, which we judge may be about Panwell, Callian, or Vizrabtroy, from which places the troops may with eaſe be tranſported to Bombay in caſe of neceſſity, or form a junction at the opening of the ſeaſon, without danger from the enemy.

We acquieſce in your propoſal of ſending back the Madras detachment under the command of Colonel Brown, to be joined at Tellicherry by the party under Major Cotgrave, and are glad to have it in our power ſo far to aſſiſt that Preſidency: though in the preſent reduced ſtate of our eſtabliſhment, we wiſh circumſtances would permit of our detaining the Europeans.

We ſhall take immediate meaſures in concert with the Admiral to provide embarkation; and as the ſeaſon grows late we recommend to you to loſe no time in ordering the Madras detachment to Bombay, to be in readineſs for embarking: we alſo propoſe, previous to the ſetting in of the monſoon, to withdraw the Bombay troops into garriſon, in order to relieve ourſelves from the heavy expence of keeping them in the field, as we conceive the Bengal detachment will be ſufficiently ſtrong to reſiſt any attempts that can poſſibly be made by the enemy at that ſeaſon of the year.

Since we have no longer any hopes of coming to an accommodation with the Marattas, it is utterly beyond the reach of our reſources to maintain the ſettlement of Tellicherry, which we have accordingly reſolved to abandon; it will not therefore be neceſſary to make any arrangement for its defence, but we doubt not you will ſee the neceſſity; and we requeſt, that for the preſent this intention may be kept inviolably ſecret.

Mr. Boddam has acquainted us of his having received the bills in your favour for five lacks of rupees, and has lately remitted the ſum of R^s 1,80,000 for the ſervice of the army, which is depoſited in our treaſury till your directions can be received regarding it.

We are,
Sir,
Your moſt obedient
humble ſervants,
William Hornby,
&c. Committee.

Extract of Bombay Select Conſultations, the 23d April 1781;—preſent, the Honourable William Hornby, Eſquire, Preſident and Governor; Daniel Draper, Eſquire, and Nathaniel Stackhouſe, Eſquire.

Received the following letter from Brigadier General Goddard:

Gentlemen,

I did myſelf the pleaſure of addreſſing you the 15th inſtant, and acquainted you with the ſafe arrival and junction of the eſcort under Colonel Brown.

Having previouſly ſent down to the gauts as many of the guns, tumbrils of ammunition, and baggage of every kind as I poſſibly could, conſiſtent with the ſecurity of the poſt,

poſt, and the prevention of too full a diſcovery of our intentions; on the 17th in the afternoon I ordered the remaining bazars and baggage, together with ſuch artillery as I had found it neceſſary to detain, to proceed to Campoley, and I followed myſelf at day-break, with the rear diviſion of the army, which reached the encampment at the bottom of the gaut about nine o'clock, without having been annoyed by the enemy in the ſmalleſt degree, or ſuffering any loſs or inconvenience whatever.

This fortunate circumſtance I attribute to the ſucceſs of the precaution I had uſed to conceal as much as poſſible from the enemy our intentions to relinquiſh the poſt at Condolah, of which I am convinced, from the ſubſequent intelligence brought me by my hircarrahs, as well as from the certain proof their conduct furniſhed, they had not the ſmalleſt knowledge, till day-light diſcovered to them that we were gone. About eight o'clock a party of horſe made their appearance at the top of the gaut; a few foot only ſhewed themſelves; but none of them thought it prudent to advance or attempt to moleſt the march of our troops, who were at that time near the foot of the paſs.

I have been obliged to halt this day to refreſh the cattle after the exceſſive fatigue which they have lately undergone, and in particular during the day and night of the 17th; but I propoſe to march to-morrow, and hope to arrive at Panwell the 23d inſtant, as I fear, on account of the neceſſary attention to water ſufficient for the ſupply of the army, I ſhall be detained a day longer on the road than would otherwiſe be requiſite.

I ſhall however uſe every endeavour to reach Panwell the 22d, and therefore requeſt you will order the neceſſary boats to be ready at Bellapore for tranſporting the troops arrived from your Preſidency, as well as the Madras detachment, to Bombay with every poſſible expedition.

The enemy have not yet aſcended the gauts. Holkar with his force, unencumbered by any baggage, is at the bottom of the Ceſſere paſs; and Purriſs Ram Bow has ſent off all his bazars and baggage to the Columby paſs, about three coſs farther to the northward, and eight from this ground, where I learn he intends alſo following himſelf during this day.

I have the honour to be,
Gentlemen,
Your moſt obedient
humble ſervant,
Thomas Goddard.

Extract of Bombay Select Conſultations, the 25th April 1781.

Gentlemen,

Ge- I had the pleaſure of addreſſing you the 22d inſtant from Chouke, and acquainted you with my intention of marching towards Panwell the following day. As I knew the road from Chouke to Burwah, more than half way to this place, lay through a country full of thick jungles, broken ground, and narrow defiles, where the enemy would poſſeſs every advantage they could wiſh, of concealing themſelves and annoying our troops, I thought it expedient to ſend off all the heavy ſtores, baggage, and every encumbrance, at two o'clock in the morning, under the care of a ſtrong eſcort, and remained myſelf with the main body till day-break. The ſucceſs fully anſwered my expectations: the baggage, &c. moved off undiſcovered by the enemy, who had not an opportunity during the march of attacking or giving them any diſturbance whatever.

A little after ſun riſe the enemy made their appearance, at firſt in ſmall parties, throwing rockets and diſcharging their muſketry upon our rear, from the numerous thickets and hollows that favoured their approach. Their numbers continued to increaſe; and ſoon after their whole force, which I am confident from the full view I had of them at different times yeſterday, the names of their leaders, and the repeated intelligence of my hircarrahs, could not be leſs than 50,000, of which there may be 6,000 infantry, ſhewed themſelves, lining the tops of the hills on right and left, and behind every bank or buſh where there was a poſſibility of concealing themſelves. Their horſe kept behind their guns, and generally at too great a diſtance for our artillery to reach them; though ſometimes conſiderable bodies came near enough to receive the fire of our guns, which were exceedingly well ſerved, and muſt have done very great execution.

Appendix. No. 343.

Their moſt ſerious and determined attack was made when we came near Burwach, with their whole force, horſe and foot; at which time the rear being very hardly preſſed, I took poſſeſſion of an eminence with the 6th battalion of Bengal and 13th of Bombay infantry, which effectually commanded the ſpot where the enemy had poſted themſelves, and drove them off, after they had ſuſtained very conſiderable loſs from the guns of theſe battalions.

The whole of the army reached Burwach about one o'clock; when finding the enemy ſhewed no inclination to advance, but on the contrary were retreating, ſeemingly tired of the warm reception they had met with, and deſpairing of ſucceſs in their attempts to make any impreſſion upon our line, I thought it moſt expedient, notwithſtanding the fatigue the troops had ſuſtained, as the whole of the baggage, &c. was ſecure in our front, to puſh on to Panwell; and accordingly having halted ſome time to refreſh the people, proſecuted my march, and arrived at Panwell about an hour before ſun ſet.

It is with the greateſt concern I have to acquaint you with the loſs of Colonel Parker, who commanded in the rear, where, exerting himſelf with that courage and military ardour that always diſtinguiſhed him on every occaſion of active ſervice, he received a mortal wound in the belly, of which he expired on the march a few hours after. Incloſed is a return of killed and wounded in the action of yeſterday; and I alſo take this opportunity of ſending you a particular liſt of our loſs upon the 21ſt inſtant.

The reinforcements upon your Preſidency will embark this day at noon; at which time alſo the reliefs for the garriſon of Bellapore and Parſeek will proceed. I ſhall alſo ſend off with all poſſible expedition the five companies belonging to Captain Carpenter's battalion, to ſtrengthen the garriſon at Callian, with one company of the fourth battalion of Bombay Sepoys.

I expect to receive particular accounts by my hircarrahs of the ſituation of the enemy, and of their deſigns. By intelligence brought in early this morning, I learn that their main body is encamped at Chouke, and that they have a body of about 5,000 horſe poſted at Burwach. I ſhall do myſelf the pleaſure of communicating any further information as ſoon as it arrives; and have the honour to be,

Gentlemen,
Your moſt obedient
humble ſervant,
Thomas Goddard.

Head Q^rs, Panwell,
April 24th, 1781.

To the Honourable the Secret Committee of the Honourable the Court of Directors for Affairs of the United Company of Merchants of England trading to the Eaſt Indies.

Honourable Gentlemen,

1. You receive herewith an addreſs, dated the 31ſt ultimo, containing a ſhort abſtract of the ſyſtem we had adopted for our conduct in the preſent ſituation of affairs.

2. We had made every neceſſary arrangement for putting in execution our reſolution of withdrawing from

Appendix. No. 343.

Tellicherry, and the time fixed for the departure of the fleet was arrived within two days; when on the 18th inſtant we received a letter from the Governor General and Council, dated the 7th of January, (which might and ought to have reached us ſeven or eight weeks ſooner) wherein they acquainted us of their having ſent round five lacks of rupees for the ſervice of this Preſidency, on the Duke of Portland; and gave us authority to paſs drafts upon them for ſuch further ſum as we might ſtand in need of. We had alſo private intimation of their having provided a large quantity of rice for the ſervice of this Preſidency, of which we actually received a part by the veſſel that brought their letter.

3. Theſe reſources in view, we immediately determined, late as the ſeaſon was, to uſe our utmoſt exertion to preſerve Tellicherry; and made a requeſt to the Admiral, to poſtpone his departure for a few days, in order to give us time to collect troops, and the neceſſary ſupplies for the garriſon, to be ſent down in company with the fleet, without whoſe aſſiſtance we could not have executed our meaſures. The Admiral expreſſing great ſatisfaction in our reſolution, cheerfully complied with our requeſt, and by a vigorous diſpatch the Royal Charlotte and Royal Admiral were equipped for ſea. Troops brought from the foot of the gauts, and with ſtores and proviſions, embarked within ſeven days upon different veſſels, which with the fleet ſailed from this place the 27th of the month.

4. The Royal Charlotte has been detained a few days, to wait for rice, to complete a ſtock for the rains; that ſhip, as well as the Royal Admiral, will proceed from Tellicherry to Fort St. George, to aſſiſt in tranſporting Major Cotgrave's detachment to the coaſt of Coromandel, and will then purſue her voyage to China, whilſt the latter will return to Bombay, whence ſhe will be diſpatched to England early in the enſuing ſeaſon.

5. The Prime will ſhortly ſail for England, and carry our advices and proceedings at full length. We ſhall not now enter into a detail of the operations of the army, but ſhall only mention, that General Goddard has in purſuance of our advice, relinquiſhed poſſeſſion of the paſs of Bhore Gaut, where he had propoſed forming a fortified poſt; marched the army to Panwell, in order to lodge his ſtores and heavy baggage, and proceed in his future operations according to the ſyſtem of defence we had concerted with him in March: this being a country favourable for the mode of attack obſerved by the enemy, the army was extremely haraſſed by numerous bodies of horſe and foot, which had poured into the Conkan country, and preſſed upon our troops with a degree of boldneſs, which can only be imputed to their exultation at the appearance of a retreat; our troops in this ſituation behaved with their accuſtomed firmneſs and reſolution, and baffled every attack of the enemy to make an impreſſion either on the line or baggage, though our loſs from ſuch continual attack could not fail being conſiderable; and we find from our returns that during the two days taken up in the march, three officers and fifty-five men were killed, and fifteen officers and three hundred and ninety men wounded, though we derive ſome ſatisfaction that amongſt the privates killed and wounded, few or none were Europeans. We are very ſorry to add, that in the laſt day's march Colonel Parker, who commanded the rear guard, was mortally wounded, and died in a few hours.

6. Arrived at Panwell the 23d inſtant, when the General, immediately upon our requiſition, ſent over the troops we had appointed for the garriſon of Tellicherry, and will next proceed upon a plan for ſecuring the country from the ravages of the enemy in the beſt manner poſſible, until the lateneſs of the ſeaſon ſhall compel them to retire. For this purpoſe the army will immediately change its poſition, and move near Callian, a more central ſituation, and where it is propoſed to canton them during the rains; the Europeans and Bombay troops will be brought into this garriſon.

7. We very much wiſh we had any late authentic account to give you of the ſituation of affairs on the coaſt of Coromandel, the hopes of which were the principal cauſe of our detaining the Mercury ſo long: we can only now acquaint you, that it is certain the French left the coaſt of Coromandel in February, without landing any aſſiſtance for Hyder, or doing any other material damage; and that they ſeemed much diſtreſſed for proviſions; the poſition of General Coote's army, and his burning all the boats at Pondicherry, preventing them getting any ſupplies from the ſhore. Country intelligence, collected by Mr. Stewart at Goa, mentions that Hyder had quitted the Carnatic.

8. We have the pleaſure to adviſe you of Colonel Carnac's having gained a very complete victory over Mhadajee Scindia; which is the more agreeable, as the Colonel had been obliged to retreat, and was haraſſed four days together by a very powerful army; after the fourth day's retreat the Colonel countermanded a detachment from his army in the night, with which he got in the rear of the enemy, and attacked their camp, which was forced and plundered, and two guns, four elephants, and a large booty fell into our hands. Several accounts concur that the enemies loſs amounted to eight thouſand men; and Scindia himſelf eſcaped with difficulty to Serenga, attended by only horſemen.

We have the honour to be with reſpect,
Honourable Gentlemen,
Your faithful and obedient
humble ſervants,

Extract of the Select Letter from Bombay, dated 27th May 1781.

We mentioned in our addreſs of the 11th of January, the attack of the fort of Arnaul, which was not reduced till the 18th of that month; General Goddard then moved with the remainder of the army, and joining the diviſion of Bengal troops and the Bombay detachment, late under the command of Colonel Hartley, which had remained in the ſame poſition at Vizzaboy ever ſince the 14th of December, put the whole in motion on the 27th of January. It had, as already adviſed, been ſettled, that in the interval which remained of the term limited by the Governor General and Council for the acceptance of their propoſals, the General ſhould purſue his operations with all poſſible vigour, and to the utmoſt extent he might find practicable, with the force under his command, in the hopes by this plan of conduct, or ſome deciſive advantage, to diſpoſe the Miniſter to an accommodation. The enemy, who, during the ſiege of Arnaul, and while the detachment kept their poſition at Vizzaboy, had committed great ravages in the country, immediately retired as the General advanced, and after ſlight oppoſition reaſcended the ghauts.

On the 8th February the Preſident took occaſion to lay before us an extract of a letter he had written to the General on the ſubject of the operations of the army, and as we entirely concurred in opinion with the Preſident, we alſo recommended the ſame to his conſideration. The ſubſtance of this letter was to recommend his poſſeſſing himſelf of Razemachy, a ſtrong fort at the head of the ghauts, and offering objections againſt his carrying the army to Poonah, or too far into the Decan. Diary, 2d and 7th February.

Our army advancing as the enemy retired, arrived at the foot of the ghauts on the 8th February, and the General finding the enemy had poſted a body of about 4,000 infantry, with ſeveral guns, to defend the paſs, and were conſtructing works for its defence, determined upon making the attack that very night before they could have have time to collect a more numerous force, or to improve their works. The paſs of Bhore Ghaut was accordingly ſtormed that night by a ſtrong party, under the command of Colonel Parker, who, after forcing the different poſts, gained complete poſſeſſion of the paſs, and encamped on the ſummit of the ghauts on the ground formerly occupied by the late Captain Stuart.

From this poſt the General gave us his ſentiments with reſpect to the meaſures to be purſued the remainder of the campaign, in order, if poſſible, to bring the war to a concluſion: the Poonah Government had not then made any overture or propoſal for peace, and the Miniſter being in poſſeſſion of the terms on which he might, if he thought proper, put an immediate end to the war, the General thought any further advances on our part would rather encourage the enemy to perſiſt in hoſtility, and to increaſe in their demands and expectations of advantage: theſe being his ſentiments with reſpect to any advances to a negociation, he next explained his opinion of the moſt eligible plan for proſecuting the war; the firſt object he propoſed was to eſtabliſh a ſtrong poſt upon the ghauts, which he thought might be defended by one battalion of Sepoys againſt any force whatever, and that our poſſeſſion of this paſs which opened us a paſſage to the Maratta capital, might perhaps incline the enemy to think ſeriouſly of peace. The next point was to collect a magazine of ſtores and proviſions at the ghauts ſufficient for ſix weeks, ſhould it be deemed expedient to march forward to Poonah; with reſpect, however, to that meaſure, the General obſerved he did not then ſee any ſufficient or adequate reaſon to authorize it, but that at any rate he was under the neceſſity of remaining at the ghauts till he received a ſupply of proviſions.

We entirely coincided in the General's ideas, reſpecting the impolicy and inefficacy of making any further overtures towards an accommodation, as the Miniſter was in poſſeſſion of our terms, and little more than three weeks then remained of the period limited for their determination. We then hoped, the ſhort time they had for deliberation, the advantageous poſition of the army, and vigorous preparations for further meaſures might produce the wiſhed-for criſis, which we did not think could be accelerated by any further advances on our part.

Diary, 14th & 15th, 23d and 24th February.

We accordingly gave every aſſiſtance in our power for furniſhing the army with proviſions, that the General might have it in his power to proſecute his future operations in the manner that might be judged moſt expedient, upon further knowledge of the conduct the Miniſter might obſerve in conſequence of the poſition of the army and our preparations.

Then followed the General's intercourſe with a Maratta agent, mentioned in our addreſs of the 31ſt March, when, though every readineſs was ſhewn on our part to liſten to any reaſonable propoſals, we are ſorry to ſay, never advanced to any direct negociation: the General's account of the arrival, and of his reception of the agent, appears on the Diary under the 15th of February, and in the ſame letter is mentioned a circumſtance related to him by the agent, of the Admiral's interference, by ſending an agent to the Miniſters with a meſſage on the ſubject of the preſent war and the projected treaty.

Thoſe paſſages of the General's letter, relative to this affair, were communicated to the Admiral, who never explained himſelf to us in writing on this ſubject.

Under the 25th is entered another letter from the General, containing an account of his further proceedings with the Maratta agent; in which, as we obſerved, the Miniſter affected ignorance of the conditions propoſed by the Governor General and Council, though we were ſatisfied he was fully acquainted at leaſt with the ſubſtance of them: we thought it could have no bad effect, and would teſtify our earneſt deſire to promote a peace, were a copy of the Bengal propoſals to be ſent directly from the General to the Miniſter; we therefore ſuggeſted this meaſure to the General, which we thought would equally put to the teſt the ſincerity of the Miniſter's diſpoſition for peace.

Appendix, No. 343.

We underſtood that the four months limited by the Governor General and Council for the acceptance of their propoſals, was to expire the 9th of March, and therefore, to prevent the Miniſter taking any advantage to protract the concluſion of the treaty, we adviſed the General to accompany the copy of the propoſals with a declaration, that we ſhould conſider the four months to expire from that day, and not to commence from the delivery of the propoſals by him.

The General accordingly ſent a copy of the propoſals directly to the Miniſter, with a letter from himſelf, to which he received an anſwer, containing an abſolute refuſal of the offers made by the Bengal Government, as already noticed in our addreſs, dated the 31ſt of March.

The General's letter, and an exact tranſlation of the Miniſter's anſwer, are entered in our Diary under the 7th of March.

Diary, 7th March.

Having no grounds to expect the Miniſter would be induced to enter into our views againſt Hyder, by any further attempt to negociate, the General determined to conſider the Miniſter's anſwer as deciſive with reſpect to the negociation, and to make no more propoſals or overtures, which would only expoſe us to the mortification of a ſecond refuſal, without promiſing any reaſonable proſpect of ſucceſs, ſince, if the Miniſter had been really deſirous of peace, he certainly would have availed himſelf of the opening given him, and take ſome method to explain the propoſals, which, as he ſays in his anſwer, it is neceſſary ſhould be included for the benefit of the perſons allied to and connected with the councils of the Maratta Government.

Diary, 9th March.

The General however requeſted our opinion of the propriety or good policy of proſecuting any further plan of negociation, which we concurred with him, after the liberal advances made to the Miniſter, would be highly impolitic, and could not poſſibly anſwer any good end; and as the expiration of the limited period was then actually arrived, we propoſed waiting to hear the reſult thereof from the General, when if the Miniſter did not declare his acceptance of the offered terms, we ſhould finally determine what meaſure to purſue, which, as we then acquainted the General, we were of opinion muſt be confined to a defenſive plan.

Owing to a ſtoppage in the communication, we did not again hear from the General till the 24th of March, when an abſolute bar being put to hopes of peace, as the propoſals, beſides being rejected, had become void with the expiration of the term limited for their remaining in force, the General ſubmitted to us a plan of meaſures to be purſued in our then ſituation, which have already been briefly mentioned to you, and are explained at length in his letter entered under that date.

Letter 31ſt March.

General Goddard's definition of the objects of the war, and of our political views on this ſide of India, is exactly the ſame as repeatedly expreſſed by us in all our proceedings and plans of conduct, and by which we have been invariably guided in all our operations.

We entirely concurred with him, and indeed the propoſition was our own, that a ſyſtem of defence was now become an act of neceſſity, and our only difficulty lay in the choice of meaſures for purſuing that ſyſtem. Various objections lay againſt keeping the large force now propoſed by the General at the head of the ghauts during the monſoon, ſuch as the danger and difficulty of affording them ſupplies, as had already been experienced in a high degree, the vaſt expence of ſtores and ammunition, and the imprudence of leaving ſo large a part of our force in a ſituation, when we could not command their ſervices if there ſhould be occaſion for them at Bombay, or be able to give them aſſiſtance if they ſhould be hard preſſed; and after all it did not appear, that maintaining a poſt at the head of the ghauts would anſwer swer the purpose, which alone could justify the measure, namely, preventing the enemy from entering the Conkan; for it was evident by the General's letters, that notwithstanding the position of the army, a very considerable body of the enemy had entered the country by other passes, of which there were several, by which a large convoy of provisions had been exposed to imminent danger, and considerable loss actually sustained. If the General could have adopted our proposal of making himself master of Razemachy, the possession of that fort might have been maintained with a small body of men, and it would have afforded secure lodgement for the troops and stores, without the expence attending the proposed scheme of raising works, fortifying a post, building magazines, casemates, &c. constructed with a sufficient degree of strength and solidity, to resist the attacks of the enemy, and the impression of the weather during the monsoon.

Diary, 24th March.

Upon the whole, we were of opinion, that if at any time hereafter it might be judged expedient to possess ourselves of the ghauts, they might again be forced or taken possession of with much less loss, difficulty, and danger, than would attend maintaining a post there during the rainy season; and we therefore recommended to the General to drop the idea, and to employ the army the remainder of the season in protecting the Conkan, and reducing the strong holds which still remained in the hands of the enemy.

Diary, 7th April.

The General in reply acquainted us, that although he entirely concurred with us in the superior expediency of the measures we had recommended, he was unable at that time, owing to a particular train of circumstances, to carry them into execution; for having under the 28th of March detached a very strong escort to Panwell, under the command of Colonel Brown, to bring a supply of provisions to the army, Holkar had descended the ghauts with the whole of his force, and by this addition of strength to the enemy then in the Conkan, had rendered the return of the escort, if not impracticable, at least too dangerous to be attempted without a reinforcement. Colonel Brown in the march to Panwell had been harassed by the enemy's troops, and lost a considerable number of bullocks; and in this emergency the General found himself obliged to request we would immediately order a detachment from the garrison of Bombay to join Colonel Brown and proceed with him to camp, after which the General proposed immediately to relinquish the post on the ghauts. He strongly urged to us to comply with his requisition, as he found it impracticable to march a detachment from camp to join the escort, or to relinquish the post until the return of Colonel Brown with the draft bullocks; and further mentioned that his stock of provisions would not last more than twelve days.

Diary, 10th April.

In this critical situation we immediately exerted every possible effort to extricate the army, and accordingly instantly formed the strongest detachment our garrison would afford, to reinforce Colonel Brown; with which we had the pleasure to learn he conducted the convoy of provisions to the army without any loss, notwithstanding the repeated and powerful efforts of the enemy, who attacked him every day, and in particular on the march of the second day, when he was attacked by the enemy's whole force, consisting of at least 20,000 men. The troops however suffered, eighteen being killed and eighty-eight wounded.

The General bestowed great commendations on the conduct and military skill of Colonel Brown, in preserving and protecting his convoy during so long and incessant an attack, and we likewise thought it just to express our approbation thereof.

At this period the letter arrived from Bengal, mentioned in our address of the 30th ultimo; in consequence of which we took the resolution then communicated to you, for maintaining Tellicherry, which you will find more fully explained in our proceedings under the 19th, where our letter to the Admiral on the subject is also entered, and his answer under the following day. In this place we must mention, that the Admiral on every occasion where his assistance could be of use, has manifested the utmost zeal and attention for the Company's service.

Upon the junction of Colonel Brown the General moved from the gauts with the stores and provisions collected there, and after sustaining severe and continual attacks on the march, as already advised in our abovementioned address, arrived at Panwell on the 23d ultimo. The General's letters, containing particular accounts of these actions, are entered on the Diary under the 23d and 25th, with the returns of the killed and wounded, amongst which we were sorry to find Colonel Parker, who commanded the rear guard, and was killed on the last day's march.

The army remained at Panwell till the 20th instant, employed in embarking the sick and wounded, stores and baggage, for Bombay and Callian, when they marched to the latter place under the conduct of Colonel Brown, the General having come over to Bombay. The army is to be cantoned at Callian during the rains, except the Madras Europeans and the troops of this establishment, which are to remain in garrison at Bombay.

Diary, 29th April.

We had intended to return the Madras detachment to the coast, as already mentioned, immediately on close of the campaign; but the General has given his opinion in strong terms, the necessity of their remaining on this side of India, in which we also entirely concur, until circumstances more favourable than the present shall admit of their return. As the service of the Madras Europeans appears indispensable in the shattered state of our battalions, and the expence upon their present footing of a detachment on foreign service is very heavy, we have it in contemplation to return the officers and incorporate the men on this establishment, at least till we are in a condition to return them, by which we shall receive a very material addition of effective strength, and the Company be relieved from a very burthensome expence which the funds for the army are totally unequal to sustain.

Diary, 18th April.

In our last letter from the Governor General and Council they express high approbation of the sentiments delivered in the President's minute of the 1st of August, on the plan of operations for the campaign then ensuing; but events having taken place since that period which could not be foreseen or provided for, the interests of the Company required that the operations of their troops should be directed against another enemy, and that their system of policy should of course be changed. That it was now become necessary that the whole force which could be collected and spared from the immediate defence of the several Presidencies, should be employed in curbing, and, if possible, oversetting the increased power of their ambitious enemy in the Carnatic, and they hoped that the orders which General Goddard had received from Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote would have been followed by the immediate direction of his arms towards the territories of Hyder Ally Cawn.

Letters from General Coote on this subject, both to General Goddard and to us, are entered on our Diary, under the 15th of April, and our answer under the 26th; but we think it totally needless to use any arguments to you to demonstrate so obvious an impossibility, as that we could divert the army from our own defence against the possessions of Hyder Ally, before the Maratta war is brought to a conclusion; should our wishes for peace be happily accomplished, we shall most zealously co-operate to the utmost of our ability against the common enemy, in which case likewise the aid of the Madras Europeans will be indispensable; but, as we observed to General Coote, it is not because we are desirous of peace, or that peace is necessary to our affairs, that will prove arguments

ments with the Marattas to conſent to an accommodation. Let the ſame arguments be applied to Hyder Ally, with whom a peace is equally neceſſary, and we believe the effect will be equal. We confeſs we know not what further can be undertaken on the plan of negociation. The Miniſter has declared in very intelligible terms, that Hyder muſt be included in whatever treaty may be made with the Poonah Government, and we have tranſmitted this declaration to the Governor General and Council, who alone are competent to treat upon that ground.

In the Preſident's minute of the 1ſt, and our letter to Bengal of the 17th of Auguſt, our diſtreſs for money is deſcribed with the utmoſt ſtrength and juſtice. The Governor General and Council have in reply acquainted us, that they wiſhed to leave in ſuſpenſe their ultimate reſolution on that part of our letter, wherein we communicated our obſervations on the deſire they had expreſſed that the receipts from the acquiſitions in Guzerat ſhould be appropriated excluſively to the payment of the army under General Goddard. They further obſerve, that their ability to continue ſupplies is not increaſed, but on the contrary leſſened, as they had been obliged to augment their own military ſtrength to ſupply the place of detachments; and that the proſecution of the war in the Carnatic depended ſolely on remittances from their treaſury.

Diary, 28th Auguſt. Beſides the aſſiſtance we have afforded to General Goddard from the collections made from the Surat Pergunnahs, we alſo gave him as a further relief, a credit on our treaſury for the diſcharge of ſuch of the army bills as did not require ready money, by which means our bond debt has been very conſiderably increaſed.

It is an inexpreſſible diſappointment to us, that out of the five lacks conſigned to us by the Governor General and Council on the Duke of Portland, three have been landed and detained at Madras, without even the ſmalleſt notice given to us on the part of that Government. We ſhall however endeavour to avail ourſelves of the permiſſion we have received to paſs drafts on Bengal, by which, and our other reſources, applied with the moſt frugal management, we muſt hope to keep affairs in a currency: but our difficulties are and will be very great.

We mentioned in our addreſs, by the Hawke, the conduct of the Governor at Goa reſpecting the capture of an Engliſh merchant veſſel at Mangulore, and the Governor General and Council have tranſmitted our repreſentation of the affair to the Admiral; his opinion on the ſubject is entered on the Diary, under the 25th of September. The ſentiments of the Governor General and Council will appear in their letter entered the 9th of July; but we do not find the Admiral has taken any further ſteps in the affair; and the Governor General and Council have lately deputed Mr. Auriol, their ſecretary, to Goa, to make overtures to the Portugueſe for a coalition againſt Hyder Ally, though we underſtand Mr. Auriol has been unable, through bad health, to proceed further than Madras.

25th May. We have, as you will obſerve by our laſt conſultations, judged it expedient to detain the Ponsborne till we ſhall come to ſome final determination reſpecting the Madras detachment.

We have no late intelligence of the ſtate of affairs on the coaſt of Coromandel.

RECEIVED the following letter from Surat:

Honourable Sir, and Sirs,

We had the honour to addreſs you the 18th inſtant by an armed boat, and have ſince received your commands of the ſame date by the Revenge.

The Chief has acquainted us that he is in hopes of being able to procure about five lacks of rupees, in conſequence of a former order from your Honour, &c. and that one lack is already paid into the treaſury. Appendix. No. 344.

We therefore now ſend you by the Revenge, two lacks and a half of rupees in ſpecie, and your Honour, &c. may depend upon our attentive obſervance of your directions, relative to our continuing to ſend you down in ſpecie ſuch ſums as we can ſpare, or that the Chief may have taken up.

We are, with reſpect,
Honourable Sir, and Sirs,
Your moſt obedient
humble ſervants,

At a Select Committee, Tueſday 11th January 1780;—preſent, the Honourable William Hornby, Preſident and Governor; John Carnac, Eſquire, Daniel Draper, Eſquire.

Read letters received this morning from Brigadier General Goddard and the Chief of Surat.

The preſent low ſtate of our finances, and the indiſpenſable occaſions we have for our own unavoidable expences, make it utterly impoſſible for us to engage to accept General Goddard's drafts, or to give the Chiefs of Surat and Broach authority for that purpoſe. It muſt be obſerved, that ſince the date of General Goddard's letter, we have directed the Chief of Surat to advance him two lacks out of the expected loans at that place, which the Chief in his letter before us acquaints us he ſhould accordingly pay; and we truſt this ſum will prove a conſiderable relief to the exigencies of the army: but ſtill, to provide as far as we poſſibly can for their further demands, it is now alſo reſolved to empower the Chiefs of Surat and Broach to make good to General Goddard, for the ſervice of the army, the amount they may recover from the new-acquired Pergunnahs, and this is the utmoſt we can poſſibly do to aſſiſt him.

General Goddard muſt be again reminded of the inability of our garriſons at Surat and Broach to protect and ſecure the Pergunnahs, which he has deſired them to take poſſeſſion of, and that we cannot ſpare a man from this garriſon. It appears to us he might add much to his reſources by enabling our ſettlements to ſecure the collections of ſuch extenſive diſtricts, and it will reſt with him to determine whether this can be effected without injury to the ſervice, by any diſpoſition of the forces under his command.

Adjourned.

Extract of a Letter from General Goddard.

Gentlemen,

I beg to acknowledge your letter of the 18th inſtant, mentioning the arrival of the ſhip Elizabeth with ſtores from Madras, upon the ſubject of which I have already wrote you.

I beg now to addreſs you in the moſt particular manner, on the ſubject of the money for the pay and ſubſiſtence of the troops. I ventured to aſſure you, when at Bombay, that with the ten lacks coming round from Bengal, and the money I ſhould myſelf be able to procure at this place for bills on the Honourable Governor General and Supreme Council, I hoped to prevent the inconvenience of a want of caſh, till the effectual ſupply which I was certain would be ſent by the Government of Bengal, when they received intelligence of the war in which they were involved, might arrive. Of the ten lacks above-mentioned, five only are come to hand; the remainder, in ſpecie, is ſhipped on the Britannia, and on the way; ſo that my expectations on that account have met with a temporary delay in their gratification: and with reſpect to the reſource I aſſured myſelf of finding in my credit with the merchants of Surat, I have been entirely diſappointed by the inſtructions tranſmitted by your Committee to the Chief, to borrow money upon account of the Company, which has put a total ſtop to my drafts. It was my belief for ſome time, that the expedient thus adopted by your Government was intended for the ſupport of the common cauſe; but I find you propoſe reſerving whatever money may be thus borrowed to be ſent to your treaſury at Bombay. I know, gentlemen, your own ſcarcity of caſh, but I beg leave alſo to repreſent the expediency and ſound policy of aſſiſting and relieving my wants all in your power: for theſe reaſons, let me propoſe that you will authorize your Chiefs of Surat and Broach to advance me any ſums which the neceſſity of the ſervice only ſhall compel me to draw for; that you will be pleaſed to direct the amount of the revenues collected from the new Pergunnahs to be appropriated to the expences of the preſent war, for which they will be a very timely ſupply, and paid to me; and that you will adopt ſuch other expedient for the convenience and benefit of the ſervice, and to relieve my preſent diſtreſs, as you may judge moſt eligible, either by permitting me to make drafts on your treaſury, which may be accepted by you as loans and depoſits, or otherwiſe as your own wiſdom and experience in theſe matters may ſuggeſt, &c.

I have the honour to be,
Gentlemen,
Your moſt obedient
humble ſervant,
Thomas Goddard.

Extract of a Letter from Surat.

The ſum of two lacks ſhall be paid to General Goddard agreeable to your directions, and as faſt as the different perſons that have engaged for loans pay the ſame into the treaſury, it ſhall be tranſmitted to the Preſidency; but it will be the middle of next month before the whole is collected, as ſeveral of the merchants, on aſſenting to their loans, particularly ſpecified two periods for making good the ſame.

I am, with great reſpect,
Honourable Sir, and Gentlemen,
Your moſt obedient

Surat,
7th January 1780.

To Brigadier General Goddard.

Sir,

Our letter of the 27th ultimo, acquainting you of the effort we have made to aſſiſt you by directing the Chief of Surat to advance you two lacks of rupees for the ſervice of the army, which you were not apprized of at the date of your laſt letter; but with the moſt zealous and cordial inclination to relieve your wants, the low ſtate of our finances, and the indiſpenſable occaſions we have for every rupee we can raiſe from our ſtated reſources, for our own unavoidable expences, make it utterly impoſſible for us to engage to accept your drafts, or to give the Chiefs of Surat and Broach unlimited authority for that purpoſe. The ſupply juſt mentioned, will, we truſt, prove a conſiderable relief to your exigencies; and in order to provide to the utmoſt extent of our power for your further demands, we ſhall now direct the Chiefs of Surat and Broach to pay to your order the amount of ſuch collections as they may make from the new Pergunnahs, if the neceſſity of the ſervice ſhould compel you to require ſuch ſupply, which we ſhould be very glad may not be the caſe; but this is the utmoſt we can do to aſſiſt you.

Our ſentiments reſpecting the expediency of protecting the Pergunnahs adjoining to Surat and Broach were made known to you in our laſt letter, with the inability of thoſe garriſons to ſuch an extenſive ſervice; and the Chief of Surat has ſince acquainted us, that the motion of the whole army to the northward has put it entirely out of his power to make detachments for ſecuring the Pergunnahs that were to fall under his charge, which made the firſt of the plan recommended to you. It appears to us you might add much to your reſources by enabling our ſettlements to ſecure the collections of ſuch extenſive diſtricts, and it will reſt with you to determine whether this can be effected without injury to the ſervice by any diſpoſition of the forces under your command.

We are, Sir,

humble ſervants,

Bombay Select Conſultations, 28th January 1780.

To General Goddard.

Sir,

We have received your letters of the 6th and 10th inſtant.

We have the pleaſure to acquaint you that the Britannia is arrived at Bengal, and now proceeds to Surat with a conſignment of eight lacks of rupees in ſpecie for the ſervice of the army under your command. This ample ſupply will, we doubt not, render it unneceſſary for you to paſs any drafts upon the ſettlements of Surat and Broach, in conſequence of the latitude lately given you, and which we therefore deſire you will not make, as our own exigencies for money are very preſſing.

The Governor General and Council alſo acquaint us, that they ſhall ſoon ſend you a further ſupply of two lacks by the Besborough.

We are, Sir,

Gentlemen,

3. THE ſettlement of Guzerat being effectually accompliſhed by the conqueſt of Ahmedabad, and the expulſion of all the garriſons belonging to the Maratta Miniſter, before ſtationed in the different Pergunnahs to collect the revenues of the province, I had full leiſure to attend to the buſineſs which next appeared of the greateſt importance; and accordingly, having left Major Fullerton with eight companies of Sepoys drafted from the ſeveral battalions, and two field pieces, in a ſtrong poſt within the city of Ahmedabad, formerly the reſidence of the Guicawar collector of Futty Sing's ſhare of the revenues, in order to aſſiſt in the defence and ſettlement of the place; and further, to ſecure a uſeful and decided influence to the Engliſh in the northern part of the province, I marched myſelf with the remainder of the army to the river Myhie, which I croſſed on the 6th inſtant, having previouſly ſent off all my heavy ſtores, artillery, and unneceſſary baggage, to Cambait, to be ſent from thence to Broach.

10. I muſt here beg leave to obſerve, that of the reinforcements ordered to join me from Madras, five hundred Europeans only, under the command of Colonel Brown who commands the whole of the detachment, have arrived at Surat.

11. No part of the troops from Tellicherry are joined, owing to cauſes that appear to me moſt unaccountable, but which have been alleged, very unfortunately for the preſent preſent juncture, to render the ſervice of ſo large a force totally uſeleſs to this campaign; for by the laſt advices they were detained merely to oppoſe the irruptions of the Nairs; a race of banditti who poſſeſs the hills adjoining to Tellicherry. Although Colonel Braithwaite, in the letters he formerly wrote me, aſcribed the detention of the Mahie detachment to his fears of Hyder's hoſtile deſigns, which have ſince proved without foundation; but admitting that the Tellicherry troops were now permitted to ſet out, the ſeaſon is ſo far advanced that they could not poſſibly arrive in time to be employed upon any ſervice before the ſetting in of the rains.

12. I muſt beg leave here to repreſent the conſiderable increaſe of expence that will be requiſite to maintain all theſe additional troops who will look to be ſupported by me as their commander and immediate repreſentative of your Supreme Government. I ſhould expect and think it muſt be deemed ſtrictly conſiſtent with juſtice and propriety, that every acceſſion of revenue which may immediately ariſe to the Company from operations of this war, ſhould be ſet aſide and ſolely appropriated to aſſiſt in defraying the expences of it, and hope you will ſignify your ſentiments to the Select Committee of Bombay accordingly; but as the collection of theſe newly-acquired Pergunnahs likely to be the ſcene of future hoſtilities, muſt at preſent be very precarious and uncertain, let me entreat you will continue to ſend me ſuch ſupplies of money as will be abſolutely neceſſary to ſupport the large army I ſhall have with me, and prevent my having recourſe to the expedient of drawing bills on your Honourable Board, which I might perhaps be compelled to do at a very conſiderable loſs.

I have the honour to be, &c.
(Signed) Thomas Goddard.

APPENDIX, No. 347.

Bengal, Secret Conſultations, 1ſt May 1780.

AGREED that the following letter be written to Bombay:

Gentlemen,

We have received your letter of the 31ſt January.

In order to enable us to make an early proviſion for any future ſupplies which you may require from us, we deſire that you will tranſmit to us as ſoon as poſſible an eſtimate of your probable receipts and diſburſements for the enſuing year, included between the 30th of April 1780 and the 1ſt of May 1781; with an account of the actual receipts and diſburſements of your Government for the preceding year, ending the 30th April 1780.

We further deſire to be furniſhed with a ſeparate eſtimate of the groſs revenue and charges of collection of the pergunnahs or diſtricts ceded to the Honourable Company by the treaties of Poorunder, and that lately concluded with Futty Sing Guicawar, alſo an account of your bonded debt, with the amount of intereſt due thereon up to the lateſt period.

We are, &c.

Fort William, the 1ſt May 1780.
Warren Haſtings,
P. Francis,
Edwd Wheler.

Bengal Secret Conſultations, the 11th September 1780;— preſent, the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Governor General, Preſident; Philip Francis, Edward Wheler, Eſquires; Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote, K. B.

Appendix. Nos. 347 & 348.

Read the following letter from the Preſident and Select Committee at Bombay:

Gentlemen,

We have the honour to encloſe a duplicate of our letter of the 6th ultimo, and have ſince received your letter of the 15th of May, to which we ſhall ſhortly reply more fully. In the mean time we muſt expreſs our very earneſt hope, that the meaſure we have adopted for relieving you from the heavy expence of the Bengal army will meet with your firm ſupport, and that you will exert your extenſive reſources to the utmoſt to ſend round the neceſſary ſupplies this ſeaſon to give full efficacy to our plan, and put an end to ſuch inſupportable drains from your treaſury in future.

We are, &c.

Bombay Caſtle, 30th July 1780. (Signed) W. Hornby, &c. Select Committee.

APPENDIX, No. 348.

Bengal Public Conſultations, 3d October 1780.

Extract of a Letter from the Preſident and Council of Bombay; dated 17th Auguſt 1780.

WE have received your letter of 1ſt May, and in conſequence thereof now forward the following accounts; moſt earneſtly requeſting that you will take the moſt effectual meaſures for ſending us ample and ſpeedy ſupplies, as we are now in the utmoſt diſtreſs for money to defray even our ordinary expences.

The accounts above-mentioned are;

N° 1. Eſtimate of the Honourable Company's probable receipts and diſburſements at this Preſidency, for the year 1780-1.

N° 2. Account of the receipt and diſburſements at this Preſidency and factories ſubordinate, for the year ending the 30th April laſt.

N° 3. Eſtimate of the groſs revenue ceded to the Honourable Company by the treaty of Poorunder.

N° 4. Account ceſſions made by the treaty concluded with Futty Sing, and of the conqueſts in conſequence of the war with the Marattas.

N° 5. Statement of the nett revenues at the Preſidency and factories ſubordinate.

N° 6. Account of the bonded debt at this Preſidency, made up with intereſt to the 30th April laſt.

We have the honour, &c.

Bombay Caſtle, 17th Auguſt 1780. (Signed) Wm Hornby, &c. Council.

APPENDIX, No. 349.

Extract of a Letter from Brigadier General Goddard, to the Governor General and Council: dated Bombay, 6th September 1780; received 20th November.

I SHALL take the earlieſt opportunity of putting the troops from Surat in motion; which I apprehend, on account of the uncommon quantity of rain that has fallen this year, and ſtill continues to fall, cannot poſſibly be before the firſt of October.

Let me repeat my earneſt ſolicitations, that you will exert every endeavour to remedy the evils already felt, and prevent thoſe ſtill more ſevere, which we muſt inevitably experience unleſs you ſtrain every reſource at this time to adminiſter relief. I have ſo often troubled you with repreſentations on this ſubject, and you are yourſelves ſo well informed of the circumſcribed means poſſeſſed by this Government towards extricating themſelves and me from our preſent diſtreſs, that I feel at once the impropriety of enlarging further on it.

APPENDIX, No. 350.

Extract of Bombay Select Conſultations, 6th March 1780.

THE Factors at Tellicherry muſt have permiſſion to land from the Beſborough two lacks and a half of rupees out of the five lacks expected from Bengal on that ſhip, having no other method of ſupplying them to the amount they require; and leſt the ſhip ſhould have paſſed their port, 50,000 rupees will be immediately ſent from hence on a veſſel which will be ordered for that purpoſe. The Reſident at Onore muſt alſo have permiſſion to land one lack of rupees from the Beſborough.

13th March 1780.

Extract of a Letter to Mr. Richard Church, Reſident, &c. Factors at Tellicherry.

Gentlemen,

We have received your letters of the 25th and 28th of January, and 2d, 9th, 11th, and 21ſt ultimo.

The Eagle arrived here the 7th inſtant, with Mr. Petrie.

We have, as before adviſed, given you authority to land two lacks and a half of rupees from the Beſborough out of the promiſed ſupply from Bengal; and though it muſt be attended with loſs to the Company, we can find no other mode of ſupplying you to ſo large an amount. But in caſe the Beſborough ſhould have paſſed Tellicherry before the receipt of this order, we now ſend you by the Morning Star, a ſupply of fifty thouſand rupees for your immediate expences, and ſhall furniſh you with the remainder of the ſum required in the moſt expeditious manner; which we ſhall be very glad to ſee appropriated to the purchaſe of pepper, inſtead of being expended in military charges.

We cannot give any orders about the works at Tellicherry, till we receive what Mr. Dacer has to offer further upon the method of putting them into a more compact ſtate of defence.

We encloſe a copy of our letter of this date to Major Cotgrave, and an invoice of the treaſure and ſtores on board the Morning Star, for your ſettlement, the whole amounting to - - - - - rupees.

After landing the conſignments of the Morning Star, you will return her to the Preſidency immediately.

We are

Your loving friends,

Bombay, 13th March 1780.

William Hornby, &c. Committee.

Bombay, Tueſday 4th April 1780.—At a Select Committee; preſent, the Honourable William Hornby, Eſquire, Preſident and Governor, Daniel Draper, Eſquire. (Mr. Carnac indiſpoſed and abſent.)

Appendix Nos. 349 & 351

Read letters received from Tellicherry ſince our laſt meeting.

Tellicherry. The Reſident and factors to apply the money there to the payment of their troops, if there is no appearance of the troubles being ſoon accommodated.

As it will be utterly impoſſible for us to ſend any further ſupply of caſh to that ſettlement, and if the money there is expended in purchaſes of pepper, no means will remain for defraying the expences of its troops for the defence, which may be attended with the moſt alarming conſequences; directions muſt therefore be ſent to the Reſident and factors to pay the firſt attention to the means of their own ſafety, and that if they ſee no immediate proſpect of the troubles being accommodated, they muſt reſerve the whole of their preſent balance of caſh for the payment of their garriſon, as they muſt not expect to receive any further ſupply from us.

APPENDIX, No 351.

Extract of Bombay Select Conſultations, the 18th April 1781.

Letter from Governor General and Council at Fort William; dated 7th January 1781.

Honourable Sir, and Sirs,

IN our letter of the 9th of October, which we have the pleaſure to forward to you in tranſcript, we acknowledge our receipt of the letter which you had written to us under date the 17th of Auguſt. We have ſince received thoſe of the 11th and 23d September.

We have read with attention your Preſident's minute tranſmitted to us with your letter of the 17th of Auguſt, and highly approve of the ſentiments therein delivered on a plan of operations for the enſuing campaign: it ſeems to us to be the beſt that could be adopted at the time when it was written; but ſince that period, events have taken place which could not have been foreſeen or provided for; the intereſts of the Company require, that the operations of their troops ſhould be directed againſt another enemy, and that their ſyſtem of policy ſhould of courſe be changed. It has now become neceſſary that the whole force which we are able to collect and to ſpare from the immediate defence of our Preſidencies, ſhould be employed in curbing, and if poſſible, overſetting the increaſed power of our ambitious enemy in the Carnatic; and we hope that the orders which General Goddard has received from Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote, with whom it was left by us to ſend him ſuch as he ſhould deem expedient, will have been followed by the immediate direction of his arms towards the territories of Hyder Ally Cawn.

We wiſh at preſent to leave in ſuſpenſe an ultimate reſolution on that part of your letter wherein you communicate to us your obſervations on the deſire we had expreſſed, that the receipts from the acquiſitions in Guzerat ſhould be excluſively appropriated to the payment of General Goddard's army. Our ability to continue ſupplies to it and to your Preſidency, is not increaſed ſince we made the requiſition; but on the contrary, conſiderably leſſened, for we have been obliged to augment our military ſtrength to ſupply the place of the detachments made from the force compoſing it; and the proſecution of the war in the Carnatic depends ſolely on remittances from our treaſury.

We have ſent to your Preſidency on the ſhip Duke of Portland, the ſum of five lacks of rupees, which we hope will prove to you a ſeaſonable ſupply, and we authorize you to draw on us for ſuch further ſums as you may want at a reaſonable rate of exchange; but the exchange of bills procured here payable at your Preſidency is ſo extravagantly high, and the riſk of conveyance of treaſure to the other ſide of India ſo great, that we cannot promiſe you ſupplies in any other manner.

We have peruſed the tranſlations which you have ſent us of the intercepted papers from the Dutch Chief at Surat and the Maratta Vackeels, but we deem them as unimportant as defective in proof; and would recommend that the complaint be permitted to reſt to a future day.

We are not of opinion that the information contained in Mr. Henſhaw's letter enclоſed in yours to us of the 23d September, is of ſufficient importance to require our ſerious attention; ſo far otherwiſe are we inclined to believe that the Portugueze are diſpoſed to be hoſtile to the Company, that we have lately determined to make overtures to them for an union with us in diſtreſſing Hyder Ally, by ſending a body of forces into his country.

The inſults which have been offered to the Portugueze by this common enemy; the friendſhip and alliance which has long ſubſiſted between their nation and ours; and independently of this laſt conſideration, the intereſt which they have, in common with us, in curbing an increaſe of power in that ambitious Chief, have prevailed with us in making them the overtures above mentioned; and we have deputed on this ſervice Mr. James Peter Auriol; who has been inſtructed to adviſe you regularly of ſuch part of his proceedings as may be neceſſary for your information.

We have the honour to be.
Honourable Sir, and Sirs,
Your moſt obedient
humble ſervants,
Warren Haſtings,
Edward Wheler.

APPENDIX, No 352.

Extract of a Letter from Sir Edward Hughes, K.B. to the Earl of Hilſborough, dated Tellicherry Road, 15th May 1781.

ALTHOUGH His Majeſty's ſquadron under my command was in a perfect condition for ſea, and the ſeaſon at hand when bad weather might be expected on this coaſt; yet knowing the many good conſequences that would reſult to the public ſervice by effectually preventing the ſettlement of Tellicherry from falling into the enemy's hands, I readily complied with the requeſt of the Select Committee; and on the 28th of laſt month having embarked 40 European artillery men and 60 European infantry on board the ſhips of the ſquadron and 1160 Sepoys with 40 artillery Laſcars on four tranſports, I proceeded with the ſquadron and tranſports (as named in the margin) to ſea the ſame day, and arrived at this place the 7th of this month, and found it cloſely inveſted on all ſides by the enemy under the command of Sadier Caun, an officer of rank in Hyder Ally's ſervice.

Superb, Exeter, Worceſter, Burford, Eagle, Coventry, Chaſer, Combuſtion fireſhip, Revenge, Royal Admiral, York, Freemaſon.

On the day after our arrival all the troops from Bombay on the ſquadron and tranſports were diſembarked, and the boats and men from the ſquadron have been conſtantly employed ſince in unlading and landing a very large quantity of proviſions, and all kinds of military ſtores, from the Company's ſhips Royal Admiral and Royal Charlotte, which laſt arrived here from Bombay on the 10th of this month with a farther reinforcement of 500 men for this garriſon: the ſervice of landing the ſtores and proviſions has been attended with much trouble and delay, as there is a very high ſurf on the ſhore at this ſeaſon of the year, and very few ſhore boats at this place.

The ſhips Royal Admiral and Royal Charlotte being now cleared of all the proviſions and ſtores intended for this place, and the detachment of Madras troops under Major Cotgrave, amounting to 1180 men, Europeans, and Sepoys, embarked on the above ſhips and three tranſports, I ſhall immediate proceed to ſea with His Majeſty's ſquadron and theſe ſhips, and make the beſt of my way to the Coromandel coaſt, together with ſuch others as have taken the benefit of convoy.

APPENDIX, No 355.

Extract of Bengal Secret Conſultations, the 26th October 1780;—preſent, the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Governor General, Preſident; Philip Francis, Edward Wheler, Eſquires.—(Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote abſent on ſervice.)

THE following minute from the Governor General having been circulated on the 16th inſtant it was returned with the minute from Mr. Francis, which is entered after it.

Governor General—Among the many important meaſures which have been objects of the deliberations of this Government, one moſt eſſentially neceſſary has eſcaped the attention of the Commander in Chief, as well as myſelf and members of the Board.

The numerous detachments from this Preſidency, now in the field, unleſs acting in concert, and connected in their operations by one uniform plan, may tend, inſtead of ſupporting, to counteract and even to defeat what is, and muſt continue to be for a long time to come, our principal object—the war againſt Hyder Ally Cawn: to this every other meaſure muſt be ſecondary and ſubſervient; for on the event of this may depend the ſalvation of the Britiſh dominion in India. In every ſituation of the army under General Goddard it may be employed to create a diverſion in favour of the operation of the Commander in Chief. It is impoſſible to lay down any determined ſyſtem, or even fixed principles, of proſecuting the operations of the war, as they muſt be guided by circumſtances. Peace may be concluded with the Marattas. Peace negatively, or peace with an offenſive alliance; or they may only agree for a truce, or the war may be continued, and in this event the ſtate and contingencies of it are liable to infinite poſſible variations.

His operations of courſe muſt be influenced in ſome degree by any reſult of theſe ſuppoſitions, and ought at the ſame time to be ſo conſtructed as to concide with the views of the Commander in Chief.

For this reaſon, I recommend that the Commander in Chief be empowered to iſſue ſuch orders to every detachment that has or may be made from the military eſtabliſhment of this Preſidency, as he ſhall judge expedient for the general ſervice of the war; and that orders of courſe be ſent to the reſpective detachments, to obey all orders which they ſhall receive from the Commander in Chief.

As there is yet time for the Commander in Chief to receive the authority which I have propoſed, before his final departure, I am anxious to ſolicit the Board for their immediate determination upon it.

Agreed. Edward Wheler.

Mr. Francis's minute.

Mr. Francis—I think it very neceſſary that Brigadier General Goddard ſhould be inſtructed to act in concert with the Commander in Chief, and to obey his orders. This was the point to which I alluded in my minute of the 9th inſtant. I agree to the whole of the motion, though I think that in effect it can only be applied to ſuch detachments as are now or may hereafter be ſent to either of the two coaſts.

(Signed) P. Francis.

The Governor General's propoſition having been agreed to, the following letter was written to the Commander in Chief, and the letters which are entered after it were written to Brigadier General Goddard, and to Major Camac.

To the Commander in Chief.

Sir,

As the detachments now in the field from the forces under this Preſidency, unleſs acting in concert, and connected nected in their operations by one uniform plan, may inſtead of ſupporting, tend greatly to counteract what is, and muſt continue for ſome time to come, to be our principal object, viz. the war againſt Hyder Ally Khan; we think it neceſſary to empower you to iſſue ſuch orders to every detachment that has been made from the military eſtabliſhment of this Preſidency as you may judge expedient for the general ſervice of the war.

Fort William, We are, &c.
16th October 1780.

To Brigadier General Goddard, &c.

Sir.

Having thought it proper to empower Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote, the Commander in Chief, now embarking for the Preſidency of Fort Saint George, to iſſue ſuch orders to every detachment that has or may be made from the military eſtabliſhment of this Preſidency, as he ſhall judge expedient for the general ſervice of the war in which the Company's forces are engaged; we direct that you implicitly obey all ſuch orders as you may receive from him after your receipt of this letter.

Fort William, We are, &c.
the 16th October 1780.

The ſame to Major Jacob Camac, commanding the detachment of the Company's troops in Ghode.

APPENDIX, No 356.

Extract of Bombay Select Conſultations, the 29th April 1781.

Extract of Letter from the Preſident and Select Committee at Bombay to Brigadier General Goddard, dated 29th April 1781.

IN the preſent ſtate of affairs, we agree with you that it will be a very proper meaſure, and of benefit to the public ſervice, to detain the Madras detachment till more favourable circumſtances will admit of their return, and we ſhall therefore in our next advices acquaint that Preſidency of the motives which have induced us to alter our former reſolution of ſending back theſe troops; which we hope with you will be attended with no inconvenience to them at this time.

As you are well acquainted with the preſent reduced ſtate of our European eſtabliſhment, it is unneceſſary to point out how deficient we are in our artillery and infantry corps. We wiſh therefore to be favoured with your ſentiments how far in your opinion it might be proper and practicable to incorporate with our troops the non-commiſſioned officers and private men of the Madras detachment, by which we ſhould have an addition of material ſtrength ſo neceſſary at this time, and not to be expected from Europe, beſides relieving the Company for ſome time of a conſiderable additional expence. If you coincide with us in this ſtep, the officers now ſerving with theſe men may be returned to the other coaſt on the veſſels which will ſhortly ſail thither.

Extract of Bombay Select Conſultations, the 26th May 1781;—preſent, the W° Daniel Draper, and Nathaniel Stackhouſe, Eſquires.

The commander of the Ponſborne having reported to the Board that he will be ready to ſail on the 28th of this month, Mr. Draper obſerves to the Committee, that it is material this ſhip ſhould remain here until we have come to a final determination reſpecting the Madras detachment in order to furniſh an opportunity for conveying round a proportion of the officers, ſhould it be reſolved upon to incorporate the private men; and that her detention here for a ſhort time is a matter of no importance to the Company, as ſhe will be diſpatched in very ſufficient time to proceed from Madras to China. Agreed therefore, for the above reaſons, that we propoſe to the Board, which will meet this morning, to refer the diſpatch of the Ponſborne to this Committee.

APPENDIX, No. 357.

Appendix. Nos. 356&357.

Letter from the Preſident and Select Committee of Bombay to the Honourable the Secret Committee of the Honourable the Court of Directors for Affairs of the Honourable United Company of Merchants of England trading to the Eaſt Indies, dated 28th July 1781.

Honourable Gentlemen;

Par. 1. WE addreſſed you by this channel in duplicate, under the 31ſt of March and 30th of April, and now forward triplicates; we have ſince addreſſed you more at length under the 27th of May by the Prime.

2. The Morning Star being now diſpatched to the Gulph to convey to India any packets or intelligence of importance that may arrive at Buſſorah after the diſpatch of the Mercury, we take the opportunity of giving you brief advice of our ſituation.

3. The ſeaſon of the year neceſſarily prevents all military operations, and the troops are diſpoſed in quarters and cantonments at Bombay and Calliaa; neither has any further negociation been attempted either by us or the enemy ſince the propoſals offered by the Governor General and Council, and the advances made in conſequence by this Government and General Goddard, the reſult of which has been already communicated to you.

4. It is as yet too early for us to fix upon any preciſe plan, or to determine abſolutely upon further meaſures. The late occurrences, our ſituation and circumſtances, have been made known to the Governor General and Council, and we may expect their orders, founded upon full knowledge and information thereof. In the mean time it is our buſineſs in this ſeaſon of inaction to watch events with a careful eye, and to endeavour hereafter to make a judicious application of them to the Company's advantage.

5. You have been already adviſed in our letter dated the 31ſt of March, that on the failure of the negociation we judged it more expedient to reduce the war on our part to a mere ſyſtem of defence: this plan does not ſeem to be agreeable to the ſentiments of the Governor General and Council. They tell us in a late diſpatch, that the unwillingneſs of the Miniſter to accept the offer of a treaty, does not diſappoint, but on the contrary has rather pleaſed them, as it leaves them at liberty to ſecure to the Company the important poſſeſſion of Baſſein, and the other advantages acquired at the time the propoſed treaty was written; and will warrant them in declaring their reſolution not to part with that valuable acquiſition, unleſs ſome great reverſe of fortune ſhould attend the operation of our arms. The ill ſucceſs which had attended their advances, diſcouraged them from looking to any favourable termination of the war, but the moſt vigorous and ſucceſsful proſecution of it; and under this impreſſion they intimate their wiſhes that our utmoſt aid might be afforded to General Goddard's operations.

6. They impute to us a ſudden alteration of ſentiment, with reſpect to the mode of proſecuting the war againſt the Marattas. This is not an opportunity for entering into a particular defence and explanation of our meaſures. Our addreſs of the 11th of January, and proceedings tranſmitted by the Prime, will ſhew the grounds and principles upon which we acted when we communicated to General , in future, a purſuit of the war with all poſſible vigour, and to the utmoſt extent practicable with the force under his command; and that this recommendation was in exact conformity to our inſtructions from the Governor General and Council; in hopes by an active exertion, or by ſome deciſive ſucceſs in the interval limited for the acceptance of their propoſals, to diſpoſe the Maratta Government to an accommodation. Our ſubſequent plan of conduct was a neceſſary conſequence of the failure in theſe hopes, and of our ſituation and circumſtances at the time which ſtand fully explained in our proceedings above referred to.

7. The Governor General and Council adviſe us under the 7th of May, that beſides the other cauſes which diſſuade them from making any further overtures of peace to the Adminiſtration of Poonah; another objection had recently occurred, in the connection they had lately formed in the Government of Berar, which they had every reaſonable hope would be attended with a very eſſential change in their political influence. The principal points of this engagement are ſubjoined, as communicated to us.

8. The firſt of the . . . . . inform . . . . . appoints . . . . . thouſand cavalry to overtake Colonel Pearce's detachment, and to aſſiſt in war againſt Hyder Naig.

9. The ſecond ſtipulates, that the Berar army ſhall immediately leave the province of Oriſſa, and Marine Day. An expedition againſt Gurrahmyndalla, aided by a body of the Company's troops, in the reduction of it.

10. Third and laſt articles are preliminary to a ſtill nearer connection of the two Governments, and fix the means by which this may be effected.

11. Meſſrs. Eyles Irwin, and John Richmond Smith, arrived here from Buſſorah the 29th of May, and we received at the ſame time your commands of the 10th of January, which had overtaken them on the deſert. Mr. Irwin was furniſhed with one of your cruizers to Madras, from whence ſhe was to proceed to Fort Marlborough, with advice of the rupture with Holland, which we had before adviſed the Preſident and Council appeared to be inevitable. Meſſrs. Benfield, Seton Stuart, and Conran, arrived here the 7th inſtant, with duplicates of theſe diſpatches, and ſoon after proceeded to Madras. Mr. Woolley is not yet arrived from Muſcat.

12. We have given orders for diſpoſſeſſing the Dutch of their factories at Broach and Surat; we have had advice of the latter being effected; and have reaſon to believe a conſiderable property will be found belonging to the Dutch Eaſt India Company, which ſhall be ſecured for the benefit of the Engliſh Eaſt India Company.

13. General Goddard has taken upon him the chief command of the troops on this eſtabliſhment, and a ſhare in our adminiſtration, according to your appointment; ſtill reſerving the ſeparate powers he holds under the Governor General and Council. Mr. John Halſey has alſo been admitted a member of this Committee, in the room of Mr. Stackhouſe, who proceeded to England on the Prime.

14. We are ſorry we have it not in our power to ſend you intelligence reſpecting the ſtate of affairs on the coaſt of Coromandel.

We have the honour to be,
with the higheſt reſpect,
Honourable Gentlemen,
Your moſt faithful and
obedient ſervants,

Tho. Goddard.

APPENDIX, No. 358.

Letter from the Governor General and Council, to the Honourable William Hornby, Eſquire, Preſident, and Select Committee at Bombay.

Honourable Sir, and Sirs,

SINCE writing to you on the 7th inſtant, we have received your letter of the 30th March.

It concerns us to obſerve ſo ſudden an alteration in your ſentiments with reſpect to the proſecution of the war with the Maratta State. On the 15th of January laſt, you declared to us your concurrence in the opinion of General Goddard, that a purſuit of the war with all poſſible vigour, as recommended by us, promiſed with the moſt rational expectation to promote a ſpeedy accommodation, ſooner than any other plan of conduct. It does not appear that any diſaſter has befallen our arms; on the contrary, every ſucceſs has attended them. Our troops were in the neighbourhood of Poonah, and in ſuch force as well as character, as was likely to overcome all oppoſition, and to compel the enemy to terms; yet in this proſperous ſtate of the war, we are informed of your reſolution to reduce it on your part to mere defence, and to the ſecurity of the poſſeſſions obtained to your Government, by another mode of conducting it.

We have repeatedly declared, that we wiſh ſincerely for a peace with the Maratta State; it is our fixed object, and we ſhall deem the accompliſhment of it, on honourable terms, a moſt deſirable event. One mode of obtaining it has been tried; advances have been made, but theſe advances have not been ſucceſsful; a repetition of them would, in our opinion, have no other effect, than to fix an opinion of our weakneſs in the Maratta Government, arm them with ſpirits againſt us, and inſtead of ſhortening, prolong the duration of the war. We repeat our firm conviction, that nothing but a vigorous and ſucceſsful proſecution of it, will produce an honourable termination of it. Under this impreſſion, our inſtructions to General Goddard have been framed and continued, and under the ſame influence, we expreſs to you our wiſh, that your aid may be afforded to General Goddard's operations.

We, on our receipt of your letter, gave immediate information to the Commander in Chief, according to your requeſt, of the determination which you have paſſed relative to the Madras detachment.

We are, &c. &c. &c.

The Honourable the Governor General and Council

APPENDIX, No. 360.

Letter from the Governor and Council of Bengal, in their Secret Department.

To the Honourable the Court of Directors for Affairs of the Honourable United Company of Merchants of England trading to the Eaſt Indies; dated 7th January 1781.

Honourable Sirs,

Par. 1. THE departure of Major John Scott to Europe, by expreſs appointment from the Governor General, as his private agent, affording us an opportunity of addreſſing you, we have the honour to avail ourſelves of it, in tranſmitting to you in triplicate our laſt advices from this department by the ſhips Fox and Walpole. Major Scott has taken his paſſage on a Portugueze ſhip, which being to ſtop in her way at Fort Saint George, we have recommended it to the Preſident and Select Committee at that place, to embrace the ſame occaſion of tranſmitting to you a relation of occurrences upon the coaſt to the lateſt period of Major Scott's ſtay. We beg leave to recommend this gentleman to your favour; and that he may be reſtored to the Company's ſervice without prejudice to his rank, if he ſhould hereafter deſirous of returning to Bengal.

2. We ſend to you numbers in this diſpatch, copies of the letters which we have received from Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote, ſince we had the honour of addreſſing you by the Fox. We are much concerned that the information contained in them, obliges us to ſay, that we ſtill continue in expectation of more favourable accounts of the ſtate of your affairs on the coaſt. The confidence which we place in the exertions of Lieutenant General

Dated 10 to 20 Nov.

General Sir Eyre Coote, in his experience in military affairs, and in his zeal for the public ſervice, will not permit us to deſpond of a proſperous change in it, while he continues at the head of your army; nor ſhall any aſſiſtance be wanting which we can render to give effect to his efforts. The military expences are indeed large, but we have promiſed to provide for them as long as we are able; and acting upon that promiſe, we have ordered that the ſum of CR$ 4,23,672. 10. 3. ſhould be remitted to Fort Saint George in ſpecie, by the ſhip Duke of Portland, now under ſailing orders. We have taken meaſures to continue to that Preſidency, ſupplies of grain and other articles of which they are in need: and ſhall in no inſtance relax in our declared reſolution to relieve their wants, as far as we may be able to ſupply them; but it is not in our power to afford that aid which the army is ſaid greatly to require, in an increaſe of its ſtrength in Europeans. The unfortunate diſaſter which befel the detachment from General Munro's army near Conjeveram, in September laſt, was attended with an important diminution of it; and we are not able to ſpare from the defence of our own provinces more than have been already detached from them.

3. This conſideration, added to others which ariſe from the preſent ſtate of your affairs on the coaſt, and the neceſſity which we feel of giving every aid to your Preſidency of Fort Saint George that can poſſibly be obtained, without too diſproportionate a ſacrifice of the poſſeſſions of the Company, or of thoſe of the Nabob Walaw Jaw, have induced us to propoſe a treaty of alliance with the Dutch, whoſe poſſeſſions at, and adjacent to, Cochin, have lately been invaded by Hyder Ally Khan.

Conf. 4 Jan. The treaty itſelf appears on our proceedings of the 4th inſtant, which go a number in the packet, and has been formed with the advice and correction of Mr. Roſs, director and Governor of the Dutch Eaſt India Company's ſettlements in Bengal.

4. It appears from an account which the Governor General informs us has been communicated to him by Mr. Roſs, that the force actually ſtationed at or near Cochin, will eaſily enable that Government to ſupply the proportion, both of European infantry and artillery, which are chiefly wanted, and of Malays ſpecified in the treaty; and theſe may be marched at a very ſhort notice and by a very near route, into the Carnatic, if the Governors of Columbo and Cochin, on which they depend, will accede to the proffered alliance. To engage their aſſent, which will in ſuch caſe involve both in great perſonal reſponſibility, as we underſtand that they have no regular powers to bind their Company in ſuch an act without the ſanction of the ſuperior Government of Batavia, we have offered to them much greater advantages than perhaps are ſuitable to the common intereſt which the Dutch Company have in the war, or than we ſhould be inclined to yield in an equal and formal negociation; but for this we have no time; the neceſſity of the Company require an inſtant relief, and the dependent ſtate of thoſe whom we ſolicit to be the immediate parties in the treaty, claims ſome additional conceſſions, both to indemnify them, and to win the concurrence of their ſuperiors.

5. Urged by theſe conſiderations, we have propoſed in the treaty the ceſſion of the country of Tinivilly to the Dutch Eaſt India Company. Its ſituation is ſuch, that it may, as we conceive, be ſeparated from the Government of the Carnatic, without either preſent embarraſſment or danger of future competition; and from its contiguity to the Dutch poſſeſſions in Ceylon, will prove a greater acquiſition to them than loſs to the Nabob.

6. The treaty has been ſuddenly prepared, without his knowledge, and of courſe without his conſent; and the latter is, we know, indiſpenſably neceſſary to that article of it in which the ceſſion of Tinnively is ſuggeſted, and which, on our part, we can only propoſe, but it is the only part which he is likely to have in the war, although the principal in it; and we have, in our opinion a right to claim at leaſt this ſmall return, both for the hazards which we incur and the exertions which we make for the ſupport of his cauſe; a return amounting only to the ſacrifice of a minute portion of his dominions, and that the moſt diſtant of them, for the ſalvation of the whole. Appendix No. 360.

7. A copy of the letter written by the Governor General to the Nabob on this occaſion, as well as of thoſe addreſſed to the Governors of Colombo and Cochin, and to the ſuperior Government of Batavia, appear on our proceedings of the 4th inſtant, to which we have already referred you for a tranſcript of the treaty itſelf. The latter has received our execution of it, and has been entruſted with our other diſpatches to Fort St. George to Mr. James Deighton, whom we have recommended to the Preſident and Select Committee to be employed to proceed with the treaty and letters, and ſuch other diſpatches as they may have occaſion to add to the Governments of Colombo and Cochin.

8. We think it proper to ſend for your information, an extract of a letter which we have received from the Preſident and Select Committee at Bombay, under date the 23d September, accompanied by a letter to them from Mr. Henſhaw, their Reſident at Goa; it goes therefore a number in this diſpatch: but we deem the report therein conveyed to us, unworthy of our ſerious attention. We are generally inclined to believe that, although a connection may ſubſiſt between the Portugueſe and the Marattas, its effect cannot be important: they have no rank among the Powers in India; they have no means of ſubſiſting their army in the field, and no ſuch advantages are likely to be yielded to them as can weigh againſt the ſtrong conſideration of the alliance which has long ſubſiſted between our nation and theirs. The claims which they prefer are claims of form, and perhaps would be preferred by any other nation having them whether they were or were not juſtly founded.

9. With reſpect to the ſuppoſed intention of aſſerting and maintaining the claim on Baſſein by force, it ſeems to us nugatory, and it cannot be effectual, ſince we have received certain advices that Brigadier General Goddard with his army was before Baſſein on the 18th November laſt, and we are informed that there was no force excepting that in garriſon to oppoſe his early capture of the place.

10. The inſults which have repeatedly been offered to the Portugueſe by our common enemy Hyder Ally, the friendſhip and alliance which has long ſubſiſted between their nation and ours, and, independently of this laſt conſideration, the intereſt which they have in common with us, in curbing an increaſe of power in that ambitious chief, have induced us to make overtures to that Government for an union with us in diſtreſſing Hyder Ally by ſending a body of forces into his country; and we have availed ourſelves of the ſervices of Mr. Auriol, our ſecretary, who had before received our permiſſion to proceed to the weſt of India for the re-eſtabliſhment of his health by deputing him to Goa on this occaſion.

11. A copy of our inſtructions to Mr. Auriol goes a number in the packet. We confeſs that our expectations of ſucceſs, from the overtures made to the Viceroy of Goa are not very ſanguine; but there appeared to us a poſſibility of adding to the force engaged againſt Hyder Ally by the union of that Government with ours, and we were not willing to neglect even the remote chance of ſuch an advantage.

12. The perfidious conduct of thoſe of the French nation at Pondicherry, as repreſented in Sir Eyre Coote's letter of the 19th November, ſuggeſting to us the neceſſity of taking immediate meaſures for preventing the example from having effect among thoſe reſident at Chandernagore, and within the provinces, we have given public notice to the higher claſs of Frenchmen, of our poſitive requiſition, that they all quit the provinces by ſea on or before the 31ſt inſtant, on pain of being made priſoners ſhould they be found in them after that period; and we have given orders for the immediate ſeizure of thoſe of the lower claſs. They had been all required in June laſt to leave the provinces by the 1ſt October; and our indulgence had permitted their remaining in them to this time, but the flagrant and hoſtile conduct of their countrymen at Pondicherry would not allow us to continue the favour ſhewn to them any longer.

13. We have the honour to ſend to you encloſed copies of the letters which we have received from Brigadier General Goddard, ſince we addreſſed you by the Fox. The information before quoted of his arrival at Baſſein will not be found in them, but it is ſufficiently authenticated by our receipt of a bill of exchange drawn by him and dated the 18th December.

14. Excepting the letter from Bombay before mentioned, and which is ſent a number in the packet, we have received no advices from that Preſidency of a later date than thoſe tranſmitted to you in our proceedings ſent by the ſhip Fox. We have remitted to them by the ſhip Portland treaſure to the amount of five lacks of rupees, and we have authorized them to draw bills on us for any further ſums at a reaſonable exchange.

15. The provincial Commander in Chief, in the perſuaſion that, to derive from the native infantry of our eſtabliſhment thoſe capital advantages which can only reſult from exact diſcipline, tempered with a ſtrict adminiſtration of the rights of the ſoldiery, it was poſitively neceſſary thoroughly to reform and new model the corps compoſing this part of our military force, preſented to us on the 26th ultimo, a ſeries of propoſitions beſt calculated, according to his judgment, for compaſſing ſo important and uſeful an end. Theſe propoſitions were accompanied with figured ſtatements, exhibiting as nearly as might be, the extraordinary expence which would be incurred by the new Sepoy eſtabliſhment, and the annual ſaving which would accrue from the general arrangements.

16. The letters which we have received from Brigadier General Stibbert on this ſubject, and copies of the ſtatements and propoſitions accompanying them, are ſent to you numbers in this diſpatch. After maturely conſidering the principles on which the plan ſubmitted to us was obviouſly founded, after meaſuring the extent of the advantages it promiſed to produce, and after ſatisfying ourſelves that it united economy and utility, we delayed not, in the conviction that the late military conſtitution of our native infantry was pregnant with defects, which, unleſs timely corrected, threatened the moſt ſerious and alarming conſequences, to paſs the whole of General Stibbert's propoſitions into reſolutions of our Council.

17. We will here delineate, as far as may be neceſſary, the general ground-work of this new ſuperſtructure, marking the leſs obvious motives of particular regulations, and diſtinguiſhing in a conciſe manner the advantages they poſſeſs over former inſtitutions and arrangements.

18. The apparent ſtrength of the battalions of the European regiments being at all times very inconſiderable (rarely exceeding 300 rank and file) and their poſitive and effective ſtrength being frequently below 200 men, the large eſtabliſhment of officers annexed to theſe corps appeared to be productive of an utterly irrequiſite expence, without yielding a ſingle advantage in a military point of view. Influenced by theſe reflections we made it our requeſt to General Stibbert to examine the expediency of doubling up the battalion of the regiments; and accordingly we have had the ſatisfaction of receiving his concurrence in a meaſure, that while it occaſions in our monthly expences a retrenchment of 37,186 ſonat rupees, furniſhes us with a conſiderable number of officers towards completing our native infantry on the new eſtabliſhment.

19. Although the Commander in Chief has, in the annexed propoſitions, inſerted a clauſe, expreſſing, that when the ſtrength of the European regiments ſhall exceed 752 rank and file, they ſhall revert to their former conſtitution (becauſe in that caſe the corps would be too unwieldy for the purpoſe of manœuvring with celerity and exactneſs) yet we muſt remark, that it is by no means probable that we ſhall be reduced during the continuance of the war in Europe, to the neceſſity of re-adopting this burthenſome ſyſtem on the military principle ſuggeſted, and that the period at which alone ſuch a neceſſity is likely to occur will be the beſt ſuited to its favourable and eaſy operation.

20. Having reſolved in conſequence of the approaching departure of a diviſion of our army towards Madras, to augment our military force, we iſſued orders for the raiſing of ſix new battalions; but the Commander in Chief having ſuggeſted to us the expediency of new modelling the native infantry, and of applying an immediate and effectual remedy to the abuſes which had crept into the corps compoſing this part of the army, to the great detriment of the ſervice; we thought proper to recal thoſe orders and to ſignify to him that we were prepared to receive his ſentiments at large upon this important and intereſting ſubject; when he accordingly preſented to us the annexed propoſitions, explaining them as far as was requiſite, in our conſultations of the 26th ultimo at which he was preſent.

21. As the advantages of the new Sepoy arrangements as far as relates to the purpoſes of manœuvring and diſciplining the corps, as well as to the effects which may be produced on the minds of the country Powers by ſuch an apparent increaſe of the number of battalions on our eſtabliſhment, are fully ſet forth in General Stibbert's letter to us of the 31ſt of October, we beg leave to refer you to the ſame for his arguments on theſe heads; which we are to obſerve had their due weight with us. We muſt alſo requeſt of you to ſeek in the ſame letter the reaſons adduced by him for aboliſhing the office of native commandant to the Sepoy regiments, in the propriety of which we entirely acquieſced, as well as in the expediency of the regulations, directing the native adjutants to be made from Jamautdars (inſtead of Subadars) with a view of preventing theſe officers from ſucceeding to the dangerous influence and authority of the commandants.

22. At the ſame time that, in order to the correcting of the abuſes which had crept into the army, and which were of a nature tending directly to the deſtruction of the corps compoſing it, it was become neceſſary to fix ſuch checks, and to eſtabliſh ſuch rigid rules, with regard to muſtering and paying the Sepoys, as ſhould put it totally out of the power of the commanding officers of regiments to derive any emoluments from their corps, and thereby engage their attention wholly to the diſciplining of them; it alſo became requiſite to annex ſuch rank and allowances to the command of theſe officers as ſuited its importance, and the length of their ſervice; for to have entirely excluded them from all perquiſites and emoluments whatſoever, without advancing their rank and ſalary, would, ſuppoſing it poſſible to have eſtabliſhed ſuch a regulation, have produced no other conſequence than that of rendering them to a man diſaffected to the ſervice; an evil that muſt have neceſſarily been followed by an univerſal relaxation of diſcipline, for which the moſt violent remedy would, under ſuch circumſtances, be ineffectual.

23. This danger however is avoided by granting, as we have done, advanced rank and allowances to the officers commanding regiments of Sepoys, who no doubt will ere long be reconciled to the reform, and being diſengaged from the purſuit of other objects, exert themſelves more than ever in training and diſciplining the corps committed to their charge.

24. You will be ſatisfied on examining the annexed papers, that notwithſtanding the great increaſe of field officers and captains, conſequent of the new arrangements, there will ſtill be an annual ſaving on the whole of near three lacks and an half of ſonat rupees, after allowing for the actual increaſe of force gained to the eſtabliſhment; but as the Commander in Chief is aware that excluſive of pay and batta there may be ſome other expences incurred by his regulations, of which he has not taken any notice, he does not reſt their propriety or utility on the head of ſaving. He will be ſatisfied if they ſhould not increaſe the diſburſements on the army account; and though, contrary to appearances as well as to his hope, they ſhould add in a ſmall meaſure to the military burthen, he aſſerts himſelf confident that the beneficial conſequences which will in due time reſult from them, will be abundantly more than adequate to the extraordinary expence they may occaſion.

25. It is unneceſſary for us to offer any remarks on the other parts of the annexed regulations; we conceive that they will ſpeak for themſelves; and we are particularly hopeful that the preſcribed forms for muſtering and paying the native troops will convince you, that it was our deſign (in theſe arrangements) to ſtrike at the root of every abuſe that could poſſibly affect either the good order and diſcipline of your forces, or the rights of the native ſoldiery.

26. We ſend you herewith a return of the European infantry and artillery on this eſtabliſhment. It will ſerve to place before you in a clear view, the alarming diſproportion of our ſtrength in Europeans to the number of native infantry; and at the ſame time the neceſſity of an early and ſtrong reinforcement of the former. We have before frequently ſuggeſted to you the neceſſity of preſerving this eſtabliſhment entire; it was particularly ſubmitted to your attention in one letter of the 13th October laſt, and we muſt now repeat to you our moſt earneſt requeſt that you will give the ſubject an early and particular conſideration. Your firſt eſtabliſhment of Europeans, even in time of peace, is not more than ſufficient to give reſpect to your military forces. In time of war it is greatly inferior to its wants; and when the exiſting numbers are below the eſtabliſhment, it is our duty to declare to you that your poſſeſſions are in danger of a ruin as ſudden as it may prove irretrievable. The eſſential ſtrength of this country, and the only ſtrength on which you can depend, is in the number of Europeans: you are not ſtrangers to this fact, and although there is no late proof from experience of the truth of the aſſertion, it cannot be inferred from this inſtance of our good fortune, that we may never experience the reverſe. Appendix, No. 360.

27. The ſum of forty-five lacks of rupees, to which the firſt loan on bonds bearing an intereſt of 8 per cent. per annum, was reſtricted by our reſolution of the 2d October laſt, having been completely ſubſcribed, we have determined to authorize the receipts of ſuch further ſums into the treaſury as might be tendered to it for like bonds.

28. The ſtate of our treaſury this day is as follows:

Ready money		8,17,446	11 9

We have the honour to be,
Honourable Sirs,
Your moſt faithful
humble ſervants,
Warren Haſtings,
Edwd Wheler.

Fort William,
7th January 1781.

Fort William the 4th January 1781.

At a Council; preſent, the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Governor General, Preſident, and Edward Wheler, Eſquire.—(Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote abſent on ſervice.)

Secret Dept. Thurſday.

The misfortunes which have attended the Company's arms in the Carnatic, in the war with Hyder Ally, and the diſadvantages which attend the proſecution of it, requiring that every aid ſhould be given to the Preſidency of Fort Saint George, that can poſſibly be obtained without too diſproportionate a ſacrifice of the poſſeſſions either of the Nabob or the Company, the following draft of a treaty has therefore been formed, with the advice and correction of Mr. Roſs, the Director of Chinſura; the expediency of it having been ſuggeſted by the late hoſtilities which have been committed by Hyder Ally Cawn upon the Dutch dependencies at Cochin. The force force actually ſtationed at and near Cochin, as appears from an account communicated by Mr. Roſs to the Governor General, will very well enable that Government to ſupply the proportion both of European infantry and artillery which we chiefly want, and of Malays, ſpecified in the treaty; and theſe may be marched at a very ſhort notice and by a very near route into the Carnatic, if the Governors of Columbo and Cochin, on which they depend, will accede to the propoſed treaty. To engage their aſſent, which will in ſuch caſe involve both in great perſonal reſponſibility, as we underſtand that they have no regular powers to bind their Company in ſuch an act without the ſanction of the ſuperior Government of Batavia, we have proffered to them much greater advantages than perhaps are ſuitable to the common intereſt which the Dutch Company have in the war, or than we ſhould be inclined to yield in an equal and formal negociation; but for this we have no time; our neceſſities require an inſtant relief, and the dependant ſtate of thoſe whom we ſolicit to be the immediate parties in the treaty, claims ſome additional conceſſions, both to indemnify them and to win the concurrence of their ſuperiors. It is for this reaſon we have agreed to propoſe the ceſſion of the country of Tinnevelly to the Dutch. Its ſituation is ſuch, that it may, as we conceive, be ſeparated from the Government of the Carnatic, without either preſent embarraſſment, or danger of future competition; and from its contiguity to the Dutch poſſeſſions in Ceylon, will prove a greater acquiſition to them than loſs to the Nabob. His conſent indeed is eſſentially and indiſpenſably neceſſary to this article of the treaty, which on our part we can only propoſe; but it is the only part which he is likely to bear in the war, although the principal in it; and we have a right to claim at leaſt this ſmall return, both for the hazards which we incur, and the exertions which we make for the ſupport of his cauſe; that is, the ſacrifice of a minute portion, and that the moſt diſtant of his dominions, for the ſalvation of the whole.

For all the foregoing reaſons we have reſolved both on the ſubſtance of the treaty, as we have conſtituted it, and on its immediate execution on our part; and that it be tranſmitted with the letter entered on the proceedings of this day to the Preſident and Select Committee at Fort Saint George. Other remarks upon the treaty itſelf we preſume will be unneceſſary, as we conceive their object and tendency will be obvious.

Propoſals for a Treaty of Alliance between the Engliſh and Dutch Eaſt India Companies and the Nabob Walla Jah Bahâdr.

Propoſed treaty with the Dutch and Nabob of Arcot.

Whereas the Nabob Hyder Ally Cawn has without any cauſe invaded the Carnatic Payengaut, and the poſſeſſions of the Engliſh Eaſt India Company which are ſituated therein, and attacked the ſettlements and forts of the Dutch Eaſt India Company dependent on the Government of Cochin on the Malabar coaſt, wherefore it hath become the common intereſt of the Nabob Walla Jah Bahâdr, who is the ſovereign of the Carnatic Payengaut, and of the two companies aforeſaid, to unite in repelling and defeating the attempts and deſigns of the ſaid Hyder Ally Cawn; the Governor General and Council of Bengal with the advice and ſuggeſtion of the Director for the management of the affairs of the Dutch Eaſt India Company in Bengal, do propoſe and offer the following conditions of a treaty to the Nabob Walla Jah, and to the proper agents and repreſentatives of the Dutch Eaſt India Company aforeſaid, hereby declaring them to be from the time in which the ſaid conditions ſhall receive the ſeals and ſignatures of the other parties to this treaty, binding on the Governor General and Council, and on all the Governments and dependencies of the Engliſh Eaſt India Company, in virtue of the ſeal of the Company, and the ſignatures of the Governor General and Council herein firſt prefixed; viz.

Article the firſt.

The Governments of Columbo and Cochin ſhall engage to provide and aſſign for the quota of the Dutch Eaſt India Company in the war with Hyder Ally Cawn, at or near Cochin, a diſciplined force conſiſting of not leſs than one thouſand European infantry, two hundred European artillery, and one thouſand Malays, with their complement of officers, not exceeding the rank of captains, it being underſtood and agreed that all the officers of a ſuperior rank ſhall either be furniſhed by the Preſident and Council of Fort Saint George, or appointed by commiſſions from them. Theſe forces ſhall be delivered over to the charge of ſuch officer or officers as ſhall be appointed by the Preſident and Council of Fort St. George to receive them, who ſhall for that purpoſe proceed to Cochin to receive charge and command of the ſame; and from that time the ſaid forces ſhall remain ſubject to the general authority and command of the Commander in Chief of the Engliſh forces, in like manner as the Engliſh forces in India are ſubject to his command, until the concluſion of the war, whether by the final conqueſt of the dominions of Hyder Ally Cawn, or by peace concluded with him, and their re-delivery in conſequence thereof to their original and proper Government: and their pay, according to the rates at which they are paid in the ſervice of the Dutch Eaſt Iadia Company, together with all expences of the field or garriſon, ſhall be at the charge of the Engliſh Eaſt India Company, from the day on which they are transferred to the Engliſh command, until the day of their return and re-delivery at Cochin, or ſuch other place as ſhall be mutually appointed for that purpoſe.

Article the ſecond.

In conſideration of the aſſiſtance granted in the manner ſtipulated in the preceding article, beſides their pay and expence, which are to be defrayed by the Governor General and Council on the part of the Engliſh Eaſt India Company, it is propoſed and recommended by the Governor General and Council to the Nabob Walla Jah Bahâdr, that he ſhall on his part grant and aſſign, by proper ſunnuds, to the Dutch Eaſt India Company, his right and property in the province or diſtrict of Tinnevelly, together with the excluſive right in the pearl fiſhery of all the coaſt lying to the ſouth of Remiſerim, to the Dutch Eaſt India Company; who ſhall be permitted to take poſſeſſion thereof from the day on which this treaty ſhall receive its final ratification, without any let or impediment on the part of his Aumils or officers of whatever denomination; and the ſaid province or diſtrict ſhall remain the property of the Dutch Eaſt India Company for ever.

Article the third.

It ſhall be allowable to the Government of the Dutch Eaſt India Company at Cochin to carry on any ſeparate operations againſt the common enemy with their own forces, and to make conqueſts of any lands or countries adjacent to Cochin, and to keep poſſeſſion of the ſame, without any claim of participation on the part of the Nabob Walla Jah Bahâdr, or of the Engliſh Eaſt India Company.

Article the fourth.

If a further aid of troops ſhall be required from the Dutch Eaſt India Company for the maintenance of the war, they ſhall engage to furniſh the ſame ſo ſoon as they can be obtained from the ſupreme Government at Batavia, on the ſame terms, and in the ſame manner, as are ſtipulated in the firſt article.

Article the fifth.

This treaty being firſt executed in the manner abovementioned by the Governor General and Council of Bengal, for and on behalf of the Engliſh Eaſt India Company, ſhall be next tendered to the Nabob Walla Jah Bahâdr for his acceptance and ratification, and having received the ſame it ſhall be forwarded to the Governments ments of Columbo and Cochin, that it may in like manner receive their aſſent and final ratification without any additional diminution or alteration whatſoever, to be made either by the Nabob Walla Jah Bahâdr, or by the Government of Columbo and Cochin.

Ordered, That the treaty above propoſed be copied fair, and that it be circulated by the ſecretary to the members of the Board for execution.

Agreed, That Mr. James Dighton be appointed agent on the part of the Governor General and Council on this occaſion, with the uſual allowances; that he be entruſted with the care of our diſpatches to Fort Saint George, and recommended to the Preſident and Select Committee to be employed by them to proceed with the treaty and letters written to Columbo and Cochin; together with ſuch other diſpatches as they may have occaſion to add to thoſe Governments.

The Governor General lays before the Board the draft of a letter which he has prepared to his Highneſs the Nabob of the Carnatic.

To the Nabob of the Carnatic.

To his Highneſs the Nabob Walla Jah, &c. &c. &c.

May it pleaſe your Highneſs,

The very critical ſituation in which the affairs of your Highneſs are at preſent involved, by the invaſion of the Carnatic by Hyder Ally Cawn, the diſgrace which the Britiſh arms have lately ſuſtained on the coaſt, and the conſequent neceſſity of every vigorous exertion on your part, not only to recover what has been loſt, but to preſerve what remains, are points too cloſely connected with your Highneſs's intereſt and proſperity to require many arguments to enforce them. From theſe circumſtances which alone I conceive to be of ſufficient weight, but which derive greater force from the obligations your Highneſs is under to the Company for the benefit of their protection and aſſiſtance upon repeated occaſions, I cannot but entertain hopes that your Highneſs will readily and cheerfully co-operate with us in any plan which may be propoſed for the common advantage, and for the more ſucceſsfully defeating the ambitious deſigns of Hyder Ally Cawn; eſpecially when you reflect how much has been already done by this Government, and in how ſhort a ſpace of time from the firſt intelligence of the late heavy diſtaſter which has befallen our arms on the coaſt, to redeem as far as it is in our power the national credit, and with it to retrieve the particular loſs which your Highneſs has ſuffered, and the great ſacrifice we have made in relinquiſhing the proſecution of the Maratta war, almoſt in the moment when we had reaſon to expect from the ſucceſſes which have attended it, that it would have ſpeedily terminated in an honourable and advantageous peace. Relying therefore upon the effect which I doubt not theſe conſiderations will produce on the mind of your Highneſs, I proceed to acquaint you, that in conſequence of the information which has long ſince been received of the hoſtilities and depredations committed by Hyder Ally Cawn on the territories belonging to the Dutch, at or adjacent to Cochin, and his late invaſion of the Carnatic, by which the ſafety of your poſſeſſions is endangered equally with thoſe of the Company, we have prepared the draft of a treaty of alliance between the Engliſh and Dutch Eaſt India Companies and yourſelf; and having firſt tendered it for approval to Mr. Roſs, Director and Governor of the Dutch Eaſt India Company in Bengal, and obtained his concurrence, we have affixed our ſeals and ſignatures to it, declaring it to be binding on us; and have requeſted the Preſident and Select Committee at Fort Saint George to preſent it to your Highneſs for your aſſent and ratification, with an apology for having introduced your name into the treaty without the previous ſanction of your authority; but as this ſtep would have required too tedious a proceſs, and would have opened a channel of negociation and correſpondence, by which the ends propoſed by the treaty, which are immediate aſſiſtance, would have been defeated, your Highneſs will perceive the impoſſibility of an application of this ſort, which otherwiſe that proper reſpect and attention which is due to your Highneſs would moſt certainly have ſuggeſted. When the treaty has been approved of and ſigned by your Highneſs, it will be tranſmitted to the Governments of Columbo and Cochin for their final ratification. Depending that your Highneſs, from your firm alliance with, and friendſhip for the Eaſt India Company, and from the confidence which you repoſe in them, will contribute cheerfully your aſſiſtance, in the manner and on the terms which have been ſtated in the treaty, I will conclude with wiſhing an increaſe of health and proſperity to your Highneſs.

Appendix. No. 360.

Agreed to the draft of the letter propoſed by the Governor General, and ordered that it be tranſlated.

Agreed, that the following letters be written to the Governors of Columbo, Cochin, and to the ſuperior Government of Batavia.

To the Governor of Columbo.

Honourable Sir,

Having long ſince received information of the hoſtilities and depredations committed by Hyder Ally Cawn on the Dutch territories at or adjacent to Cochin, and taking into our conſideration the circumſtance of his being at preſent in open war againſt them, together with the neceſſity of repelling his ambitious deſigns upon the Carnatic, which involve your State equally with thoſe of the Nabob Wallajah and the Engliſh Company, we have prepared the draft of a treaty of alliance between the Engliſh and Dutch Eaſt India Companies and the Nabob Wallajah Bahader, upon ſuch terms as we truſt will be accepted by you and the Governor of Cochin, having firſt tendered it to the peruſal of Mr. Roſs, Director and Governor of the Dutch Eaſt India Company at Bengal, and obtained his approval of it; and as the evident advantage to be derived to the Dutch Company from the ratification of the treaty on your parts muſt free you from every apprehenſion of reſponſibility to the ſuperior Government at Batavia, for having acceded to it without the previous ſanction of their authority, the obſtacle which might otherwiſe have been allowed weight will by this means be removed.

The ſame reaſon which prevented us from making an application direct to Batavia, will be ſufficient to evince the impoſſibility of its entering into a correſpondence with your Government and that of Cochin on the ſubject, ſince in both caſes the time which would be required for receiving an anſwer reſpecting the ratification of the treaty, would have defeated the ends of it, which are immediate aſſiſtance.

We have therefore for the greater diſpatch affixed our ſeals and ſignatures to the treaty, declaring it to be binding on us, and on all the dependencies of the Engliſh Eaſt India Company, and have tranſmitted it to the Preſident and Select Committee at Fort Saint George, requeſting them to tender it to the Nabob for his aſſent; and as ſoon as the Nabob ſhall have made himſelf a ſubſcribing party to it, that it may be forwarded with all poſſible expedition to you, depending, that when the true intereſt of your nation is provided for ſo materially, you will not be the cauſe of a moment's delay in the execution of it.

We have the honour to be, &c.

(The ſame to the Governor of Cochin).

To the Superior Government at Batavia.

Honourable Sirs,

In conſequence of the information which we have long ſince received of the hoſtilities and depredations committed by Hyder Ally Cawn on the Dutch territories at or adjacent to Cochin, and his late invaſion of the Carnatic,

by which the ſafety of your poſſeſſions in that part of the world is endangered equally with our own; and in conſideration of the neceſſity of a mutual co-operation to repel the deſigns of ſo ambitious an enemy, we have prepared the draft of a treaty of alliance between the Engliſh and Dutch Eaſt India Companies, and the Nabob Wallajah Bahader, having firſt tendered it for approval to Mr. Roſs, Director and Governor of the Dutch Eaſt India Company in Bengal, and obtained his concurrence in conſideration of the terms of it being ſo favourable to your Company; and we have now, to prevent delay, diſpatched it to the Preſident and Select Committee at Fort Saint George, with our ſeals and ſignatures affixed, together with a declaration, that it ſhall be binding on our parts; and we have further requeſted, as ſoon as the conſent of the Nabob Wallajah ſhall have been obtained to the treaty, that it may be forwarded with all poſſible expedition to the Governments of Columbo and Cochin for their final ratification and concurrence. As the time which would be required for receiving an anſwer from you reſpecting the ratification of the treaty, would have defeated the ends of it, which are immediate aſſiſtance, the impoſſibility of a previous application for this purpoſe will, we truſt, be ſufficiently evident, and apologize for our having recourſe to the only method which could be effectual in ſo critical a conjuncture, that of forwarding it to the Governments of Columbo and Cochin, who, we doubt not, will obtain your approbation for having ſubſcribed to a treaty, in which the manifeſt advantages to your State will free them from every ſhare of reſponſibility.

We have the honour to be, &c. &c. &c.

Fort William,
the 4th January 1781.

Ordered, that copies of the above letters of the propoſed treaty, and of the letter from the Governor General to the Nabob, be prepared for the peruſal of the Gentlemen at Fort Saint George, and that a letter be written to them as follows:

To the Honourable Charles Smith, Eſquire, Preſident, &c.
Select Committee, Fort Saint George.

Honourable Sir, and Sirs,

Having long ſince received information of the hoſtilities and depredations committed by Hyder Ally Cawn on the territories belonging to the Dutch at or adjacent to Cochin, and taking into conſideration the circumſtance of his being at preſent engaged in open war againſt them, together with the neceſſity of defeating his ambitious deſigns upon the Carnatic, and preſerving, as far as in us lies, the poſſeſſions of the Company and the Nabob, we have, with the advice and ſuggeſtion of Mr. Roſs, Director and Governor of the Dutch Eaſt India Company in Bengal, prepared the draft of a treaty of alliance between the Engliſh and Dutch Eaſt India Companies and the Nabob Wallajah Bahader, upon ſuch terms as we have every reaſon to hope will be accepted. But as the time which would be required for receiving an anſwer from the Superior Government of Batavia, reſpecting its ratification of, and final aſſent to the treaty, would entirely fruſtrate the ends of it, which are immediate aſſiſtance, we have reſolved to make our application direct to the Governments of Columbo and Cochin, for which purpoſe we have affixed our ſeals and ſignatures to the treaty, declaring it to be binding on our parts; and we requeſt, that on the receipt of it you will uſe all poſſible expedition in diſpatching it to thoſe Governments, having firſt tendered it to the Nabob and obtained his aſſent to it. You will be pleaſed to accompany this tender with an apology to the Nabob from us, for having introduced his name into the treaty without the ſanction of his approbation; but as this ſtep would have been attended with too tedious a proceſs, and would have opened a channel for negociation and correſpondence, which would have impeded the inſtant execution of the meaſure propoſed, upon which in this critical moment ſo much depends, we truſt he will perceive the impoſſibility of our previous application to him, which otherwiſe a proper attention and reſpect to him would not have ſuffered us to omit.

In the event of a refuſal on the part of the Nabob, we deſire you will repreſent in the ſtrongeſt terms to him the nature of his ſituation, and the indiſpenſable obligation he is under of making common cauſe with the Company, leſs to ſecure their poſſeſſions than his own from the encroachments of the enemy—that his very exiſtence is now at ſtake—that he is more a principal in the war than ourſelves—that it is not by any means which can be furniſhed by him, or by any reſources or treaſure of his, that the Carnatic is to be ſaved and defended, but by the wealth of Bengal, and the blood of Britiſh ſubjects ſacrificed in its ſervice; that therefore we expect his aſſent to the treaty, and urge it as a juſt claim which we have upon him, in return for the protection which he has experienced at our hands.

We ſhall wait to hear the reſult of your application, not doubting that from motives of policy and neceſſity, as well as juſtice, he will accede to the terms which we have offered in his name.

We have appointed Mr. James Dighton to be the bearer of our diſpatches, and have intruſted to his care, a copy of the letter addreſſed by the Governor General to the Nabob ſeparately, together with copies of the letters to the Governors of Columbo and Cochin, for your inſpection; and we requeſt that he may be employed to proceed with the treaty and letters, together with ſuch other diſpatches as you may have occaſion to add, to the Governments of Columbo and Cochin.

We rely upon your zeal and activity in this buſineſs, and depend on receiving every neceſſary information as early as it is in your power.

We have the honour to be,

Fort William, &c. &c. &c.

APPENDIX, No. 361.

Bengal Secret Conſultations, 28th December 1780.

Inſtructions to James Peter Auriol, Eſq.

Sir,

HAVING given you permiſſion to proceed in the ſhip Portland to the other ſide of India, we are willing to avail ourſelves of the ſervices which you might render to this Government during your abſence from Bengal, and have accordingly deputed you to act as our public Miniſter at the Portugueſe ſettlement of Goa on the Malabar coaſt.

We encloſe a letter of credence to you for this purpoſe, and accordingly direct that you proceed to Goa with all convenient expedition. On your arrival there you will deliver the letter to the Viceroy which is herewith given to you in charge, and open the negociation with which you are intruſted.

The inſults which have repeatedly been offered to the Portugueze by our common enemy Hyder Ally; the friendſhip and alliance which has long ſubſiſted between their nation and ours; and independently of this laſt conſideration, the intereſt which they have in common with us in curbing an increaſe of power in that ambitious Chief; induce us to inſtruct you, as we do accordingly, to make overtures to the Portugueze Government for an union with us in diſtreſſing Hyder Ally, by ſending a body of forces into his country.

In addition to the motives which we have recited to you for the propoſed negociation, and which we direct you to uſe as the general ground of your arguments for giving it effect, we leave it to you to endeavour to engage gage the compliance of the Portugueze Government, by ſuch further reaſons and inducements as may occur to you at the time; and we leave it to your management and diſcretion to obtain their aſſiſtance in the moſt effectual manner, independently of a junction of their troops with our army.

You will not omit to adviſe us regularly of your proceedings, and to make the ſame known to the Preſident and Select Committee of Fort Saint George, as well as that of Bombay, inaſmuch as may be neceſſary for their information.

We are, Sir,

APPENDIX, No. 362.

Bengal Secret Conſultations, 3d October 1780.

THE Commander in Chief delivers in the following minute from Sir Eyre Coote.

Minute from Sir Eyre Coote.

The great loſs of troops upon the coaſt, of which we have daily confirmation, and the diſpirited ſituation to which thoſe remaining are reduced, will render the ſmall number now going by ſea very inadequate to the ſervice expected, unleſs ſupported by a detachment of Sepoys to march by land into the Circars; the defence of which muſt now be extremely weakened by the neceſſity there muſt have been of drawing the troops ſtationed for their defence towards the Preſidency: I therefore propoſe that 6 or 8 battalions of Sepoys with their guns, and one company of artillery, be ordered to be in readineſs to march through the Cuttack road towards Madras; and the order for their march to depend upon the hopes we have given us, that the Maratta army now lying there will either join us or return; as without this, or a peace concluded with the Marattas, I never can adviſe any detachment of troops marching from hence to the coaſt.

(Signed) Eyre Coote.

Agreed to the propoſition made by the Commander in Chief.

Extract of Bengal Secret Conſultations, dated 26th October 1780.

The Governor General—In conſultation the 3d October laſt, it was recommended by the Commander in Chief, and reſolved, that 6 or 8 battalions of Sepoys with their guns, and one company of artillery, be ordered to be in readineſs to march through the Cuttack road towards Madras; the order for their march being to depend on the hopes given us, that the Maratta army now lying there will either join us or return. To form a detachment of this ſtrength will require many preparatory arrangements, which can hardly be completed in leſs time than a month, or perhaps ſix weeks, from its firſt formation. The fair ſeaſon is now begun, and the anſwers from the Government of Berar to our late diſpatches muſt be expected much within the courſe of the enſuing month: if theſe are favourable, the detachment ought not to loſe an inſtant after their arrival in commencing its march. I myſelf have every reaſon to believe that their anſwer will be as favourable as we can wiſh: theſe reaſons I ſhall now communicate to the Board. In the mean time I move, that orders be immediately iſſued for forming the detachment, and that it do conſiſt of one company of artillery and ſix battalions of Sepoys with their guns. I take the liberty to recommend, that Lieutenant Colonel Pearſe be appointed to the command of this detachment, and Major Edmondſtone to be the ſecond in command. The firſt of theſe recommendations I can venture to aſſure the Board will be agreeable to the Commander in Chief, and that it was his intention to have offered it himſelf: the ſecond proceeds ſolely from my opinion of the qualifications of Major Edmondſtone, whom I know only as an officer, neither is he acquainted with my preſent wiſhes upon this ſubject. Appendix No. 362.

If the Board ſhall approve of thoſe propoſitions, I further beg leave to ſuggeſt the expediency of replacing the number which will be thus taken from our native infantry, by ſuch means as ſhall be judged the moſt effectual and leaſt burthenſome in their expence; that which has occurred to me, and which I ſubmit to the conſideration of the Board, is to augment all the battalions which remain, by an equal number of rank and file diſtributed amongſt them, to be hereafter drafted and formed into regular battalions of the eſtabliſhed ſtrength, when they ſhall be required for actual ſervice. This expedient, if the Board approves it, may be referred to the provincial Commander in Chief, and his opinion upon it deſired; or in place of it, any other which he may judge more ſuitable to the end propoſed.

The Governor General lays before the Board for their peruſal, a tranſlation of a letter from Maha Rajah Mooda jee Booſla, received on the 20th inſtant; and of a letter from Dewangur Pundit, the Maha Rajah's Dewan, to Beneram Pundit, referred to in it.

Mr. Wheler—I agree to the forming of the detachment now propoſed by the Governor General, (in conſequence of the reſolution of the 3d inſtant) in order that it may be in readineſs to act as we may judge proper, after receiving the advices that are expected from the Government of Berar. I accede to the wiſhes of the Commander in Chief in the appointment of Lieutenant Colonel Pearſe to the command of this detachment, and to the Governor General's recommendation of Major Edmondſtone to the ſecond in command. I alſo agree to refer to the provincial Commander in Chief the expedient propoſed by the Governor General, reſpecting the number of Sepoys which will be taken from the preſent ſtrength of our military eſtabliſhment by this meaſure.

Mr. Francis—Mr. Wheler has ſo exactly expreſſed what I meant to ſay, that I ſhall content myſelf with ſubſcribing to be ſame anſwer to the Governor General's motion.

Agreed, That orders be immediately iſſued for forming a detachment to proceed over land towards Madras: that the ſame do conſiſt of one company of artillery and ſix battalions of Sepoys with their guns; and that Brigadier General Stibbert be directed to carry this reſolution into execution.

Agreed, That Lieutenant Colonel Pearſe be appointed to the command of the detachment, and Major Edmonſtone to be ſecond in command of it.

The following Letter is written to Brigadier General Stibbert.

Sir,

Having thought it neceſſary to reſolve on detaching a conſiderable force towards Madras, and having this day determined that the ſame ſhall conſiſt of one company of European artillery and ſix battalions of Sepoys with their guns, we requeſt that you will immediately iſſue orders for carrying this reſolution into effect. The command of this detachment is given to Lieutenant Colonel Pearſe, and the poſt of ſecond in command of it to Major Edmondſtone.

Deeming it expedient that the numbers taken from the native infantry by this meaſure ſhould be replaced, and by means the moſt effectual and leaſt burthenſome in

in their expence, it has occurred to us that ſuch purpoſe might be beſt effected in an augmentation of the battalions that remain, by an equal number of rank and file diſtributed amongſt them, to be hereafter drafted and formed into regular battalions of the eſtabliſhed ſtrength whenever they ſhall be required for actual ſervice. On this expedient we deſire your opinion, or in the place of it, that you will offer any other which you may judge more ſuitable to the end propoſed.

Read the following letters from Brigadier General Stibbert.

Gentlemen,

I was yeſterday honoured with your letter of the 6th inſtant, informing me of your reſolution to detach towards Madras one company of European artillery and ſix battalions of Sepoys with their guns, &c. deſiring me to iſſue immediately the neceſſary orders for carrying this meaſure into effect.

Your inſtructions I beg you will be aſſured ſhall be obeyed with all poſſible diſpatch; but as you have omitted acquainting me where you would chooſe to have the detachment aſſembled, I find myſelf neceſſitated to retard my proceedings till you ſhall be pleaſed to ſatisfy me on this head.

In the mean time, I hold it my duty to ſtate to you the ſtrength of the forces at preſent ſtationed at Fort William, and the other parts of Bengal, from which the detachment ordered muſt neceſſarily be formed.

which, conſidering that there is juſt now a large Maratta army aſſembled at Cuttack, and that we are at the height of war with two formidable European Powers, I conceive to be very inadequate to this purpoſe.

Should it be urged that the recruits ordered to be levied will ſupply the place of the troops deſigned to be detached, I muſt obſerve, that it will be impoſſible, let the care and attention of the officers be ever ſo unremitted, to diſcipline and train theſe recruits, ſo as to render them fit for actual ſervice in leſs (to ſpeak within bounds) than ſix or eight months; reſpecting the mode eligible to be purſued in raiſing and forming theſe levies, I ſhall do myſelf the honour of addreſſing the Board in a ſeparate letter.

On the other hand, there appears to me no leſs difficulty in the meaſure of ſtrengthening the force below by the recal of ſo conſiderable a part of the troops ſtationed in the Vizier's provinces, and beyond the Jumna, as one company of European artillery, the two regiments of cavalry, and ſix battalions of Sepoys, which I find to have been the propoſition of Sir Eyre Coote: for I ſubmit it to the Board whether it would be expedient or proper to reduce the army in that quarter ſo materially, at a time when all accounts agree in repreſenting that Nudjiff Cawn is making great preparations for taking the field, when the Seiks are in motion, and when it is confidently ſaid, that Madajee Scindia is ſetting on foot an expedition towards Gualior and the adjacent country. Such being the apparent ſituation of affairs, I muſt offer it as my opinion, that having a regard to the ſecurity of the upper provinces, and to the maintenance of our conſequence in that part of the country, we cannot withdraw from thence, at this critical period, a greater body of troops than will be ſufficient to aſſiſt in the defence of Patna and the Bahar province.

I cannot conclude this addreſs without declaring to the Board my apprehenſions that the appointment of the commandant of artillery to the command of the detachment ordered to be formed for marching toward Madras, being a thing unprecedented, will occaſion much diſcontent among the field officers of infantry, who from the uſage of the ſervice will be led to conſider it as an infringement of their rights, if not a reflection on their military talents.

I have the honour to be, &c.

Fort William, G. Stibbert.

P. S. I have been prevented from ſending my letter in till this day, by being obliged to wait for a return of the third regiment; and at laſt have been under the neceſſity of making uſe of one for July laſt. If the Board approve of it, the detachment may be aſſembled at Manurgur, near Midnapore.

APPENDIX, No. 363.

From Moodajee Booſla; dated the 16th Zehiedja: received the 9th January 1781.

No. 1. YOUR agreeable letter, acquainting me that the ſincerity of my attachment and friendſhip, and of my advice and propoſals, was fully known to you, after you had underſtood, from the repreſentations of Benei am Pundit and the Engliſh tranſlations, the contents of my friendly letters; and that you had, in conſequence of your knowing the neceſſity of the times and circumſtances, ſettled all matters in the moſt prudent and adviſable manner with Row Pundit Purdhaun on this condition, that I ſhould become guarantee to the durability of the treaty on both ſides: that you had therefore ſent three copies of a treaty for my ratification: and after recounting the articles, you mention that I muſt firſt put my ſeal on them as guarantee, together with the ſeal and ſignature of my confidential miniſter, and then, having informed you and the Council of it, muſt ſend them to Poonah: that when the rulers and chiefs of that place ſhall in the ſame manner have put their ſeals and ſignatures to them, they are to keep one of the copies, and to ſend the other two to the Governor of Bombay and General Goddard, that every matter may be amicably ſettled, and the war entirely ſtopped. You further mention the particulars of Hyder Ally Khan, and his friendſhip and alliance with the French, the confirmed enemies of the Engliſh: that your ſole attention was taken up with preparing for repelling and puniſhing them in a proper manner: that this enmity to Row Pundit Purdhaun is of long and ancient ſtanding; and that if he increaſes his power and ſtrength in this manner, he will by degrees deſtroy their kingdom: that it is therefore moſt adviſable for them to ſtation a conſiderable force under a commander of experience and truſt with the Engliſh army, by which means the pride and preſumption of Hyder will be reduced, and whatever treaſure or country may be taken from him ſhall be divided equally between both parties; that the ſuffering ſo conſiderable an enemy to acquire ſtrength, without any attempts to depreſs him, would moſt certainly give riſe to great loſſes and diſputes. This letter arrived in a lucky hour, and by removing my former anxiety and expectations, gave me inexpreſſible pleaſure, and added conſiderably friendſhip. The advances which you have made are highly commendable among perſons who have great and important objects in view, and are calculated to inſure the peace and ſatisfaction of the people, and put an end to the labours and diſtreſſes of the ſoldiers; and the taking the reſolution of ſending the treaty, is a complete proof of your friendſhip and ſincerity. From the firſt, down to the preſent time, the preſent hoſtilities and diſputes were not from your inclination or wiſh; but whatever was done originated from the Governor of Bombay; and in that caſe, there being no other remedy, you were compelled to exert yourſelf for the remedying it, and for the preſervation of your poſſeſſions and the defence of every thing dear. By the bleſſing of God, your good intentions are well known to the whole world. As before the arrival of the treaty I had received repeated intelligence by the ſucceſſive letters from that quarter of your intentions for peace on the part of the Company, and that the treaty would be ſent afterwards, my deſire was, that as ſoon as the treaty ſhould arrive, I ſhould ſend my miniſter, Dawargur Pundit, for the purpoſe of ſettling this matter, that every article might be determined agreeable to my wiſhes, and at nō future time any diſagreement about a ſingle letter might ariſe: but when I had peruſed the treaty, and had reflected on the ſeveral articles of it with the moſt attentive conſideration, I diſcovered ſome points which were contrary to the treaty of Colonel Upton, in ſo conſiderable a degree that the Poonah Miniſters will never give their aſſent to them; for if there are ſome few things in it which I cannot approve of, how can they ever be expected to conſent? and what I myſelf do not comprehend, how ſhould I explain to another? I have therefore delayed affixing my ſeal and ſignature to it, but have carefully kept it with me. To the variations of the times and the revolutions of the heavens it is entirely owing, that although you were ſincere and approved of peace and friendſhip on every condition, yet ſuch delays and obſtructions have ariſen in the matter, that the buſineſs of to-day has been put off till to-morrow, and what was approaching to a concluſion has been delayed to a future time; but where there is a ſtedfaſtneſs, faith, and ſincerity, there is no room for any prevarication, but that of the times and circumſtances, to raiſe ſuch obſtructions as it is impoſſible to prevent. Thus from the diſtance of the road three months have elapſed entirely in the coming and going of the Coſſids, otherwiſe the refuſal and aſſent of all the articles of the treaty on your part, through the mediation of this Government, would not have met with theſe delays, and every thing would have been ſettled in the beſt manner. As it does not ſeem to me adviſable that the war ſhould be ſuffered to extend on every ſide, and as my friendly heart has on all occaſions and in all ſituations wiſhed to perform the duties and obligations of friendſhip, I have therefore, in anſwer to every article of the treaty which you have ſent, wrote fully and explicitly in ſuch manner as was proper, and as my friendſhip, faith, and regard to treaties required, ſo that the intents of former treaties might not be fruſtrated, and that I might not ſeem partial to either ſide; theſe anſwers having been prepared in my preſence, are written on a detached paper, from which you will gain complete information: nothing in that is new or innovating, but all conformable to former agreements. In caſe of a peace, it is neceſſary for both parties to give up all places agreeable to ancient treaties, whether acquired before or in the preſent war. When you ſhall have done what is requiſite, the other ſide will likewiſe perform their part agreeable to their engagements. In anſwer to what you write reſpecting Ragonaut Row, Futty Sing Guicawar, and Ranna of Gohud, it is certainly incumbent on all perſons who have any regard for their word, their honour, or reputation, to exert themſelves in all caſes for the aſſiſtance of any one who takes refuge under the ſhadow of their protection, that it may be known to the whole world, that whoever throws himſelf on the protection of the Engliſh gentlemen, will through their aid attain the completion of his views: and that whatever diſtreſſed perſon they will take by the hand, they will place ſafely on the ſhore from the troubled ſea of war: this is without doubt the uſage of the world. But where the ſtandard of treaties and engagements has been erected, and a perſon has been pitched upon for guarantee, and entruſted with the equal balancing of intereſts, it then becomes incumbent on that guarantee to do nothing that is not conſiſtent with his faith and word, or that may ſeem partial to either party, but to remove all ſuſpicions and doubts, to keep firm to the truth, by ſaying and writing nothing but the truth, and by exerting himſelf in ſettling the arguments of both ſides: why therefore ſhould we make heſitation in the delivering up Ragonaut Row to the Poonah Miniſters, agreeable to former treaties, under pretence of his being the maſter where he chuſes to reſide; ſince it is much more adviſable to put an end to all diſputes, and ſince the Miniſters of Poonah will never fail in the ſmalleſt point of reſpect, attention, and careful treatment to one of their illuſtrious family. Futty Sing Guicawar is likewiſe a branch of the Rauge, and is beſides protected by you; his concerns will therefore certainly be attended to equally with thoſe of a brother; and as to the Ranna of Gohud, conformable to what you write, no ſpark of enmity againſt him will remain in their minds; why ſhould you therefore take any trouble in their affairs? Let it be written in the treaty, that on this condition it is binding, otherwiſe that it is void. Enter therefore on this matter with the greateſt ſincerity, and do not put any more refuſals in it, but prepare and ſend me a treaty agreeable to the encloſed ſeparate ſheets, in which there is a full diſcuſſion, and a plan for a treaty at the foot of each article; you will thus remove the reſponſibility from yourſelf to me: and if the Poonah Miniſters ſhould not then agree and aſſent to it, you will not be blamed. What is to happen will happen. The ſhort of it is this; that I have at all times and in all ſituations been reſolved to obſerve and attend to your wiſhes, even above thoſe of the Council and of the Chiefs ſtationed in the other Preſidencies. God is witneſs that I am in no inſtance partial or inclined to the other ſide. You will from the friendſhip and knowledge of events and circumſtances approve of what I have written.

Appendix. No. 363.

The treaty which you have ſent me, I have kept with the greateſt care and caution, and will ſoon return it, together with my anſwers to all your Kareetahs. Further particulars you will learn from the repreſentations of Beneram Pundit.

Poſtſcript.—As to what you have written from the exceſs of your friendſhip, that a conſiderable army has been ſent to Madras under the command of General Coote, and that it is neceſſary I ſhould write to Shimdojee Bhoſila, directing him to join 2 or 3000 horſe with the General, which would be a great addition of ſtrength; or ſhould it not be convenient to ſpare this force, that in ſuch caſe I ought to recal the army which is arrived at Cuttack; the fact is this: Of the ſtate of all matters, and of the full particulars of this quarter, not one article is unknown to you; and I myſelf have ſo often written them to you that they cannot be ſecret to you. Till peace ſhall have been ſettled, and the treaty finally ratified, I cannot adopt either of theſe propoſals; but when I ſhall have aſſembled there an army of 50,000 horſe, with all ſtores and neceſſaries, I may then ſend an army to join General Coote, or recal it altogether from thence. This matter will be more fully explained to you by Beneram Pundit

Appendix. No. 363.

Pundit. Be convinced, that in all circumſtances and ſituations I ſhall be your ſtedfaſt friend.

Till peace is finally ſettled, it is abſolutely neceſſary for me to act in the above manner.

The Anſwer to the Firſt Article.

" All the forts, towns, and places belonging to Pundit Peiſhwah, which may have been taken, or ſhall be taken by the Engliſh army, from the beginning of the war till the ratification of the treaty, ſhall be delivered over to the Peiſhwa, except the fort of Ahmedabad, and the ſhare of the country of Guzerat, which ſhall remain in the poſſeſſion of Futty Sing Guicawar; and the fort of Gevalior, which ſhall remain in the poſſeſſion of the Ranna of Gohud, and no one ſhall oppoſe it."

This requires ſome conſideration, and I requeſt you will reflect with juſtice on what I ſay: When a town and fort has been from time immemorial in the poſſeſſion of the family and chiefs of Pundit Purdhaun, and Futty Sing is one of the ancient dependants of the family of the Rauje, what connection can he have with the Engliſh gentlemen? The nature of his connection was this; that when General Goddard arrived in the province of Guzerat with a reſpectable army, Futty Sing with his whole family was in Bedodah; but having no power or ſtrength to oppoſe his enemies or defend his property, he being remedileſs, joined himſelf with General Goddard, and at this time has ſent ſeveral letters to Poonah; that having no reſource at that time, except the protection and aſſiſtance of the Engliſh, he had therefore united himſelf with them. Before this, reſpecting the reconciliation of the two brothers who had began diſputes and hoſtilities about the diviſion of their Talooks, I wrote in the articles of the memorandum, that as Futty Sing had taken part with you, it would be neceſſary for both ſides to exert themſelves for the reconciliation of the two brothers, when their Talooks might remain to both of them in ſecurity. You muſt therefore write reſpecting them in the treaty, that Futty Sing is a chief and dependant of the other party, and had joined you ſolely from the neceſſities of the times; that as peace and alliance has take place between the two parties, it is incumbent on friendſhip to forget all the paſt, and that the two brothers having been reconciled, muſt be made to remain peaceable and quiet as before on their ſhares of Jaghires, which will be greatly to your ſatisfaction, and to the completion of your wiſhes. The ſame muſt be written reſpecting the Raſſha of Gohud, who has always been a dependant and expectant on the Peiſhwah, and who has now, by the aſſiſtance of the Engliſh, got poſſeſſion of the fort of Gevalior, which is of ſuch ſtrength that the Miniſters of Poonah can never permit or ſuffer it to remain quietly in his hands: therefore, towards procuring peace it is neceſſary that both ſides, for the maintaining of former articles, reſtore all the places which they may have taken of whatever ſtrength they may be; and let it be mentioned, that on the ſubject of the Ranna no further miſunderſtandings ſhall remain, ſince the friends of one ſide are likewiſe the friends of the other party.

The Second Article.

" Towards the ſupport and ſtrengthening the peace and the intereſt of both ſides, that on future occaſion no diſputes or miſunderſtandings may ariſe, it is agreed, that in caſe the fort of Baſſein ſhall have been taken by the Engliſh army before the final ratification of the treaty, ſhould Pundit Purdhaun chooſe to exchange it for the Mahals which have been given up to the Company, and in their poſſeſſion, agreeable to the 3d and 7th articles of the treaty of Poorunder, conformable to the former treaty entered into by the Governor General and Council of Bombay with Futty Sing Guicawar; but ſhould Pundit Purdhaun not chooſe to exchange, we will then, agreeable to your firſt article of this treaty, deliver up the fort of Baſſein to Pundit Purdhaun; and the country delivered up to us by the treaty of Poorunder ſhall remain in our poſſeſſion."

The caſe is this; that I frequently have ſeen the treaty of Colonel Upton, and have often wrote the particulars of it, but never yet heard that the treaty of Poorunder was made conformable to a former treaty entered into by the Governor and Council of Bombay with Futty Sing Guicawar, that it ſhould now be mentioned. What has the treaty of Futty Sing to do with the treaty of the Peiſhwa? or, what connection can dirt have with a perſon of diſtinction? Futty Sing is one of the dependants and chiefs of the Rauje; if he chooſes to deliver over by writing to any one, the towns and forts belonging to the Rauje, how can it be agreed to? or what authority and voucher is that, that it will be aſſented to? Whatever the owner and poſſeſſor of the country gives in writing, that alone is binding.

In this caſe, therefore, it is neceſſary that all Mahals and places in the province of Guzerat, Cokan, and other parts which formerly belonged to Pundit Purdhaun, and which have been taken in the preſent war, ſhould all be delivered up; and beſides, if the fort of Baſſein ſhould be taken, that alſo muſt be reſtored to the people of Pundit Purdhaun. But do not inſiſt upon theſe points, which are difficult to be aſſented to; for theſe bring with them a breach of former treaties, and can never be agreed to. Abide entirely by the engagements of Colonel Upton, and reſtore every thing which has been taken in this war, or may be taken before the final ratification of the treaty; that the tree of friendſhip may bloſſom with the flowers of ſincerity, and that the thorn of enmity may be removed. It is not wiſe to add a little to a large treaſure.

Third Article.

After ſaying that Ragonauth Row ſhall be allowed for his expences during his life, according to the former agreement, you write " That what was ſettled in the former treaty reſpecting the place of his reſidence ſhall be void; that he ſhall reſide wherever he may chooſe, except in Bombay and Surat; that you will never aſſiſt him in any claim on the Maratta Government, unleſs all the Chiefs who ſign the treaty ſhould agree to it and deſire it."

The caſe is this: When he had been taken priſoner in the Bombay war, at that time no neglect or deficiency was found in the reſpect, attention, and good treatment of him. At preſent, that he comes under the protection of ſo great a Chief, what refuſal can they make to ſupply his neceſſary expences? But giving him power to reſide wherever he likes, which would be certainly attended with loſſes and damage to all quarters, can never be admitted of; and in what light can your letters on this ſubject be conſidered? At the time of making peace and treaties, the door of diſagreements is cloſed and not left open. How can the former treaty be rendered void? From his having this liberty great damage may be expected; for ſhould he ever under the protection of Hyder Naig join himſelf with a French army, it would be attended with great inconveniences to both ſides. The greateſt circumſpection is requiſite. Nothing more need to be mentioned reſpecting Ragonauth Row, except the delivering him up to the Poonah Miniſters, agreeable to the former treaty. The article relating to the aſſiſtance of him, in caſe all the Chiefs who may ſign the treaty ſhould deſire it, is likewiſe unneceſſary.

The Fourth Article.

" Pundit Purdhaun, and the other Maratta Chiefs, ſhall enter into an alliance with the Engliſh, and ſhall in conjunction with their army attack Hyder Ally Khan, both for the protection of their own country and for the conqueſt of his: they ſhall invade his country with the Engliſh army, and ſhall mutually join for his deſtruction. Whatever portion of country may be conquered from him ſhall be equally ſhared, in ſuch a manner that they ſhall take what borders on their country, and the Engliſh ſhall poſſeſs what lies near theirs and the Nabob Wallanjaw's."

The

Appendix. No. 363.

The anſwer to this is as follows: when after the Bombay war Ragonauth Row had been taken priſoner, and had been delivered in charge to Madajee Row Scindia, who ſent him under care of a confidential ſervant of his to Ugeen, in the way to which place he found an opportunity, and eſcaping to Surat, was a ſecond time taken under the protection and aſſiſtance of the Engliſh. At that time my Miniſter Dewargur Pundit, who was at Poonah, was aſked by the Miniſters of the Peiſhwa his advice, that for many years Hyder Naig had not paid the ſmalleſt part of the peſhcuſh due to them, and had beſides poſſeſſed himſelf of ſome of their Mahals; that after the end of the Bombay war, there being ſome proſpect of tranquillity and peace, by Raganouth Row's being brought to them, they had reſolved to ſend an army of great ſtrength againſt Hyder Naig, and to reduce his violence; but that when General Goddard had arrived at Surat, and Ragonauth Row had returned to him, and was preparing to renew the war at that time, how could they hope to be able to oppoſe two ſuch powerful enemies, and maintain themſelves againſt two ſuch violent attacks? The Pundit told them in anſwer, that they ſhould enter into a friendly correſpondence and connection with the one who was an Engliſh Chief, ſupreme over all the poſſeſſions of the Engliſh, and who was unequalled in his prudence, foreſight, faith, ſincerity, and obſervance of treaties, (namely, the Nabob Amaud ul Dowlah) and then engage in vigorous meaſures againſt the other (Hyder Naig) and either entirely deſtroy him, or take from him the money and Talooks which they want. The Miniſter agreeing to the advice, ſent letters and confidential perſons to General Goddard ſucceſſively, on the ſubject of peace and alliance; and at that time letters from the General were likewiſe received, full of expreſſions and promiſes of friendſhip, and ſaying that they ought to aſcribe Ragonauth Row's being admitted to reſide with him, to no other reaſon but his (the General's) friendſhip for them, to prevent Ragonauth's applying to any other quarter; that if they wiſhed it, he would come in perſon to meet them, and ſettle every thing in a perſonal conference. At that time certainly this matter would have been ſettled to mutual advantage, and many points of conſequence would have been properly adjuſted by perſonal agreements and conſultations. But of every thing which the General had written, not one came to paſs; for neither did he find leiſure to come himſelf to Poonah, nor did he enter into negociations with the confidential agents ſent to him, nor did he pay any attention to the letters of Dewargur Pundit: in ſhort, affairs at laſt ended in open war and hoſtilities, and it became neceſſary for them, having loſt ſo ſincere a friend, to unite themſelves with their old and eſtabliſhed enemy; and they, after mature conſideration, agreed to this deſperate remedy, and having entered into friendly connections with him, ſettled every matter agreeable to his plan and propoſals. As the opportunity which is once ſuffered to eſcape can never be recovered, it is a matter of great ſorrow, that now when peace might be made with the Engliſh, an army cannot be ſent into the poſſeſſions of Hyder, in company with the Engliſh, without being treacherous to him, and without being guilty of ſuch a breach of faith and engagements as to deter any other in future from truſting to or believing their moſt ſolemn promiſes: this however can never be admitted by the houſe of Pundit Purdhaun, nor will it ever be admitted. As the diſpoſition of Hyder Naig is bent on treachery and diſputes, there is no doubt but that in a ſhort time he will be guilty of ſome breach of treaty, ſuch as uniting himſelf with the French, or conceiving ſome hoſtile ſchemes, when immediately in conſequence of ſuch breach they may join in the deſtroying him: but till he takes off the maſk and diſcovers ſuch diſpoſition, they cannot think of any contrary to their engagements. Leave this therefore to time, and do not mention it in the treaty but wait to ſee when it may happen.

The Fifth Article.

"Should Pundit Peiſhwa not agree to form an alliance againſt Hyder Naig, nevertheleſs peace ſhall be made on this condition, that both ſides ſhall remain in poſſeſſion of what they have got, and a ceſſation of hoſtilities ſhall take place for one year from the date of this treaty, during which time peace may be ſettled in ſuch terms as to inſure its perpetual ſtability."

In anſwer to this; what I learn from it is, that at any rate peace and friendſhip is your wiſh; this is very proper and ſatisfactory; but a ceſſation of hoſtilities, without a final completion of peace, is not the cuſtom of this country. The practice of Europe is this, that two kings will ſit down on the ſame carpet, and will play at cheſs together, and their armies will remain peaceably together, while they receive continual accounts of each others intentions; and if they ſhould put an end to all hoſtilities, they agree to a ceſſation for a certain number of years, after which they renew their attacks and hoſtilities: but this is not the method in Decan, for whatever engagements are entered into there, are laſting and perpetual. You muſt therefore write this much, that if they will join their army with that of the Engliſh it is well, and if not it makes no difference; that you will with your ſingle force attack the enemy, but that at any rate you are deſirous of peace with the Poonah State.

The Sixth Article.

"As peace is made with Pundit Purdhaun, at the interceſſion of Moodajee Bhoſilah, it is neceſſary that he become guarantee to it: the treaty is therefore firſt ſent to him, that he may certify it under the moſt ſolemn oaths of his religion, with his own ſeal, and the ſignature of his confidential Miniſter; that he approves of the treaty, and agrees to be guarantee to it; that no breach ſhall ever happen in it; that as long as both ſides abide by it, he will be the friend of both; and whoever ſhall break it he will be his enemy, till he ſhall atone for ſuch breach."

The ſtate is this; that I am, without doubt, the firm friend of your quarter, and likewiſe am a well-wiſher of Pundit Purdhaun, in conformity to my attachment due to the family of the Rauje, and have taken upon me this trouble and exertion merely for the eaſe of the people, and from my regard to truth and ſincerity, and my knowledge of the rights and properties of every one. I likewiſe hoped, that upon the taking place of the peace and alliance, I ſhould attain the completion of my views, and ſhould, by the aſſiſtance of both parties, be relieved from the difficulties incurred by the expences of the new-raiſed Sepoys: I therefore agreed to become guarantee and ſecurity to both ſides, and whichever ſhould have failed in his part of the obligation, I ſhould firſt attempt to make him ſenſible of his fault, and if that failed, I ſhould then, to the utmoſt of my abilities, puniſh him for it, and not be reconciled to him till ſuch time as he returned to his duty. But what you have written in the treaty, that you have agreed to this peace to give me ſatisfaction, is by no means neceſſary. This only need be mentioned, that I am guarantee and ſecurity of this treaty to both parties, and that which ever ſide ſhall be guilty of any breach of it, I ſhall continue his enemy till he has made atonement for it, and has remedied ſuch breach of treaty.

The Seventh Article.

"Three copies of this treaty are ſent; after they ſhall arrive at Poonah, Ballajee Row Purnaveeſe and the other Chiefs having affixed their ſeals and ſignatures on them, ſhall keep one of them, and ſhall ſend the ſecond to the Governor of Bombay, and the third to General Goddard, that the war and hoſtilities may immediately ceaſe, and every matter be finally ſettled. Should this peace be finiſhed, and the treaty agreed to within five months from the date of it, it is well, otherwiſe it ſhall be altogether void."

Appendix. No. 363.

In anſwer to this, the diſtance from Calcutta to Poonah is 900 coſs; and beſides, the diſcuſſion and explanation, aſſent and denial of the important articles in the treaty, are in hand; why therefore ſhould the dates and times be circumſcribed? and why is this clauſe mentioned, that if it is concluded within ſuch particular time it is binding, otherwiſe that it will be void. I have kept the treaties by me with the greateſt caution, and have ſent off theſe letters to you. After the receipt of your explicit anſwers the treaties ſhall be ſent to that quarter. Set your mind at reſt. In ſhort, I have with the greateſt attention and care made myſelf thoroughly acquainted with all the articles, and have underſtood all the good and bad of them, and have written whatever was conſiſtent with my regard to the rights and obligations of both ſides. What might prevent the intereſts from preponderating might perpetuate the verdure of the garden of friendſhip, and keep off the blaſt of the nipping winds. This you muſt read and conſider with juſtice, and not think me in the ſmalleſt degree partial to the intereſts of Pundit Purdhaun, for a faithful guarantee muſt always have regard to his oaths and engagements, and in all caſes conſider the intereſts and advantages of both ſides: you will therefore, agreeable to theſe ſeparate ſheets, prepare and ſend a treaty without any addition or diminution, that my Miniſter, Dewargur Pundit, may be ſent to Poonah, and ſettle every point agreeable to your deſire, when, from the opportunity of the times and friendly connection between us, many and great advantages will be derived.

Act^{g} Sec^{y}.

From Dewagur Pundit.

I received your letter in a lucky hour, in which you write, that, &c. (the ſame recapitulation as the one in the Maha Rajah's letter.) The inſtant that I ſaw it, my heart felt an immediate and ſurpriſing ſatisfaction from the hopes and proſpect of a ſecure and peaceable future for the people; for by the ſpeedy end to all the cruelties and oppreſſions of the armies, the repoſe which the Chiefs would find from their former continual occupations, the attachment of many and great advantages to both ſides by the connection between them, the raiſing your reputation among all the other Chiefs of the Council and the Engliſh gentlemen, and even in the ſight of the powerful King of England; and the hopes of a perpetual and laſting friendſhip and connection between Pundit Peiſhwa, the Rajah my maſter, and the Engliſh gentlemen, by an equal balance of intereſts, I immediately conceived the deſire of departing inſtantly expreſs, that having opened the papers on the road, I might arrive in 10 days at Poonah, and deliver the treaty with my own hands, and ſettle the baſis of it with the Miniſters of Poonah in ſuch a ſolid manner, that on no occaſion any alteration or defect might ever happen: and after I ſhould have adjuſted thoſe important points agreeable to your intentions, I might get my diſmiſſion to go to Calcutta, where, being honoured with an interview with you, I might inform you of every thing which from a long time has been upon my mind reſpecting the true political meaſures.

But afterwards reflecting that it was not adviſable for me to be in ſuch haſte before I had fully underſtood all the contents of the papers, I opened them in the preſence of the Maha Rajah, when all the karetas, letters, copies, and treaties, were peruſed with the greateſt attention and care, firſt, they convinced us of your great truth and ſincerity, and that you never, from the beginning to this time, were inclined to the preſent diſputes and hoſtilities; and next, that you have not included in the articles of the treaty any of your wiſhes or inclinations; and, in ſhort, the garden of the treaty appeared to us in all its parts green and flouriſhing, but though the fruit of it was excellent, yet they appeared different from thoſe of Colonel Upton's treaty (the particulars of which I have frequently written to you) and upon reading them, proved to be bitter and very different when compared to the former articles. How can any of the old and eſtabliſhed obligations be omitted, and new matters agreed to, when it is plain that they will produce loſſes and damages? Some points which you have mentioned under the plea of the faith and obſervance of treaties, are of ſuch a nature that the Poonah Miniſters can never aſſent to them: in all engagements and important tranſactions, in which the words But, and Although, and Beſides, and Whereas, and Why; and other ſuch words of doubt, are introduced, it gives an opening to diſputes and miſunderſtandings. A treaty is meant for the entire removal of all differences, not for increaſe of them. My departure to Poonah has therefore been delayed; and the Rajah my maſter likewiſe having put off the affixing his ſeal, ſaid, that although he was determined to ſign the treaty as guarantee agreeable to your letter, yet he could not ſuffer that after his ſeal ſhould have been affixed, it ſhould be rejected by the others; that he muſt therefore conſider maturely before he ſigns the treaty, that no one may afterwards make objections to any part of it; and if after having laboured to explain it to them, to ſatisfy them, and bring them over, they ſhould in any manner not comprehend it, or join in it, we may then make uſe of that as a ſufficient reaſon to act againſt them; but before we can be able to anſwer all their queſtions and doubts we muſt firſt comprehend them thoroughly ourſelves. Although theſe lines which you have written in your kharetas with the greateſt truth and ſincerity, that ſuch haſte was not your queſtion, but that from certain circumſtances you have, agreeeble to the advice of this quarter, diſpatched a treaty with all expedition, in which you have reſtored every thing taken in this war, and placed all matters on the ſame footing they were before the war, are very proper and friendly, and entirely conforming to the articles of Colonel Upton's treaty, is conſiſtent with the preſent intereſts and future advantages, and will inſure the perpetuity and friendſhip, and render the guarantee of my maſter, the Maha Rajah, more ſecure; yet there is no remedy for the variations of the times, which always produce a hundred ſucceſſive events of the ſame kind, and in the ſettlement of all affairs cauſes ſo many, as to endanger the peace of the people and the ſecurity of the property and poſſeſſions of both ſides. Time does every thing which he chooſes, and there is not the ſmalleſt controul over him. But your prudence and wiſdom has undertaken this matter with a thorough knowledge of the influence of circumſtances. I entertain great hopes that you will at all future occaſions attend to every thing which your old and ſincere friends may write to you, from the ſincerity and friendſhip of their hearts, and without the ſmalleſt partiality to the other ſide, and by the bleſſing of God our alliance and intimacy will go on increaſing: but the great diſtance of 800 coſs from Calcutta to Naigpore, and from Naigpore to Poonah, which makes two months, and to Poonah three months, neceſſary for the going and returning of coſſids, cannot be remedied. What can I do? I am a man and have neither feathers nor wings. The ground is hard, and the heavens are far off: I am unluckily far removed from the Preſence: had I been near you, I ſhould before this have informed you of every particular relating to this buſineſs, and have adjuſted every thing to your ſatisfaction; the treaty would have been prepared in the beſt manner, and great and many advantages would have been derived from it, and I ſhould have acquired univerſal praiſe. Even at preſent I am exerting myſelf to the utmoſt of my power, in promiſing what is incumbent on my attachment, and am deſirous of ſpeedily bringing to a ſettlement whatever Pundit Purdhaun may propoſe conducive to a thorough reconciliation; ciliation: I have therefore kept the treaty with the greateſt care and caution in my poſſeſſion, and having taken a copy of it, I have added to each article another which appeared to me proper and adviſable, and without any loſs or diſadvantage to the Engliſh, or any thing more in favour of the Pundit Purdhaun, than what was contained in the former treaties: this I have ſent to you, and hope that you will prepare and ſend a treaty conformable to that, without any Beſides, or If, or Why, or But, and Whereas, that as ſoon as it arrives I may depart from Poonah; and having united with me Row Madajee Scindiah, and having brought over the Nabob Nizam ul Dowlah to this buſineſs, I may ſettle and adjuſt all matters which are in this bad ſituation. As ſoon as I have received my diſmiſſion from thence I would ſet off for Calcutta, and repreſent to you every thing which for a long while I have had on my mind; and by this tranſaction erect to the view of all the world the ſtandard of the greatneſs and goodneſs of the Engliſh, and of my maſter, and extinguiſh the flames of war with the waters of friendſhip. The compaſſing all theſe advantages and happy proſpects depends entirely upon your will and conſent, and the power of bringing them to an iſſue is in your hands alone. Further particulars you will learn from my letter to Beueram Pundit.

E. Hay,
*Act*ˢ *Sec*ʸ.

Tranſlation of a Letter from Maha Rajah Moodajee Booſla to Beneram Pundit; dated the 16th Zeheidga.

I have lately received eight arzies from you. The firſt two which arrived informed me that the Nabob had told you he reſolved to enter into a treaty with Pundit Purdhaun under my guarantee and ſecurity, but that the articles which you had propoſed did not meet with his aſſent; that Dewan Dewargur Pundit need not take the trouble of coming to Calcutta; and that you were not likely to come or go as you might chooſe. After this one or two or more letters arrived, acquainting me that the Nabob Amaud ul-Dowlah had held a council, at which he told you he was determined on peace. Three other letters I received with the treaty. As you had at firſt written that you was greatly affected by that converſation, and wiſhed to retire to Benares, I wrote in conſequence of that to Hydrabad, to Poonah, and to Cuttack: about ten days afterwards I received your letters, informing me that peace had been determined on, and all doubts removed; and I learnt the contents of the treaty from the Perſian copy of it. In the firſt place, what regards Ragonauth Row is written in an inſincere manner. Where friendſhip is wiſhed for, and is under diſcuſſion, no word admitting of doubt or inſincerity ought to be uſed, and every article ought to be written without the ſmalleſt obſcurity: I have therefore not thought it adviſable to ſend my Miniſter Dewargur Pundit to Poonah with the treaty. But if every article of the treaty had been plain and free from doubts, the Dewan would certainly have been ſent to Poonah to employ himſelf for the completion of peace. This could not however be done; and the length of time, which from the great diſtance of the way is requiſite for the arriving of letters and the receiving the anſwers, cannot be remedied. But God is witneſs of the friendſhip and affection which from my heart I entertain for the Nabob; yet there is now no remedy, except the execution of the plan which the Nabob Nizam-ul-Dowlah and Pundit Purdhaun have ſettled. For theſe laſt fourteen months I have continually written every occurrence and tranſaction, without omitting the ſmalleſt circumſtance; and in the kharetah which I have now written to the Nabob, I have mentioned every thing which was incumbent on my friendſhip, and have alſo included all the particulars of the treaty. All other matters you will learn from the letters of Dewan Dewagur Pundit, who has written more fully to you. Appendix, No. 363.

A true copy of the tranſlation.

E. Hay, *Act*ˢ *Sec*ʸ.

Tranſlation of a Letter from Dewan Dewargur Pundit to Beneram Pundit; dated the 16th Zeheidja; i. e. 13th December 1780.

I have received your ſucceſſive letters, dated the 17th, 19th, 22d, 24th, and 29th of Ramſaun, and the 1ſt, 7th, 21ſt, and 23d Shaival, and the 22d of Zekaida. Firſt two letters arrived to the following purport: that the Nabob Amaud-ul-Dowlah had told you that he was deſirous of concluding a treaty of peace and alliance with the Chiefs of Poonah, under the guarantee of the Maha Rajah, but that he could not aſſent to the conditions propoſed by us: that he had forbid my coming to Calcutta, and had told you that you were at liberty either to ſtay or go; that you had accordingly for the departure prepared. After that another letter was received, in which you wrote, that the Nabob having held a council, told you that he was reſolved to make a peace; and having called you into the council, held a conſultation with you on all matters; and afterwards ſaid to you in private, that as the Maha Rajah had from his great friendſhip written to him letters containing all his private ſecrets, which were more ſacred to him than his own life, it was therefore incumbent on him to exert himſelf for the completion of peace, and that he had accordingly prepared a treaty with Pundit Purdhaun, under the guarantee of the Maha Rajah, which he was diſpatching, together with karetahs from himſelf. Three karetahs and letters accordingly arrived, and were fully underſtood; and we learnt from them that money had been ſent to Rajah Chimnajee Bahadre, with many other particulars. As we firſt received letters from you, acquainting us of the treaty and conditions not being approved of, and expreſſive of your deſire to go to Benares, conformably to them we wrote to the Nabob Nizam Ally Khan, to Poonah, &c. Ten days afterwards other letters were received: in them you wrote, that the Nabob Amaud-ul-Dowlah, from his great favour, ſhewed you much attention, and told you he was ſettling a peace with Pundit Purdhaun, under the guarantee of the Maha Rajah; that he would reſtore Baſſein and the Guicawar, and Guzerat, and the Talooks of Kullian; but that they muſt unite with him for an invaſion into the country of Hyder Naig, and for his reduction: all this we perfectly underſtood: and you beſides wrote, that in two or four days the treaty will be prepared and diſpatched. Accordingly four days after we received the treaty, with three letters; this treaty was written on one ſide of the paper in Engliſh, and on the other ſide in Perſian; and on one of theſe treaties there was a ſeal; the other two were copies without ſeals. After them arrived three more copies of the ſame treaty, and three karetahs, addreſſed to this quarter, to Pundit Purdhaun, and to Scindia. The contents of the treaty we learnt from the Perſian ſide of it, and were fully comprehended by us. The anſwers to every one of the articles have accordingly been written to the Nabob Amaud-ul-Dowlah. When peace is really and ſincerely wiſhed for, it is proper to write every article without obſcurity: had this treaty been plain and without doubts in all its parts, I ſhould then have inſtantly ſet off for Poonah, where I ſhould have explained and ſatisfied them on every point. Firſt, the opportunity was ſuffered to eſcape, namely, when I went to Poonah and wrote myſelf to General Goddard, and received his anſwer; had at that time an interview taken place between the General and Nanna Purnaveeſe, all miſunderſtandings would have been cleared up, and by this time Hyder Naig would have been ſo entirely ruined, that neither his name nor any ſign of his having exiſted would have remained, and Pundit Purdhaun and the Nabob would have become one ſoul in two bodies.

Appendix. No. 63.

That opportunity was loſt, and as matters were referred to the deciſion of arms, Pundit Purdhaun readily conſenting to his own diſadvantage, intered into an alliance with Hyder Naig, on this agreement, that they ſhould carry ruin and deſolation into the country of the Engliſh. And the Nabob Nizam-ul-Dowlah wrote to Pundit Purdhaun, and having with him ſettled a plan, brought us into this diſtreſs againſt our inclination and wiſhes. Had I not agreed to this I ſhould have been blamed for the misfortunes of the Ranjee; and I who am a well-wiſher and faithful ſervant of the Ranjee, ſhould have ſuffered every reproach and accuſation. As General Goddard had arrived at Haſhungabad, and Mr. Weatherſtone had come to Naigpore, and they had been ſupplied from this quarter with bullocks for their artillery, and all other duties of friendſhip had been performed, this was made uſe of as an argument for blaming and accuſing us; and Pundit Purdkaun openly affirmed to me, that we had a cloſe alliance and friendſhip with the Engliſh gentlemen: and at the ſame time Monſieur Chevalier the French Chief, having eſcaped from Calcutta had come to Cuttack in hopes of protection, and Mr. Elliott who was coming to this quarter, having arrived at Cuttack, requeſted him; notwithſtanding that in political affairs it is very blame-worthy to forſake a perſon who has claimed refuge with you, yet in conſequence of our friendſhip we delivered him up: and although the inhabitants of this country were diſpleaſed and blamed me, yet I conſidered ſolely my friendſhip, and by this I had become obnoxious and ſuſpected. Having no remedy I found it abſolutely neceſſary for me to aſſent to the plan, and in conſequence of that to raiſe 30,000 new horſemen. It is now 14 months that we have laboured under inexpreſſible diſtreſs, and been loaded with an expence of crores of rupees for the pay of theſe troops, but without endangering the friendſhip and alliance of the Engliſh gentlemen. I was deſirous to negociate a reconciliation at any rate between them and Pundit Purdhaun, in ſuch a manner as to enſure the perpetuity of the ancient alliance of this quarter with both ſides: during theſe 14 months I have therefore continually informed you of all matters, and have cheerfully ſubmitted to all difficulties and diſtreſſes. But when the firſt opportunity having been loſt, a treaty is at laſt received, even in that the concerns of Ragonaut Row are expreſſed in a doubtful and ambiguous manner; beſides which, in the affairs of Gwalior Futty Sing Guicawar and the Ranna of Gohud, there is great room for diſputes. The particulars of all theſe points were hinted at large in the Perſian letter, and are too long and tedious to be repeated here. There is a diſtance of 900 coſs between us, and a conſiderable time loſt in ſending letters and receiving the anſwers. From unlucky events and circumſtances I have been compelled to ſend an army under the command of Rajah Chimnajee Babadre; but how long am I to labour under the difficulties and diſtreſſes for the pay of the ſoldiers, which is immenſe? Though two or three lacks of rupees have been received, of what aſſiſtance can that be, or how does that relieve us from the weight of the arrears? We have entered into engagements with Pundit Purdhaun and the Nabob Nizam-ul-Dowlah; but that has not tended to the diminiſhing our difficulties, nor can they be removed till Pundit Purdhaun and the Engliſh gentlemen are reconciled. The Maha Rajah has accordingly exerted and employed his utmoſt abilities for this purpoſe and has written to you on the ſubject; but the event has not turned out as he wiſhed and hoped for; and now that the treaty is arrived, even in that there is great room for alterations. We are without reſource and remedy. God knows and is witneſs whether I am the friend or the enemy of the Engliſh; but the earth is hard, and the heavens are far removed. The Nabob Amaud-ul-Dowlah is prudent and foreſeeing, and all the difficulties of every meaſure are well known to him: at any rate he will not blame me; I am without the ſmalleſt reſource, and can ſee no remedy. Had the Engliſh army under General Goddard never arrived at Heſhangabad, what was then done would not have given umbrage to the Decan people, and we ſhould not have been compelled to ſend an army to Cuttack, and to ſubmit to ſuch a weight of expence, but we ſhould have been free and at liberty in all points, nor would any difficulty have come upon us. From a period of twenty years our friendſhip has been daily increaſing, but from the plan determined on by the Nabob Nizam-ul-Dowlah, which has occaſioned all theſe diſtreſſes, I am fallen into great embarraſſment. Had a peace been concluded between the Engliſh and Pundit Purdhaun, I was in hopes, that from the friendſhip of the Nabob, I might have requeſted ſome ſmall aſſiſtance, (on which ſubject I accordingly wrote before, and the Nabob has kindly granted us 3 lacks of rupees). I alſo hoped that Pundit Purdhaun would likewiſe have given ſome ſhare and that the Nabob Nizam-ul-Dowlah would certainly have contributed his proportion, while we ourſelves would have repaid the reſt out of the country of Hyder Naig. But on the contrary this proſpect has not been realized, and the negociations are extended to an unforeſeen length: the will of God is ſuperior to every thing. As yet, what advantage has accrued to this quarter from the name which the Maha Rajah has adopted, from all the pains and exertions which I have taken during the laſt 14 months, and from the many letters I have written, in which I continually ſtyle myſelf the firm friend, the friend, the friend. Fourteen months are now elapſed ſince we raiſed 30,000 horſemen: if there were only paid 300 rupees, what a large ſum it would make; but the eſtabliſhed allowances of this country are 400 and 500 rupees for each horſeman, and ſome have even more than that; beſides which, there are large allowances to the Jematdars and other officers; conſider then well how great the expence of the whole muſt be. Having fully underſtood this matter you muſt explain it to the Nabob. For 14 months we have ſupported ourſelves, and how much longer muſt we wait in expectation? It is incumbent on me to do any thing that may promiſe relief from theſe diſtreſſes, and if I am negligent and dilatory in executing it, the whole State will be brought into danger, I have never been guilty of the ſmalleſt neglect, and yet I am without reaſon blamed and accuſed, and I have continually written all particulars; but the will of God is ſuperior to every thing. The Nabob muſt read with attention every ſyllable of the Perſian letter which I have written to him, and muſt write back his intentions. At this time it is not adviſable to ſend the army in cantonments, and ſtill more imprudent to recal it, as nothing but loſſes can be expected from acting contrary to the plan which was determined on: ſomething muſt therefore be done. Should the Nabob think me inexcuſable for writing in one manner, and acting in a different manner, diſtreſs for money is my excuſe, and for that I have no remedy: but if I was eſcaped from this whirlpool, and was able to keep myſelf alive, my ſole attention and endeavours would certainly be employed in cultivating the friendſhip of the Nabob, which I hope never to loſe; or ſhould the Nabob, forgetting this, give me the name of enemy, it is my misfortune, nor can I remedy it; but ſtill I will never give up my friendſhip for him. The expences of the army have rendered me without reſource. War and hoſtilities are going on in two or three different quarters; from one of theſe it is neceſſary to be free, and at the ſame time faith and truth are to be obſerved. All theſe particulars you muſt fully explain. Like the common ſtory of the villager, "If I mention "it, my mother dies; if I conceal it, my father will eat "an unclean dog;" both cauſes are difficult. In the ſame kind of dilemma, which I could not foreſee, am I fallen; and this the Nabob, who is unequalled in wiſdom and prudence, muſt reflect upon with juſtice. I write from the dictates of my friendſhip; and ſhould the Nabob conceive different ideas of what I wrote, I am remedileſs. Had the treaty been written without ambiguity there would have been no occaſion for all this: but it can never be conſented that Ragonaut Row ſhould remain in full

full liberty to act as he pleaſes; for this reaſon, that Madho Row Peiſhwa, at the time of his death, putting the hand of his brother Narain Row into the hand of Maha Rajah Ianorjee Bhoſila, made them ſwear eternal friendſhip and that they would by all means in their power prevent the connection from being broken; and Maha Rajah Ianojee Bhoſila procured the releaſe of Ragonaut Row, who was at that time in confinement. The treacherous conduct which Ragonaut afterwards obſerved towards Narrain Row, who had a thouſand rights veſted in himſelf, is well known. After the murder of Narrain Row the Majah Rajah entered into new engagements, "that though he could not act in any hoſtile way againſt Ragonaut Row, yet he would never ſuffer him to be at liberty to act as he ſhould pleaſe." This therefore never can nor will be agreed to; and as it was not poſſible to be ſecurity for ſuch an article, the treaty has therefore not been ſent to Poonah, but has with letters been carefully kept here, and ſhall be diſpatched on the receipt of your anſwer. How can Pundit Purdhaun at this time act inimically againſt Hyder Naig? If he ſhould, no one in the whole world would ever again confide in him, but in the family of the Peiſhwa. There is no want of faith that they ſhould break their engagements with a perſon who ſolicited their friendſhip; beſides, at this time Hyder Naig has, in conſequence of his connection with the Peiſhwa, exerted all his abilities; they muſt wait till Hyder is guilty of ſome infringement of his engagements, which at preſent he faithfully obſerves. The opportunity of this attack, which I informed you of in the month of Cautick, upwards of 14 months ago, and which perhaps you recollect, or have letters reſpecting, was ſuffered to eſcape. If the plan had been executed agreeable to my information, by this time no mark of him would have remained; but at preſent, that to maintain their friendſhip he has exerted himſelf in this manner, how can they act with enmity againſt him? All this has proceeded from the war, and no advantage has been derived from it. The Chief of Bombay gave riſe to theſe hoſtilities and enmity, and has brought matters to this paſs; no fault laid in the Nabob. The Nabob was compelled to protect the honour and reputation of the Engliſh, and had he not attended to that, it would have given occaſion to unlucky events. All the preſent circumſtances are owing ſolely to his wiſh to maintain his honour. If all theſe miſunderſtandings can be removed through the mediation of the Nabob Nizam-ul-Dowlah or Scindiah, it makes no difference; I am certain that the Nabob Amaud-ul-Dowlah will now not write me any letter for this reaſon, becauſe that Rajah Chimnajee is on the borders of Bengal, and perhaps ſome damages have been done by him, and which has given the Nabob ſome diſpleaſure. Let the Nabob think what he pleaſes, I am ſtill his ſincere friend; but misfortunes have no remedy.

In the Hand Writing of the Dewan.

God knows what diſtreſſes, and how great have been the expences of 25,000 men, which we have raiſed within theſe 14 months. I am now without remedy, and am in embarraſſment from two quarters; on one ſide there are treaties and engagements, and on the other a long and eſtabliſhed connection of friendſhip. I know not what to do; the Nabob is wiſe, and is well convinced of the variations and fickleneſs of times and circumſtances.

Poſtſcript, written in Perſian.

You write in your letters of the 22d and 30th of Ramzan, regarding "a negociation taking place for "peace; the conferences of the Council; and that after "much diſpleaſure the Governor had approved, and "came into a favourable diſpoſition to make a treaty to "abide by the engagements entered into by Colonel "Upton, to withdraw entirely from Guzerat, the depen-

"dencies of Surat, Cokan, and the other places which "have lately been taken poſſeſſion of, and until a treaty "can be effected to ſtop all operations." All this is extremely right and laudable, and tends to perpetual advantages. Appendix, No. 363.

The anſwer which you gave in the conference with the Council and to the Governor, was extremely proper; a hundred and a hundred praiſes. The wiſhes of my heart to eſtabliſh truth and ſincerity, and what tends to evince my deſire of promoting the welfare of the Engliſh, have been ſtrongly demonſtrated, and will continue to be ſo in your meaſures and obſervations, which were equally prudent and wiſe. True it is, that experience is the touchſtone which diſcovereth the value of a man. All is very proper, provided that the treaty from that quarter is concluded with candour and truth; and with regard to former treaties, and that the places which have been taken poſſeſſion be given up, great and ſmall; that favour be not ſhewn to Ragonaut Row, and that he be delivered up to the Row Pundit Purdhaun. I have the fulleſt confidence that the Governor, without further ſtickling or debate regarding any of theſe articles, will pay a regard to the future, and conſulting true wiſdom, will ſend a treaty concluded with a ſincere diſpoſition, ſo that I may have no doubts or difficulties in ſpeaking or writing to the Pundit Purdhaun and his Miniſters; that I may take a determinate part in enforcing their acquieſcence; and that I may diſpoſe the Nabob Nizam-ul-Dowlah and Scindia with unanimity both in forms and in meaning to join in promoting theſe meaſures. But it is above all things neceſſary that letters ſhould be ſent to me addreſſed to the Nabob Nizam-ul-Dowlah, and alſo to Sindiah, the Pundit Purdhaun, and Balajee Row Jenardain; and it is highly requiſite that the ſatisfaction of Nizam-ul-Dowlah, and the ſettling of his juſt pretenſions, ſhould be effected through the channel of this court; ſo that, with the aſſiſtance of the ſaid Nabob and Sindiah, I may take meaſures to lay a proper foundation for a treaty with Pundit Purdhaun. It muſt not depend entirely on the negociations of Mr. John Hollond; for if that gentleman is employed it will not be in our power here to make ſure of the aſſiſtance of the abovementioned Nabob: he will be drawn another way, and this will be the means of interrupting the whole buſineſs. As that gentleman will write in one ſtyle to Calcutta, and I in another, hence a difference will ariſe, which will occaſion doubts and ſuſpicions. It is particularly neceſſary to be careful to prevent this; for the Nabob is the firſt and moſt diſtinguiſhed of the Chiefs of the Decan, and he is in ſome meaſure ſatisfied with the Engliſh gentlemen on the reſtoration of Mortezanagur. It is therefore very adviſable that he ſhould be conciliated by civilities and profeſſions, and the ſettlement of his juſt pretenſions, and thereby brought over to co-operate in promoting the deſired objects. You write, that the Governor after expreſſing many doubts and objections about ſupplying the expences of the troops which are arrived at Cuttack, and after you had ſatisfied him, ſaid, "The gentlemen of the Council will not agree; for "my own part I approve of it. For the preſent I will "give thus much money; but the troops of this place "are going to Madras: let near 3,000 horſe of the "troops which are at Cuttack accompany them, ſo that "they may arrive in ſafety at the place of their deſtina-"tion; but let nothing be ſaid of the chout of Bengal, "for this would draw great diſcredit on me with the "Council and the Engliſh; and where advantages of "errores and lacks are in contemplation, it is improper "to look to ſuch inconſiderable objects. Some com-"penſation will be found for it." The caſe is this: in all the correſpondence which has paſſed during two years, not a word has ſlipped from my pen that has had the leaſt relation to avarice or ſelf-intereſt. But I am embarraſſed on account of the troops which are arrived at Cuttack, from my friendſhip to both ſides, namely, the Pundit Purdhaun and the Engliſh; they are prevented from ravaging any of the Engliſh territories from a regard to the latter; and they are prevented from returning from a regard to the plan which has been laid down by the Pundit Purdhaun. I am perplexed therefore betwixt a regard to my friendſhip: I had no other motive in what I wrote. But two poſitive conditions are propoſed by the Governor before he will agree; the one is to relinquiſh the chout of Bengal out of friendſhip to the Engliſh; the ſecond is to ſend 3,000 horſe along with the officer who has been detached to Madras. The caſe is this: the exertions which were made by the late Rajah to obtain the chout, the labours he went through, and the valour he diſplayed, are as apparent as the ſun. In theſe wars, worlds were overturned, multitudes were trampled under the feet of horſes; the treaſures and goods of merchants, bankers, and inhabitants of that country, were plundered and deſtroyed, and two and twenty of the moſt diſtinguiſhed Chiefs of this country, together with many of their companions and friends, from the treachery of the Soubah of Bengal, fell in the ſervice of their maſter; till at length our hereditary right and property of the chout was fully eſtabliſhed and confirmed. Although from an union with the Engliſh the greateſt advantages can be obtained, yet how can we relinquiſh theſe rights and inheritances which commemorate the fame of our anceſtors, without forfeiting at the ſame time our dignity and rank as Princes? In the ſame manner as the Governor ſays diſcredit would be drawn upon him with the Council, ſo would this draw upon us the contempt of all our neighbours. What therefore is written regarding the relinquiſhment of the chout of Bengal, is no ways proper. It is adviſable that our name ſhould be preſerved in that Soubah; but except this, mention any other difficulties which occur, ſo that they may be obviated. In preſerving the name of our chout great advantages will be derived to the Engliſh; every one will be afraid to invade their country: this will be a great advantage. If troops were to be ſent along with the officer of the Engliſh, intelligence thereof would doubtleſs be carried to the Peiſhwa and Nizam-ul-Dowlah; and they will ſay with certainty, that Booſhla and the Engliſh have in their hearts been ſecretly united, and now it is diſcovered: he is in fact, therefore, one of the Engliſh, and we muſt concert meaſures and provide againſt him. All that has been written to Poonah and to the Nabob, regarding peace and the treaty which is coming from Calcutta, will be rendered ineffectual, and a war will be occaſioned with the Chiefs of the Decan: then at leaſt 50,000 horſe, beſides the neceſſary ſtores and ammunition, muſt be got ready before any thing can be done. By the bleſſing of God, whenever my letters arrive, as many troops as are wanted can be procured; but I am without money. As the courage and bravery of the family of Booſhla is well known, great revenues would be neceſſary. Although with the ſpirit and ability of the Engliſh, the aſſiſtance of crores and lacks is not ſo very great a matter, and men who accumulate treaſure, accumulate it for ſuch days as theſe; yet when ſo many objections are made to aſſiſt in paying the expences of the troops at Cuttack, how can I place my expectations in obtaining larger heaps? If ſo much ſpirit be ſhewn from that quarter, I am ready; and I know well that this will not be done by the Council. As the friendſhip of the Engliſh is at all events the firſt and moſt neceſſary conſideration, I will therefore exert myſelf in eſtabliſhing peace; for the power of making peace with all is the beſt object. To this all other meaſures are ſubſervient; and this will certainly be done by them (the Engliſh.) You write, "That after having laid the foundation of peace with the Pundit Purdhaun, it is requiſite that ſome troops ſhould be ſent along with Colonel Goddard againſt Hyder Naig, and take poſſeſſion of his country, when all theſe engagements and propoſals may be aſſented to." My reaſon is confounded in diſcuſſing this ſuggeſtion. At a time when Hyder Naig is in every reſpect in alliance with the Peiſhwa, and has aſſiſted with his ſoul and life to repel the Engliſh, ſo as to unite our troops with thoſe of the enemy, and endeavour to extirpate him, would not this fix the ſtamp of infamy upon us for ever? Would any Prince, for generations to come, ever after aſſiſt or unite with the Peiſhwa? Be yourſelf the judge; and whether ſuch a conduct would become a Prince or not? Why then do you mention it? Why do you write it? The caſe is as follows: at firſt there was the utmoſt enmity betwixt Hyder Naig and the Pundit Purdhaun, and there was the fulleſt intention of ſending troops into Hyder Naig's country: and after the concluſion of the war with Bombay, and the capture of Ragonaut Row, it was firmly reſolved to ſend troops into that quarter, and a reliance was placed on the treaty which was entered into by the gentlemen of Bombay before the war; but when Ragonaut Row again went to them, and General Goddard was ready to commence hoſtilities, when no regard was paid to the friendly propoſals made by us and the Pundit Purdhaun, when they deſiſted from coming to Poonah agreeable to their promiſe, and a categorical anſwer was given to the deputies from Poonah, the Miniſters of Poonah then conſulted amongſt themſelves, and having adviſed with the Nabob Nizam-ul-Dowlah, they conſidered that as enemies were appearing on both ſides, and it would be difficult to cope with both, what was to be done? Peace muſt be made with one of them, and war muſt be carried on with the other. They wiſhed above all things in their hearts to make peace with the Engliſh gentlemen, and unite with them to puniſh Hyder Naig: but theſe gentlemen had plainly refuſed to enter into any terms of reconciliation; it was therefore adviſable to accommodate matters with Hyder Naig: Although he had long been an enemy, what elſe could be done? Having nothing elſe left for it, they were compelled to enter into an union with Hyder; but as the innate diſpoſition of that Prince is compoſed of ingratitude and infidelity, and he can never ceaſe to err, it is certain that he will violate the treaty and yield; a pretence that will render it adviſable for us, in conjunction with the Engliſh, to take vengeance, without incurring the imputation of a breach of treaties. We muſt therefore wait for an opportunity when he ſhall commit ſome fault, and doubtleſs he will commit one; but the time and opportunity are ſtill to come, and this is the way: after the treaty formed with ſincerity and candour arrives from your quarter, I will ſet out for Poonah to conclude theſe important matters, and will accompliſh every thing as wiſhed for. I will unite Sindiah with me, and I will ſatisfy the Nabob Nizam-ul-Dowlah; and as the utmoſt diſguſt ſubſiſts in the hearts of the Miniſters and Nizam-ul-Dowlah againſt Hyder, yet for the ſake of appearances, as ſome pretence is neceſſary, we will conſult together; find out ſome accuſation againſt him. We muſt fix all our thoughts on this; but ſome little delay is neceſſary to effect all theſe objects. This you well underſtand, and be not impatient. Things which at firſt can eaſily and ſpeedily be accompliſhed, from the viciſſitude of affairs may afterwards be difficult. At preſent, the eſtabliſhment of peace between the Engliſh gentlemen, the Pundit Purdhaun, and the Nabob Nizam-ul-Dowlah, is highly expedient; and, as I formerly wrote, the loſs which each party has ſuſtained from keeping up their armies, may be indemnified from ſome operations carried on by them in conjunction. This is certainly true. In former times it might have been done immediately: if now, a delay of ſome days muſt take place, it does not ſignify: what comes ſlowly, comes well. The root and exiſtence of Hyder Naig will, in proceſs of time, be extirpated. To conclude: formerly a long correſpondence of this kind took place with Lord Clive, which aroſe from a cordial friendſhip on both ſides; after that no correſpondence was kept up, till knowing the diſtinguiſhed character of the preſent Governor, and finding that he was capable of comprehending all theſe objects, an intercourſe and confidential communication has been eſtabliſhed. God, who ſeeth the inſide of all hearts, is a witneſs whether it proceeded from intereſted-neſs, or from the ſincereſt friendſhip. The event will infallibly evince, that it would be difficult to find throughout the whole extent of the Decan, and of India, a friend ſo truly attached as the Rajah my maſter.

Poſtſcript.—To the letter which you wrote to Bowanny Pundit to this effect, that if Pundit Purdhaun ſhould not be ſatisfied with the treaty on account of the news of Hyder Naig, it is proper that you ſhould cultivate the friendſhip of the Engliſh, becauſe many advantages may ariſe from it, and the Governor reckons you his firm friend. I hope that all theſe advantages agreeable to my inclinations will be brought about. This is the anſwer; that after the arrival of the true and undiſſembling treaty from Calcutta to this effect, to forſake Raganaut Row, and to deliver him to Pundit Purdhaun, and to reſtore all the places in the Kokan, and Guzerat, and the Talooks of Hind. I will go to Poonah, and will get a treaty on his (the Peiſhwa) part; and whatever is in my heart I will get eſtabliſhed in the treaty. But if the Peiſhwa does not agree to this equitable treaty, and peremptorily refuſes it, I will then write to you (agreeable to your letter) whatever is proper to be written. To keep an army, much money is requiſite; but I ſhall in no reſpect be neglectful in preſerving friendſhip with the Engliſh, and withdrawing from all others will adhere to them.

Tranſlation of a Letter from Rajah Seina Behadar to Beneram Pundit, dated the 23d Suffier; and a Duplicate to the ſame purport: received the 26th February.

Having committed many particulars verbally to Biſſumber Pundit, I diſpatched him to your quarter. All thoſe particulars you will have underſtood, as alſo the letters which have ſince been written to you. From the friendſhip of the Nabob Amaud-ul-Dowla, we are loaded with the reproaches of Pundit Purdhaun and Nizam Ally Khan; and out of regard to the friendſhip of the Nabob, no objection or oppoſition has been made to the march of Colonel Pearſe; but how will the event of this appear? The Maha Rajah formerly wrote to me that he was at a great diſtance, but that the Nabob was near me, and that whatever was proper I ſhould write to the Nabob and act agreeable to his orders. Accordingly, to this time I have acted in that manner; and it is therefore incumbent and neceſſary for the Nabob, in conſideration of his friendſhip, to think of and ſettle ſome plan for the relief of our diſtreſſes. You muſt now explain fully to the Nabob this letter, and ſatisfy him. Inform me of its ſucceſs. After the diſtreſſes of the army ſhall have been removed, and the foundation of our friendſhip ſtrengthened, great advantage will accrue. To this time, from an attention to my friendſhip, I have readily ſubmitted to theſe expences and reproaches which have been thrown upon us by Pundit Purdhaun and Nizam Ally Khan. The Nabob Amaud-ul-Dowlah is wiſe. It is neceſſary that he pay regard not to the money but to the friendſhip of the Maha Rajah, and that he performs what ought to be done. This friendſhip will be of great utility. I diſpatch this letter under charge of two Coſſids: return them with an anſwer ſpeedily.

In the Rajah's hand:—I have ſaid to Biſſumber Sheo Behader whatever was proper to be ſaid. He will have made every point known to you. Send him back hither ſoon, and return a ſpeedy anſwer.

From Bowanny Pundit Appa to the ſame; 23d Suffier.

Having committed ſeveral points of negociation to Biſſumber Pundit, I have diſpatched him to your quarter; and afterwards other letters were ſent; which you will have received, and underſtood the contents: you will now learn all particulars from the letter of the Rajah. From the friendſhip of the Nabob great expences and diſtreſſes have come upon us; and Seremunt Row Pandit Purdhaun and the Nabob Nizam Ally Khan have reviled and reproached us; it is therefore incumbent upon the Nabob not to pay any attention to the money but to the friendſhip of the Maha Rajah. You are a well-wiſher to both ſides, and muſt explain this in a proper manner, and ſend a ſpeedy anſwer.

In the Pundit's hand:—Mr. Anderſon arrived, but no opportunity offered for an interview. He has ſent the letters which were with him, and which I underſtood. We have done what the Nabob requeſted, and the Nabob muſt now keep his eyes on the friendſhip to give us relief in the article of pay to the army; by ſo doing the Nabob would enſure great advantage to himſelf.

From Rajah Ram Pundit to the ſame; 23d Suffier.

I have before this written to you all particulars which you will have underſtood. Biſſumber Pundit having obtained permiſſion from the Preſence, ſent for me from Cuttack. When I arrived at the army by the advice of the Pundit, and agreeable to your former letters received at Cuttack, I explained every particular in a proper manner to Appa Sabeb, and repreſented them likewiſe to the Rajah. I alſo ſpoke, at Biſſumber Pundit's deſire, reſpecting the march and ſtation of the army, and got it ſettled that Colonel Pearſe ſhould march without any moleſtation with his army, ſuch days journies as he may chooſe. Accordingly, all the requeſts of Biſſumber were agreed to, and the Pundit has been diſpatched to the Nabob and to you. Do you now execute whatever plan may bring things to an iſſue. I am the leaſt of the ſervants of the Sirkar. Out of the regard to the friendſhip of the Nabob, we for 10 months, to prevent the ſmalleſt injury being done, detained the army in Cuttack, and to the extent of our abilities to bear, brought into theſe diſtreſſes not only ourſelves but our relations, friends, and allies, and attempted to defray thoſe expences. Biſſumber Pundit is well acquainted with the ſentiments, views, and wiſhes of this quarter, and will have explained them to you. I have, to complete the point you have propoſed to me, ſpoken to the Appa Sabeb, and by procuring a free paſſage for the battalion have, with my eyes open, ſubmitted to a heavy reproach; and leaving only the propriety of this matter to you, I have executed it, as this was for the intereſt and advantage of both Governments: but how long is this friendſhip to be maintained through the intervention of others? The Nabob from his wiſdom and prudence having conquered the whole country, has for theſe 20 years ſent to Europe large ſums of money; and it is well known, that for theſe 20 years the Maha Rajah has never once ſent an army towards this country; and as he for 10 years did not think the friendſhip of the Nabob adviſable, the Nabob remained in peace, attending to the management of his country, and raiſing his glory. If I was to make an account of the chout, to how much would it not amount? But fear of God is neceſſary. For a whole year an army of 30,000 horſe has remained with their eyes towards that quarter, and continued within their own limits, and did not commit the ſmalleſt injury in the country of Bengal, to the damage of even a dry leaf. Much money will be received, but it is difficult for this ſeaſon, and the advantages of friendſhip to be attained. I am now releaſed from this, the blame of it belongs to the Nabob. I performed the ſame friendly offices at Hoſhungabad, and enabled them to go in ſafety to Surat; and in this place what could be my motive for delivering up the Frenchman to the Nabob? God is witneſs that it was to give plea-ſure to the Nabob. It is now univerſally known that I procured a paſſage for the battalions. Should the Nabob at this time alter his ſentiments, God will bear witneſs. This time is diſtreſſing; the ſoldiers pray that they may be led to battle and plunder, and daily and nightly make this requeſt. You will explain all theſe particulars to the Nabob in a proper manner, and having ſettled it, write me intelligence of it. The ſeaſon of opportunity is gone; this may be of great conſequence and advantage. If he is inclined to maintain and ſupport his greatneſs, let him remain firm in his friendſhip for the Nabob. Reflect on this maturely; as I am ſatisfied as to the pay of the army, I will do every thing which may be for the intereſts of the Nabob; having ſettled this, ſpeedily inform me of it.

From Hurry Hurr Maha Deo; 26th Suffier.

Your letters dated in Suffier, were received the laſt day of that month. According to your deſire I am going with Munnijee Pundit to the army: after my arrival there, I will repreſent all particulars to you. I have heard that Biſſumber Pundit being arrived at Ballaſore, is remaining there, in expectation of ſeeing Mr. Anderſon; before this he is doubtleſs arrived at Calcutta. Colonel Pearſe is arrived with his army at Balaſore, and Buggerunt Row Nanna has had an interview with him. At this time letters are received from Rajah Seina Bahadre and Rajah Ram Pundit to Dewan Huderam and Munjoo Choudry, to this purport: that between the Nabob Amaud-ul-Dowlah and the Maha Rajah the firmeſt friendſhip exiſts; that Colonel Pearſe is going with an army to oppoſe Hyder Naig; that I muſt therefore come immediately to Gunneſe Nagur Ghaut, and prepare the ferry boats for the army to croſs as ſoon as they may arrive there; and that Munjoo Choudry and Namdar Khawn muſt accompany them to the limits of Ganjam: that I muſt quiet the inhabitants of the town, and prevent their conceiving any apprehenſions; that the battalions are going to Madras and will do no injury; and that I muſt give poſitive orders to the ſame effect to Shawbeg Khan and Nabar Khan, &c. who are on the other ſide of the river Gunjoory. Whatever further I may learn I will repreſent to you.

A ſecond Letter from Rojah Ram Pundit to Beneram.

Whatever I and Biſſumber Pundit together repreſented to the Rajah and Appe Saheb, will have been made known to you by the Pundit, who has been diſpatched from hence. Colonel Pearſe has had permiſſion to march, and ſtrict orders have been given to the Beuſſaries to furniſh him with proviſions; and having ſent an agent from us with him, he has been forwarded to the ſouthward from the neighbourhood of Cuttack. Biſſumber Pundit at the time of his departure petitioned from the Preſence, that they would not leave Cuttack till he ſhould addreſs an arzee to them after his arrival at Calcutta. The troops here complain greatly, that they came in the hopes of enriching themſelves in the country of Bengal, and that to this time they had neglected all thoſe hopes of acquiring money and goods; that they had now, for the ſake of friendſhip, given free paſſage to Colonel Pearſe; that they muſt now either give them intelligence where to get their money, or elſe ſuffer them to ſhew their courage and activity. How long are theſe diſcourſes to laſt? We are anxiouſly expecting letters from your quarter. We have performed the duties of friendſhip: To this time you and I have, in all caſes and ſeaſons, exerted ourſelves in repreſenting all matters, and pointing out the opportunities. The execution of every thing depends upon the Nabob: he will do whatever is right.

From Bowanny Pundit, Moonſhy to Moodajee Bhooſla, to Beneram Pundit; dated 20th Mohervira, and received in Calcutta the 22d Suffier, 21ſt February.

Your letter dated the 6th Zeheidja arrived on the 9th Mohurrim, under charge of the Coffids of Teek Chunder Meerdha; together with Hindoſtanny letters, addreſſed to the Maha Rajah, my maſter, and the Dewan; and the receipt of it made me acquainted with all particulars, and gave me the greateſt ſatisfaction. You write, that at firſt you could not agree in any point of your converſations, till after the arrival of the letters from the Preſence, and from Dada Saheb; when on the contrary every thing was unanimouſly aſſented to, and the paper of advice and requeſts, and all the other points, were approved of, agreeable to what they had written: that upon theſe particulars being determined on, karetahs and letters from the Nabob, with a treaty under the ſeal and ſignature of the Council, written in Engliſh and Perſian, and with letters from you, were diſpatched by the way of Benares, and by that of Cuttack; and that the letters from hence were returned by the ſame conveyance: that as yet no anſwer had arrived to any one of them, which circumſtance had thrown you into the greateſt terror and apprehenſions, leſt theſe papers, containing ſecrets of ſuch importance, ſhould not have arrived ſafe at the Preſence, but ſhould have been loſt in the many dangers of the road: that you requeſt the receipt of them may be acknowledged as ſpeedily as poſſible, in order to reſtore tranquillity to your mind: that you have, agreeable to the contents of the letters from the Preſence and Dada Saheb, dated the 20th of Ramzan, repreſented to the Nabob the means of ſupporting the war on all four ſides, which requires the preſence of an Engliſh army in every quarter, and will be attended with a conſiderable expence; and that you inquired of him, in caſe he ſhould not adopt this plan, and ſhould not chooſe to incur too great an expence of money, in that caſe what advice and reſolution he would take, and what he would determine on for us? and if he does not act in that manner, what other plan he has adopted? That the Nabob is accordingly meditating on the above-mentioned points, and has begun to ſettle about the money, which will be entirely adjuſted after the arrival of the anſwers from hence: that the Nabob declares that he has given up the aſſiſting of Ragonaut Row ſolely out of friendſhip for the Maha Rajah, for that otherwiſe there are many chiefs and miniſters in Decan who are ambitious, and who would give money and treaſure for aſſiſtance: that at this time Keeroo Butt, a truſty ſervant of Ragonaut Row, is come for this very purpoſe, on the part of ſeveral perſons of credit and diſtinction, and promiſes money on condition of Ragonaut's being placed on the throne; but that he pays no attention to ſuch promiſes, being reſolved to maintain the friendſhip of the Maha Rajah, and never to aſſiſt Ragonaut Row; and that now he has ſent the treaty, he can never think of giving any aſſiſtance, and that he is anxious for the receipt of the anſwers from hence. That you ſaid in anſwer, that the Maha Rajah alſo was in every ſituation attentive to his friendſhip, and would, without doubt, act agreeable to what the Nabob had written: that it is adviſable to ſend an anſwer as ſpeedily as poſſible, becauſe, in ſhort, to this time every converſation and negociation has been founded on a deſire for friendſhip and alliance. But what is learnt from Bowanny Pundit Buckſhy being of a contrary nature, and Rajah Chimnajee Baboo having left his cantonments and encamped, and intending to enter the Engliſh dominions, Colonel Pearſe, an Engliſh Chief, has been ordered to march with 8 battalions by land; that they are waiting in expectation of the anſwers from hence. If theſe arrive ſoon it is well, if not, they will not remain long patient, but will march forwards and begin hoſtilities; and the valour and courage of the Engliſh, which is univerſally known and extolled, will give a bad iſſue to the matter; the receipt of the money will be prevented, and plunder and rapine muſt be expected in the room of it: that it is therefore moſt adviſable to remain on friendly terms with the Engliſh, and to enter into alliance and intimate connection with them, and at all events to effect a reconciliation between them and Pundit Purdhaun. That you have, agreeable to the former letters from hence, ſet on foot a negociation reſpecting the money, of which there are required ſeveral lacks; and that you will inform us of whatever may be determined after the arrival of the anſwers from hence. What you write conformably to the letters from hence, dated the 2d Zekaida, that although the favours which the Nabob ſhews to you increaſe daily, and although he has a ſincere affection for you, yet if it is the pleaſure of the Preſence that you ſhould remain, you muſt be informed of it, otherwiſe you will go to Benares. All theſe particulars are perfectly underſtood; and from the newſpaper of the royal Durbar, the manner and method of all the affairs at the Durbar, and the open and undiſguiſed proceedings in tranſacting all the concerns of the Sultanut and country were likewiſe fully learnt: and the paper, containing the preparations of the Engliſh in collecting troops at Benares, Ellahabad, Fyzabad, the neighbourhood of Gwalior, and in the Carnatic, was peruſed, and the full particulars of your letter, together with the abſtract and abridgment of ſeveral ſecret and important points were in a proper and complete manner explained to the Maha Rajah and his Miniſters, and the informing us of all occurrences and of the ſituation of affairs which you at this diſtance ſend continually and repeatedly: 'the explaining the concealed parts of all matters; the diſcovering the whole of our views and wiſhes; the foreſeeing the end of every thing at the very commencement of it; the holding faſt in your hand the chain of caution and circumſpection for the intereſts and advantage of your maſter; the being from your heart and ſoul employed in maintaining truth and faith, and in obſerving the duties of gratitude; your keeping up at the Durbar of the Engliſh a diſtinction and ſuperiority above all the reſt; have gained you the favour and affection of the Maha Rajah and his Miniſter; and the advantage to reſult from that, will, by the bleſſing of God, ſhortly appear to the utmoſt of your wiſhes. Knowing it to be incumbent on my friendſhip to give you the earlieſt intelligence of this lucky event, I have written it to you.

The karetahs and treaties which were ſent in duplicate by the way of Benares, are all ſafe arrived, and letters from you were received accompanying them, beſides a ſeparate letter conformable to what you wrote; but by the way of Cuttack no karetah or letter was received. In anſwer to theſe, karetahs and letters were diſpatched at two different times, under charge of the Coſſid which came from your quarter, accompanied by others from hence; firſt from Ramleez the 15th Zeheidja, and afterwards from Noigpore the 2d Mohurrem. Doubtleſs, they have arrived in ſucceſſive order, and have made you acquainted with all the contents. You need not be under any apprehenſion reſpecting the arrival of the letters of the Nabob Nizam Ally Khan, which you ſent back, as they were ſafely received at the ſame time as the letter for Zuffer-ud-Dowlah; but two papers of news written by Kiſſen Row Billall remain with you; thoſe likewiſe you will without doubt ſend. The letter which I wrote to you, under date the 6th Mohurrem, and diſpatched under charge of Coſſids belonging to the Sirkar, was written conformable to the orders of the Maha Rajah and the directions of the Dewan, and was free from all obſcurity and diſguiſe, was full of truth and ſincerity, and had not the ſmalleſt degree of doubt, excuſe, or diſſimulation; and at this time alſo, whatever I heard from the Maha Rajah my maſter, and from his Miniſter, I have written in the fulleſt manner: it is as follows; that what the Nabob has ſaid, namely, that notwithſtanding the Engliſh forces are ſtationed in all quarters, from Benares and Ellahabad as far as Gwalior, and from Conkan to the Carnatic, for the ſettlement of the war and diſputes from the four quarters, and for the recovery of their military reputation, and for ſupplying the expences required by theſe meaſures; and that notwithſtanding that many of the Chiefs and Miniſters are inclined towards Ragonaut Row, and promiſe to ſupply large ſums of money in caſe of his being reſtored to the throne; yet he has, ſolely with a view to pleaſe the Maha Rajah, ſent of himſelf a treaty, and has deſiſted from all aſſiſtance of Ragonaut Row; for that otherwiſe, to this time he had no inclination to enter into peace and alliance with them; that he is anxiouſly expecting the anſwer of the Maha Rajah. The caſe is this: that in the commencement of a war, the event of it, which muſt be either defeat or victory, is known only to God, who ſees the inward as well as outward. It is firſt neceſſary to quit the guard of one's own country before one can carry fire into the dominions of another; and while the other does not commit any breach of his engagements, to bind on without cauſe the girdle of enmity, and to act in oppoſition to all faith and treaties, is contrary to the opinion of all wiſe men, and is the height of infidelity. Beſides this, General Goddard's being at Hoſhungabad was conſidered and pointed at through all parts of the Decan, as a proof of the friendſhip and alliance between theſe two countries: for this reaſon in the letters from hence it was adviſed and requeſted, conformable to our friendſhip and good wiſhes, that peace and reconciliation be effected, and in conſequence of that not being approved of, a karetah was ſent to you, containing the means of ſupporting this arduous war. In anſwer to this the Nabob wrote, that he had dropped that intention, and wiſhed for nothing but friendſhip. From this you muſt reflect, that if the letters from this quarter to that quarter had had any weight, out of thoſe two propoſals, one would certainly have met with his approbation. Enough of this. When after the Bombay defeat the Dewan went to Poonah, and Hyder Naig had no other kind of connection with Pundit Peiſhwa, except the ſending an army into his country, and General Goddard from himſelf had propoſed peace and friendſhip, and when his declining to aſſiſt Ragonaut Row, and his promiſing to come to Poonah, was ſolely for the purpoſe of a reconciliation; and at that time although the Dewan in perſon exerted and employed the moſt powerful arguments for this purpoſe, yet they had no effect. Having no other reſource, the people of Poonah entered into an alliance with Hyder Naig: and whatever was to be done in conſequence has been done, and is ſtill doing. At that time, why did not the General act for the Maha Rajah's ſatisfaction? It is now become abſolutely neceſſary for us to approve the plan and ſcheme, and to raiſe an army and ſend it into Oriſſa, otherwiſe we ſhould never have had occaſion to raiſe an army and ſend it into Oriſſa, or to ſubmit to an expence of lacks and crores of rupees. All this has been the conſequence of General Goddard's coming to Hoſhungabad, and our wiſh to maintain the friendſhip of the Engliſh. You muſt be juſt, and conſider well from what have proceeded the difficulties of this war and the preſent alarms. Afterwards, when the Dewan returned to Naugpore, the army which is arrived at Cuttack was put into cantonments ſolely for the friendſhip of the Engliſh gentlemen. Karetahs and letters were ſent from hence, containing many political and friendly ſentiments, and adviſing, that as peace was a thouſand times preferable to war, and as obſervance of treaties and engagements was the ſtandard of faith, peace ſhould be effected; or, that if this was not agreed to, then the proſecution of war on the four quarters, the ſtationing of Engliſh battalions on all ſides, and the providing money for the expences, muſt be thought of. When letters from hence to this purport were repeatedly received in that quarter, yet the Nabob, rejecting all the rights of friendſhip and affection, ſaid to you, that we were partial to Pundit Purdhaun, and wiſhed for his friendſhip and alliance; that he would decline our alliance; that it was of no uſe for you to remain with him, but that you might return home. Reflect what wiſh to give ſatisfaction

ſatisfaction to this quarter; was there any ſuch expreſſion it would have been right in him to have ſaid, that he had not the ſmalleſt intention of making peace with Pundit Purdhaun; that we are his friends, and are pointed at by all the people of Dekan on account of our friendſhip with him, who are not amicably inclined towards us, and wiſh to ſee no other intercourſe between us than that of diſputes; that we have therefore ſent an army into Oriſſa, and that it was neceſſary for us to unite ourſelves with him, by which means the army at Cuttack would become his; that as for the oppoſing his enemies, a large force was requiſite, it was therefore neceſſary for him to collect troops, and that for that purpoſe he would give us ſuch a ſum of money, and would pay us ſo much for the ſupport of the army of Cuttack. If he had ſpoken in this manner it would have ſet our minds at eaſe, and we ſhould, in hopes of aſſiſtance from him, have determined on plans and meaſures to be purſued: But he rejecting theſe words, which would have been conſiſtent with the advice required by the circumſtances, ſaid to you only this, that you might return home. At that time where was his wiſh to give us ſatisfaction, which he now writes has alone prompted him to make peace and to ſend the treaty? As in friendſhip and alliance ſuch a diſpute is not proper nor becoming, we have therefore aſſented and approved that he makes peace merely to pleaſe us, but only in caſe the treaty is made conformable to the former engagements. This will be an obligation conferred on his friends, and will reſtore tranquillity to the inhabitants, will extinguiſh the flames of war, and will eſtabliſh the reputation of our true friend the Nabob Amaud-ul-Dowlah; but when we have aſſumed the name of Amaud-ul-Dowlah, why ſhould we render it abortive, and of no effect, on account of theſe expreſſions about our ſatisfaction? What we do for him, we do for ourſelves; but only on condition that the treaty be plain and undiſguiſed, and conformable to former eſtabliſhed engagements. When the articles of it had been maturely conſidered, in the point of Ragonaut Row's being at liberty to reſide wherever he may think proper, in that of the fort of Ahmedabad, and the ſhare of Guzerat being and maintained in the poſſeſſion of Futty Sing Guicawar, agreeable to your engagements; and in the like article ſecuring Gwalior to the Rana of Gohud, there appeared a variation from former treaties, and a neceſſity for an alteration, beſides the article engaging to attack and ruin Hyder Naig in concert; all which articles as we knew could never be aſſented to by the Poonah Miniſters: we therefore wrote in anſwer, whatever was right and was required by faith and obſervance of treaties, with the greateſt ſincerity and truth, and diſpatched the karetahs and letters to your quarter, where I have no doubt but they are ſafe arrived. If truth, and faith, and obſervance of treaties, and peace, and reconciliation, ſhould be their wiſh, they will then give their aſſent to every thing which has been written from their quarter, and will conſider it to have been dictated by friendſhip. Whatever they may have determined upon will be beſt. But I ſwear by the Almighty, and by my holy religion, that the Maha Rajah my maſter, and the Dewan, notwithſtanding that their plans and counſels above written have not availed or been approved of, have no other thoughts or views but the intereſts and advantages of the Engliſh gentlemen, and the glory of the Nabob Amaud-ul-Dowlah; and how great, and of what a long ſtanding muſt their friendſhip be, which, notwithſtanding repeated denials and contradictions, has received no injury? This will by degrees be tried and plainly ſeen by the Nabob: at preſent many things veil it and keep it under darkneſs, as a cloud does the ſun; but at laſt the light of the ſun breaks forth by its own vigour. As the illuſtrious and noble family of Bhooſlah are famed for their obſervance of faith and ſincerity, and have been brought into the plan and meaſures of Pundit Purdhaun, they are therefore without remedy and reſource, and are wiſhing to extricate themſelves from their engagements with the Poonah Rulers. The Maha Rajah had for this purpoſe imagined and ſettled a ſcheme which he explained to me himſelf, and ordered me to write it to you in my letter of the 6th Moheuran, from which letter you will have thoroughly comprehended it. In this caſe, if the dependencies of the Engliſh have ſuffered from the army at Cuttack, or if from the dread of the Engliſh battalions the province of Oriſſa has received any damage, or even if any ſmall hoſtility has happened between them, it makes no difference, becauſe wherever the hearts are ſincerely unanimous, no outward appearance of miſunderſtanding can be of any effect; from that a plea may be procured for ſeparating ourſelves from the connection with Pundit Purdhaun, but it muſt not be looked upon as an act of enmity: this you muſt explain to the Nabob, and convince him that the ſole end propoſed from this meaſure, is to ſeparate ourſelves from Pundit Peiſhwa, and that after extricating ourſelves from our engagements to him, and from this diſtreſſing plan of his, every meaſure will be ſettled with the aſſiſtance and advice of the Engliſh gentlemen. But the means of ſupporting the expences of the pay to the army at Cuttack, and to the new troops, which this plan will require to be raiſed, depend altogether on the aſſiſtance of the Nabob Amaud-ul-Dowlah; having ſettled this point in a binding manner, you muſt write us ſo.

The reaſon of the determining on this plan is as follows: when copies of the treaty had been ſent to the Poonah Miniſters after two months, when Baſſein had been loſt, and war had commenced in Bore Ghaut with the Engliſh, they ſent anſwers to this purport; that they could place no kind of dependance on the promiſes and engagements of the Engliſh, who had repeatedly entered into treaties and as often broke them; that we ought to examine what want of faith they had ever ſhewn that the Engliſh ſhould commence ſuch hoſtilities againſt them, and ſhould employ themſelves for the aſſiſtance of Ragonaut Row, and then ſay that any breach of treaty which happened was committed by the Chief of Bombay; but after the defeat of the Bombay army, from what ſide have the preſent hoſtilities and devaſtation ariſen? That the preſent treaty therefore can be no more relied on. That it is therefore neceſſary for the army at Cuttack to loſe no more time in uſeleſs delays, but to enter the Engliſh dependencies. The Maha Rajah therefore to extricate himſelf from theſe meaſures, has of himſelf imagined this plan, and has made me write it to you, that you might repreſent it in a proper manner.

Poſtſcript. While this important plan is under diſcuſſion, it is adviſable and neceſſary that you remain with the Nabob, who doubtleſs will willingly and with pleaſure retain you: why do you therefore mention any thing reſpecting your coming to Benares; you muſt exert yourſelf in the ſervice of your maſter, and in your attachment to the Nabob for the proſecuting the points now in conſideration, and the other important concerns; to the promoting the friendſhip between the Nabob and the Maha Rajah, that it may derive inwardly advantage from theſe ſeeming outward contradictions. To write more to you who are wiſe would be uſeleſs.

Poſtſcript.—This is the ſeaſon to fix ultimately the plan propoſed, that from the four quarters armies be ſent to the Engliſh dependencies, and war be commenced; and ſhould peace be thought adviſable, let it be by the intervention and knowledge of every one; namely, the Nabob Nizam Ally Khan, Pundit Peiſhwa, and the Maha Rajah; and at this time, in conſequence of his connection with Pundit Purdhaun, Hyder Ally Khan has entered himſelf into this negociation, and, like the elephant at cheſs, has claimed this plan on the four ſides, that one of them without the other cannot act in this meaſure: but this connection and the conditions of the engagements between Hyder Ally Khan and Pundit Peiſhwa, were entered into without the knowledge of the Nabob Nizam Ally Khan, for which reaſon he has conceived diſpleaſure and enmity againſt Hyder; and Hyder, from the pride of having a large army and a conſiderable treaſure, of ſeeing his country in ſecurity, and of having effected a ſmall part of his ſcheme in an attack on ſome Engliſh battalions, conceived thoughts very far diſtant from his ſituation and rank, and ſent a Vackeel to the Preſence, to the Vizier Nudjiff Cawn, and repreſented, that as he had ſhewn ſuch courage and conduct in the war againſt the Engliſh, he hoped from the royal favour that he might receive as a reward the Sunnuds for the Soubahs of Deckan; and that if he obtained ſuch his deſire, he would lay at his Majeſty's feet every thing which his loyalty and obedience could require. Accordingly the Vackeel was admitted to his Majeſty's preſence, and to an interview with the Vizier; and a firmaun, containing the praiſes and virtues of Hyder, and promiſing him his requeſt, together with a turban from his Majeſty's head, and a khellaut from his wardrobe, were ſent to Hyder. We ſhall ſoon ſee what more his negociation there will effect. As this ſame news muſt have been contained in the papers ſent to your quarter, any more on this ſubject would be ſuperfluous. In ſhort, the Nabob Nizam-ul-Dowlah being enraged at theſe tranſactions, is watching for an opportunity to revenge himſelf: it is therefore moſt adviſable for the Nabob Amaud-ul-Dowlah to exert himſelf by all means to give ſatisfaction to the Nabob Nizam-ul-Dowlah, and not to refuſe ſending them preſents and gifts, but at any rate to gain, through Mr. Hollond, the friendſhip of ſo great a Chief, who is the ſupport of the throne, and is poſſeſſed of ſuch armies and reſources; and when this ſhall have been firmly ſettled, and this powerful Chief has been gained over, beſides the Maha Rajah and the Nabob Zuffer-ud-Dowlah, who are ſincerely attached to the Engliſh, and are likewiſe united with Nizam-ul-Dowlah both in ſchemes and counſels, and in the management of war and hoſtilities, what power or ability would then remain for the Chiefs and Rulers of Poonah to act hoſtilely againſt the Engliſh gentlemen, without the permiſſion of the Nabob and Maha Rajah? on the contrary, they would certainly be reconciled, and would act in every thing by the directions of the Nabob and Maha Rajah: and at that time treaties and engagements, ſuch as are wiſhed for, will be effected. The abſtract of this long letter is, that by prudent management and conduct the iron chain which is ſtrongly bound on the feet of the elephant will be removed, and what remains, which is only the chain from Hyder's foot, muſt be ſeparated by the ſtrength of the ſword, and he muſt be deſtroyed by the combined force of the others, and his country ſhared according to agreement which will then be made; and being relieved from all dangers by the guarantee of the Nabob and the Maha Rajah, they will then remain in peace and ſecurity at home. You will therefore, in a proper manner, repreſent the above written particulars to the Nabob Amaud-ul-Dowlah; but till this important point can be adjuſted and finally effected, you muſt write to us in an explicit manner from Calcutta; till that time the ſeeming preparations on both ſides to enter each other's dominions, ſome ſmall hoſtilities, and even a degree of plundering on both ſides, is to be recommended as adviſable, and as aveil over the plan. This muſt be conſidered as ſweet to the taſte, and muſt not be looked upon as bitter, as a bitter medicine is of the moſt ſervice to the body; you will therefore exert your utmoſt abilities to effect this plan, and will at any rate ſatisfy and convince the Nabob, that all what I have written are ſecrets entruſted to me by the Maha Rajah and his Miniſter, and I take God to witneſs that it is true. You muſt conſider this as a ſecret more precious than your own life, and muſt tear the letter, as it would be of the greateſt detriment ſhould any one elſe be acquainted with it. For the keeping of this ſecret you are bound by your moſt binding of all oaths, your duty to your maſter. I need write no more, the reſt depends on your management and conduct.

Appendix. No. 363.

Tranſlation of a Letter from Dewan Dewagur Pundit to Beneram Pundit. Dated the 20th Mohurren: received the 8th March.

Your letter has been received, and the contents underſtood. You write, that the Nabob Amaud-ul-Dowlah has diſpatched a treaty full of oaths and engagements, with ſeparate karetahs addreſſed to Row Pundit Purdhaun, to Nanah Purnaveſe, to the Maha Rajah, to the Nabob Zuffer-ud-Dowlah, and to me; but that as yet no anſwer has been received to any one of them, which he is anxiouſly looking for. You further mention, that a karetah has been ſent from Calcutta to the Nabob Nizam ul-Dowlah, which, with other contents of your letter, is underſtood, and the treaty and karetahs have been carefully and attentively peruſed; and agreeably to what the Nabob Amaud-ul-Dowlah wrote, we have kept with us the original treaties and karetahs, and have written the particulars and contents of them to Pundit Purdhaun. What was written reſpecting the oath to prevent any deviation from the treaty, that it ſhould be neither increaſed nor diminiſhed, has been fully comprehended. The caſe is this: that in the firſt place the chief article for Pundit Purdhaun, namely Ragonaut Row, is not written in a plain manner; neither are the articles reſpecting Guealior, Guzerat, the Guicawar, and the forts, and many other points which ought to have been rendered ſatisfactory, written with any plainneſs, otherwiſe I ſhould have gone in perſon and exerted myſelf to adjuſt every point. I have therefore not ſent the treaty, but have kept it carefully in my poſſeſſion. At the beginning the opportunity was ſuffered to eſcape; that is to ſay, the time when I was at Poonah, when I wrote letters to General Goddard, and anſwers were received, if at that time an interview had taken place between Pundit Purdhaun and General Goddard, all miſunderſtanding would have been cleared up and reconciled, and the Engliſh and Pundit Purdhaun would have become one mind and one ſoul, and would have ruined Hyder Naig and conquered his country: but this did not take place, and the General and Scindia prepared for war, and Pundit Purdhaun entered into alliance with Hyder Naig, and gave him a country of 80 lacks of rupees on the other ſide of the Kiſhna, with this view, that he might carry deſolation into the country belonging to the Engliſh. Engagements were entered into, agreeable to which the Nabob Nizam-ul-Dowlah ſettled a plan, and having written to Pundit Purdhaun, forced me into theſe difficulties. Had I not agreed to the plan, it would have cauſed injuries to the Rauje, and great damage to me who am united with the Rauje: it being therefore neceſſary for me to aſſent to the plan propoſed, I was compelled to raiſe 30,000 men, and to ſend them under the command of Rajah Chimnajee Saheb towards Bengal. A year and a half have nearly elapſed, during which theſe troops have brought us under a load of expences, amounting to upwards of 1½ crore, and have remained all the time on our own confines without acting in any manner. My earneſt wiſh is, that at any rate peace and friendſhip may be effected between the Nabob Amaud-ul-Dowlah and Pundit Purdhaun, and that our friendſhip to both parties may remain entire; with this view I have taken all theſe pains, and the Maha Rajah has adopted the name of Amaud-ul-Dowlah, and has continually written, that he is the friend, the friend, the friend, and that he is determined to effect and compaſs his point: but Rajah Chimnajee Saheb is in great diſtreſs for the expences of his army. My wiſh was, that in caſe of peace taking place Pundit Purdhaun would contribute ſomething; that ſome part might be procured from the Nabob Nizam-ul-Dowlah, and another ſhare from the Nabob Amaud-ul-Dowlah, while we ſhould have ſubmitted to bear the remainder; by which means all our difficulties would have been removed. I had great dependance on this; but peace does not take place between the Nabob Amaud-ul-Dowlah and Pundit Purdhaun. How long am I to wait in expectation? Great difficulty is come upon me from the plan which had been ſettled; and Rajah Chimnajee Behader from the ſame plan is fallen under great diſtreſs; ſo that we muſt do whatever appears likely to remove theſe difficulties. I am a ſincere friend, and never omit any duties towards him with whom I enter into friendſhip. From the want of reconciliation between the Nabob Amaud-ul-Dowlah and Pundit Purdhaun, am I fallen into this dilemma. Be convinced that this is true. I have, to preſerve my friendſhip with the Nabob Amaud-ul-Dowlah, been backward in the proſecution of the plan which had been ſettled: I have readily ſubmitted to whatever is come upon me, and ſolely from my deſire to effect a reconciliation between the Nabob and Pundit Purdhaun, have theſe difficulties ariſen; yet, notwithſtanding all this, he is not my friend: I am fallen into the dilemma of that plan, and have no remedy. The Nabob Amaud-ul-Dowlah is juſt, and will reflect on this with juſtice. How long muſt I repeat the ſame thing? What has happened muſt neceſſarily have happened from that plan, and we muſt ſubmit to it. The Maha Rajah is connected by treaties with Pundit Purdhaun, and the family of Booſla is known for their faith and obſervance of engagements; they never did nor will vary a hair's breath from any treaty: many Powers have attempted to injure them, but their government has remained firm and gains daily ſtrength, ſolely from their exalted faith and remarkable fidelity. The Nabob Amaud-ul-Dowlah is wiſe, and will be convinced, that to this time I have never been guilty of any neglect in the duties of my friendſhip, in which it is neceſſary to explain every thing ſincerely and plainly, and to avoid all appearance of diſtinction.

In the Dewan's own hand.

I am convinced and ſenſible of the great zeal and conduct which you have ſhewn in the Maha Rajah's ſervice, and in promoting the friendſhip and alliance of the Engliſh. I have accordingly before written to you in Perſian on that ſubject, and now the Moonſhy will inform you of every thing which the Maha Rajah ſaid reſpecting it. You will repreſent to the Nabob, that his poſſeſſions and thoſe of the Maha Rajah are one, and have no kind of diſtinctions; but there is a treaty and engagement which circumſcribes us, and from which it is neceſſary we ſhould be releaſed. This alone diſtreſſes us, for there is no other cauſe: there is already one crore of rupees due to the army, and it is daily increaſing. The cauſe of all theſe difficulties is the arrival of General Goddard at Hoſhungabad, and our performing the duties of friendſhip and hoſpitality to him, which it is unneceſſary to write or repreſent: by this we are become the mark for every one to point at, and by this affairs are brought into this ſtate. The Nabob Amaud-ul-Dowlah is wiſe, and is thoroughly convinced that we have never been forgetful or negligent. There is no remedy againſt the neceſſity of the times. In future no variation ſhall ever happen in our friendſhip, in which we are firm and ſtedfaſt.

APPENDIX, No. 364.

Letter from Bengal. Secret Department.

To the Honourable the Court of Directors for Affairs of the Honourable United Company of Merchants of England trading to the Eaſt Indies; dated 27th April 1781.

Honourable Sirs,

1. WE had the honour of addreſſing you from this department by the Fox and Walpole, on the 29th November. We have ſince written to you under date the 7th and 13th January by Major Scott, and the 3d February in duplicate by the way of Buſſorah. Duplicates of the letters written by Major Scott, and a triplicate of that addreſſed to you over land, are tranſmitted with theſe diſpatches. We have alſo the honour of forwarding by the Neptune, the annual ſet of our Conſultations in this department for the year 1780, and a broken ſet of our proceedings from the 23d November to the 2d inſtant.

2. We were honoured on the 13th ultimo, with the receipt of letters from the Committee of Secrecy, under date the 9th July 1779, 12th, 29th April, and 17th May, 1780, by the packets of the Nonſuch, Belmont, and Groſvenor; the diſpatches of the latter ſhip being conveyed to us by the Neptune, in conſequence of the reſolution taken at Fort Saint George to detain the Groſvenor at that Preſidency, for the purpoſe of ſending her to Europe in the month of June. We received on the ſame day copies of the letters dated in July 1779 and April 1780, from Bombay; together with your diſpatches tranſmitted over land by Richard Scott, Eſquire, according to the liſt of packet. We have nothing to ſay in anſwer to the letters which we have the honour to acknowledge, and in addition to the information already ſent to you, but that the orders given to us have received, and always will receive, our punctual execution of them.

10. You were adviſed in our letter of the 7th of January, tranſmitted to you by Major Scott, of the motives which had induced us to propoſe a treaty of alliance with the Dutch, whoſe poſſeſſions at and adjacent to Cochin had lately been invaded by Hyder Ally Khan. The treaty was ſent to your Preſident and Select Committee of Fort Saint George, by Mr. Dighton, and it was left with them to obtain the Nabob Walla Jaw's concurrence in it, as well as afterwards to tranſmit to Cochin and Columbo our diſpatches relative to it. A reference to their letter of the 16th of February, will make you acquainted with the reaſons which had operated with your Preſident and Select Committee at Fort Saint George, againſt promoting the ratification of it. The treaty itſelf was founded on the deſperate neceſſity of their affairs, and was one of the great and numerous exertions which we made for their relief. A more proſperous ſtate having ſince ſucceeded, the meaſure has been rendered unneceſſary, and we are well pleaſed therefore that they have thought proper to reject it. The great object of the treaty was a ſupply of European ſtrength. It was of ſo much importance, that we determined to avail ourſelves of other means alſo of obtaining it; and on the 22d of January, we wrote to your Preſident and Select Committee at Fort Marlborough, to deſire that they would ſpare to us the European force at that Preſidency, conſiſting of 400 men. We conſidered them well able to do us this ſervice, as their remaining force conſiſting of Coffrees and Malays, is ſufficient for the defence of Fort Marlborough againſt the enemies of the country, and the ſmall force in Europeans unequal to its defence againſt an attack from an European enemy. Our letter to the Preſident and Select Committee at Fort Marlborough, appears in the Conſultations noted in the margin.

Conſ. 2d April.

Treaty with the Dutch.

11. About the middle of the laſt month arrived in Fort William, Syed Aſſam Cawn Behaudre, Dewan of his Highneſs the Nabob Walla Jaw, accompanied by Mr. Richard Joſeph Sulivan; their arrival was reported to us by the Governor General on the 29th of that month, and a tranſlation of their credentials as Miniſters and Plenipotentiaries extraordinary from his Highneſs the Nabob Walla Jaw was laid before us, together with a paper of requiſitions prepared by the Dewan, who in the name of his maſter requeſted the Board's reply, expreſſing their reſolution on each article as expeditiouſly as poſſible; their object being of the utmoſt importance, not only to the future proſperity of his country, but alſo to the ſafety of the Engliſh poſſeſſions in the Carnatic, and to the relief of his numerous creditors, whoſe claims and neceſſities he repreſented as great and diſtreſſing.

We

Conſ. 13 Mar. We had a few days before received from the Nabob's new conſolidated creditors, a propoſal for the ſatisfaction of the debt owing to them from his Highneſs, and your Select Committee at Fort Saint George had tranſmitted to us with it a copy of their minutes on a ſimilar propoſal made to them.

12. Senſible of the heavy load of difficulties under which the Nabob Wallah Jaw hath laboured for a conſiderable length of time, and anxious that a permanent plan ſhould be adopted for the future regulation of the affairs of the Carnatic, we readily acquieſced in the deſire of Syed Aſſam Cawn, that diſtinct replies ſhould be given by us to each of the ſeveral propoſitions of the Nabob; and we agreed, that the replies, if approved by the Dewan, ſhould ſerve for the baſis of an agreement between this Government and that of the Carnatic. As the agreement includes many particulars which cannot be made ſo clear in an abſtract of them as in the peruſal of the agreement itſelf, we have thought it neceſſary to tranſmit to you a copy of the requeſts of the Nabob Wallah Jah, and of our replies to them, which together form the agreement, numbers in this diſpatch. The agreement having been fairly engroſſed on two diſtinct papers, bearing the ſeal and ſignature of the Nabob Wallah Jaw, and the Dewan Syed Aſſam Cawn Behauder and Mr. Richard Joſeph Sulivan; attending at our Council on the 2d inſtant, it was ſealed and ſigned by them in our preſence, and by us in their preſence, and formally interchanged.

13. We ſhould have previouſly acquainted you, that we were fully ſatisfied with the ſufficiency of the powers with which Syed Aſſam Cawn Behaudre and Mr. Richard Joſeph Sulivan were inveſted on the part of the Nabob Wallah Jaw; and being anxious that ſpeedy and effectual remedies ſhould be applied to the diſordered ſtate of the affairs of the Carnatic, deemed it of eſſential moment that the entire ſanction of the controlling Government of India ſhould be given to the agreement; and the more eſpecially, as in the letters which have been received from the Preſidency of Fort Saint George ſince the commencement of the late troubles in the Carnatic, they have repeatedly declared their total and abſolute inability to obtain from the Carnatic the ſmalleſt ſupply of money for the maintenance of the war, or the ſupport of their current expences.

14. In conſequence of the requeſt of the Nabob Wallah Jaw, the purport of which we duly weighed, being equally convinced of the neceſſity of the appointment of a perſon to reſide with the Nabob as the Repreſentative and Miniſter of this Government, for the maintenance of the agreement actually concluded between us; being alſo firmly of opinion, that without the reſources of the Carnatic, the war in which it is engaged cannot be ſupported but by uncertain and languid ſupplies from Bengal, and eventually involve both in one common ſtate of diſtreſs, if not utter ruin; and having alſo conſidered the recommendation made by his Highneſs the Nabob Conſ. 29 Mar. in favour of Mr. Richard Joſeph Sulivan, together with the reaſons which have been urged as his inducement to it, and deeming theſe as well as the objects of the appointment of too great importance to be ſacrificed to that punctilio which on a leſs urgent occaſion might diſſuade us from employing a ſervant of another Preſidency, although equally a ſervant of the ſame common maſters; we have appointed Mr. Richard Joſeph Sulivan the Repreſentative and Miniſter of this Government at the Court of the Nabob Wallah Jaw, for the purpoſe of maintaining the faith of this Government in the agreement concluded with the ſaid Nabob, and for the repreſentation of ſuch matters as may at any time require his interpoſition in that character and in our name, either with the Nabob, or with the Preſident and Council or Select Committee of Fort Saint George; and our credentials have been granted to him to this effect in the uſual form.

15. The letters which we have written to the Preſident and Select Committee at Fort Saint George, and to Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote, appear on the proceedings noted in the margin, as well as that from the Governor General to the Nabob of the Carnatic. Appendix No. 364. Conſ. 2d April.

16. The line of conduct followed by the Nabob Nizam Ally Cawn ſince we had the honour of addreſſing you laſt, will appear to you in the ſeveral letters which we have received from Mr. John Hollond, and recorded in our proceedings noted in the margin. It has hitherto been in general neutral, and ſo far we are happy to obſerve to you, that our endeavours to preſerve the peace with the Nizam, by promiſing to do him juſtice, have been attended with ſucceſs. It is alſo deſerving of remark, that of four great Powers combined againſt the Company, two only have been yet brought to act againſt them; and that of thoſe two, one is nearly defeated by the ſucceſsful operations of your forces under this Government. The Nizam, availing himſelf of the Company's preſent ſituation, has frequently urged Mr. Hollond for immediate payment of the arrears of the peſchuſh. As our laſt reply to Mr. Hollond on this and other ſubjects is material, we think it neceſſary to tranſmit it to you for your information, a number in this diſpatch. Nizam. Conſ. 15th and 22d January, 8th and 19th February, and 9th March.

17. Mr. Hollond's ill ſtate of health not permitting his continuance at Hydrabad, he has requeſted our permiſſion to reſign his office, of our Reſident at the Nizam's Court: concerned as we are for the cauſe which obliged him to make this requeſt, it was yet of ſo forcible a nature, that we could not refuſe our aſſent to it. We have permitted him therefore to reſign the office which he held at the Court of his Highneſs the Nabob Nizam Ally Cawn, and as an acknowledgment of the ſervices performed by him during his reſidence thereat, as well as a teſtimony of the high eſtimation in which we held his abilities and zeal for the ſervice of the Company, we have deſired his acceptance of a gratuity of ten thouſand rupees, and authorized him to continue drawing his allowances, and the charges of his eſtabliſhment, until his return to Fort Saint George. No one is yet appointed by us to fill the ſtation at Hydrabad, vacated by Mr. Hollond; but the Governor General has written to the Nizam, to be informed of his pleaſure concerning the nomination of another Miniſter to reſide at his Highneſs's Court.

18. We are well pleaſed to acquaint you, that the Preſident and Select Committee at Fort Saint George have thought proper to reſcind the act by which Mr. Hollond was ſuſpended from the ſervice of the Company on that eſtabliſhment, and admitted him to a ſeat in the Council. We had ſome weeks before the receipt of their letter, adviſing us of their reſolution, recommended it ſtrongly to them; but we have the pleaſure to obſerve, that the intended effect of our deſire was anticipated by their own regard to Mr. Hollond's merits.

19. You were informed, in our letter of the 29th November, of the reſolution which we have taken, to detach over land towards Madras, a Company of European artillery, and a body of ſix battalions of native infantry, under the Command of Lieutenant Colonel Pearſe, to aid the operations of our troops on the coaſt. This detachment having been collected near Naraingbur, in Midnapore, marched from the place of rendezvous on the 21ſt January, and croſſed the Soubenzeka on the 9th February.

20. Although the low ſtate of the country through which its route lay, the long continuance of the rains, and the uncommon difficulties which, after the exertions made to furniſh our firſt aids to Fort Saint George, preſented themſelves in the equipment of this force, were ſufficient impediments to an earlier movement of it; we had beſides a political motive for not urging it ſooner in the deſire of waiting for replies from the Government of Berar, to the diſpatches which we had ſent thither in September, with our offers of peace to the Maratta

State; left, by a precipitate march of the detachment into the borders of Cuttac, before time had been allowed to the commanding officer of the Berar troops which lay there; and in its deſtined paſſage, we might expoſe them to mutual hoſtilities, and defeat the ends of our negociation with that Government. But when the expected replies arrived, and contained a total rejection of our propoſals, founded, as we had every reaſon to believe, on an opinion that our affairs were reduced to ſo deſperate a ſtate as might render it too hazardous for them to take a decided part in our favour, and afforded them no hope of ſucceſs in the mediation which had been preſcribed to them; we then deemed it incumbent upon us, equally on the principle of maintaining the credit of our power, and on the ſubſtantial grounds on which the expedition had been originally planned, to order its inſtant commencement. Orders to this effect were accordingly and immediately iſſued: but that we might at the ſame time provide for the unmoleſted march of the detachment through the province of Oriſſa, and mark that attention which was due to the relation in which we had till that time ſtood with the Government of Berar, we choſe to depute a confidential perſon to Rajah Chimnajee Booſla, the Chief of the Berar army, who ſhould notify to him the order which we had given to Colonel Pearſe, to requeſt him, in our name, to cauſe ſuch of his troops as might yet be in the road through which the detachment was to paſs, to remove at ſuch a diſtance from it as might prevent individuals on either ſide from engaging in mutual broils; and if the Rajah ſhould be diſpoſed to take a more decided part in our favour, to ſolicit the aid of a body of cavalry, to accompany Colonel Pearſe, and to act under his command.—Mr. David Anderſon was appointed to this ſervice.

Conſ. 14th Jan.

21. The inſtructions which we gave to Colonel Pearſe were conſonant to thoſe given to Mr. Anderſon; and at the ſame time that they cautioned him in the ſtrongeſt manner to prevent, to the utmoſt of his power, any acts, or the permiſſion of any, on the part of his detachment or its followers, which could lead to hoſtilities with the Government of Cuttac or the Berar army, they directed him, in the event of his progreſs being obſtructed, to make his way againſt all oppoſition. The event has fully anſwered our expectations, as will be ſhewn in the ſequel.

22. Mr. Anderſon miſſing Rajah Chimnajee Booſla, who was engaged in a remote expedition, and the communication being ſtopped, was ordered to return at the ſolicitation of the Maratta Chief. He was a ſecond time deputed to him, and ſoon after returned, bringing with him Rajah Ram Pundit, the Naib of Cuttac; with whom an engagement was formally concluded in the name of his maſter Rajah Chimnajee; by which it was ſtipulated that a body of 2,000 effective horſe ſhould be detached from the army at Cuttac, and placed under the command of Colonel Pearſe; their pay to be iſſued by our Paymaſter, at the rate of one lack of rupees per month; and that a party of the Company's forces ſhould aſſiſt the Government of Berar in aſſerting its pretenſions to the diſtrict of Gurra Mundela, a ſmall territory lying on the banks of the Nerbudda, and under the actual poſſeſſion of the Peiſhwa. Major William Popham, a moſt deſerving officer in your ſervice, whom we have before had the pleaſure to diſtinguiſh to you for his ſpirited and gallant conduct in the capture of the fort of Gwalior, as well as on other occaſions of military duty, has been accordingly ordered on this ſervice with the regiment of native infantry, and the other troops which had been in Gwalior, to garriſon that fortreſs.

Conſ. 29th March.

23. It was at the ſame time reſolved, that a gratuity of 13 lacks of rupees, being the remainder of the ſum of 16 lacks of rupees, propoſed as a contribution for the relief of the forces in the province of Cuttac, in the event of the acquieſcence of the Government of Berar in the propoſals which were tranſmitted in October laſt to them, ſhould be granted and delivered to Rajah Ram Pundit, in the behalf of Chimnajee; for the relief of the army repreſented to be in the greateſt diſtreſs, and as an acknowledgment for the paſt and ſeaſonable inſtances afforded of the friendſhip of that Government. It was alſo reſolved, that a loan of ten lacks, requeſted for the ſame purpoſe, ſhould be granted to Chimnajee, on the part of the Government of Berar, on the ſecurity of Rajah Ram Pundit for payment.

24. As the detail of this negociation contains many particulars which are improper to be entered in the body of our conſultations, we have therefore judged it expedient to form a detached narrative of it, and to tranſmit it in a ſeparate copy to the Secret Committee of your honourable Court.

25. We ſhall briefly obſerve, that we have laboured, and we think with ſucceſs now decided, to detach the moſt powerful member of the Maratta State, and in its relation to Bengal the moſt capable of any in India to do it either ſervice or hurt, from the general confederacy which has been formed againſt us, and have converted it, oſtenſibly at leaſt, into a party to our cauſe. The event will ſhortly prove the truth of our concluſions.

26. During the courſe of this tranſaction, the detachment under the command of Colonel Pearſe proceeded by a quiet and unmoleſted progreſs to Ganjam, where it arrived on the 17th ultimo, accompanied to the borders of that diſtrict by a perſon of rank, deputed by the order of Rajah Chimnajee, and abundantly ſupplied with proviſions and every other aid and accommodation it required. Some of the plunderers of Chimnajee's army made an incurſion on our frontier, which he ſeverely reſented, inſtantly cauſing the offenders to be ſeized and puniſhed in a public and exemplary manner. This is the only inſtance in which our provinces have ſuffered any real injury from the ſuſpicious ſituation of the Berar army during ſo long a time in our neighbourhood. It is now on its return to Naypore.

27. All apprehenſions of an invaſion from the Marattas being removed, we have given orders for the return of the 3d brigade, and of the regiments of Sepoys which were ſent from Barrackpore to join it, to their reſpective ſtations, excepting the artillery, which we have ordered down to the Preſidency.

28. In the interval between the time at which the detachment left Midnapore, and the day of its arrival at Ganjam, nothing ſufficiently material to be noticed happened reſpecting it, excepting a numerous and extraordinary deſertion, which originated in the firſt inſtance with the 20th battalion of Sepoys, formerly commanded by Captain Peter Grant: for the occaſion of this deſertion, and our proceedings in conſequence, we beg leave to refer you to our letter from the Public Department. With reſpect to the cauſes which have operated to the deſertion of thoſe men who did not belong formerly to Captain Grant's battalion, we are at a loſs to account for it on any other principle than the contagion of example.

29. Soon after the arrival of Colonel Pearſe's detachment at Ganjam, an infectious diſorder pervaded the camp, which obliged him to leave Ganjam and march to Itchapore. Our laſt letters from him are from Culwall Delaub, a place about five miles diſtant from Itchapore. The diſorder which we have mentioned prevailed generally, and has had very ſevere conſequences; but the means taken by Colonel Pearſe to put a ſtop to it for the preſent, having been in the latter reſpect nearly effectual, we hope ſoon to hear that the troops have generally recovered; and we are aſſured by Colonel Pearſe, that he will not ſuffer a moment's delay, which can be by any means avoided, in the further proſecution of his march.

30. Our concern on this occaſion is not confined to the effect of the diſaſter in the ſickneſs of a large body of men, or in the diminution which it has occaſioned of Colonel Pearſe's force, though ſuch conſequences are felt by us in the moſt ſenſible manner; but the delay which is thereby neceſſarily and unavoidably occaſioned in the march of the troops, is another ſerious evil which attends it, and cruelly oppoſes the wiſhes and expectations we had formed of their early arrival at Fort Saint George.

31. The diſorder to which we allude has not been confined to the country near Ganjam; it afterwards found its way to this place, and after chiefly affecting the native inhabitants, ſo as to occaſion a great mortality during a period of a fortnight, it is now greatly abated, and purſuing its courſe to the northward. The letters which we have received from Colonel Pearſe, from the time of his leaving the Midnapore diſtrict to that of his arrival at Ganjam, are according to the dates, and appear on the proceedings noted in the margin.

Conf. 12th, 15th, 19th, 26th Feb. 15th and 29th March.

32. When we had the honour of addreſſing you on the 13th of January we congratulated you on the important capture of the fortreſs of Baſſein on the 12th December, by your forces under the command of Brigadier General Goddard; and we tranſmitted to you a copy of the papers of intelligence which adviſed us of it. We had ſoon afterwards the pleaſure of receiving a letter from the General, in which he himſelf communicated to us the pleaſing news of this event. The particulars of the ſiege appear in a letter to the Commander in Chief, recorded on our proceedings of the 26th February. Every preparation had been previouſly concerted and made for a ſucceſsful attack, and a reſpectable force was left in the province of Guzerat to defend it againſt the enemy if they ſhould venture to invade it. After the ſucceſs at Baſſein, General Goddard's operations were directed againſt the fort of Arnall, which ſurrendered at diſcretion to a detachment of his army on the 18th of January. The fort of Arnall is repreſented by General Goddard likely to be a very uſeful poſſeſſion to the Company, as completing the line of conqueſts from Guzerat to Bombay, and as being to be defended by a ſmall body of men againſt any force that can be brought to act againſt it. The whole army marched afterwards towards the gauts, at the foot of which the enemy had continued for ſome time. A letter which we have lately received from General Goddard, under date the 11th February, and which we have the honour to tranſmit to you with its enclоſure a number in the packet, acquaints us, that the enemy is entirely driven out of the Conkan; and that your army under his command were then in poſſeſſion of Bhou Gaut, beyond which the whole of the Maratta forces were encamped on the road to Poonah.

Conf. 22d Jan.

Conf. 26th Dec.

33. With a letter received by us from the Preſident and Select Committee of Fort Saint George, under date the 23d January, and recorded on our proceedings of the 23d of the following month, is tranſmitted to us copy of a letter received by the Nabob Wallaw Jaw from his Vackeel at Poonah; on which the gentlemen at Fort Saint George obſerve, that "they are happy to per-" ceive the Adminiſtration there are inclinable to pacific " terms." A ſuggeſtion of this nature raiſed our curioſity to a knowledge of the terms by which the peaceable intentions of the Poonah Government were to be proved to us; and as we ſincerely wiſhed for a peace with the Marattas, we were in hopes that the terms propoſed would have been ſuch as to admit of our according to them. You will judge then of our ſurpriſe when we found the following to be the conditions recommended: " that we ſhould deliver up to the Marattas the iſlands " of Salſette and Baſſein, the fort of Gualior, the forts in " Guzerat, and all the countries which we had taken from " them in Conkan, &c. and ſurrender to their pleaſure " the perſon of Ragonaut Row."

34. Although we wiſh for peace with the Maratta State, we will not make peace on terms diſhonourable to ourſelves; we will not diſgrace the Engliſh name by ſubmitting to conditions which cannot be complied with without a ſacrifice of the honour and intereſt of the Company; yet ſuch are the conditions preſcribed in the propoſal to which we have alluded. On Hyder's invaſion of the Carnatic, and on the unfortunate intelligence which we received of the defeat of a detachment of your troops near Conjeveram, you have been adviſed, that ſuch terms were agreed to be propoſed to the Maratta State, through the mediation of the Rajah of Berar, as appeared to us very reaſonable, and ſuch as might be honourably yielded to on both ſides; they were ſuch, therefore, as we thought would not be refuſed by the enemy. But the event has been otherwiſe: inſtead of finding them inclined to make peace, the diſtreſs which the Company's affairs have ſuffered in the Carnatic, and their belief of our conſequent inability to ſupport the war againſt them, has raiſed their preſumption, and induced them to inſiſt on terms for the concluſion of it, which the worſt ſtate of your affairs would not warrant us in yielding to. We are morally convinced, that nothing but a vigorous and ſucceſsful proſecution of the war will prevail on them to make a peace, or overcome their preſent diſinclination to it. Peace is our object, and we are determined to purſue the means which appear to us likely to give it an honourable effect, and we will readily accept it when we can.

Appendix, No. 364.

35. The ſeveral letters which we have received from Lieutenant Colonel Camac, whom we appointed to the command of a detachment employed on the weſtern ſide of the Jumna, appear in the proceedings noted in the margin.

Conf. 16th Jan. 8th and 19th Feb. 29th March, and 2d April.

36. The firſt operations of Lieutenant Colonel Camac's detachment were directed againſt Sippree, the capital of a conſiderable territory extending from the Narwar paſs, which it commands, to Niah Sirai. He proceeded to Seronge, where he arrived on the 16th of February.—Here he unfortunately took poſt, and thereby afforded an opportunity to Madajee Scindia, who having aſſembled his forces, met him at this place to ſurround him, and cut off his ſupplies. In this ſituation, and with a proſpect of the greateſt diſtreſs for want of proviſions, Lieutenant Colonel Camac ſent repeated letters, preſſing Colonel Morgan who commanded the troops appointed for the defence of the Vizier's dominions, and Colonel Muir, to afford him inſtant and powerful aſſiſtance.

37. In conſequence of this deſire, and of other letters received by Colonel Morgan reſpecting Lieutenant Colonel Camac's ſituation, he ordered three regiments of Sepoys, two regiments of cavalry, and a company of artillery, under the command of Colonel Muir, to march immediately to the relief of Lieutenant Colonel Camac's detachment. We expect to hear daily of the junction of the two detachments, and as Colonel Muir being a ſenior officer to Lieutenant Colonel Camac, is in conſequence entitled to the command of the collected forces, we have ſent orders to Lieutenant Colonel Camac to deliver up the ſame to him, and to Colonel Muir to receive it. A copy of the inſtructions ſent to Colonel Muir for his guidance, is tranſmitted to you a number in the packet.

Conf. 22d Mar.

Conf. 2d April.

38. It appears by letters under date the 10th and 11th of March, received by the Governor General from Lieutenant Colonel Camac, that the want of proviſions had obliged him to retreat from Seronge into a country where the troops were plentifully ſupplied with proviſions; and we have great pleaſure in acquainting you, that in a ſucceſsful attack made upon Scindia's camps, your troops under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Camac, have poſſeſſed themſelves of the enemy's guns, ſtores, and ammunition. There are 13 guns, 21 camels, 2 elephants, and the flag elephant with the enemy's grand ſtandard.

39. Lieutenant Colonel Camac having urgently and repeatedly repreſented the neceſſity of a body of cavalry to the operations of his detachment, and the nature of the ſervice on which he is employed appearing to us to require it, one of the regiments ſtationed at Futtyghur was ordered to join it.

Conf. 13th Ma

40. The conqueſt of the fortreſs of Gwalior having been been made for the expreſs benefit and behalf of the Rana of Ghode, and ſo eſpecially guaranteed to him by his treaty with the Company, that in the 8th article of it, it is made an exception to any ceſſions which may be hereafter made, whenever peace ſhall be concluded between the Company and the Maratta State, although the time in which it ſhould be put into his poſſeſſion is not preſcribed; the Rana having alſo repeatedly urged his claim to this acquiſition, and having been informed from authority, that the Rana having heard of Colonel Camac's ſituation, when it was moſt diſtreſſed, had reſolved to march to his aſſiſtance in perſon, declaring his intention by this conduct to manifeſt his attachment and fidelity to the Company; we for theſe reaſons, and becauſe we thought it peculiarly neceſſary at a time in which we were endeavouring to form new alliances of the firſt conſequence to our intereſt, to remove every circumſtance that might tend to throw doubts on the Company's fidelity to their public treaties, have reſolved to deliver up Gwalior to the Rana; and accordingly ſent orders to Major Popham to that purpoſe.

Conſ. 2d April.

41. In conſequence of the recommendation of the Commander in Chief, Colonel Morgan was directed on the 12th of February to march with the 2d brigade to Ackbarpoor, diſtant a few coſs from Culpee, in order to ſtrike an awe into the Maratta Chiefs poſſeſſing the diſtrict lying between Culpee and Narwar, and by engaging them at home, prevent them from annoying the rear of Colonel Camac's detachment; ſuch alſo being the ſituation of Ackbarpoor, as to enable Colonel Morgan to advance to Itawah, ſhould Nudjiff Cawn attempt any thing againſt the quiet of the Daub. Colonel Morgan was at the ſame time directed to hold his troops in readineſs to croſs the Jumna, whenever our farther orders ſhould require them to do ſo.

42. The ſtation to which Colonel Morgan had been thus directed to conduct the forces under his command, bringing him into the neighbourhood of Culpee, the preſent weak ſtate of the Maratta Government in that quarter affording alſo ſufficient grounds to us to hope that the war might be ſucceſsfully carried on there, in ſuch mode as might contribute to the relief of the heavy expences which have hitherto attended it, we thought it expedient on the 19th ultimo, to order the immediate detachment of a force from that command, of ſuch a ſtrength as the Commander in Chief ſhould judge adequate to the ſervice, to take poſſeſſion of the fort of Culpee; and a letter which we have lately received from Colonel Morgan, fixes us in the daily expectation of hearing that theſe orders have been carried into execution with ſucceſs. Our inſtructions to Colonel Morgan have alſo been to require the Chiefs of the diſtricts dependant on the Government of Culpee, to ſubmit themſelves and their dominions to the authority of the Company, and to pay to the Company the ſame tribute or revenue as has hitherto been drawn from them by the Maratta Government. We have left it to Colonel Morgan's diſcretion to apply ſuch immediate and temporary meaſures as he ſhall judge neceſſary, for ſecuring the revenue eventually acquired in execution of this plan, and ſhall wait to receive his report thereof, before we tranſmit to him our final inſtructions upon the ſubject.

43. We think it proper to acquaint you, that in conſequence of the many repreſentations of a want of force to aid the collections from the countries in his Excellency's dominions aſſigned to the Company, the native Sibandy eſtabliſhment being unequal to this purpoſe; and in conſequence of orders, that all the ſcattered detachments of your troops near the frontier ſhould join their reſpective ſtations, we recommended it to the Vizier to re-eſtabliſh the corps lately commanded by Mr. Osborne; and as Captain Clarke, a deſerving officer in your ſervice, was in every reſpect qualified to fill the command, it was recommended to the Nabob to appoint him to it.

44. Some delays ariſing, which were likely to prevent Mr. Auriol, from commencing his negociations with the Portugueſe Government for ſome months, and the ſtate of his health being ſuch as to make it doubtful whether it would be adviſable for him to proceed to the Malabar coaſt or not, we have in a great meaſure left the proſecution of his commiſſion to his option. If the ſtate of his health ſhould oblige him to proceed to the other ſide of India, and he ſhould receive no orders from us in the mean time to deſiſt from the proſecution of the commiſſion, it is continued; but if his health ſhould be ſo far reſtored as to permit him to return, we have authorized his return.

45. Mr. Crommelin, a man in years, and of very reſpectable character, who formerly filled a high ſtation in the ſervice of the Company, is appointed to ſucceed to the office of our Miniſter at Goa, when it is relinquiſhed by Mr. Auriol.

46. Mr. Francis Fowke having been recalled from his Reſidency at Benares, and appointed agent for the proviſion of boats to the army after the expiration of the preſent contract, we have appointed Mr. William Markham to that Reſidency.

Conſ. 26th Jan.

47. We beg leave to refer you to Mr. Middleton's letters, recorded on the conſultation noted in the margin, for a particular account of the ſituation of his Excellency the Vizier, and of the proviſion which he has been enabled to make for the Company's demand on him. His great diſtreſs would not permit him to make complete payment of the Company's claim on him for the laſt year, and that diſtreſs not only continuing but increaſing, we have been obliged to be content with the following ſettlement made with his Excellency for the preſent year:

In aſſignments	-	Rupees 98,95,345
Bonds	-	- 43,18,613
		142,13,958

We think it neceſſary only to obſerve to you further on this ſubject, that the amount of the aſſignments by Mr. Middleton's calculation, exceeds the neceſſary claim upon the Company for the ſervices of the current year by above ſix lacks.

48. The Nabob Vizier having repeatedly and urgently repreſented to the Governor General the injuries which his authority and revenues have endured, from the abuſes of the agents acting under the commanding officers at the fixed ſtations, in the management of the camp Buzars, we thought it proper to publiſh to the army ſerving in his dominions, the general order which appears on our records of the 15th February, for the prevention of ſimilar cauſes of complaint in future: but as this regulation in redreſſing the injury done to the Nabob might deprive the commanding officers of a long eſtabliſhed, and under juſt reſtrictions, perhaps a juſt, perquiſite in the duties collected upon the proviſions and neceſſaries voluntarily brought into their camp, the Nabob has been requeſted to grant ſuch a gratuity, in lieu of the emoluments taken from the commanding officers, as he and our Collector Mr. Nathaniel Middleton may mutually agree upon as equitable, the ſame being previouſly ſubmitted to us for our approval.

49. It appearing from letters which his Excellency the Vizier has written to the Governor General, that the Nabob Fyzulla Khan has evaded the performance of his part of the treaty between the late Nabob Shujah-ul-Dowla and him, to which the Honourable Company were guarantee, and upon which he was lately ſummoned to furniſh the ſtipulated number of troops, which he is obliged to furniſh, as the conditions on which he holds the Jaghire granted to him, it has been recommended to the Nabob Vizier to ſend a deputation to him, accompanied by an agent from Mr. Middleton, in behalf of this Government as guarantees, and that in preſence of proper witneſſes they do unitedly, upon the following clauſe,

"That

" That he will conſider the Vizier's friends as his " friends, and all his enemies as his own; that with " whomſoever the Vizier ſhall declare war, Fyzulla Khan " ſhall join with his army two or three thouſand men, " to the utmoſt of his ability; and that if the Vizier " marches againſt any enemy in perſon, he ſhall then " bring his whole army to join him; and if he is unable " to join him, becauſe the number of 5,000 men, to " which his ſtanding army is limited, are too few; in ſuch " caſe he ſhall have leave to raiſe four thouſand more, " that he may then join him with a ſufficient force, and " theſe expences ſhall be defrayed," demand immediate delivery of 3,000 cavalry. If the Nabob Fyzullah Khan ſhall evade or refuſe compliance, the deputies are to deliver to him a formal proteſt againſt him for breach of treaty, and return, making their report to the Vizier, which Mr. Middleton is to tranſmit to us.

50. In the caſe of compliance of Fyzullah Khan, by the delivery of the horſe required, Mr. Middleton has been directed to eſtabliſh ſome mode of ſecuring a fund for the regular payment of them, that they may not from want of pay become troubleſome inſtead of uſeful, or the Company run the riſk of being involved by the neceſſity of making advances to them.

APPENDIX, No. 365.

Letter from Bengal (Secret Department)

To the Honourable the Committee of Secrecy of the Honourable Court of Directors for Affairs of the Honourable United Company of Merchants of England trading to the Eaſt Indies, dated 30th April, 1781.

Honourable Sirs,

1. IN our general letter to the Honourable Court of Directors, bearing date the 27th inſtant, we have acquainted them with our intention of tranſmitting to you in a ſeparate addreſs, an account or narrative of our proceedings, with reſpect to the Berar Government and the army of the Berar Rajah, ſtationed for a long time in the province of Oriſſa, which contained matter of too ſecret a nature to appear on the face of our records, and we have now the honour of communicating the ſame to you.

2. To render the ſubject of the narrative clear and intelligible, it will be neceſſary to revert to ſome circumſtances which happened a few months ago, and to unfold the diſpoſitions and views of ſome of the principal Powers of Hindoſtan.

3. In the month of September 1780, advices were received here from the Governor and Council of Madras, of the melancholy fate of Colonel Baillie's detachment, the retreat of the army under General Munro, and the deſperate ſtate of our affairs on the coaſt of Coromandel: it was immediately reſolved that the moſt vigorous meaſures ſhould be taken to aſſiſt the Preſidency of Madras with men and money from Bengal. Accordingly, tranſports were fitted out with all expedition, and General Sir Eyre Coote was ſent round by ſea with a ſupply of 15 lacks of rupees, and a ſtrong detachment of European infantry and artillery, the flower of our army; and it was agreed, that a further reinforcement of five thouſand Sepoys ſhould be aſſembled at Midnapore, and ſent afterwards by land under the command of Colonel Pearſe.

At this important period we were engaged in a war with the Maratta Government at Poonah, which had laſted for ſome years; much expence had already been incurred, and notwithſtanding a conſtant train of ſucceſſes which had attended all the operations of our army under the command of General Goddard, we had ſtill no immediate proſpect of terminating the war. Appendix. No. 365.

It was at this time known that Moodajee Bhooſla the Rajah of the Maratta State of Berar, and Nizam Ally Cawn the Soubah of the Decan, had united in a plan of confederacy againſt the Engliſh with Hyder Ally the Nabob of Myſore and the Miniſters of the Peiſhwa's Government at Poonah. Moodajee was to invade Bengal, and the Nizam was to enter the Company's Circars of Chicacole, whilſt Hyder Ally was to paſs the ghauts and lay waſte the Carnatic. The Government of Poonah, preſſed in their own territories, could only contribute to this plan of offenſive war by grants of lands to its allies.

The Rajah of Berar had nevertheleſs on many occaſions given the moſt evincing proofs of his pacific diſpoſition towards the Engliſh, and had even given us early intimation of this confederacy, alleging, that he had been compelled to enter into it from a dread of the reſentment of his aſſociates; and aſſuring us, that whatever appearances he might be conſtrained to aſſume, he would not involve the Berar Government in a decided enmity with the Engliſh. In conformity to this plan of policy, Moodajee had ſent from 30 to 40,000 horſe, under the command of his ſecond ſon Chimnajee Baboo: they received their diſmiſſion on the day of the Duſſerah, on the 11th of Auguſt 1779. The plan of operations preſcribed to them by the confederates, was to march into Behar, which they might have reached in two months; but inſtead of following this plan they took a different road, and by ſtudied delays had only reached Cuttack in the month of May following, being about the time when the periodical rains uſually ſet in in that province, which of courſe ſerved them as a pretext for deferring the proſecution of their profeſſed deſign; and they were at this time ſtill laying at Cuttack.

The Nizam had committed no open hoſtilities againſt us, though there is every reaſon to ſuppoſe (and he has even himſelf avowed it) that he was the projector of the confederacy, and had ſecretly ſupplied the other Powers with money to carry on their operations againſt us.

The advices from Madras proved but too fully the activity and ſpirit with which Hyder had begun to perform his part in this alarming confederacy.

Such was the poſture in which we ſtood with reſpect to the Powers of this country. Our advices regarding our European enemies were uncertain; it was however firmly believed, that an expedition would be attempted by the French, in the courſe of the ſeaſon, againſt ſome of the Company's ſettlements in India, though it was impoſſible to ſee whether it would fall on Bengal, Madras, or Bombay, though the latter was moſt probable.

Under theſe circumſtances it became expedient to contract as much as poſſible the ſphere of our military operations, ſo that without endangering the ſafety of our own poſſeſſions in Bengal, we might be able to act with more force and efficacy in our endeavours to recover the Carnatic, and to revenge the injury which the Engliſh had ſuſtained from Hyder Ally Cawn. The Government at Poonah had long borne an inveterate and avowed enmity againſt Hyder, and though temporary policy had now united them in one cauſe, yet his great and unexpected ſucceſſes might naturally revive their former jealouſy, and alarm the Miniſters of Poonah with apprehenſions for the future ſafety of their own territories: the opportunity therefore ſeemed favourable for propoſing to them terms of reconciliation from this Government, and as Moodajee Booſla had always profeſſed the ſtrongeſt deſire of effecting a pacification betwixt us and the Maratta States, it was thought neceſſary to engage him as a mediator in the intended negociation. With theſe views a treaty was drawn out by us, and ſent to Naugpore, and Moodajee was deſired to get it executed by the Peiſhwa and his Miniſters, and to ſign it himſelf as the guarantee for the punctual obſervance of it on both ſides. Vide Conſ. 2d Oct. 1780.

Whilſt

Appendix. No. 365.

Whilſt this negociation was in ſuſpenſe, it was agreed to poſtpone the march of the detachment deſtined by land for Madras, becauſe its route lay through the territories of Moodajee Booſla, and it muſt neceſſarily paſs by that part of his army which was laying at Cuttack, under the command of Chimnajee; circumſtances which, without having obtained the previous concurrence of Moodajee, might, in the unſettled ſtate of our connection with that prince, not only expoſe the detachment to difficulties and oppoſition in its march, but lead it into operations very different from the intention of its equipment, and draw on us the decided enmity of Moodajee, whoſe power when exerted againſt us would prove an important acquiſition to the ſtrength of Hyder and the Miniſters of Poonah. The great exertions which had already been made by this Government, required alſo ſome time before the neceſſary arrangements could be made for fitting out a new detachment, which was to perform ſo long a march, and be employed in ſervice of ſo much importance.

Vide Appendix No. 1, 2, 3, and 4.

On the 9th January 1781, anſwers were at length received from the Rajah of Berar and his miniſters, which contained however ſo many objections to the propoſed treaty, that little room was left to hope for an immediate accommodation with the Government of Poonah; and beſides the points which came into diſcuſſion, from their immediate connection with the treaty, theſe letters contained a variety of claims and propoſitions aſſerted by Moodajee on his own account, which though they were not wholly new, were recapitulated in a ſtyle that impreſſed us with doubts regarding the ſincerity of Moodajee's former profeſſions and aſſurances.

The ſeaſon for action was now far advanced, Colonel Pearſe's detachment was almoſt ready, and the ſtate of our affairs on the coaſt would not admit of longer delay. It was evident alſo, from the anſwers which had been received from Moodajee, that he conceived that our affairs were reduced to a ſtate more deſperate than they really were. To remove therefore this impreſſion, as well as to afford the moſt ſpeedy aſſiſtance to the Preſidency of Madras, it was reſolved, that the detachment ſhould immediately proceed and make its way through the province of Oriſſa againſt all oppoſition. To reconcile Moodajee however to this meaſure by every mark of attention in our power, and to prevent, if poſſible, a rupture from the meeting of the two armies, it was agreed to depute a gentleman from this Government to Chimnajee Baboo at Cuttack. Mr. Anderſon was ſelected for this ſervice, and the following inſtructions were given to him:

Secret Department.

To Mr. David Anderſon.

Sir,

We hereby appoint you our ſpecial miniſter to Rajah Chimnajee Bhooſla, the commander of the army of the Government of Berar now in the province of Cuttack; and we direct you to proceed thither with all poſſible expedition for the following purpoſes.

Firſt, you will produce to the Rajah your credentials, and deliver to him and to the Dewan Bowanny Punt Appa, the introductory letters which you will receive from the Governor General.

Secondly, you will notify to them in form, that orders have been given to Lieutenant Colonel Pearſe, the commander of the army lately formed at Midnapore, to march into the Carnatic by the way of Cuttack, its only practicable route; apprizing them that this information is given them in conſideration of the ancient friendſhip which has ſubſiſted between our forces in the Carnatic and the Government of Naugpore, and for the prevention of any cauſe which might eventually diſturb it. For this reaſon we have inſtructed you to requeſt them in our name to cauſe ſuch of their troops as may yet be in the road through which our army muſt paſs, to remove at ſuch a diſtance from it as may prevent the individuals on either ſide, and particularly the followers of the camps, whoſe licentiouſneſs is the moſt difficult to be reſtrained, from engaging in mutual broils which might imperceptibly lead to ſerious and alarming conſequences, affecting the union of the two States; and to acquaint them that the ſtricteſt orders have from the ſame motives been iſſued to the commander of the Engliſh army, who is a man of underſtanding and prudence, to obſerve all the duties of friendſhip with the Rajah and his people, and to avoid whatever may tend to create a miſunderſtanding with either. That the force has been ſome time ſince aſſembled and ready to march; but letters having been before ſent to Naugpore, containing the ſubſtance of a treaty propoſed for the guarantee of Rajah Mhoodajee Bhooſla, and the acceptance and ratification of the miniſters of the Peiſhwa, with other ſubjects tending to draw the two Governments of Berar and Bengal into a cloſer and firmer connection of friendſhip and intereſt, the march of the army was therefore withheld till an anſwer ſhould be received from Naugpore: that an anſwer has been received, but not concluſive, many points remaining for adjuſtment which may be the work of time: that we are aſſured of the inflexible determination of the Rajah to maintain the ancient friendſhip of the Bhoſila family with this Government, and to unite with it in one common cauſe, whenever the terms and objects of it can be ſettled to our mutual ſatisfaction; but that we cannot ſuffer the neceſſary plans and meaſures of Government to remain ſuſpended in the expectation of this concluſion, nor our armies to loſe the ſeaſon of action, while thoſe of our enemies are employing it againſt us; and that having acquitted ourſelves of the obligation impoſed upon us by our ſenſe of the relation ſubſiſting between the two Governments, the reſt remains with them, and they muſt be anſwerable for the conſequences if they do not conform to our example. You will be careful to make them underſtand that the orders to Colonel Pearſe are poſitive to proſecute his march, and make his way againſt all oppoſition.

Thirdly, if you find the Rajah and his Dewan diſpoſed to take a more decided part in our favour, of which indeed we have no expectation, we deſire that you will ſolicit the aid of 2,000 effective and choſen horſe, or any leſs number which they may be willing to contribute, to accompany Colonel Pearſe, and to act under his command, and receive their pay from the Company through their Pay Maſter; the mode and rate of which we empower you to ſettle by written ſtipulation.

Fourthly, we expect that this application will draw from them other demands; but theſe we direct you to tranſmit to us, and wait our anſwers to them, not judging it either neceſſary or expedient to give you more poſitive orders upon other points.

It is our order that you correſpond with Lieutenant Colonel Pearſe, tranſmitting to him ſpeedy and regular information of all matters proper for his knowledge.

Fort William, the 14th January, 1781. We are, &c.

Mr. Anderſon having received theſe inſtructions, proceeded on his journey towards Cuttack; on his arrival at Ballaſore, he found that Chimnajee had marched with his army againſt the fort of Dhekanall, which is ſituated amongſt the hills, and that it would be impoſſible at that time to penetrate through the paſſes which were in the poſſeſſion of the mountaineers. Mr. Anderſon communicated this difficulty to the Governor General in the following letters.

To the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Eſquire.

Honourable Sir,

I arrived here this morning. The Maratta army is I find engaged in the ſiege of Dhekanall, which lays amongſt the hills, a conſiderable diſtance to the weſtward of the Cuttack road. The communication is I am told almoſt entirely ſtopped, as there is a thick jungle of near 17 coſs in length betwixt the road and Dhekanall, which is ſo much

infeſted

infeſted by the people of the rebellious Rajah's, that ſome days ago a conſiderable body of horſe which attempted to penetrate to the army with ſome ſupplies from Cuttack, were obliged to return.

I foreſee therefore a great difficulty in reaching Chimnajee's camp in time to carry on any negociation, before the arrival of Colonel Pearſe's detachment; and what will I fear conſiderably augment it, is the abſence of the Phouſdar of this place, for whom I brought a letter from Beneram Pundit. I have delivered the letter to his Naib, but having no previous notice, he ſeems undetermined how to act until he ſhall receive directions from the Subahdar at Cuttack. This would require a delay of 4 or 5 days, but you may be aſſured I ſhall endeavour to find means of proceeding ſooner.

Whilſt I regret extremely this delay, it is with ſome pleaſure that I remark that the ſame circumſtance which is the cauſe of it, renders the object of my deputation leſs important than it would have been, had the army of the Marattas been unemployed and on the high road to Cuttack.

If I can get the Naib Phouſdar's permiſſion, and a few of his ſervants for my protection, (which I find from experience is abſolutely neceſſary) I ſhall ſet out to-morrow for Cuttack, and there wait until I can hear from Chimnajee, or until I can get an eſcort to conduct me through the hills.

I have the honour to be,
With much reſpect, &c.
Ballaſore, Honourable Sir,
22d January 1781. Your, &c.

Honourable Sir,

I had the honour to write you yeſterday. I have now determined to ſet out for Cuttack to-morrow morning at all events. The Naib Phouſdar has promiſed to ſend two or three of his Sepoys along with me, which will I hope prevent any delay from my being ſtopped by the Chowkeydars on the road. Biſſumber Pundit is I find with Rajah Ram Pundit at Cuttack. I ſhall conſult with him about my future operations, and if the road to Chimnajee's camp is impracticable, I ſhall wait at Cuttack until I ſhall receive your orders, or until I can find means to convey a letter and receive an anſwer from Chimnajee. I do not underſtand that there are many troops in this part of the country, they are moſtly gone with Chimnajee into the Dhekanall country. The few that are left are I believe under the command of Rajah Ram Pundit, who is a man of high rank, and much reſpected among the Marattas. I think it is probable that the chief object of my deputation may be anſwered by an interview with him. I mean the declaration which you have enjoined me to make with reſpect to the march of Colonel Pearſe. But if you ſhould think it at all events neceſſary that I ſhould find means of waiting on Chimnajee, to purſue the remaining objects of my commiſſion, viz. to perſuade him to take an active part and join us, or to enter into ſome engagement to remain paſſive, it will be neceſſary to ſend me more particular inſtructions, becauſe theſe propoſitions will, as you have obſerved, lead to demands on his part that I ſhall be unable to anſwer, until I can write to the Board and receive their orders, which (hemmed in as Chimnajee is at preſent by the rebellious Rajahs) would be very difficult, and if effected, would be attended with ſo much delay as to render my negociations with the Marattas, either regarding a junction or remaining paſſive, of no uſe with reſpect to Colonel Pearſe's detachment. I beg leave to ſubmit theſe circumſtances to your conſideration, and to requeſt your orders; which as far as I can judge at preſent, may reach me before it will be in my power to leave Cuttack.

I have the honour to be,
With the utmoſt reſpect,
Ballaſore, Honourable Sir,
23d January 1781. Your faithful, &c.

The Governor General laid theſe letters before the Board, and as there appeared ſo little probability of Mr. Anderſon's being able to effect an interview with Chimnajee, and that gentleman's preſence was wanted at the Preſidency for the duties of a very important ſtation, to which we had lately appointed him, we agreed to direct him to return to the Preſidency, and to leave the ſubject of his commiſſion with Rajah Ram Pundit, the Naib of Cuttack. The following letter was accordingly written to him by the Secretary. Appendix, No. 365.

Mr. David Anderſon.

Sir,

I am directed to convey to you the orders of the Honourable Governor General and Council, that you immediately return to the Preſidency, delivering the ſubject of your commiſſion to Rajah Ram Pundit, the Naib of Cuttack, to be by him communicated to Chimnajee Baboo.

I am Sir,
Your moſt obedient humble ſervant,
(Signed) E. Hay,
Fort William, Act^g Sec^y.
Council Chamber,
the 29th January 1781.

Mr. Anderſon in the mean time proceeded on to Cuttack, and during his ſtay there wrote the following letters to the Board.

To the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Eſquire, Governor General, &c. Council, Fort William.

Honourable Sir, and Sirs,

On my arrival here three days ago, I was informed that Rajah Chimnajee was encamped with his whole army amongſt the hills, about 24 coſs from this place; that the mountaineers were in general up in arms againſt the Maratta Government; that they had for ſome time entirely cut off the communication betwixt this place and the Rajah's camp, but that it was then again in ſome meaſure opened by the reduction of the Rajah of Dheekanall, who had been one of the principal and moſt active leaders in the rebellion. I immediately diſpatched letters to Rajah Chimnajee, and his Dewan Bowanny Pundit, informing them of my deputation from you, and of my arrival here, and requeſting to know if it would be agreeable to them that I ſhould wait on them in camp. It is with concern I am obliged to acquaint you that the Hircarrahs who carried the letters have now returned, and inform me that it is utterly impoſſible to paſs through the hills; even conſiderable bodies of horſe who have attempted to join the main army being obliged to return. This information is confirmed by the voice of all thoſe with whom I have had an opportunity of converſing.

As there has been no intercourſe whatever betwixt this place and the camp for ſome days, it is impoſſible to ſay where the army is at preſent. All the inhabitants here conclude from a variety of circumſtances that it is in motion. But different opinions and reports prevail regarding its deſtination; ſome allege that it was Chimnajee's intention to march againſt the Rajah of Sumbelpore, who had refuſed to ſubmit to the heavy exactions impoſed by the Maratta Government; whilſt others conjecture that he is now actually on his march towards the weſtern paſſes of Bengal. Though this is merely conjecture, yet the well-known diſtreſſes and importunities of Chimnajee's army, and the impoſſibility of finding any further reſources in this exhauſted country, give it an appearance of probability that will not allow me wholly to reject it.

I think it neceſſary to inform you that there are few or no troops at preſent in this part of the country.

I am this evening to have a conference with Manoojee, the Dewan of Rajah Chimnajee's Duſtun, and Hurdy Ram, the Dewan of Cuttack, which will probably determine me regarding the meaſures which are now left for me to purſue.

Cuttack, 31ſt January, 1781. I am, &c.

Honourable Sir, and Sirs,

I had yeſterday evening the honour to receive your Secretary's letter of the 29th ultimo.

Rajah Ram Pundit being at preſent with Chimnajee Baboo, and it appearing the intention of your order that I ſhould communicate the ſubject of my commiſſion to the perſons who for the time being might be conſidered as the repreſentative of the Maratta Government at Cuttack, I this morning waited on Manoojee Pundit and Hurdy Ram, the former of whom as Phurnoveſe, poſſeſſes great weight in the councils of the Berar State, and the latter as Dewan of Cuttack holds the executive authority of this Soubah in the abſence of Rajah Ram Pundit. I had at a former interview opened to them the intention of my deputation, and I this morning entered on the ſubject more fully, explaining it to them nearly in the words of my inſtructions. During the courſe of our converſation, Manoojee and Hurdy Ram at firſt expreſſed ſome apprehenſions from the reſentment which the Peiſhwa and his miniſters would entertain at their maſter's ſuffering Colonel Pearſe's detachment to paſs. They enlarged much on the ſteady attachment ſhewn by Moodajee to the Engliſh, even whilſt all the other nations were at enmity with us; and obſerved that he had ſent his ſon to command the troops, who, notwithſtanding the preſſing inſtances of the Peiſhwa and his miniſters, had thus long avoided an invaſion of our territories, and had even now, under pretence of reducing ſome petty Rajahs, removed his army to a conſiderable diſtance, on purpoſe that our troops might the more eaſily paſs. This was a proof of friendſhip which had not occurred to them at our firſt interview; I was pleaſed however to find it adduced, and readily admitted it; I purſued the favourable diſpoſition which it diſcovered, and I have the pleaſure to inform you, that Manoojee and Hurdy Ram promiſed that orders ſhould be ſent to all the Tanadars and officers on the road, not only to avoid doing any thing which might be productive of diſputes, but to aſſiſt as far as poſſible in ſupplying the detachment with proviſions in their route. The performance of this promiſe muſt however, I am ſenſible, depend on the intentions of the Maratta Government, and the orders which may be received from Chimnajee. At the requeſt of Manoojee and Hurdy Ram, I delivered to them the letters of introduction which I received from the Governor General for Chimnajee, and ſome diſpatches which I had brought from Beneram Pundit to his brother, and they promiſed that they would immediately forward them to camp under a ſtrong eſcort, together with a letter from themſelves to Rajah Chimnajee, informing him of the ſubject of my commiſſion.

I learned from Manoojee and Hurdy Ram, that Chimnajee, with almoſt the whole of his army, was at a place called Khoud, on the boundaries of the Cunjer country, about 35 coſs from hence. It lays, as I am informed, nearly N. W. from Cuttack, and no inference can be drawn regarding Chimnajee's intentions from the ſuppoſed ſituation of the army, as it is ſaid to be almoſt equally convenient for marching to any of the places for which report variouſly deſtines it, to Jumbelpore, to Great Naugpore, or to the weſtern frontiers of Bengal.

In obedience to your orders of the 29th ultimo, I ſhall ſet out to-morrow on my return to Bengal.

5th February 1781. I am, &c.

Mr. Anderſon afterwards left Cuttack and ſet out on his return to the Preſidency: on his arrival at Ballapore he overtook Biſſumber Pundit, a Vackeel whom Chimnajee Baboo had ſent through the hills under a ſtrong eſcort with diſpatches to the Governor General. Mr. Anderſon agreed to travel in company with Biſſumber Pundit to Calcutta; but before he left Balaſore, he heard that Chimnajee with all his army was come down into the open country, which was confirmed by a letter which he received from Chimnajee's miniſter, Bhowanny Pundit; expreſſing a great deſire to ſee him, and requeſting him to return from Balaſore to Chimnajee's camp, which was then in the neighbourhood of Jaagepore: but as the order of the Board, of the 29th January, was poſitive, and Mr. Anderſon knew not on what grounds it was iſſued, he thought he could not take upon himſelf to deviate from it; he excuſed himſelf therefore to Bowanny Pundit in the beſt manner he could, and having written all the circumſtances to the Governor General, he proceeded by ſlow journies towards Calcutta, expecting to receive on the road further orders for his conduct. The Governor General accordingly did write to him three letters, directing him to comply with Bowanny Pundit's deſire; but as they were ſent by one road, and Mr. Anderſon proceeded by another, they did not reach him till after his arrival at Calcutta.

In the mean time Colonel Pearſe's detachment entered the Maratta territories, and Chimnajee Baboo, whoſe army was now within a few miles of the road, not only ſuffered him to paſs without oppoſition, but directed one of his principal officers to attend the Colonel, and ſupply the detachment with whatever they might want. The Colonel's letter afforded daily teſtimony of the care with which the officer executed his inſtructions, and the detachment during the whole of the march through Oriſſa had the moſt plentiful ſupplies of grain and every kind of proviſions.

Repeated diſpatches were about this time received from Chimnajee and his miniſters (vide Appendix, No. 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9) profeſſing their friendly diſpoſition towards the Engliſh, and declaring their reſolution to afford Colonel Pearſe every aſſiſtance during his march through Oriſſa; but all of them complaining at the ſame time of the hardſhips which their friendſhip for the Engliſh had brought upon them, and the difficulty which they found in pacifying their troops, who complained of their want of pay, and loudly called out to be led to plunder. A letter was likewiſe about this time received from Bowanny Pundit, the Moonſhee of Rajah Moodajee Bhooſla, addreſſed to Beneram Pundit, the Berar Vackeel at Calcutta, which throws ſome light on the views and policy of the Court of Berar. Vide Appendix No. 10.

The meſſage which Biſſumber Pundit conveyed from Rajah Chimnagee Baboo contained ſeveral propoſitions of great importance, and as the Rajah had expreſſed ſome chagrin at not ſeeing Mr. Anderſon on his firſt deputation, we agreed to ſend that gentleman back to him. The Governor General alſo ſent Biſſumber Pundit back at the ſame time with anſwers to the Rajah's propoſitions. As it became neceſſary to inform Mr. Anderſon of the propoſitions conveyed by Biſſumber Pundit, and to direct him to ſound the diſpoſitions of the Rajah and his miniſters, regarding ſeveral objects of a ſecret nature, it was thought adviſable to iſſue his inſtructions from the Governor General only, without minuting the particulars of them on the uſual records of the Council. The following is a copy of the letter which being agreed on by the Board was written to him:

N. B. The Committee have upon due conſideration thought it proper to leave out the letter of inſtructions to Mr. Anderſon.

Letter from the Governor General.

Dear Sir, Barraſſet, 1ſt March 1781.

I now ſend you my private inſtructions; they are ſuch as could not properly or prudently be given in public orders, and expoſed as of courſe theſe would be to our official records. Mr. Wheler approves them, and authorizes me to declare his approbation of them. They appear rather longer longer than the matter of mere converſation needs to be; but I ſhould have made them ſtill longer had they been addreſſed to a perſon leſs informed, or leſs capable of drawing the probable concluſions from known or ſuppoſed facts, than you are; for I think much will depend on the temper and inclinations of the young Rajah, and therefore I have been ſo particular in ſtating the points which are moſt likely to influence his mind, and even to preſcribe the manner in which you may moſt ſucceſsfully urge them.

I recommend to you to take minutes of every converſation with him; they will be uſeful not only for reference, but by connecting the ſentiments of the Rajah expreſſed at different times, they will afford you a better clue to his real views and intentions.

Reſpecting the connection of the Government of Berar with Nizam Ally Cawn, I would rather refer you to Biſſumber Pundit, who can give you the fulleſt information concerning it. I will only ſay in a few words, that I conſider them as natural enemies, although they are on terms of outward friendſhip. I can perceive that Moodajee (or rather his Dewan, whoſe dictates the Rajah implicitly follows in all political meaſures) ſtands in ſome awe of Nizam Ally, and I have ſometimes intimated the poſſibility of our being driven to the neceſſity of courting his alliance in the manner in which I have hitherto ſought that of the Governor of Berar, if the latter ſhould continue to procraſtinate. He was the projector of the preſent confederacy, and is ſaid to be at this time detached from it by the report of Hyder's having obtained a grant from the king of his dominions: the report is certainly true.

Do not fail to make my acknowledgments to Chimnajee, for the liberal manner in which he has acted to Colonel Pearſe, of which the Colonel writes his daily teſtimony. He has a claim to a grateful return, and on that footing I would yield him advantages which ſhould be withheld from him for ever, if he employed the means of hoſtility or menace to obtain them.

Rajah Ram Pundit has been very uſeful to us by his influence and counſels: let him know that I know it, and am ſenſible of it. If you ſhall judge it neceſſary to enſure either his or Bowanny Pundit's friendſhip by gifts of money, or to make ſimilar preſents to others, you have my authority to draw on me for any ſums, and to diſtribute them according to your diſcretion.

If any thing that I have ſaid ſhould require further explanation, and ſuch as can only be conveyed effectually by converſation, as I ſhall of courſe return to town for a day, in a day or two hence, let me know, and I will go earlier to ſee you.

I am,
Dear Sir,
Your's affectionately.

Mr. Anderſon having expreſſed ſome doubts regarding the intention of ſome parts of the preceding inſtructions, the Governor General thought it neceſſary to explain them more fully in the following letter.

Dear Sir, Baraſet, 2d March 1781.

To remove every ambiguity in the conſtruction of the paragraph concerning which you have expreſſed your doubts, I deſire you will read it with the following correction:

" You may engage to ſupply them with twelve lacks " of rupees. This is the ſum which I formerly promiſed " my intereſt with this Government to grant them in the " event of the Rajah's (that is, Moodajee's) compliance " with the requiſition made to him in October laſt."

This requiſition was, that he ſhould execute the treaty which was propoſed to him, and order his troops at Cuttack either to return or to join us. The requiſition has not been complied with. I now offer the ſame ſum to Chimna Baboo, with the condition only that he will return, or ſolemnly promiſe not to employ the forces under his command againſt us. I limit the condition to no time, but to the forces which are actually under the command of Chimna Baboo. Theſe muſt never be employed againſt us. Appendix. No. 365.

Here I think it neceſſary to diſtinguiſh between the motive of this bounty, or the condition for which it is granted, and the condition on which it is granted; and I deſire that you will mark the diſtinction in all your diſcourſes upon the ſubject. It is this, I conſider the Government of Berar as a ſufferer by the many inſtances which it has given of its attachment to our's, and therefore entitled to ſome retribution from us. To the world, the appearance of its forces ſo near to our borders, and their profeſſed deſtination againſt our provinces, will be conſtrued an hoſtility. To me who know the compulſion under which this meaſure was undertaken, and the pretexts which have been uſed to elude the purpoſe for which it was profeſſedly formed, to whom both its profeſſed deſtination and the intended evaſion of it were early notified, and the latter verified by the ſlow progreſs of the army, its inactivity, its diſtreſſes, and above all, by its forbearance with an Engliſh army paſſing in their route, and through their own territory; it is an evidence of the pacific diſpoſition of the Government of Berar, and its attachment to ours, equal even to the hoſpitality ſhewn by it to General Goddard's detachment We cannot repay the expence which they have incurred by ſo long an employment of ſo large a body of cavalry in inaction, and in a remote and deſtitute country; but I deem it incumbent upon our Government to relieve its preſent wants, and to afford it the means of a retreat. It is a debt of honour, juſtice, and even policy, for I doubt whether the Rajah could return with them, unleſs he could either diſcharge a part of their arrears, or lead them to plunder. It is therefore as a compenſation for loſſes ſuſtained on our account, as an acknowledgment and return for paſt kindneſs, not the purchaſe of future forbearance, that we conſent to grant them the aid which you are inſtructed to tender to them. At the ſame time we have thought it proper to give it with the obvious precaution, that it be not employed to our own hurt, nor the right forfeited on which it was granted by future hoſtilities.

You muſt not exceed the ſum of two lacks in private diſtributions; even that you will doubtleſs conſider an exceſs, unleſs ſome very ſubſtantial benefit can be purchaſed by it.

I am, Dear Sir,
Your's affectionately.

P. S. I am not yet ſatisfied with the preceding explanations; complete as they may appear, they want their direct and poſitive application, which I now add.—If Chimnajee in his acceptance of the ſum proffered to him ſhall inſiſt on any reſervation of the right to employ his forces againſt us in the next ſeaſon, or at any period before their return to Naugpore, you muſt declare to him, that his claim to this ſupply will become forfeit by ſuch a reſervation, and that it will put it out of our power to grant it; in a word, that we will not grant it.

With theſe inſtructions Mr. Anderſon proceeded to the Maratta camp, where he held ſeveral long conferences with the Rajah and his miniſters. The ſubject of theſe conferences will beſt appear from the following papers which were ſent by Mr. Anderſon to the Governor General. They were originally intended by that gentleman to have been conſidered only as private information, previous to his finding leiſure to deliver in a regular report of his proceedings to the Board; but as theſe papers were written almoſt at the moment in which the ſeveral conferences related in them actually paſſed, they will afford the beſt inſight into the views of the parties, and probably be more acceptable than a relation more leiſurely and methodically digeſted.

Honourable Sir, Camp 13th March, 1781.

On my arrival yeſterday evening, I was received in camp with every mark of attention and reſpect. I was introduced introduced to the Rajah, and all his principal officers aſſembled. I delivered to him and his Dewan Bowanny Pundit the letters which I received from you. I took occaſion at this interview to inform the Rajah that you had ſent him ſome preſents of ſilks, which together with all my own baggage had been left at Beercool, the coolies who carried them having run away terrified at the reports of the depredations committed by a body of Maratta horſe, which had entered the province of Jellaſore. The Rajah aſſured me that theſe outrages on our territories were committed in oppoſition to his orders, and that the moment he had heard of them, he had ſent to recall the plundering party, and to puniſh the perſons who compoſed it. I deemed it neceſſary to obtain this aſſurance before I entered on the ſubject of my commiſſion.

This morning I again waited on the Rajah by appointment, and had a very long conference with him, or rather with the Dewan Bowanny Pundit in his preſence. Having produced my credentials, I explained the profeſſed object of my former and of my preſent deputation. Our converſation afterwards turned on the propoſitions which had been made to you through Biſſumber Pundit. I was called on for the anſwers, as Biſſumber Pundit had referred them to me, and had affected an ignorance of your ſentiments, even on thoſe points which you have replied to in the cleareſt terms. The Dewan in diſcuſſing the preliminary article of theſe propoſitions, endeavoured to involve under it the nature of our ſituation with reſpect to the Peiſhwa, and it was with ſome difficulty that I could confine the queſtion to the point of view in which you had conſidered it, and which at the time of ſtating it was certainly the point of view in which it was intended you ſhould conſider it, being an appeal from the Rajah to your juſtice. I went through all the arguments which you have ſo fully laid down in my inſtructions; and as the Dewan ſeemed inclined to combat every one of them, the converſation was carried on to a great length. The Dewan at laſt in ſome meaſure concurred in the propriety of the advice which you had given to the Rajah, but he reſted every thing on your compliance with his expectations reſpecting the firſt article of the propoſitions, namely, the expence of the troops. I then proceeded to inform the Rajah of the offer which you had empowered me to make him, of the motives which induced you to grant him that ſupply, and of the promiſe which you had directed me to exact from him. The Rajah, his Dewan, Rajah Ram Pundit, one or two of the miniſters who were preſent, and even Biſſumber Pundit, affected much ſurpriſe at the ſmallneſs of the ſum: they obſerved, that near two crores of rupees had been expended on account of their attachment to the Engliſh; they expatiated on their preſent diſtreſſes, and remarked that the ſum which you had tendered was ſcarcely adequate to diſcharge the arrears of a ſingle Jemaautder, and inſinuated the conſequences to which they might be driven by hunger, diſappointment, and deſpair. I acknowledged in the fulleſt degree the ſenſe you entertained of their attachment, and admitted the reality of their diſtreſſes: I requeſted, however, that they would conſider alſo the ſituation of our Government; that we were engaged in wars with ſeveral powerful States; that although we had indeed latterly been ſucceſsful, yet that theſe ſucceſſes had been obtained at a vaſt expence of treaſure, and that much more might ſtill be neceſſary; that as theſe troops had not come thus far at our requeſt, nor ever been employed in our ſervice, it was not to be expected that we could defray the whole of their expence; all that could be looked for was, that we ſhould aſſiſt in relieving them from their preſent diſtreſſes, of which their attachment to our Government had partly been the occaſion; and this I aſſured them you had attended to in as full a degree as our own ſituation could poſſibly admit: in ſhort, much argument paſſed on the ſubject, and as the Dewan ſeemed to reject the offer with a kind of ſlight, which I deemed inconſiſtent with the connection which has ſubſiſted betwixt the two Governments of Berar and Bengal, I thought it my duty to turn to the Rajah and aſk, whether this was a poſitive and final anſwer, or whether it would be agreeable to him before he gave me my diſmiſſion, to take ſome days to weigh all that I had ſaid in his own mind, and then give me an anſwer?

I proceeded to communicate your anſwers regarding the remaining three propoſitions. I was permitted to go through thoſe which relate to Ragonaut Row, and the paſſage of the troops through Goyah, without being interrupted or receiving a reply. When I came to the laſt article, and when I queſtioned whether the Rajah was authorized to treat upon it, the Dewan informed me that he was; and on my telling him, that I ſhould in that caſe hear and tranſmit to you whatever he had to ſay, he replied, that too much delay had taken place on that ſubject already: he ran through the whole ſtory of the manner in which the chout had been acquired; ſaid that the exaction of it had been ſuſpended on account of the troubles which had happened in the Berar State, but that the right ſtill remained, and that the troops who had acquired it were ſtill the ſame. I ſatisfied myſelf with replying, that the troops of Aliverdy Cawn and thoſe of the Engliſh were different; and we ſoon afterwards imperceptibly paſſed from this article without my having an opportunity of fully ſounding their diſpoſition in the manner which you have enjoined. The article of the expences ſeemed to engroſs the whole of their thoughts. They ſaid they were willing to engage hereafter in any of our views, particularly to unite with us againſt Hyder Ally, if he had actually ſolicited ſunnuds for the Deckan; but the arrears of their troops muſt firſt be paid, without which it was impoſſible for them to do any thing: that it was with the utmoſt difficulty they could now prevent them from mutinying, by buoying up their hopes with promiſes of relief from Bengal; and that if a mutiny ſhould happen, it might prove very fatal to the Rajah and them all; that their diſtreſſes and apprehenſions were now ſuch, that if I went away without fulfilling the expectations of the troops, the Rajah muſt go alſo, from neceſſity, and throw himſelf upon you for relief at Calcutta. On the whole, you will not imagine that I had much reaſon to be ſatisfied with the expectations ſhewn by the Dewan in this day's converſation: I am not, however, entirely diſcouraged, as I aſcribe it chiefly to the idea with which Biſſumber Pundit has impreſſed them, of my being poſſeſſed with full powers to ſettle any ſum which I may think fit, and it is natural for them to try every method of raiſing it as high as poſſible. I am endeavouring to remove this idea, and I would fain hope, that when this is effected, the Dewan will change his opinion regarding the offer which you have made to the Rajah. You will obſerve from the manner in which this converſation has been carried on, that I have little to expect from an attention to the particular diſpoſition of the young Rajah: he ſhewed a kind of complacent indifference during the whole time, and it was in vain that I endeavoured to engage him in the diſcuſſion by frequent appeals to him in points where the Dewans and I differed. I am again to viſit him to-morrow evening to deliver your preſents, which I underſtand are arrived at Balaſore: I ſhall then confine our converſation to ſubjects of leſs importance, and endeavour to obtain a more thorough inſight into his temper and character, and to acquire his good-will and favourable opinion. I ſhall be in no haſte to leave his camp whilſt there remains the ſmalleſt hope of my ſtay being productive of any good. Rajah Ram Pundit, who has frequently viſited me ſince my arrival, has particularly implored me to repreſent to you their diſtreſſes, and entreat you to prevent them by a more conſiderable ſupply. It is in vain that I have repeated to him, and indeed to all the reſt who have ſpoken to me, that you have fixed a ſum, and that I was certain that you would on no account exceed it. Under the preſent appearances I have thought it would be to no purpoſe and premature to try the mode which you have authorized of private diſtributions. Notwithſtanding the length of this letter, I have been obliged to omit many things which I could wiſh to have mentioned. I muſt make an apology for the haſty and inaccurate manner in which I have written, and requeſt that you will conſider it as a private letter addreſſed to yourſelf only. I am, &c.

Poſtſcript, 14th in the morning.

Biſſumber Pundit has juſt now been with me with a meſſage from the Rajah. He has ſhewn me your letter to him, to evince that I have a diſcretional power to increaſe the ſum tendered as I may think fit. I have explained to him, that although you have referred the Rajah to me, yet you have communicated to me your utmoſt intentions, and I muſt abide by them. He deſired, in the Rajah's name, to know whether he ſhould march forwards to day, and whether he ſhould give me my diſmiſſion? I have told him that I wiſhed him to weigh well the views which I have ſuggeſted yeſterday, and to act accordingly; that it is not my deſire to leave him ſo ſoon; that on the contrary it is my wiſh to ſtay ſome time with him, that I may obtain a knowledge of all his ſentiments and wiſhes, ſo that on my return I may be enabled to explain them to you; but that on both of the above points it muſt reſt with him to determine; that I could not give him any expectations whatever of a larger ſum. I do not imagine he will give me my diſmiſſion, though poſſibly he may make a ſhow of marching. I am to viſit Bowanny Pundit this morning.

On a further conſideration of my inſtructions, ſome doubts ariſe in my mind, which as they may ſtill have their application, I beg leave to ſtate in ſhort queſtions.

1ſt. Shall the Rajah's promiſe to return, or not employ his troops againſt us, be in writing, or will a verbal promiſe be enough?

2d. Shall it either in writing or verbally be required to be on oath?

3d. Shall the word never be poſitively expreſſed, or will it be enough if the general tenor of the Rajah's diſcourſe ſhews no inclination ever to employ his troops againſt us; and in his formal promiſe will the word not inſtead of never be in ſuch caſe ſufficient?

If you think any of theſe points of conſequence, I beg you will be pleaſed to ſend me anſwers to them, as they are not particularly expreſſed in my inſtructions; and I wiſh to adhere cloſely to your inclinations in every thing.

Minutes of ſeveral Conferences on the 14th and 15th March.

14th. I received ſeveral curſory viſits in the courſe of the day from Biſſumber Pundit and Rajah Ram Pundit; but as little paſſed excepting expreſſions of the apprehenſions which they entertained of the conſequences which would accrue to both parties, from our not being able to come to an agreement on the preſent occaſion, I forbear to minute at full length the particulars of our converſation.

In the evening I went with them to pay a viſit to the Dewan. The converſation was begun by his aſking me if I had conſidered the particulars of yeſterday's conference, and what advice I had to offer? I replied that my advice, in conformity to that of the Governor, was for them to accept of the ſum, which in regard to their attachment had been proffered for the relief of their preſent diſtreſſes; and either reſolve to join us when circumſtances would admit, in carrying on the war againſt Hyder, or in proſecuting the object which I had pointed out to them, of acquiring the Rauje of the Maratta State for the Bhooſla family. The Dewan replied, that ſupplies were neceſſary. To this I anſwered, that when they ſhould reſolve to join in the former object, the terms of our union would neceſſarily be ſettled; but that if they ſhould embrace the latter propoſal, the object would be more for their benefit than for our's, and that I imagined it could be effected without their incurring much expence; that our troops alone had already reduced the Government of Poonah to the greateſt extremity, but that when joined with theirs, or ſupported with the ſanction of their name, they could not fail of ſucceſs; that the Rauje was now vacant, inſomuch that even the name of it was ſcarcely preſerved: that (as they themſelves muſt be ſenſible) it was their known hereditary right; that there was probably no Power would be inclined, and none I was certain would be capable to oppoſe their pretenſions; and that on the whole therefore I thought the acquiſition would be eaſy and infallible. The Dewan replied, that their engaging in this object was a matter which muſt depend on the councils at Naugpore; that this therefore would require ſome delay, and that in the mean time what were they to do to relieve the diſtreſſes of their troops which had come thus far, and which had for ſixteen months depended on their expectations from our Government. I replied, that for this purpoſe the ſum was now tendered them. He anſwered that the ſum tendered was ſcarcely a mouthful; that the Rajah had remarked to him, that the Governor had ſtyled him in his letters yeazaz-az-jiam, dearer than life; was this a proof of it? Was this all that he would do for one that was ſo dear to him? It would appear that he regarded money as more dear. I informed him, that I had not had an opportunity of knowing the ſubject of all the conferences which had paſſed betwixt the Governor and Beneram Pundit and Biſſumber Pundit, or of all the letters which had been written to and from Naugpore; but that I never had underſtood that any more than what now proffered had ever been required or promiſed: that I had ſeen one letter from Dewagur Pundit, which, though it mentioned high expectations in caſe of a junction againſt Hyder Ally, yet it implied no higher expectations for the relief of the troops ſent to Cuttack. I aſked him, if any higher promiſe had ever been made? He acknowledged, that no expreſs promiſe had ever been made of a larger ſum, but that the Governor had always promiſed his friendſhip, and in promiſing that had given them reaſon to expect a ſupply adequate to their neceſſity. Rajah Ram Pundit obſerved, that the letter to which I alluded from Dewagur Pundit, related to a particular occaſion, when the ſupply wanted was only for one or two months.—I think it here neceſſary to remark, that Rajah Ram Pundit yeſterday obſerved, at the conference held in preſence of the Rajah, that the ſum now tendered was only equal to what was in agitation at the end of the rains, when the treaty was firſt offered to the Poonah Government, and that eight months expences had ſince been incurred. I then replied, that the ſubſequent delay could not be aſcribed to us but to their own Government, which had returned the treaty with propoſitions which could not eaſily be acceded to.—To return to the conference of to-day: The Dewan aſked, what mighty matter it would have been if the Governor, conſidering their hereditary claims on Bengal, and from a regard to his friendſhip to Chimnajee, as well as to prevent the conſequences which may ariſe to our own territories, from their diſtreſs and deſpair, had made each of the Zemindars contribute to raiſe a ſum to relieve Chimnajee, and enable him to return to Naugpore? He laid ſo much ſtreſs upon this method of raiſing a ſupply, that I thought it neceſſary to inform him, that money paid by a contribution by our Zemindars, or money paid from our own treaſury, was to us much the ſame thing; or if there was any difference, the latter was preferable.

Biſſumber Pundit having declared to them, that he knew not the extent of the Governor's intentions, that he had only told him he would aſſiſt them with a ſupply in proportion to his abilities, and that he had deputed me with full powers for this purpoſe, I thought it neceſſary to repeat to them again and again, that the intention of my deputation was chiefly to afford a public teſtimony of the acknowledgments of our Government for the friendſhip ſhip ſhewn by Chimnajee in regard to Colonel Pearſe's detachment; that the Governor had, however, for my information, communicated to me the anſwers which he had delivered to Biſſumber Pundit to the propoſitions conveyed to him from the Rajah, and had inſtructed me, in conformity to his anſwer regarding the expences, to engage to ſupply the particular ſum which he expreſſed; that it was not in my power to deviate from it; that however, if they choſe, I ſhould certainly write to the Governor, and communicate to him all that had paſſed; but that I could give them no hopes that this would be productive of a larger ſupply. They did not require me to write, but left it to me to do as I pleaſed. We afterwards mutually regretted the interruption which from preſent appearances was likely to take place in the friendſhip which had ſubſiſted betwixt the Engliſh and Berar Government, and which, if preſerved, we agreed might have tended to the mutual benefit of both States. This is almoſt word for word all that paſſed at this interview. I ſtudiouſly avoided argument, becauſe I had obſerved a captiouſneſs in the Dewan which notwithſtanding frequent profeſſions of friendſhip gave our yeſterday's conference more the appearance of diſpute than I thought conſiſtent with calm and friendly diſcuſſion. Nothing however of this nature paſſed at this interview; every thing was ſaid in a cool and deliberate tone, and due attention was paid by each to whatever was ſaid by the other. I afterwards went and paid a viſit to the Rajah, and delivered to him the Governor's preſents, which he accepted with much ſeeming complacency. Nothing paſſed at this interview relating to buſineſs. I endeavoured to engage the Rajah in ordinary topics of converſation; but either owing to a natural ſhyneſs of diſpoſition, or to the diffidence of a young man unaccuſtomed to converſe with ſtrangers, or perhaps to the reſtraint impoſed upon him by his miniſters, he ſhewed little inclination to enter into any diſcourſe. His anſwers were always ſhort, and his queſtions very few; but his ſilence ſhewed no want of affability. Biſſumber Pundit came to me afterwards, and informed me, that Rajah Ram Pundit would ſhortly come to me with a meſſage from the Rajah, to aſk me whether he ſhould march on to-morrow? The effect of his march we both agreed would be the letting looſe all thoſe plundering parties who had hitherto with ſo much difficulty been reſtrained; and Biſſumber Pundit acknowledged that when a fire was once kindled, it was not eaſy afterwards to extinguiſh it. Biſſumber Pundit ſaid, that the Rajah's expectations were about fifty lacks; he has ſince talked of thirty or twenty-five. About ten at night Biſſumber Pundit came again, and informed me that Rajah Ram Pundit was coming to aſk me about the march of the troops: I deſired he would tell Rajah Ram Pundit before-hand, that I had no right to object to the Rajah's marching to any part of his territories; but the manner in which this march was propoſed immediately after our conferences, would to all the world carry the appearance of a threat, as it really was; and that as I was inſtructed to offer a ſupply, from motives of gratitude and not from motives of fear, I ſhould not if the Rajah marched, think myſelf authorized to repeat the offer which I had made to him: that I had now done every thing in a public capacity that lay in my power to prevent a rupture; but that there was indeed one thing of a private nature which I could take upon myſelf to do, and that was to make preſents to the amount of a lack, or one and a half, or thereabouts, to Bowanny Pundit, Rajah Ram Pundit, or any of the Rajah's miniſters, and this he might mention to Rajah Ram Pundit.

The ſame night, about half paſt eleven, Biſſumber and Rajah Ram Pundit came to me: Rajah Ram Pundit ſaid, that Biſſumber Pundit had mentioned to him all that I had told him: he obſerved, that in ſettling farms of pergunnahs, or buſineſs of ſuch a nature, preſents to the mutſuddies employed were uſual and proper; but that this was a matter in which the lives and happineſs of thouſands were eventually concerned, and that in ſuch a negociation ſuch preſents could have no place. I excuſed myſelf to him; I reminded him that the idea had been ſuggeſted by himſelf the evening before, when he had inſinuated to me, that if my object was to obtain any thing for myſelf, the houſe of Booſla could eaſily give it: I repeated to him what I had ſaid to Biſſumber Pundit about the march of the troops, and the impoſſibility of my continuing after it the Governor's offer. He then drew ſo ſtrong a picture of the diſtreſſes that the Engliſh would thus entail on their provinces, that, conſidering it as a kind of menace, I begged he would deſiſt from ſuch diſcourſe; that it was perhaps improper for me to anſwer it, as I was ſent only on the idea of their pacific diſpoſition; but that I would once for all repeat to them that fear for our own territories had no part in the Governor's intention in ſending me; that our troops were in poſſeſſion of all the Gauts, and that we had a body in the field which the whole of the Maratta army could not face; that all that could happen to us (independent of the loſs of diſtant political views) would be the ſpreading terror amongſt the inhabitants of Midnapore, Jellaſore, and perhaps part of Burdwan. Rajah Ram Pundit then told me, that as I could not be brought to alter my offer, a thought had occurred to him, which was, for the army to go on to Ramchundernapore, and for him and Biſſumber Pundit and me to go to the Governor at Calcutta, to ſee and prevail on him to give a larger ſupply, but that I muſt promiſe to uſe my endeavours in perſuading the Governor; and that we ſhould in the mean time leave Mr. Redfearn with the Rajah.

I objected to leave Mr. Redfearn after I ſhould go myſelf; but I ſaid, that I would ſend Mr. Redfearn with them, and ſtay with the Rajah myſelf; that their going however would, I was certain, be to no purpoſe, if the army moved any nearer our provinces after what had paſſed, as the Governor would not afterwards confer on the ſubject: that as to my perſuading the Governor, Biſſumber Pundit could tell him, that the Governor did every thing from himſelf; that his reaſon and judgment were much ſuperior to mine; that it was my duty to regulate mine by his, and not to attempt to influence his; that I could not even promiſe to adviſe; that I wiſhed to preſerve peace, and had a regard for the Rajah, but all that I could engage was to repreſent all that I had ſeen and heard; and concluded with telling him that I could give him no further aſſurances or expectations of better ſucceſs with you.

It was agreed by Rajah Ram Pundit and Biſſumber Pundit to repreſent what had paſſed to the Rajah.

15th. Early in the morning Biſſumber Pundit came to me, and told me that the Rajah had approved of Rajah Ram Pundit's going with Biſſumber Pundit, Mr. Redfearn, and me to the Governor, and that the Rajah had deſired him to apologize to me for any want of affability which he might have ſhewn yeſterday; that I muſt make allowance for his feelings as a ſoldier, hurt at being ſtopped on his march from what I had ſaid in the morning. Rajah Ram Pundit ſaid, that he was hurt at ſomething that paſſed betwixt him and ſome of his Jemautdars.

Received the following letter from the Governor General:

Fort William, 11th March 1781.

Sir

A letter is received from Major M^c Pherſon, which reports, that on the 7th inſtant a large party of Marattas croſſed the Soubenrekah and came ſo near to Fort Knox, that the officer ſtationed there fired upon them; and that they moved off, as he ſuppoſed, in ſearch of plunder. He adds, that Dumdarva with a conſiderable force was expected in the ſame quarter on that evening, or the next morning.

I deſire that you will remonſtrate with Chimnajee Baboo on the impropriety of this conduct, and require his inſtant orders for the retreat of his troops from our neighbourhood, neighbourhood, declaring that we ſhall conſider their paſſing our frontier line, and even their continuance near it, as a decided hoſtility, ſince neither can be attributed to any other deſign. It is alſo my order that you forbear to make the tender to Chimnajee Baboo, directed in my inſtructions; or if you have made it, that you formally retract it, until he ſhall have recalled all his forces, of every denomination, to a man, to the ſouthward of Ballaſore.

Mr. Wheler authorizes me to notify his concurrence in theſe orders, which you will therefore regard as equivalent to thoſe of the Board delivered in the cuſtomary form.

I am, Sir.

Your moſt obedient ſervant.

P. S. A letter ſince received from Mr. Pearſe, confirms the intelligence of Major M^c Pherſon; I herewith ſend you a copy of it, by which you will ſee the conſequences which this indiſcreet act, if it hath not received the authority of the Rajah, is likely to produce.

I viſited afterwards the Rajah, and communicated to him the purport of the Governor's letter, he deſired me to aſſure the Governor that he had already iſſued the orders which the Governor required. I ſhall minute the particulars of this interview hereafter; ſuffice it for the preſent to ſay, that the Rajah diſmiſſed me, pleaſed with the marks of attention which he ſhewed to me, and with the good inclinations which he diſcovered towards our Government.

Honourable Sir,

As I have not leiſure to ſend you a regular detail of my proceedings in the form of an addreſs, I have taken the liberty to ſend you incloſed a copy of the minutes which I have taken, agreeable to your direction, of every thing that has paſſed ſince my laſt letter. They are incorrect, but will perhaps communicate to you a more clear idea of the ſtate of opinions here than I could poſſibly convey to you in a ſtudied and regular addreſs.

It is now ſettled that Rajah Ram Pundit, Biſſumber Pundit, and I and Mr. Redfearn, are immediately to proceed to Calcutta; and that in the mean time the army is not to move from this place. I am ſenſible that Rajah Ram Pundit's viſit, and the repreſentation which he will make to you of the diſtreſſes of his army, will put your feelings as an individual to a ſevere trial: but conſidered in a political light, Rajah Ram Pundit's propoſal of viſiting you ſeemed ſo much to our advantage, that I could not poſſibly object to it. It will transfer the appearance of a ſubmiſſive diſpoſition from us to them. It will prevent an immediate rupture if there was any danger of it; and will ſo long protract negociation, that you will have the power to dictate terms, without regard to any other conſiderations but thoſe of preſent compaſſion or gratitude, and a view to future advantages from an alliance between the two States. This army will then depend almoſt entirely on your mercy, for the ſeaſon will be too far ſpent for them afterwards to be able to do any miſchief: a conſideration which I doubt not muſt have its weight with you, though I have conſtantly and invariably in all my conferences maintained the contrary. It is probable, I think, that Rajah Ram Pundit will be inſtructed to converſe with you on the more important views which I have ſuggeſted, of a junction againſt Hyder, or the acquiſition of the Rauje. Their faith towards the Peiſhwa, or their connection with Hyder, has ſcarcely been mentioned, and I have no doubt but ſomething of importance would be ſtruck out betwixt you and Rajah Ram Pundit, if the preſent emergency could be got over.

I am thoroughly convinced that nothing but diſtreſs will ever induce the Rajah or his miniſters to break with the Engliſh. Whatever has paſſed of a different tendency ſince my arrival here, has proceeded from the miſtaken notion that it might work on me to augment the ſupply that I had proffered. The young Rajah, who received me to-day without reſtraint, has deſired me to implore you to take him and his army under your protection, to conſider them as much your own as General Goddard's detachment; to enable them to return to Naugpore, and to command their ſervices afterwards as you may think fit. We ſhall travel by daily journies to Naraingbur, and from thence I have deſired Mr. Pearce to relay bearers to Oolbareah. I have written to my correſpondent at Calcutta to ſend down a ſufficient number of boats and budgerows to Oolbareah, ſo that there will be no occaſion for you to take any trouble about our journey; but I beg leave to ſuggeſt to you the propriety of ſending down ſome gentlemen of your family to meet Rajah Ram Pundit: this will be a mark of reſpect to which his rank, and ſtill more his attachment to the Engliſh entitles him; and it will be only a return for a ſimilar mark of reſpect which was ſhewn to me. Appendix. No. 365.

Maratta Camp. near Ballaſore, 15th March 1781.

I have the honour to be, With the moſt unfeigned reſpect, Honourable Sir, Your, &c. &c.

P. S. I expect to be at Oolbareah in five days.

The Rajah has expreſſed ſo much anxiety for my ſpeedy return to you, that I have been obliged to receive my diſmiſſion without finding the opportunity I wiſhed for, of ſpeaking to him in private. It would have given much ſuſpicion, if I had deſired that his miniſters and Biſſumber Pundit ſhould withdraw, and he has always been ſurrounded by them.

On receiving the two firſt of theſe letters, the Governor General wrote the following anſwer to Mr. Anderſon:

David Anderſon, Eſq.

Sir, Fort William, 18th March 1781.

I have received your letters of the 10th and 11th.

Inform the Rajah that the offer which you have been authorized to make him, was purely gratuitous, not intended for negociation, but acceptance; and decline any further diſcourſe upon it as improper.

The Rajah's promiſe to return, or not to employ his troops againſt us, may be expreſſed either in writing or verbally; but the requiſition muſt be verbal, and not in writing.

It is indifferent whether the word "not," be uſed, or "never."

I am perfectly ſatisfied with the care which the Rajah has taken to repreſs the licentious ſpirit of his people, and to publiſh his diſapprobation of the late inſtance of it, of which I deſire you will give him an aſſurance.

I am, with eſteem, Sir, Your moſt affectionate friend.

Whilſt Mr. Anderſon was at Ballaſore, letters were received from Dewagur Pundit, the miniſter of Meodajee Bhoſla, repeating the circumſtances of the embarraſſments under which his connection with the Engliſh had drawn him, and ſtrongly urging the neceſſity of our ſupplying the troops under Chimnajee with money.

Mr. Anderſon on his return delivered to the Governor General the following letter: Vide Appendix.

Honourable Sir,

In the minutes which I had the honour to ſend you from Ballaſore, I had only leiſure to mention in a few words my laſt interviews with Rajah Chimnajee; I ſhall now beg leave to mention it more circumſtantially. The Rajah early in the morning ſent me a meſſage, that he wiſhed Mr. Redfearn and I would come and dine in his tent before our departure. We accordingly went, and found the Rajah ſitting with little ceremony amongſt a few of his officers. He received us with a frank and cheerful air; all that cold reſerve, that effected indifference, which I had remarked at our former meetings was now changed into an open and animated behaviour

We

Appendix. No. 365.

We talked of indifferent ſubjects, ſuch as the cuſtoms of Europe and Aſia, with much good humour; and his officers, who had at our former interviews preſerved a formal and reſpectful ſilence, now mixed in our converſation with eaſy familiarity. At length our diſcourſe turned on my departure for Calcutta: the Rajah then changed his mien; his diſtreſſes ruſhed full into his mind, and he deſcribed them with a degree of energy that excited compaſſion; then taking hold of my hand, he in a tone of ſupplication begged, that as I had been an eye-witneſs of his diſtreſſes, I would repreſent them to you in their real colours; that I would put you in mind that they were drawn upon him by his deſire of preſerving a friendſhip with the Engliſh; and that I would, in his name, implore you to take himſelf and his army under your protection; to conſider them as much your own as Colonel Goddard's army; to make as great exertions for their relief, and to enable them only to return to Naugpore, and afterwards command them as you pleaſe. He inſiſted more than once on my promiſing to repreſent all thoſe matters in the ſtrongeſt manner, and earneſtly entreated me to become his advocate with you. I could only repeat to him, that I ſhould faithfully report every thing to you.

When the ſervants informed us that the dinner which the Rajah had ordered to be prepared for Mr. Redfearn and me was ready, we retired to a ſeparate tent: the Rajah however ſoon afterwards followed, and ſtanding at a diſtance, preſſed us to eat, in a manner that ſhewed the ſtrongeſt deſire of pleaſing. I mention this circumſtance, though apparently trivial, becauſe it was a kind of condeſcenſion which to me marked the diſpoſition of the Rajah's mind more ſtrongly than the moſt exaggerated profeſſions.

We afterwards returned to the Rajah's tent, and paſſed more than an hour with him, before he would conſent to give us our diſmiſſion. Bowanny Pundit in the mean time joined us, but he took little part in the converſation, being chiefly employed in dictating to the Monſhee anſwers to the letters which I had brought from you.

Before we received our diſmiſſion, the Rajah inſiſted on our accepting of a horſe, a turban, and a few pieces of cloth; and then having repeated his requeſt that I would join Rajah Ram Pundit, and intercede in his behalf with you, he took leave of us with a degree of warmth and emotion that ſhewed both how much he was deſirous of repreſenting his conduct in a favourable light, and how much he conſidered his future welfare as dependant on your determination.

I have the honour to be
with the greateſt reſpect,
Honourable Sir,
Your moſt faithful and
obedient humble ſervant.

Fort William,
26th March 1781.

Rajah Ram Pundit arrived at Calcutta the 25th March, and the next day waited on the Governor General.

During the firſt two viſits Rajah Ram Pundit drew a ſtrong picture of the diſtreſſes of Chimnajee's army; and to prove how incumbent it was on us to relieve them, he expatiated on the friendſhip which had been ſhewn by the Berar Government towards the Engliſh. He enumerated a variety of inſtances—their conduct towards General Goddard's detachment at Hoſhungabad—their delivering up Monſieur Chevalier, who had taken refuge in their country—their forbearing to invade our territories, notwithſtanding the remonſtrances of all their allies; and laſtly, the aſſiſtance which they had offered to Colonel Pearſe on his march through Oriſſa. He diſcuſſed with great ability the intereſts of the Maratta States, and ſhewed that he was very ſenſible how much it would be for the mutual advantage of the Engliſh and Moodajee Bhoſla to unite cordially in a cloſe alliance. Still however his obſervations were general, and he ſeemed to avoid any clear or particular propoſitions; it was agreed therefore, for the purpoſe of bringing the negociation to a ſpeedy concluſion, the following propoſitions ſhould be ſtated in writing, and communicated to Rajah Ram Pundit by Mr. Anderſon.

"That as a return for the proofs of attachment ſhewn by the Berar Government to the Engliſh, and to relieve the troops from the diſtreſſes which they at preſent ſuffered, and which were in ſome meaſure occaſioned by their amicable inclinations towards this Government, we would give them twelve lacks to complete the ſum which we had formerly promiſed to them.

"That we deſired to know what was afterwards neceſſary to be done to effect the deſired union of the two States. Would Chimnajee reſolve immediately to ſend 3000, or even 1500 of his beſt horſe to join Colonel Pearſe, and act with him againſt Hyder? Would he return with the reſt of his army to Naugpore? and would he promiſe to intereſt himſelf with his father to engage in alliance with us, and to ſend a perſon from Naugpore to ſettle finally the terms of a treaty? That the following might be the grounds of the plan: that we ſhould engage to aſſiſt them with a part of our troops in taking poſſeſſion of the forts of Burhanpore and Aſſur, and the country of Khandeiſh, which had been lately aſſigned by the Peiſhwa as an annexation to the jagheer already poſſeſſed by Madajee Scindia: that if it ſhould be adviſable to purſue further conqueſts, we would aſſiſt on a plan of participation; and that they on their parts ſhould engage to unite with us in effecting the total extirpation of Hyder Ally Cawn: but that if ſuch a plan could not be ſettled, we deſired to know clearly what they would do on their part to merit any further aſſiſtance from us."

The next day Rajah Ram Pundit returned an anſwer to the following purport. "The demands of Chimnajee's army amount to two crores of rupees; in part thereof fifty lacks have already been paid; let the Engliſh pay fifty lacks more, the troops will then have received one half of their pay, with which it will be in Chimnajee's power in ſome meaſure to ſatisfy them; and in this caſe he will ſend 3000 men along with Colonel Pearſe, and will march the reſt to Naugpore. If it is deſired that a more cloſe connection ſhould take place, let a truſty perſon be ſent from hence to Naugpore, and a treaty may there be concerted and ſettled for the eſtabliſhment of a permanent alliance betwixt the Engliſh and the Marattas, and the extirpation of Hyder Naig; or let Mr. Anderſon be ſent immediately with fifty lacks to Chimnajee to ſatisfy the troops, and bring Bowanny Pundit to meet the Governor at the Subenreka, or in either of the Engliſh camps at Dantoon or Narainpur, to ſettle with him a treaty containing the terms of an alliance. If this is approved, the ſum of 50 lacks muſt be ſent immediately, becauſe it will not be in Chimnajee's power to leave the troops until he has ſatisfied them. If the Governor will give ſome aſſurances that theſe propoſitions will be ſhortly taken into conſideration, Rajah Ram Pundit will accept of the twelve lacks, tendered for the preſent as a part of the fifty, and will cauſe the army immediately to march to a greater diſtance from Bengal. But unleſs ſome aſſurances of the kind are given, he muſt decline receiving the twelve lacks; will repay the ſum of three lacks which was formerly ſent to Chimnajee, and deſires to receive his diſmiſſion immediately."

Theſe propoſitions ſeemed ſo highly unreaſonable, that the Governor General immediately ſent Mr. Anderſon to Rajah Ram Pundit with a meſſage; the ſubſtance of which was as follows: "that he would ſend the twelve lacks if Rajah Ram Pundit would accept of that ſum in the name of Chimnajee: that no more would be given: that the Rajah, on the acceptance of this ſum, muſt return to Naugpore, and not ſtay any longer at Cuttack: that if he would ſend 2000 horſe with Colonel Pearſe, their charge ſhould be defrayed by us: that the Governor General muſt decline a meeting with the Rajah, unleſs the grounds on which they are to meet are previouſly ſettled, as he cannot poſſibly think of meeting to treat about money: that Rajah Ram Pundit may ſtay here if he pleaſes; but that he need not ſtay in expectation of more money, as that ſubject muſt now be dropped."

This meſſage being accordingly communicated to Rajah Ram Pundit, he deſired Mr. Anderſon would return to the Governor General with the following anſwer: "He conſents to ſend 2000 horſe with Colonel Pearſe, who may receive the pay which ſhall be agreed on: he accepts the ſupply now offered as a return of kindneſs; but to prevent a mutiny of the troops, requeſts that a loan of a further ſum of 25 lacks may be given, ſo that he may be enabled to quiet them. It does not ſignify, although a delay of 12 or 15 days ſhould take place in procuring the loan; if it is only agreed to by the Governor, he will immediately ſend off the 12 lacks, and cauſe the troops to remove towards Naugpore: he propoſes that the loan ſhould be obtained either in his name, or in that of Syna Behader (Chimnajee) from merchants, and that the Company ſhould be ſecurity. It may afterwards be repaid by means of conqueſts of countries on a plan which may be ſettled. It is requeſted from neceſſity, becauſe Syna Behader has no means of ſatisfying his troops: he deſires that this may be accepted as an apology for his repeating with ſo much importunity the ſubject of money: he begs that the Governor General will take Syna Behader under his protection, and relieve him in his preſent diſtreſs. If this loan is not acceded to, Rajah Ram Pundit wiſhes to be diſmiſſed as ſoon as the Governor General pleaſes; and in that caſe nothing can be ſettled, as the ſum tendered cannot be accepted, and a mutiny muſt be the conſequence amongſt the troops in Oriſſa."

The above propoſitions being laid before the Board, the following reſolution was paſſed: "It is neceſſary to bring this negociation to a concluſion. We cannot comply with either of the propoſitions made by Rajah Ram Pundit; we cannot advance the money required; we cannot give our ſecurity to the loan, becauſe we know it to be inpracticable at the rate of intereſt allowed by our bonds, and to allow a higher rate will deſtroy our own credit; beſides, that ſuch a ſecurity will be conſtrued, and will be in effect, a payment. If the Government of Naugpore is willing to concur with our views for its aggrandiſement, and a connection of intereſts in the manner which has been held out to it, we are ready to aſſiſt them with our forces. We will endeavour to give them the poſſeſſion of Burhanpore and of Aſſur, which will yield a revenue of 80 lacks; and of Gurrah Mundela, of which the amount is unknown, but valuable. If the Government of Naugpore looks only to the acquiſition of ready money, we have it not to give, nor will their friendſhip be an object to us on ſuch a footing. Let this be underſtood to be our final anſwer."

Rajah Ram Pundit on being informed of the above reſolution, returned a new ſet of propoſitions, the ſubject of which was as follows:

"That the ſum formerly tendered to the Government of Naugpore was 16 lacks, and that only three have yet been paid: that he will accept of the remaining 13 lacks, which he will diſpatch to Syna Behader for the relief of his army; that he will cauſe the army to march immediately to Dhekanaul on the way to Gurrah Mundelah; that he himſelf will ſtay here for ſome time longer on this Government's giving him aſſurances that they will afterwards aſſiſt him in procuring a loan of 10 or 15 lacks, to be repaid in two years from the money to be acquired from the conqueſt of Gurrah Mundelah, and for which he, as Naib of Cuttack, will be ſecurity. That he will for the preſent engage to ſend 2,000 horſe to join Colonel Pearſe, and to aſſiſt in the war againſt Hyder Ally; and that Dewagur Pundit will afterwards come from Naugpore, and ſettle more fully the terms of an alliance betwixt the two States."

Theſe propoſitions were declared to be final. The point on which our negociations hinged, was now reduced to an object which appeared of little magnitude when compared with the vaſt importance of turning the ſcale of the Powers of Hindoſtan, by detaching the Berar Government from the confederacy formed againſt us, and engaging it on our ſide. When the propoſitions therefore were laid before the Board, it was immediately reſolved to accede to them. Accordingly the ſum of 13 lacks was advanced to Rajah Ram Pundit; and on the 2d of April he attended us in council, and laid before us the following articles of agreement, which he deſired to be conſidered as preliminary to a definitive treaty betwixt the Engliſh and Berar Governments. Appendix. No. 365.

Account of the monthly Expence of the Troops to be ſent along with Colonel Pearſe.

2000 ſuars on horſe, at 50,000 rupees per month, for each 1000, making altogether one lack of rupees per month. Dated 8th Rebbe-ul-Sanee, in the 22d year of the reign.

The ſaid allowance ſhall commence from the time of the troops leaving Cuttack, and when they ſhall have finiſhed the ſervice, and (having received their diſmiſſion from the commander of the Engliſh troops) they ſhall return to their own country, their pay ſhall be continued according to the number of munzels, or days journies which there may be from the place of their diſmiſſion to the city of Cuttack.

Whereas a friendſhip is firmly eſtabliſhed betwixt Maha Rajah Moodajee Bhoſla, and the Engliſh; the following articles are accordingly ſettled by Syna Behader, through Rajah Ram Pundit.

1ſt. That Rajah Syna Behader ſhall ſend 2,000 good and effective horſe along with Colonel Pearſe, to aſſiſt the Engliſh in the war againſt Hyder Naig; that the officer commanding them ſhall act under the orders of the ſaid Colonel or the officer who ſhall command the Bengal troops in the Carnatic; and that they ſhall receive from the officer who ſhall command the Bengal troops in the Carnatic, an allowance for their ſupport, at the rate which hath been ſettled in a ſeparate paper by the Governor General and Council and Rajah Ram Pundit, month by month, in the ſame proportion as the Engliſh troops ſhall receive their pay.

2d. That the army of Rajah Syna Behader will immediately leave Oriſſa, and march on an expedition againſt Gurrah Mundela. Let the Governor General and Council of the Engliſh, from a regard to the friendſhip which ſubſiſts betwixt the family of Bhooſla and the Engliſh, gave orders that an Engliſh officer, with a body of the troops now ſtationed in Hindoſtan, may march from that quarter to aſſiſt the Rajah in the above-mentioned expedition, and having reduced Gurrah Mundelah, eſtabliſh immediately the Rajah's garriſons there.

3d. That in order that the friendſhip betwixt the family of Maha Rajah Moodajee Bhooſla and the Engliſh may daily be ſtrengthened and augmented, let the Governor General and Council for the preſent ſend a truſty perſon to Naugpore, and hereafter the Dewan Dewagur Pundit will come from that place, and have an interview with the Governor General, when with their mutual advice and approbation, the deſires and demands of both parties will be adjuſted and ſettled.

4th. That if it ſhould happen from particular circumſtances that an interview, betwixt Dewagur Pundit and the Governor General cannot take place, in that caſe the deſires and demands of both parties may be ſettled at Naugpore by the intervention of a truſty perſon, and the bonds of friendſhip ſhall be ſo firmly eſtabliſhed betwixt the family of Bhooſla and the Engliſh, that no infraction or injury can ever by any means happen to them.

Theſe papers being ſigned by us and Rajah Ram Pundit, with the teſtimony of Beneram Pundit, the Vackeel of Moodajee Bhooſla, copies of them were mutually interchanged. An order has ſince been iſſued by us to the ſub-treaſurer to advance ſuch ſums, on account of the intended loan of ten lacks, as the ſtate of our treaſury will admit; and Rajah Ram Pundit has delivered to us an engagement to the following purport:

"Whereas

Appendix, No. 365.

"Whereas the Governor General and Council of the Engliſh have promiſed, that in order to aſſiſt in ſupplying the expences of the troops of Maha Rajah Moodajee Bhooſla, which are arrived with Rajah Syna Behauder in Oriſſa, they will procure the ſum of ten lacks of ſicca rupees from merchants of the province of Bengal, and deliver it as a loan through the hands of Beneram Pundit; and accordingly an order has been delivered to the ſaid Pundit for the ſaid ſum on the Engliſh treaſurer: in conſideration thereof, it is ſtipulated and written on behalf of the aforeſaid Rajah Syna Behauder by Rajah Ram Pundit, that he will diſcharge the ſaid ſum within the term of two years, and will pay intereſt at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, to be calculated from the dates of the ſeveral payments, which will be aſcertained from the receipts of Beneram Pundit: in caſe the ſaid loan and intereſt ſhould not be punctually repaid by Maha Rajah Moodajee Bhooſla and Rajah Syna Behauder, Rajah Ram Pundit, who is Naib of the province of Oriſſa, engages on his own part that he will pay, in the term above limited, the ſaid ſum with intereſt, at the rate above-mentioned, either from his own private fortune, or from the revenues of the province of Oriſſa.

Written the 6th April 1781, or 11th of Rebbee-ul-Sanee 1170 of the Hegyra."

Rajah Ram Pundit has ſince taken his leave, and is gone to Chimnajee's camp, to make the neceſſary arrangements for the march of the 2,000 horſe, which are to join Colonel Pearſe.

We have thus fully given a narrative of this negociation, becauſe we think the iſſue of it may be productive of an important change in the political ſtate of Hindoſtan. We ſhall now beg leave to cloſe it with a few obſervations. By acceding to Rajah Ram Pundit's propoſitions, we have effectually detached one of the moſt powerful States from the general confederacy againſt us, into which it had apparently entered; we ſhall by this meaſure add ſtrength to ourſelves in proportion as we diminiſh that of the confederacy. The ſeparation of the Berar Government will doubtleſs excite diſtruſt amongſt the remaining Powers, and probably the example will be followed. The Nizam who has not yet entered into open hoſtilities againſt us, and the Miniſters of Poonah, who already tremble for their own exiſtence, ſeeing the confederacy begin to diſſolve, will naturally be deſirous of ſecuring themſelves by an early peace. The mere fame of an alliance betwixt the Engliſh and the Government of Berar, will have a great effect. We ſhall no longer be conſidered as ſinking under the united weight of every State in Hindoſtan, the ſcale of power is evidently turned in our favour, and this is of more importance than could be well imagined in Europe, where the policy of nations is regulated by principles the very reverſe of thoſe which prevail in Aſia. There, in conteſts betwixt nations, the weaker is held up by the ſupport of its neighbours, who know how much their own ſafety depends on the preſervation of a proper balance. But in Aſia, the deſire of partaking of the ſpoils of a falling nation, and the dread of incurring the reſentment of the ſtronger party are the immediate motives of policy, and every State wiſhes to aſſociate itſelf with that Power which has a decided ſuperiority.

It is true, the alliance which is held out in Rajah Ram Pundit's propoſitions, apparently relates to objects of a very limited nature. But it is not to be doubted, that when once the Marattas of Naugpore are fairly involved with us in the proſecution of theſe objects, it will not long reſt with them to ſet bounds to our connection. The aſſiſtance which is to be given to us in the war with Hyder, is as full a declaration of hoſtility againſt that Prince as if they had ſent their whole army. And their employing our forces to aſſiſt them in recovering Gurrah Mundelah from a tributary of the Peiſhwa, will probably lead to a complete junction of their ſtrength and ours againſt the Government of Poonah, or reduce the latter to the neceſſity of becoming a party with them and us.

We will now conſider what would have been the alternative if we had refuſed to accede to propoſitions which were evidently ſo deſirable. Whatever might have been the real inclination of Chimnajee, or the dictates of his father Moodajee Bhooſlah, his unpaid troops had long been kept quiet only by the hopes which were held out to them of acquiring wealth from the plunder of Bengal; and if no ſupply had been granted to them, it is probable that extreme diſtreſs would have compelled them to ſeek for ſupport by an invaſion of our frontiers. It would be little conſolation to us to know that their own deſtruction would be the certain effect of ſuch a meaſure: we know that before they could have been totally deſtroyed, or even expelled, much miſchief would have been done in the provinces of Burdwan and Midnapore by their depredations, and ſtill more by the alarm which they would have excited amongſt the inhabitants; the revenues and inveſtments muſt have been put to a ſtop from the deſertion of the ryots and manufacturers: the immediate loſs would have conſiderably exceeded the ſum now requeſted, and the fatal conſequences of ſuch an irruption would have been felt throughout theſe provinces, and particularly in the manufactures, for many ſucceeding years. We can mention on the beſt information, that the deſertion of the manufacturers for only three days from the Aſſring of Radnagur alone, would have occaſioned a loſs of four lacks of rupees as the ſilk worms muſt have been wholly deſtroyed, and their loſs could not have been recovered for many years. If the troops of Chimnajee had been driven to this extremity, a war muſt inevitably have enſued with the Government of Berar, more dangerous to our poſſeſſions in Bengal than any in which we have ever been engaged ſince our acquiſition of the Dewanny.

Nor are the advantages to be derived from the preſent agreement merely ſpeculative or negative: the great and almoſt the only defect of the detachment ſent under the command of Colonel Pearſe to the relief of the Carnatic, is the want of a body of cavalry: the preſent offer of 2,000 of Chimnajee's horſe will amply ſupply this defect; they will be fully ſufficient to prevent the detachment from being haraſſed on the march, or ſuffering from want of proviſions; and though little can be expected in the field of battle from the diſcipline of Maratta horſe, yet as much may be expected from them as from the horſe that will be oppoſed to them by Hyder Ally: the junction of this body will prove therefore of real and immediate ſervice.

We are aware that men who are inclined to object will not fail to employ the moſt ſpecious arguments to draw cenſure on this negociation: they will avail themſelves of maxims which have already obtained the popular opinion; they will without heſitation aſcribe our conduct in ſupplying Chimnajee with money to weakneſs or want of foreſight; and they will declaim that the hiſtory of all ages, from the remoteſt period down to the preſent century, ſhews, that to purchaſe the forbearance of invading enemies ſerves only to tempt them to return with increaſed numbers. It is in vain to attempt to anſwer every objection which ingenuity may deviſe: we muſt rely on your candour to impute our conduct to more honourable and judicious motives. It cannot eſcape your attention, that the negociation for money began at a time when we could have little to apprehend, though much to hope from the Government of Naugpore; that it was held out as an inducement to obtain their aſſiſtance in effecting an accommodation with the Government of Poonah, and that the profeſſed object of it was a retribution for the heavy expence which they had incurred from their deſire of preſerving peace with the Engliſh. When their anſwers from Naugpore affected a higher ſtyle, and indicated a change of diſpoſition, Mr. Anderſon was ſent to Cuttack without any authority, to treat on money; Colonel Pearſe was ordered to proceed through Oriſſa in defiance of all oppoſition; and an army was aſſembled under the command of Colonel Ironſide for the defence of our frontiers of Burdwan and Midnapore. During all this time the negociation for money was dropped, nor was it renewed until Colonel Pearſe had paſſed without oppoſition cloſe to the Maratta army, and until new proofs were given us of an amicable diſpoſition; the Governor General's letter of the 2d March to Mr. Anderſon, will fully explain to you, that though we thought it in prudence neceſſary to ſtipulate the return of Chimnajee's army as a condition on granting the ſupply, yet the motives or the conditions for which we were willing to grant it, were different; and the Governor General's letters of the 11th and 18th March will ſhew, that when motives of gratitude ceaſed, and hoſtilities were expected, we inſtantly directed Mr. Anderſon to retract our offer, and to decline any further diſcourſe on the ſubject of money. At length the affecting manner in which the Rajah opened his diſtreſſes to Mr. Anderſon at his laſt interview, and threw himſelf on our mercy for relief, induced us to reſume the ſubject with Rajah Ram Pundit.

Theſe circumſtances have not eſcaped the attention of the Marattas themſelves, and we are ſatisfied that they, in whoſe opinion the public is perhaps moſt intereſted, have not miſtaken the motives of our conduct. Nor need we apprehend that the ſupply which they have received will ever tempt them to return to theſe provinces; they beſt know the extreme diſtreſſes which they have ſuffered, the heavy expences which they have incurred, and the miſery which they have entailed by this expedition on their province of Oriſſa; and it is not to be ſuppoſed that they will ever again attempt to fit out an army of 30,000 horſe, at an unavoidable expence of more than a crore of rupees, to march a thouſand miles through a hilly country, in the expectation of acquiring a ſupply of 12 lacks of rupees. On the whole, whatever the deſigning or uninformed part of the world may ſay, we flatter ourſelves that you, in whoſe approbation we are moſt particularly intereſted, having all theſe circumſtances fully before you, will be pleaſed not only to approve of the motives which have influenced us in this negociation, but alſo of the favourable iſſue to which we have happily brought it.

It remains only for us to obſerve, that letters have lately been received from Chimnajee, confirming every thing that has been ſettled by Rajah Ram Pundit; and we have the pleaſure to think that he has now engaged ſincerely and cordially on our ſide.

We have the honour to be,

APPENDIX, No. 366.

Inſtructions from the Governor General and Council to Colonel Grainger Muir, the 21ſt of April 1781.

Sir,

AS you have been ordered by Colonel Morgan to proceed from the ſtation at Futtyghur with a detachment of the Company's troops, conſiſting of two regiments of cavalry, three of Sepoys, and a company of Artillery, to the aſſiſtance of Lieutenant Colonel Camac, on application made by the latter for that purpoſe; we have ſuppoſed, that before this period the forces under your command muſt have joined thoſe heretofore commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Camac; and under ſuch ſuppoſition, we directed you on the 2d inſtant to take the command of that detachment, at the ſame time ordering Lieutenant Colonel Camac to deliver it up to you.

As the collected force of infantry and cavalry of the two detachments when joined muſt greatly exceed the ſervice remaining to employ them, and the artillery certainly ſo beyond all proportion, we direct that you diſmiſs ſuch part of your force in infantry and artillery as the actual or probable exigency may not require you to retain, and order their return to the Doaab. We direct alſo, that you diſmiſs the 2d regiment of cavalry, retaining the 3d. Appendix No. 366.

We direct that you make it your object to obtain poſſeſſion of Oogein and its dependencies, and for this purpoſe we order you to proceed thither, demanding the aſſiſtance of ſuch a body of the Rana's troops, as you may think requiſite, and the Rana's preſence with them.

If the Rana ſhould refuſe or evade compliance with the requiſition made of him, you are to deliver to him in writing a proteſt againſt his conduct, declaring him guilty of an infraction of his treaty with this Government; of which a copy is incloſed.

In the courſe of your march you will take ſuch advantage of the enemy as opportunities may offer to you: but for the ſake of ſuch advantage you muſt not be diverted from the object which we have preſcribed, but keep invariably in proſpect until you have accompliſhed it.

All inſtructions to you are intended to be general, and rather to mark the objects which we wiſh to attain by the operations of the troops under your command, than to fix the means of their accompliſhment. Theſe means we leave to your own judgment and to the exigency of circumſtances, of which we cannot be aware or adviſed in ſufficient time to inſtruct you particularly on them; and we have ſo great reliance on your activity and experience, that we cannot ſuffer ourſelves to heſitate in leaving this power in your hands; convinced that you never will adopt a meaſure without a full conſideration of its probable conſequences, nor abate from the proſecution of it when once undertaken, unleſs compelled by urgent and evident neceſſity.

We think it neceſſary to recommend to you in the ſtrongeſt manner to keep your force entire, making no detachments from it but ſuch as are abſolutely neceſſary and unavoidable; and in order to give effect to this inſtruction, and to remove the neceſſity of your eſtabliſhing garriſons for the places which may either ſurrender to our arms or require our protection, we direct and empower you to aſſign them to the charge or abſolute poſſeſſion of ſuch of the neighbouring Zemindars as are beſt qualified to receive them, either by natural right or by ſituation, added to that of ſervice and approved attachment; excepting only ſuch as lie contiguous to the dominions of the Rana of Gohud, and appertain to him in virtue of the treaty.

With theſe explanations we give you a full diſcretion for diſpoſal of all conquered places and territories in your route, hoping that you may be able to make ſuch ſtipulations with the proprietors, as may obtain either a preſent aid in money for the relief of the expence of the expedition, or a future and permanent income in the way of tribute.

We are,
Sir, &c. &c.

Extract of Bombay Diary, the 12th May 1781.

Extract of a Letter from Colonel Camac to Mr. Malet, dated near Holaries, the 29th March 1781.

In reſpect to my operations, I had penetrated into Malva as far as the town of Seronge, when being diſappointed in the aſſiſtance I had reaſon to expect from the Nabob of Bhopaul and the neighbouring Rajahs; being unable for want of cavalry to prevent the deſolation of the country, and Scindiah's army with a train of artillery, field and battering, arriving at the ſame time, I found my ſtock of proviſions ſoon exhauſted, and having taken the opinions of my principal officers, determined on a retreat. The enemy had cannonaded us for ſeven days, thereby thereby attempting to draw us from the town which was our only resource for provisions. It was on the 7th, at midnight, that we moved off, and with so much secrecy that the enemy did not come up with us till near day-break. They then attacked us from all quarters, but were as often repulsed. They pursued their attack on the second day, and on the third I reached a town called Mohautpore, which I forced to supply me, and then marched out, and in vain attempted to bring on an engagement. We halted there several days to refresh our people, and relieve our wounded, of which we had a great number. The orderly retreat that was made before so able a General as Scindiah, and so numerous an army, does the highest credit to the troops; they behaved like heroes. On arriving at this place, finding that the enemy encamped within three cos's, and kept their baggage seven cos's in the rear, I determined to beat up their quarters on the night of the 24th. We accordingly succeeded to admiration; surprized and routed their first camp where Scindiah was, pursued them to their second, drove them three cos's further, and across the Sind, where we overtook their artillery, and by nine o'clock were masters of ten pieces of cannon, all their tumbrills; two elephants, and the greatest part of their stores and ammunition, and baggage. We took the guns yoked, otherwise we could not have brought them off. The enemy are in the utmost disorder, and I trust that this success will have the best influence on our concerns in every part, but particularly on your side of the continent.

APPENDIX, No. 367.

Additional Secret Letter from Bengal, 15th May 1781.

To the Honourable the Court of Directors for Affairs of the Honourable United Company of Merchants of England trading to the East Indies.

Honourable Sirs,

Secret Depart.

THE dispatch of the two ships Neptune and Bellmont, by which we have had the honour to address you under date the 27th ultimo, having been unavoidably delayed on account of bad weather, we do not think it proper to lose the opportunity which presents itself to us on this occasion, of transmitting to you such further advices as we deem necessary for your information.

It appears in a letter from Brigadier General Goddard to the President and Select Committee of Bombay, under date the 9th of February, that having taken possession of Bore-Ghaut, as we had the honour to acquaint you in our last letter, it was his intention to establish a strong post at the head of it, and to continue there until he had collected such a magazine of stores and provisions as would enable him to prosecute his further operations in such manner as might be judged most expedient. By a letter which we have ourselves received lately from Brigadier General Goddard, we find that he was at the same place on the 6th of March, and one bill of exchange which he has lately drawn is dated from it on the 8th ultimo.

During the continuance of the army at the head of the Ghauts, an indirect intimation appears to have been sent to General Goddard from the Minister, of his desire to conclude a peace. The messenger was a man named Runsoor Naigue, and brought a letter to the General from one Byroo Pundit, a Brahmin, said to be much in the confidence of Nana Furnese. The purport of this letter, the particulars of the General's conference with the bearer of it, the event of the negociation, and the subsequent advances unsuccessfully made by the General to the Minister for a termination of the war on the conditions stated in our proposals of the 2d of October, appearing in his address to us of the 6th March, which we deem of importance, we have the honour to transmit it and its accompaniments to you a number in the packet.

The unwillingness of the Minister to accept the offer of our treaty does not disappoint us; we are rather pleased with it, since it leaves us at liberty to secure to the Company the important possession of Bassein; and the advantages acquired by your troops in the west of India since the time at which our treaty was written, will warrant us in declaring our resolution not to part with this valuable acquisition, unless indeed some great reverse of fortune (which God forbid) should attend the operations of your arms, and oblige us to submit to the loss of it. Respecting other conditions on which we might be willing to accede to a peace, the ill success with which our advances have been hitherto attended, and the presumption which they seem to have given birth to in the arrogant conduct of the Minister, discourage us in looking to any favourable termination of the war, but as we have advised you in our last address, by the most vigorous and successful prosecution of it.

We have received within these five days a letter from the President and Select Committee of Bombay, under date the 30th March; in which they inform us that "they have judged it the most advisable conduct to reduce the war on their part to a mere system of defence, and to confine their military operations to the security and preservation of their own possessions." Our answer to this letter is transmitted to you a number in the packet, and we trust that it will have the good effect which we intend by it, in altering a plan of conduct in your Select Committee of Bombay, as opposite to their late opinions as we deem it hostile to the obtainment of the object which we both profess to aim at, an honourable and advantageous peace.

In the same letter from Bombay, we are advised of their resolution to send back all the Fort Saint George troops serving on the Malabar coast, and their hopes of landing them at Anjengo in the course of the last month. The measure of sending back the Madras detachment conforms strictly to the instructions sent by us to Brigadier General Goddard, so long ago as the 20th April 1780; but we apprehend that it may have an unfavourable influence on our affairs at this time, which may be considered at their crisis, by impressing the minds of the public with an opinion that some necessity, or a consciousness of our inability to prosecute the great advantages which we have acquired, has compelled us to stop at the instant of their completion. Yet in other respects we have no reason to be dissatisfied with it, since the troops of this Presidency and that of Bombay are sufficient for the prosecution of the war, and the defence of our possessions on the Malabar coast; and the services of the Madras detachment in the Carnatic, may be of great use and importance to the success of the war in which you are engaged with Hyder Ally Cawn.

A letter which we have received from Rear Admiral Sir Edward Hughes, under date the 23d February, informs us of his success on the 9th December last, in destroying two ships mounting 26 and 28 nine pounder guns, and 4 ketches mounting each 12 six and four pounder guns, belonging to Hyder Ally, in Mangalore road. It being impracticable to remove the ships and vessels taken, as they were grounded, orders were given for them to be burnt.

We have received information which we deem authentic, that the Portugueze Government at Goa have entered into a treaty of alliance offensive and defensive with Hyder Ally. The substance of the treaty appears in a letter from Mr. Auriol, whom we had appointed our Minister to the Court of Goa, but who fortunately had not proceeded on his commission when he received advice of their alliance with our enemies; and a copy of this letter we think it necessary to transmit to you a number in the packet.

We have the pleasure to acquaint you, that a garrison of your troops is in poſſeſſion of Kalpy fort, which they entered without oppoſition. The Maratta Chief who held the Kalpy diſtrict under the Maratta Government having ſhewn an unwilling neſs to comply with the requiſition made to him to pay to the Company the ſame tribute that he was uſed to pay to the Marattas, and an inclination to delay coming to an accommodation until the preſent year is ended, and all the collections made, with a view of appropriating them to his own uſe, we have inſtructed Colonel Morgan to oblige him to pay into the Company's treaſury the ſum due to his former maſter for this whole year, which is nearly paſſed. We have approved of a meaſure recommended to us by Colonel Morgan, that the whole diſtricts of Kalpy and Humeerpoor ſhould be taken into the Company's hands entirely, and an Aumil placed over them; and we have directed him to receive the propoſals of Allmaſs Ally Cawn, a man of property, and Aumil of a large tract of country in his Excellency the Vizier's dominions, for the rentage of theſe diſtricts from the Company: we are in hopes that they will yield a conſiderable revenue.

A large body of Maratta horſe and foot, to the number of 2,000, having appeared in the town of Kalpy ſince our poſſeſſion of it, and attempted to plunder and diſturb the people reſiding there, a detachment of ſix companies of grenadiers, with two guns and a tumbril, was ſent to diſperſe them, and the Marattas were inſtantly defeated, with loſs on their part, but with none on ours.

We have the honour to be,
Honourable Sirs,
Your moſt faithful
humble ſervants,

Edward Wheler.

Fort William,
the 15th May 1781.

Letter from J. P. Auriol to the Honourable Warren Haſtings, Eſquire, Governor General, &c. Members of the Supreme Council, Fort William.

Honourable Sir, and Sirs,

Underſtanding that the Portugueze Government at Goa had lately entered into a treaty of alliance offenſive and defenſive with the Nabob Hyder Ally, I thought it my duty to aſcertain the nature and conditions of ſuch compact, before I ventured to expoſe the honour of the commiſſion with which I am entruſted to the riſk of any ſlight or indignity, in having the proffered honour of a connection with the Company rejected by the Captain General at Goa; on that ground I have therefore made it my buſineſs ſince my arrival here to inquire into the particulars of it.

That a treaty has been concluded, is a fact eſtabliſhed and confirmed by various authorities; but for the purport of it I am indebted chiefly to Mr. Lloyd, a perſon who lately held a confidential ſtation in the ſervice of Hyder Ally. He aſſured me that he was preſent at all the conferences between Hyder and the Portugueze Miniſter which produced it; and from the ready and unprevaricated account he gave me of it, in a long converſation which I held with him upon the ſubject, I have no reaſon to doubt any part of his information.

Mr. Lloyd acquainted me that Colonel Aſſa, an officer in the Portugueze ſervice, arrived at Hyder Ally's camp about the beginning of Auguſt laſt, attended by 50 Sepoys, a few horſemen, and a numerous ſuite of attendants, among whom were a band of muſicians; that he came publicly deputed from the Captain General at Goa, to negociate a treaty in the name of his ſovereign with Hyder Ally, and delivered him a valuable preſent on the occaſion, conſiſting of a broad ſword hilted with gold, and very richly ornamented with diamonds and rubies, and a kind of cane ſet and adorned in the ſame manner, beſides various other articles; that he was treated with great reſpect and attention during his ſtay in Hyder's camp, and that a treaty was concluded between them to the following effect:

"That the friends and enemies of each party were to be reciprocally ſo conſidered by the other party. Appendix. No. 367.

"That the Portugueze were to ſupply Hyder Ally with a body of troops, conſiſting of 500 thrings, whether natives of Europe or Goa, to be commanded by European officers; and 50 European artiſts of different callings, to ſerve him in his arſenal, his engineer corps, and artillery, he paying them according to rates ſtipulated:

"That all vacancies in this ſupply ſhould be replaced, and the numbers kept conſtantly complete by occaſional recruits from Goa:

"That Hyder Ally was likewiſe to be ſupplied by the Portugueze, from time to time, with any quantity of arms or military ſtores which he ſhould have occaſion for, by purchaſe:

"That the Portugueze in return ſhould enjoy all their eſtabliſhments on the Malabar coaſt in profound peace; that their trade ſhould be preſerved to them unmoleſted by Hyder Ally's dependants, their privileges maintained in full force, and a right granted them to ſettle any new factories on his coaſts, if they ſhould require it."

The above are the conditions actually agreed upon in the treaty: it was further demanded by Hyder Ally, that the Portugueze naval armament ſhould join his fleet at Mangalore on his requiſition, and thence proceed in conjunction with it to co-operate in any hoſtilities which he might undertake in ſupport of the French, on the arrival of their forces in India; and that the Portugueze ſhould further aſſiſt him in his military operations with a body of Sepoys, in caſe he thought fit to call on them for that purpoſe, he paying their expences: but theſe two articles Colonel Aſſa not having power to aſſent to, were omitted, and the treaty ſigned, on his promiſe that a reference of them ſhould be made to the King of Portugal.

It appears that the treaty was not finally ſettled and concluded until eight or ten days after the unfortunate defeat of Colonel Baillie's detachment in September; and I learn that Colonel Aſſa, upon taking his leave ſhortly after to return to Goa, was complimented with preſents in jewels, &c. to the value of about 60,000 rupees for himſelf, and ſomething more conſiderable for the Captain General at Goa.

The troops furniſhed by the Portugueze in virtue of the above treaty are to be on the ſame eſtabliſhment and regulations as thoſe now commanded by Monſieur Pigmorin, a Frenchman, conſiſting of 150 cavalry and about 100 infantry. Theſe corps, with their proper complement of officers, were appointed by a ſpecial agreement made between Monſieur Law, the late Governor of Pondicherry, and Hyder Ally, to aſſiſt the latter in all his wars, though they were to be conſidered as French troops, and recruited occaſionally from Pondicherry.

Mr. Lloyd informs me, that he ſaw a letter which Hyder Ally received about twelve days before he left Arcot from the Captain General of Goa, notifying the march of the troops which he was engaged to ſupply, and he believes them to be now actually on the road towards the place of rendezvous.

As theſe circumſtances would infallibly fruſtrate the end of my negociations, I ſhall not hazard the credit of Government by proceeding in them until I am honoured with further orders from you in reply to my preſent letter.

I am, with reſpect,
Honourable Sir, and Sirs,
Your moſt obedient
humble ſervant,

APPENDIX, No. 368.

Extract of Letter from Bengal (Secret Department).

To the Honourable the Court of Directors for the Affairs of the Honourable United Company of Merchants of England, trading to the East Indies; dated 3d February 1781.

Honourable Sirs,

WE avail ourſelves of an opportunity of addreſſing you by the way of Buſſorah, and of communicating to you the principal facts of moment which have occurred ſince we had the honour of writing to you by the Ceres. The channel of conveyance makes it neceſſary that theſe facts ſhould be related with all poſſible brevity and conciſeneſs.—

Reſolve to detach over land towards Madras ſix battalions of Sepoys with their guns, and one company of artillery, the command given to Lieutenant Colonel Pearce; one company of Golandaaze and a troop of horſe, added afterwards to the ſtrength of this detachment.

Treaty with Dutch, prepared with the advice of Mr. Roſs, the Director at Chinſurah, and propoſed to the Governors of Columbo and Cochin, for alliances againſt Hyder Ally; object in this alliance a ſupply of 1,000 infantry European, 200 European artillery, and 1,000 Malays, with their complement of officers.

Diſpatch the Portland to Madras and Bombay; remit by her to Madras ſicca rupees 3,65,235. 1. 6. and to Bombay current rupees 5,31,159. 11. 4.; have alſo authorized the latter to draw on us for ſuch further ſums as they may want.

Our ſupplies of treaſure and grain to Madras much impeded by a French cruizer at the mouth of the river that has taken many ſmall veſſels along the coaſt. Unable to repel it by our own means (for although we have ſhips, we cannot man them) we have ſent to the Admiral to detach a ſhip for this purpoſe.

Total amount of remittances to Fort Saint George, by ſpecie and bills ſince the 22d of September, current rupees 19,59,762. 12. 4. D° D° remittances of grain to D° ſince the 22d of September, maunds 227,465, rupees 7,58,924. 10.—Continue the ſupply of grain to Fort Saint George to an unlimited quantity.

Letters received from the Rajah of Berar containing ſuch exceptions to the treaty with the Marattas reſolved on in September laſt, as amount to a rejection of the terms; reſolve to confide in our own ſtrength, and on the expectation of ſuccours from Europe, and order Colonel Pearſe's detachment to march direct to Madras.

The Maratta army quiet at Cuttac; has lately left that place, and marched to the weſtward to reduce ſome refractory Zemindars—Colonel Pearſe's unmoleſted paſſage —thus certain motions of the Berar army probably made with this intention.

Informed by Mr. Hollond, that the Nabob Nizam Ally Cawn has taken to himſelf the Guntoor Circar, inſtead of leaving it to the poſſeſſion of his brother: the meaſure does not affect us, and we will not interfere.

The expences of Fort Saint George and Bombay, and theſe augmented, added to our own; ſuch an expence, and the loſs of ſpecie to theſe provinces, are our only diſtreſs: we hope to obviate them by an increaſe of revenue and official economy,—The means taken to keep the war at a diſtance from our own borders is likely to prove effectual for this ſeaſon, which is all we want; we ſhall be prepared the next, by the completion of our new eſtabliſhment, and by ſuch a diſpoſition of it as ſhall be equal to repel any attempts, however multiplied, of an enemy: upon the whole, notwithſtanding the dreadful calamity which has befallen your intereſts in the Carnatic, and which has contributed to drain us of our reſources, both of ſtrength and money to retrieve it, we have the beſt grounds to hope of being able to overcome all our difficulties and dangers, and even to convert them into the inſtruments of your future proſperity; at leaſt, if the event ſhould not prove anſwerable to theſe expectations, you ſhall have no cauſe to reproach your Adminiſtration of the want of ſuch exertions as were moſt likely to fulfil them.

We reſolved on the 29th, that the drafts under Captain Popham's command ſhould be relieved by four regular battalions, put under the command of Major Camac. This reſolution continued and ſtrengthened by an order that the four battalions of drafts ſhould be appointed to the eſtabliſhment, and make part of Major Camac's detachment.—Major Camac ſince appointed a Lieutenant Colonel.

New arrangement paſſed with reſpect to the corps of cavalry—the horſes made the property of the Company.

The Vizier's great diſtreſs would not permit him to make complete payment of the Company's demand on him for the laſt year; and that diſtreſs continuing, we have been obliged to be content with the following ſettlement with him for the preſent year.

In aſſignments	- -	98,95,345
		1,42,13,958

The amount of the aſſignments exceeds the neceſſary claims upon the Company for the ſervices of the current year by above ſix lacks—Mr. Purling recalled from Lucknow; and Mr. Nathaniel Middleton, collector of the Vizier's aſſignments to the Company, and agent for managing his Excellency's pecuniary engagements with them.

Required from the Rajah of Benares the ſame ſubſidy for the enſuing year that he paid in the laſt; one lack paid immediately, the remaining four lacks not paid until the 18th October.

The aſſiſtance of a body of cavalry required from him to be returned at the concluſion of the war.—Mr. Francis Fowke recalled from Benares, and appointed agent for the proviſion of boats to the army, after the expiration of the preſent contract.—Mr. Markham appointed Reſident at Benares.—Reſolved to take up money on loan on the following ſcheme:

One loan for 45 lacks of rupees, to be paid on or before the 30th November, for bonds bearing an intereſt at 8 per cent.

Second loan in favour of the Company's ſervants for 20 lacks; to be ſubſcribed for on or before the 28th of February, for bonds bearing an intereſt of 4 per cent. from the day of ſubſcription. The intereſt, together with 20 per cent. of the principal, to be paid by drafts on you, out of the ſum annually drawn upon you by us, ſo often as ſuch drafts are permitted, or that channel of remittance remains open, at the exchange of two ſhillings per current rupee. Should we be forbidden to draw upon you, it is at the option of the ſubſcribers to receive payment of the remaining part of their principal, with the intereſt which ſhall accrue from the laſt payment, at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum; or to let it remain at that rate of intereſt, and receive notes for the ſame, according to the firſt mode above-mentioned.

Third loan in favour of the Company's ſervants and other European inhabitants, of 20 lacks; to be ſubſcribed on or before the 28th February 1781, in exchange for annuities, payable by bills on you, out of the ſum uſually drawn on you by us: the particulars have been already tranſmitted to you in duplicate. The annuities are redeemable on or before the 1ſt of January 1783, if the plan ſhould not meet with your approbation.

We have the honour to be,
Honourable Sirs,
Your moſt faithful humble ſervants,
Warren Haſtings,
Edw. Wheler.

Fort William,
3d February 1781.

Mr. John Hollond, Reſident at the Court of his Highneſs Nizam-ul-Mulck.

Sir,

We have received the letter which you have written to us under date the 15th ultimo, and the Governor General has laid before us thoſe which you have addreſſed to him on the 5th, 26th, 29th, and 31ſt ultimo.

The line and meaſures which you inform us the Nabob Nizam Ally Cawn has thought proper to adopt reſpecting the Sircar of Guntoor, do not appear to us to require any new orders to you or repreſentation to him: it is to us a point of mere indifference, whether the Sircar of Guntoor be in his Highneſs's poſſeſſion, or in that of his brother. It was not guaranteed by the Company to the latter, but yielded at the inſtance of the Nabob Nizam Ally Cawn, who had granted it as a jaghier to him. If the Nabob now thinks proper to reſume his own gift, we ſee no cauſe to warrant us in interfering, particularly when ſuch interference might involve us in differences with him, which at this time eſpecially we wiſh to avoid; and as we think his poſſeſſion of the Sircar an event more likely to prove of ſervice than prejudice to our affairs, by embarraſſing his Highneſs with Hyder Ally Cawn, ſuppoſing it to be true, as he aſſerts, that the latter has formed deſigns on the northern Circars, from which it is not probable that an exemption will be made in favour of that of Guntoor; yet we do not mean, by the part which we have determined to purſue on this occaſion, either to invalidate the claim of the Company to the reverſion of the Circar of Guntoor, agreeable to the treaty of 1768, on the death of Baſſalet Jung, or the right which they derive to it from the ſame authority, when he breaks the conditions under which this reſervation was originally made by the treaty in favour of Baſſalet Jung.

With reſpect to the future payment of the arrears of the peſhcuſh, we give you full authority to aſſure his Highneſs that they ſhall be completely diſcharged at the termination of the war, and that the current demands on this account be regularly diſcharged from that fund: that at preſent, and during the continuance of the war, our reſources are all engaged in the proſecution of it, and that we cannot employ them on other ſervice. We authorize you alſo to inform his Highneſs, that be the preſent loſs ſuſtained by him from our inability to diſcharge the ſums due to him from the Company, what it may, it is imputable to himſelf only, for that he is the cauſe of the war, being the avowed author of the confederacy which occaſioned it; and that without taking upon us to condemn the motives of his conduct, or even to declare that it might not be juſtified by that of the Preſidency of Fort Saint George. We affirm, that at the moment when we complained of their injuſtice towards him, when he inſtigated the other States of India to combine againſt the Company, he well knew the controlling powers veſted in this Government over all the other Preſidencies, and that we were able to do him juſtice; yet he made not any application to us for that purpoſe.

His Highneſs ſeems to be miſinformed of the preſent relation which ſubſiſts between this Government and Ragonaut Row; and we are induced to believe ſo from a part of your letter to us of the 15th ultimo, wherein you recite a converſation that had paſſed, in which he expreſſed his readineſs to join us againſt Hyder on certain conditions; the firſt of which is ſaid to be, that the ſupport of Ragonaut Row ſhould be for ever abandoned. If by the word "ſupport" be meant the ſupport of his claims at Poonah, we authorize you to declare to his highneſs that Ragoba is not ſupported by us in it in any manner whatſoever, and that at this moment we are not connected with him, though we ſhould think it diſhonourable to deliver him into the hands of his enemies.

We are well pleaſed with the attention which you have ſhewn us in the conſtant and particular advices which you have tranſmitted to us of your tranſactions at the Nabob's court, and of his Highneſs's deſigns, and we depend on a continuance of the ſame communications to us in future.

We are, &c. &c.
(Signed) Governor General and Council.

Fort William.

APPENDIX, No. 369.

Extracts from a Copy of a Letter from the President and Select Committee of Fort Saint George to the Court of Directors, dated 17th February 1781.

WE did ourselves the honour of addressing you by your ship the Duke of Kingston, that sailed from hence the 15th of last month, and there in the fullest manner stated to you the general situation of military and political affairs, as immediately or relatively connected with this Presidency. Duplicates of that dispatch now waits upon you by Colonel James Capper, who takes his passage on a Portuguese ship.

2. Alarmed as you will naturally have been at the very gloomy prospect which there presented itself: the being enabled in so short a space of time to acquaint you of a favourable turn in your affairs on this coast, cannot but afford us the most solid and real satisfaction. The invariable language which hath been held to you by this Committee will have convinced your Honours, that in our opinion nothing but a peace with the Marattas could possibly extricate us from our difficulties, or your other settlements of Bengal or Bombay, from the accumulating load of expence, and consequently debt, which it was unavoidable to incur. This opinion was daily increased from the effects we could perceive of universal dissatisfaction in the country Powers. Happily indeed the many resources which have been found in your own possessions have hitherto empowered the arms of the Company to penetrate into the most formidable parts of the peninsula; but these resources are in no respect adequate to the continuance of such great and such distant operations. The stepping beyond the bounds of political moderation, and of your own and the territories of your allies, is fraught with effects of the most pernicious tendency. Extension of dominion hath been uniformly one of the objects you have commanded us to refrain from: the reason is clear; that which you have already is as much as you ever can be able to turn to advantage; more would but load you with encumbrances, and render your possessions defenceless and open to the invasions of every restless neighbour.

The Maratta war, though it originated perhaps in the one idea of merely affording support to the cause of Ragonaut Row, when that support could be supposed to be but very inconsiderable, has yet in its consequences involved a variety of mischiefs and embarrassments of an alarming nature to your present and your future influence. In deliberating on this subject, it is probable your controlling Government of Bengal have left unexplained no matter which it would be proper for you to be acquainted with; we shall therefore avoid entering in a more diffusive manner into the subject, especially as we understand the dispatches which now wait upon you from Bengal, are full and particular, from its commencement by the Presidency of Bombay to the present hour. Accompanying, however, you will receive copies of two letters that were received from Poonah about the middle of last month. The first is from the Peishwa Mhadoo Row to our President, and the latter is to the Nabob from his Vackeel, who resides at the Peishwa's court. From both these letters you will perceive that the disposition of the Poonah Administration is far from being so hostile as it naturally might be supposed. We have transmitted copies of these letters to the Governor General and Council; and have recommended to the Nabob, in the strongest terms, the exerting the utmost of his influence towards the terminating the present troubles, by a permanent and honourable peace. The negociations of the Nabob, at the express desire of the Governor General, are now going on for the accomplishment of this wished for end; and he gives us the strongest reason to hope he shall be successful in his mediation. To the like purport as the above letters, Sir Eyre Coote has been written to by the chief minister, Nanna Furnaveese; but as in the hurry of taking the field he forgot to furnish us with a translate of what he had received, we can only in general terms inform you, that the minister expressed himself to General Coote as desirous of putting an end to the war, provided the advantages were not all to be expected on our side.

9. In our former advices we explained to your Honours our reasons for apprehending the Soubah's intentions to be entirely hostile to the Company: his public declarations were expressive of abundance of ill-humour, and he hesitated not to avow himself to the Governor General the adviser of the confederacy between Hyder Ally and the Marattas. However willing the Soubah might have been to have availed himself of the embarrassed situation of our affairs, he yet hath fortunately refrained from any hostile attempt. His complaints indeed have of late assumed a milder tone, and we have reason to believe, from our intelligence from the Decan, that nothing dangerous to our repose may be immediately expected from that quarter.

APPENDIX, No. 370.

Major Scott's Examination before the Court of Directors, 26th February 1782.

Q. FROM whom did you receive copy of the revenue letter of the 5th May 1781, from the Governor General and Council of Bengal to the Court of Directors, with the other papers relating to the revenues of Bengal?

A. They were sent me by Mr. Hastings the Governor General under the care of Mr. Grady, from whom I received them.

Q. When did you receive those papers?

A. I think on the 19th instant; Mr. Grady was particularly directed to deliver them into my hands.

Q. What directions did you receive from the Governor General respecting the above letter and papers?

A. They were sent for my information, and I supposed that the Court of Directors would have received the revenue letter by the same ship. These papers were put on board the Neptune, on which ship Mr. Grady had taken his passage; but she being unable to proceed he embarked on board the Bellmont; wrote to the Governor General to know what he should do with the papers, but receiving no answer, he brought them with him on the Bellmont.

Q. Were the papers sealed up and directed to you?

A. Yes; in a box sealed up, directed to the particular care of Mr. Grady.

Q. Are the papers produced the original ones delivered in by him?

A. They are not the original ones, but appear by the endorsement to be copies of them.

Q. Did you receive any other papers relating to the Company's affairs from Mr. Grady?

A. Yes, ſeveral other papers relating to the Company's affairs. Appendix. No. 372.

Q. When you tendered thoſe papers which are delivered in, what reaſon had you for withholding the others?

A. I underſtood that the revenue letter and papers had not been received by the Company; but if there are any other papers in my poſſeſſion, being copies of the proceedings of the Governor General and Council, the originals of which have not been received by the Company, I will with great pleaſure, and I think it my duty ſo to do, lay them before the Honourable the Court of Directors. It is from ſome accident which I cannot account for, that papers of ſuch conſequence have not been received, becauſe I am ſure it was Mr. Haſtings's intention to have tranſmitted them.

Q. How came you to know that the originals of thoſe papers which were delivered in were not received by the Company?

A. I heard ſo at this houſe, and that the revenue packet had not been received. I had aſked that queſtion before I had received any letter myſelf.

Q. By what means can you aſcertain that the papers which you have delivered in, and thoſe others which you received from the Governor General by Mr. Grady, are true copies from the Company's records?

A. I firmly believe them to be ſo, becauſe they are endorſed by the Governor General himſelf, and becauſe he refers me to them very particularly in his private letters.

Q. Can you recollect the purport of the other papers in your poſſeſſion which came by Mr. Grady, and which you have not delivered in?

A. I cannot recollect them all, but will mention as far as I am able. Copies of many of them were in my poſſeſſion before, which Mr. Haſtings had forgot.

The propoſed treaty with the Dutch—The debates relative to Sir Elijah Impey's appointment—New regulations for the Courts of Juſtice, dated I think the 15th of April 1781—Regulations of the Cuſtoms—Mr. Anderſon's negociation with Chimnajee Booſla, including the Governor General's inſtructions to that gentleman—Letter from Dewangur Pundit, miniſter of the Rajah of Berar, to the Governor General, received at Calcutta the 10th May 1781—Copy of the correſpondence with Fort Saint George, from Auguſt 1780 to February 1781.—I believe theſe are all the public papers; if there are any others I will ſend them in. I had forgot to mention the copy of Mr. Haſtings's minute and Mr. Wheler's on the appointment of Mr. Markham to the Reſidency of Benares.

Q. Were thoſe papers tranſmitted by the Governor General for your private information?

A. They were.

Q. Have you directions from the Governor General to communicate thoſe papers or their contents to any other perſon or perſons?

A. Mr. Haſtings has deſired me to ſhew a private letter to his particular friends, but the other papers are left to my diſcretion. Theſe papers are often referred to in that private letter, and I ſhould have ſhewn them to thoſe particular friends who deſired to read them.

Q. Are any of thoſe friends in the direction of the Eaſt India Company's affairs?

A. They are not—many of them are proprietors.

Q. How long have you reſided in India, at what ſettlements, and in what ſtations?

A. I was appointed a Cadet by the Court of Directors 16 years and a half ago—Arrived at Bombay in Auguſt 1766—Served ſeven months on that coaſt, and went with permiſſion to Bengal, where I came in a Cadet in June 1767—I ſerved in the army till the 7th January 1781, and then reſigned the Honourable Company's ſervice.

Q. When did you leave Bengal?

A. I left Calcutta the 9th January 1781, and the pilot left the ſhip the 17th.

APPENDIX, No. 371.

Letter from the Governor General to the Chairman of the Court of Directors; dated 6th January 1781.

Sir,

HAVING thought proper to appoint an agent at home for the purpoſe of attending to my political intereſts, and managing all my public concerns, I take this opportunity of acquainting you that I have ſelected Major Scott for this ſervice, and have furniſhed him with ſuitable inſtructions; and as this gentleman is poſſeſſed of every neceſſary information relative to the ſtate of this Government, he will be ready to communicate with you on all matters wherein you may think it proper to aſk his opinion.

It is material to me to make one obſervation, that in my inſtructions to Major Scott I have particularly provided, that I will ſuffer no perſon whatever to perform any act in my name that ſhall be conſtrued to imply a reſignation of my authority; proteſting againſt the exerciſe of ſo dangerous a power, from its having been aſſumed upon a former occaſion without being warranted by my conſent, or by any previous inſtructions that could bear the moſt diſtant tendency to ſuch a meaſure.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your moſt obedient,
and moſt humble ſervant,

Fort William, January 6th 1781. Warren Haſtings.

APPENDIX, No. 372.

Tranſlation of a Letter from Dewargur Pundit, Miniſter to Moodajee Booſla, the Rajah of Berar, to Mr. Haſtings. Dated 5th April; received 10th May, 1781.

After the uſual compliments,

PRIOR to this, in the fulneſs of friendſhip and reſpect, which God, the Creator of heaven and earth, knew knew to be ſincere; I wrote four letters concerning the affairs of this province, ſtating the buſineſs in agitation in all its points of view; and ſetting forth the meaſures to be taken, and the conſequences attending your reſolution for peace or war: that if in order to reſtore your reputation, which had ſuffered from the incapacity of the Bombay Commanders, you were determined upon war, there were ſuch and ſuch meaſures neceſſary to be taken to carry it on with ſucceſs. that if you ſpoke the language of peace, and wiſhed that the garden of the State ſhould preſerve its beauty unviolated by the thorns of war and confuſion, you ſhould ſend propoſals for a treaty, fully and particularly drawn out, reſpecting every article, in ſuch and ſuch form, and to ſuch and ſuch purport; that the thorns of diſcontent might be removed, and a foundation laid for our mutual agreements to laſt for ever; that the country might flouriſh in tranquillity, the inhabitants be at eaſe, and the General and ſoldiers free from the fatigues of inceſſant toil. I conclude that theſe letters haae been reſpectively received, and that you muſt be acquainted with their contents; and moſt undoubtedly your extenſive capacity and univerſal knowledge have enabled you to comprehend the ſecret meaning of every hint and ſuggeſtion contained in the lines which I wrote regarding the negociation of a treaty; and will have conſidered every matter, both in its beginning and its conſequences. But as, contrary to former cuſtom, when a mutual correſpondence every month reſpecting buſineſs ſubſiſted between us, your anſwer in the preſent inſtance, although the welfare of the State depended upon it, has been delayed; my heart, which is captivated in the ties of affection and good-will towards you, is involuntarily ſtruck with ſurpriſe, and filled with uneaſineſs. The Rajah himſelf often calling to mind the excellence of your diſpoſition and underſtanding, aſks, what can be the reaſon, that in three months no letter has been received from Calcutta? —What reaſon can I aſſign?—I replied, that as the letters from here were all written in the cauſe of peace, through the favour of the Almighty, their contents were engraved in your heart, ſince you of yourſelf, had ſent the drafts of a treaty. But as the daring ambition of Hyder Naig has filled Arcot with war and confuſion, that you, being unable to bear his daring inſolence, were taken up with the neceſſary preparation of ſending troops to chaſtiſe him, occaſioned this delay; but that it was no matter, as your anſwer would certainly arrive in a few days. To ſpeak to the point at once; the greatneſs of the wealth, and the numerous armies of the State; the ſtrength and power of the Purdhan Pundit, and his Generals; the multitude of forts and ſtrong holds in their poſſeſſion; and the ſtrength, valour, and proweſs, which they have diſplayed for theſe fifty years paſt in the wars carried on in the Decan and Hindoſtan, are written on the leaves of the world; and are too well known to need a repetition. There are few places in Decan or Hindoſtan which have not felt the hoofs of the Maratta horſes. Their armies ſpread like the ocean, and are in all places. But praiſes, a thouſand praiſes, to the excellency of your meaſures, your exertions in war, and your regard to honour and glory; that amidſt the diſcord which ſhakes the world, you ſtand like a rock on your ground unmoved; and in proportion as the troubles increaſe beyond the power of remedy, your ſtrength and proweſs riſe ſuperior a hundredfold; who only, from the circumſtance of a Frenchman's having been admitted to the preſence of the Regency of Poonah, obſerved the ſcent of enmity and ſeparation, and inſtantly conceived the remedy, ſent a force under the command of Colonel Leſlie againſt this place, and diſpatched Mr. Elliott to negociate the affair; and when that gentleman died on the expedition, Beneram Pundit was furniſhed with proper diſpatches and inſtructions from hence; General Goddard was written to, that at firſt he ſhould try every means, and uſe his utmoſt endeavours for peace; but in caſe of this failing, he was to proceed to hoſtilities. After the defeat of the Bombay detachment, General Goddard marched to Surat, ſeized upon Guzzerat, and gave aſſiſtance to Futty Sing Guicawar; letters were ſent to the Government of Poonah, and to me for a ratification of the treaty, as laid down by Colonel Upton, which by the unfortunate chances of things were not attended to; and by the advice and ſuggeſtion of the Nabob Nizam-ul-Dowlah, a plan was laid out to effect the buſineſs by war. Forces were ſent into every quarter. The valour and activity ſhewn by your troops, when in the field, need not be repeated. The intrepidity and ſkill diſplayed by General Goddard for ſix months, in his attack upon Scindia, are beyond a doubt equal to the labours of Ruſtum and Eſfendyar; as none before had ever been victorious over Chiefs ſo mighty and powerful as Scindia and Holkar. In like manner, in the provinces of Madras and Arcot, &c although the Engliſh troops are but few, and thoſe diſperſed in many places; and although Hyder Naig had a numerous army, and well provided with ſtores, yet their valour and reſolution has not been damped, particularly ſince the arrival of General Coote at Madras. Theſe are the effects of your exertions, by which your forces have gained additional ſtrength. The whole are now aſſembled, and are in the field againſt Hyder; perhaps, by this time there has been a deciſive engagement; as Hyder is in alliance with the French, and a large force is on the way by ſea to aſſiſt him, the Engliſh have ſent out a fleet properly equipped to intercept it. In the Zellah of Kandeiſh, dependent on the province of Berrampore, the Engliſh are engaged in a bloody war with Holkar. In the province of Malva, near Oögeyn, the conteſt is wonderful; Scindia, at the head of thirty thouſand horſe, attended by all the Rajahs and Zemindars of that country, making in all near fifty thouſand horſe, have ſurrounded the Engliſh troops which had marched from Bopaul and Nawa at Seronge. The Engliſh, though their number is ſmall, are prepared to fight them. General Goddard, in three days and nights, in defiance of the forces of Ram Chunder Gunnis, who attempted to oppoſe his progreſs, has taken the fort of Baſſein, which is the firſt amongſt the forts for ſtrength; and after ſettling that ſtrong fort, and taking ſome other places, he is now in the field againſt Hurry Pundit and Holkar, who have an army of fifty thouſand tried horſe and native Generals, and many large cannon at the ghaut, and has taken poſt in places of difficult acceſs, and great natural ſtrength. The Government and Chiefs of Poonah have thrown aſide their affection to their families, and are reſolved to devote their town to the flames. They only wait till they hear of General Goddard's marching from his ſtation at the ghaut, and then that which is to be will take place. Although the Nabob Nizam-ul-Dowlah has not yet joined the Poonah army, yet he has collected his forces, and made the neceſſary preparations. In ſhort, your good ſenſe, valour, and victorious fortune in every part, againſt all oppoſition, has lighted up ſo aſtoniſhing a flame of war, that for 50 or 100 years back no Power has been ſo univerſally ſucceſsful againſt every General, and every Power oppoſed to them. The Rajah is continually ſinging the praiſes of theſe exertions; and I, whoſe heart and ſoul are intereſted in your welfare, wiſh earneſtly and ſincerely for the honour of an interview with you, and that, without waiting for the permiſſion of the Miniſter of the Pundit Purdhaun, I may ſee with my own eyes the form of that greatneſs, which is the ſource of all this bravery, conduct, grandeur, ſtate, wiſdom, and knowledge of mankind; that I may explain to you my ideas, and the plan which I have for a long time revolved in my mind for the benefit of the State, and hear from your own mouth the obſervations which you ſhall think proper to make; that I may be able to ſettle the terms of ſuch a treaty between the Engliſh and the Peiſhwa, as may be for the benefit of both; that the thorns of diſcontent, which are in the breaſt of the Engliſh nation againſt Hyder Naig and the French, by conſultation with each other, may be removed with eaſe. Your name and reputation is great

Appendix. No 372.

in

in the world, and in the preſence of the Royal Majeſty of England: but what can I do? I have been ſix months confined by illneſs, and at preſent I am ſo tortured with pains in my left leg and arms, that I can ſcarce ſit down or riſe up: I receive no benefit from the medicines I take. As you have with you gentlemen completely ſkilled in phyſic, if any ſuch gentleman with proper medicines and oils can come, it will be regarded by me as the greateſt favour and kindneſs; it will be giving a renewal of life to this well-wiſher, who is equal to manifold ſervices; and when I ſhall be reſtored to health, and ſhall preſent myſelf before you, what ſhall then be done it is ſuperfluous to write. Whatever ſhall come within the compaſs of actual obſervation and experience is truth itſelf. But till the completion of my wiſhes, which depend upon my recovery, be pleaſed to aſſent to what I write in the fulneſs of friendſhip and regard; and believe that what I ſay is only from motives of truth and friendſhip, a foreſight of conſequences, and a knowledge of the affairs; and it is this, that as full revenge has been taken for the diſgrace of the Bombay detachment, and the Engliſh name is a hundred times greater than before, and the dread and reſpect of the Engliſh ſo eſtabliſhed over all, that if any one ſhall hereafter be at enmity with them, the ſame conſequences will be expected to follow; it is therefore not conſonant to wiſdom, to ſuffer the flames of war to lay waſte and ſpread the earth with deſolation. For what you have gained by your power, fortune, and the favour of God, to this hour be thankful, that ſo ſmall a force has been able to prevail againſt ſuch numerous hoſts in every part; and you ſhould by all means open the door to peace and friendſhip, and uſe your utmoſt power to root out the French and Hyder Naig. If you ſhould ſay, I myſelf have formed a treaty, which if they will not accept, what am I to do? The anſwer is this: the articles inſerted in your propoſals reſpecting Ragonaut Row, the fort of Gwalior, and Futty Sing Guicawar, contained obvious grounds for objection; and the affairs of the State and the greatneſs of the Pundit Purdhaun, by his acceding to the above three articles, would have been injured; therefore ſuch anſwers were returned as were judged neceſſary and proper: and further, at the time the propoſed treaty arrived here, the Engliſh forces were employed in ſubduing the country of Cokan, and General Goddard was likewiſe exerting himſelf with the greateſt activity in the ſiege of the fort of Baſſein, and the flames of contention were every day gaining new ſtrength; wherefore, amidſt this conflagration of war, where was there room for deliberation?—And how could propoſals for peace and friendſhip be approved of at ſuch a time? They rather would be looked upon as the language of deceit. If a man was to ſeize another by the head, and attempt to take his turban from him, and a ſtruggle enſued, and at ſuch a time any one was to propoſe to the latter a reconciliation, how would he receive ſuch a propoſal? He would firſt effect his own deliverance, and then liſten to terms of accommodation. Your proffered treaties arrived in the midſt of the ferment of war and paſſion, and therefore remained in ſuſpenſe; nor had any anſwers arrived to what had been ſent from hence. What is paſt is paſt. At this time in which I am writing, the ſcale of ſtrength between the forces of both parties hangs equal. No time can be better than the preſent for the work of peace; you ſhould look upon this as propitious, and not let it ſlip, ſince the wiſe never let opportunity paſs, for it is impoſſible to be recalled: therefore you ſhould begin a negociation through the mediation of the Nabob Nizam-ul-Dowlah, who is one of the moſt principal Chiefs of the Decan. He will repreſent here whatever you ſhall think proper to write to him, without diminution or exaggeration; and in return, by the ſame channel, whatever is to be written, will be written; and let the Nabob Mobarez-ul-Mulk be applied to in reſpect of this negociation, who is the firm pillar of the fortune and greatneſs of the Aſofean race, and to whom you have heretofore written; ſo that the Rajah, the Nabob Mobarez ul-Mulk, and the Nabob Nizam-ul-Dowlah may join in a mediation, and obtain from Pundit Purdhaun ſuch a treaty as may prevent any diſputes in future, and a plan laid for extirpating the power of Hyder and the French. Appendix No. 373.

The above advice is juſt, and according to good ſenſe; you will certainly ſee the propriety of it, and ſoon ſhew your approbation publicly; and you will believe what I have written to be the dictates of my friendſhip and good wiſhes; but if not, the matter will be carried to ſuch a length, that it will be impoſſible to bring it again in the ſame train. For how long will General Goddard remain at the ghauts? As it will not be proper for him to retreat, he will deſcend from the ghaut upon Poonah. The Maratta Chiefs with their own hands will ſet fire to the town, level all their houſes with the duſt, and ſprinkling their arms and feet with the aſhes of their habitations, and devoting their families and poſſeſſions to deſtruction, will perform acts beyond the power of imagination, which their opponents will never be able to get the better of. Nizam-ul-Dowlah alſo will not ſit an idle ſpectator of the ſame. Hyder, with ſo large a force, and the aſſiſtance of the French, will not remain inactive: and Scindiah, who is a renowned and warlike Chief, and who has a force of near 50,000 horſe, with Rajahs and Zemindars, and who has of old rendered ſervices to the imperial throne, will exert himſelf while able to move hand or foot. God knows what they may be able to perform, or what game the deceitful heavens may play: you ſhould therefore look on what has already been brought to paſs as fortunate, and begin the work of peace. What I have written is merely from a regard to the friendſhip which you have at all times diſplayed towards me. In the letters with which you formerly honoured me, you wrote, that "On your comfort and "ſatisfaction depend the comfort and ſatisfaction of "mankind, and the peace and happineſs of the people; "let not therefore ſorrow for your deceaſed wife prey "upon your heart."

From the emotions of my heart therefore, and the impulſe of friendſhip, which attracts me towards you, I have been induced to write ſo fully. I have not omitted a ſingle point in this letter that could contribute to ſet matters in the fulleſt light, either in weighing the preſent circumſtances, or looking forward to future conſequences. I have the ſtrongeſt hopes that you will examine the whole by yourſelf, word by word, and approve of all that I have ſaid. And after the foundation of peace is thus laid, and I am relieved a little from my diſorder, I will certainly do myſelf the honour of having one time an interview with you.

Par. 19. FROM the invariable tenor of our advices to your Honours, you will perceive a ſtrong, and we are ſorry to believe a juſt opinion of the ruinous conſequences which would ſooner or later fall upon the Company, from the war which your ſervants at the other Preſidencies had unneceſſarily entered into with the Maratta State. Vide Letter 3d April 1780, by Bordering upon each other's dominions, and heated by jealouſy and a deſire of plunder, Hyder and the Marattas never could have remained upon amicable terms. Every year, unleſs when we ſtepped in to ſuſpend their operations, the country of the one or the other was the theatre of war. Their ſucceſs was various; but the effect to the Engliſh intereſt was the ſame, they reciprocally waſted their ſtrength, and found a ſufficiency of employment at home to hinder their diſturbing the tranquillity of their neighbours.

20. Whilſt theſe two Governments, the moſt powerful in Hindoſtan, were thus weakening themſelves by an inveterate war, which from the known diſpoſition of the parties, was never likely to have an end, your ſettlements were at peace, and your proſperity was making the quickeſt advances to its fulleſt ſtate. Unhappily for your intereſts, the flame of diſſention at length broke forth at Bombay. The ſeeds of war which were then ſown in ſupport of the cauſe of Ragonaut Row, and which were afterwards nouriſhed in the moſt unbounded manner by the Government of Bengal, gave a reſpite to theſe rival Powers. They ſoon began to ſlacken in their oppoſition: the pretenſions of each became every day more moderate. At length they combined againſt us, and from being enemies cemented the ſtrongeſt ties of mutual aſſiſtance and ſupport, againſt a conſequence which they had every reaſon to conſider as too formidable and interfering for the repoſe of India.

92. In this manner did we communicate our ſentiments to the Governor General and Council on the ſubject of the Guntoor Circar. Your Honours will determine whether they accord with the deciſion they have been pleaſed to paſs in their letter of the 10th October 1780, "That we preſumed to hold the Circar of Guntoor at all events, in defiance of a requiſition from the Governor General and Council peremptorily made to return it. That we had refuſed to withdraw our troops, and remove our agents and collectors from it, knowing as we did that they had formerly pledged the faith of the Company to the Nabob Nizam Ally Cawn for both thoſe points, thereby degrading the authority, weakening the energy, and preventing the efficacy of the power of their Government."

93. Involved as your affairs are in every quarter of Hindoſtan, the accuſation of wantonly adding to the flame, carries in its conſequences a degree of criminality which every Government ſatisfied with the rectitude of its actions, is warranted to clear itſelf of, and even to retort upon thoſe who are primarily and principally concerned.

94. We have already ſaid, and we again repeat it, the Maratta war is the ſole cauſe of all the miſchiefs which hitherto have been felt, or hereafter may befal the intereſts of England in India. The viſionary purſuit of that ſcheme hath plunged you into the moſt complicated public calamity. The country Powers tired of the yoke, rejoice at the ruinous meaſures, which to the expenditure of all your treaſure in Bengal, and of all that hath been borrowed, hath been offenſively carried on againſt the combined Maratta empire. Nor ſhall we heſitate in declaring it our opinion, that unleſs a peace is ſpeedily concluded with that Power, the hard earned ſupremacy of your ſituation will ſink under a blow the moſt ſevere that it hath ever yet received.

APPENDIX, No. 374.

Minute of Sir Eyre Coote: 12th January 1781.

AT the ſame time I put my ſignature to the General Letter of the 9th of January 1781, I muſt in candour and conformity to thoſe opinions which I have both held and expreſſed, except againſt one part of it, and which aſcribes all our preſent miſfortunes to the Maratta war.

That that meaſure may firſt have given birth to the idea of a general combination of the Powers of Hindoſtan againſt us, I will not endeavour to diſprove; but that to it alone we owe the formidable incurſion of Hyder Ally into the Carnatic, I cannot admit. Firſt, becauſe long after we had commenced hoſtilities againſt the Marattas, Hyder himſelf continued to make conqueſts upon them, and which our operations no doubt facilitated. It was his favourite object, and which I am confident he would never have quitted, or ſought for an union with the Marattas againſt us, had not our negociations with Bazalet Jung about the Guntoor Circar, on which he had alſo views, and the mode in which they were carried on, awakened his jealouſy, and very naturally made him apprehend, that our ultimate intentions were to poſſeſs ourſelves of ſome part of his country. Whilſt it anſwered his purpoſe to make peace with the Marattas, in order that his attention or ſtrength might in no ſhape be diverted from providing effectually for the ſecurity of his own territories, it was entirely ſuitable to the Marattas in their then ſituation, as it enabled them to direct their whole force againſt the operations of our army under Brigadier General Goddard. We alarmed his fears for the ſafety of his own country, croſſed his views upon the Guntoor Circar, which he was deſirous of obtaining in farm from Bazalet Jung. That an able agent might not be wanting to foment theſe offences, we deliberately gave umbrage to the Nabob Nizam; firſt, by ſeeking and actually ſubſcribing to a treaty of friendſhip with his brother and ſubject Bazalet Jung, without aſking his conſent or approbation; and next, by demanding of him a remiſſion of the peſhcuſh, or tribute, which for theſe eleven years and upwards we have paid him, as in treaty bound, on account of the northern Circars. To prevent any bad conſequences ariſing from the delay in the payment of the peſhcuſh, which was owing in the firſt place to a temporary inability created by the heavy current expences which were unavoidably incurred by the ſiege of Pondicherry; and in the next place, perhaps by miſmanagement, I was induced, when I ſtopped here in my way to Bengal, to recommend the miſſion of Mr. Hollond, as Ambaſſador to the Nizam's Court, to aſſure him that the peſhcuſh ſhould be paid, and to explain to him the cauſe of its detention.

The Nizam has in his letters to this Government, and in his converſations with Mr. Hollond, who communicated them to the Governor General and Council, avowed his diſpleaſure on account of our behaviour with regard to the peſhcuſh and the Guntoor treaty, and has without ſcruple acknowledged his having for theſe reaſons encouraged and connived at a combination of the Powers againſt us.

With all theſe circumſtances before me, and which the records both here and in Bengal bear teſtimony, and further knowing it as a thing certain, that at the very time the treaty was carrying on with Bazalet Jung, Hyder would have entered into an offenſive and defenſive alliance with us, I would do an injury to myſelf, and a ſtill greater one to our ſuperiors, who are to paſs their judgment on men and meaſures, by the documents handed them from their reſpective Governments in India, did I tacitly ſubſcribe to that part of the general letter to the Court of Directors, which I have hereby excepted againſt, and not alſo elucidate the other cauſes, beſides the Maratta war, which have aſſiſted to haſten our preſent diſtreſſes.

I requeſt that this may go a number in the packet now under diſpatch.

APPENDIX, No. 375.

Extract of Bombay Diary, the 15th April 1781.

Extract of Letter from General Sir Eyre Coote to Brigadier General Goddard; dated Camp, New Town, 1ſt March 1781.

WHEN I wrote you in the terms I did, the moſt expreſſive I could dictate, of the diſtreſſed ſituation of affairs here, wherein I enumerated the various difficulties I had to combat againſt, the ſmalneſs of my force, and the impoſſibility of attacking the enemy in the ſtrong holds he was poſſeſſed of unleſs a diverſion was created in his country, to oblige him to divide the very formidable force he had in the Carnatic; I ſay, when I ſtated theſe circumſtances, and added to them my firm opinion, that nothing but our united efforts ſpeedily exerted could poſſibly poſſibly retrieve the misfortunes which had fallen upon our intereſts on this coaſt, and the conſequent ruin which threatened the whole of the Engliſh poſſeſſions in India, I did not mean to enhance any credit which might ariſe from my honeſt exertions in the cauſe of my country, and my employers, but that you might be the better convinced of the real neceſſity there was for ſeeking for an accommodation with the Marattas on any terms, rather than that by proſecuting a deſtructive war, delay ſhould have happened in purſuing ſuch meaſures as promiſed the accompliſhment of the grand national object, giving an effectual check to the increaſing power and influence of Hyder Ally Cawn. I will not argue how far my orders as Commander in Chief ought to have weighed with you on the occaſion; but I muſt ſay, when, together with them, I ſtated the imminent danger which I conceived to impend the Britiſh intereſts in India, and under the expreſs authority delegated to me over the Bengal troops under your command, pointed out the mode whereby that danger might be averted; I experienced a very heavy diſappointment in your not having at leaſt aimed at the ceſſation of hoſtilities with the Marattas, for which the reſolutions of the Governor General and Council, as well as the ſpirit of the propoſed treaty itſelf, gave a clear latitude, with the authority you poſſeſs over the Bengal troops independent of the Bombay Adminiſtration, and furniſhed with a juſt account of the ſituation of affairs of the moſt ſerious importance, and which ſtood in need of ſuch ſpeedy ſupport. I am confident, that had you made it, as it deſerved, the firſt object in your deliberations with the Bombay Council, that they would have ſeen the propriety of countenancing it; and that had they and you in conſequence been ſolicitous about it in our communication with the Miniſters at Poonah, I have every reaſon to think, from the ſituation which the affairs of the Maratta State were then in, might eaſily have been effected. I will not be certain that no endeavours have been exerted to that end, but as you make no mention of any thing to that effect in your letters, I am juſtified in drawing the concluſion I have done; and in adding, that I conceive my powers as Commander in Chief in India have not been treated with that attention to which in a time of warfare they are entitled to, and more particularly at a juncture and on an occaſion like the preſent, which called for their exerciſe and interpoſition. I wiſh nevertheleſs to reſt the judgment to be formed of my conduct, and the conduct of the other parties, who have had either an executive or deliberative ſhare in the management of public affairs, upon our own evident neceſſities, which it muſt be confeſſed were too alarming to juſtify any meaſures that could delay the much wanted cure of all our diſtreſſes, a Maratta peace. Although I ever conſidered the policy of warring againſt the Maratta State a moſt ruinous one to the intereſts both of the Company and the Engliſh nation; ſtill on the eve of your late ſucceſs, if we had no other Power to combat againſt, I might have ſubſcribed to the plan you adviſed me, as laid down for the operations of your campaign, as the moſt likely to procure us honourable terms of accommodation; but engaged as we are in a ſcene of contention, I may ſay with every power of any conſideration in India, all ſteps, the event of which could not be clearly aſcertained as an unfailing remedy, muſt be exceptionable. By proſecuting the war our difficulties muſt be increaſed, and the proſpect of obtaining peace become daily more diſtant. Our reſources, anticipated by the current demands of our military eſtabliſhment, in which they are unequal, and burthened with a heavy debt, cannot long ſupport the preſent ſyſtem. I muſt therefore impoſe it upon you as a duty you owe your king, your country, and your employers, to leave no means which may depend upon you, untried, to effect a peace with the Marattas, and which may enable you ſpeedily to carry into execution my orders for entering and creating a powerful diverſion in Hyder Ally's country on the Malabar ſide.

P. S. I think it neceſſary to inform you I have received information, that Hyder Ally Cawn is uſing every means in his power to defeat our views of peace with the Marattas, and has even carried his intrigue ſo far as to authorize Ragonaut Row to employ his credit in the expenditure of whatever ſums he may find neceſſary to that end. Extract of Bombay Diary, the 15th April 1781.

Letter from Sir Eyre Coote to the Preſident and Seleſt Committee of Bombay.

Gentlemen,

By letters which I have received from Brigadier General Goddard, I have had the pleaſure to be informed of the ſurrender of the important fortreſs of Baſſein to our arms on the 11th December; on which event permit me to congratulate you.

Although I have not been honoured with any reply to my letter November, theſe letters alſo ſufficiently inform me of your having been made acquainted with my earneſt deſire of the troops under Brigadier General Goddard's command, being employed againſt the poſſeſſions of Hyder Ally, of my reaſons for expreſſing that deſire; and in order that he might do ſo to the beſt advantage, of my anxious wiſh to ſee an accommodation take place between the Marattas. By the ſame letters it alſo appears, that you were in poſſeſſion of the terms of the treaty offered to them by the Supreme Council, and of their deliberations thereon, conſequently you were poſſeſſed of every material and authority neceſſary to aſſiſt and ſanctify your councils, which it gives me concern to find ſhould have terminated in a reſolution to proſecute hoſtilities againſt the Marattas.

What are the grounds upon which this reſolution was taken, and its neceſſity evinced, it is impoſſible I ſhould know without having ſeen your proceedings; of this however I am certain, that if to enable us to direct our whole force againſt Hyder Ally it was neceſſary to make peace with the Marattas, even upon their own terms, it would have been according to what I am fully convinced ought not to be put in competition with the riſk which is now run by proſecuting the war, and would in the preſent ſituation of affairs, which is truly a deſperate one, been a much better policy, and in the end, have terminated more to the advantage of the Company and the nation, than that which has been adopted, and which nothing but a ſucceſſion of the moſt fortuitous circumſtances can poſſibly bring to a happy concluſion. The deliberations of the Governor General and Council on the ſubject of peace with the Marattas, gave a latitude for a ceſſation of hoſtilities, but I cannot gather from the letters I have received from Brigadier General Goddard, that any endeavours have been exerted to that end, which certainly, circumſtanced as we are, was an object at leaſt to have been purſued, if we had failed in the accompliſhment of it.

For your further information, I encloſe you a copy of my letter to General Goddard, and leſt the original may miſcarry, as all land conveyances are now become very precarious, I beg you will tranſmit him a copy of it.

I have the honour to be,
Gentlemen,
Your moſt obedient humble Servant,
Eyre Coote.

APPENDIX, No. 376. A.

Extract of a Letter from the Preſident and Seleſt Committee at Bombay, to General Sir Eyre Coote, K. B. dated 26th April 1781.

IN our letter of the 15th of February, by the Indus, we fully explained our motives for recommending to

Appendix. No. 376. B.

General Goddard a vigorous proſecution of the war againſt the Marattas; which we thought the moſt probable and rational method of bringing them to terms, neither had we in that caſe any room for deliberation, our line of conduct being diſtinctly marked out by the Governor General and Council, who after acquainting us, that they had offered terms to the Maratta Government, direct us on receipt of a certain requiſition and notification from the Peiſhwa, immediately to ſuſpend all hoſtilities and military operations; but in the mean time, and until the receipt of ſuch requiſition or notification, they earneſtly recommended a vigorous proſecution of the war, ſo far as our troops were engaged in it, and acquainted us that a ſimilar order had been ſent to General Goddard.

We are convinced of the neceſſity, and ſincerely deſirous of bringing the Maratta war to a concluſion; but it is not becauſe we are deſirous of peace, or that peace is neceſſary to our affairs, that will prove arguments with the enemy for conſenting to an accommodation; and until that happens it would be as impracticable and as unſafe for us to employ the army againſt the poſſeſſions of Hyder Ally, as it would be for you to make a diverſion in our favour againſt the Marattas: in this ſituation we have done the utmoſt in our power for the common cauſe. We have reduced the war on our part as nearly as poſſible to a mere ſyſtem of defence, and determined to ſend back all the Madras troops ſerving on this coaſt, in order to make the army under your command more reſpectable and formidable, and thereby to diſtreſs Hyder to the utmoſt degree that lay within our power.

It is not to be doubted but that the Marattas and Hyder are bound by mutual engagements, which we may conclude they will abide by ſo long as they may find it for their intereſt or ſafety. Proviſion muſt therefore be made to reſiſt the attempts of both theſe Powers until one or other can be detached from their engagements, or be effectually depreſſed; and it now appears to us that we can only expect this criſis from the event of your operations againſt Hyder, which we have ſanguine hopes will be attended with the moſt deciſive ſucceſs, and that Hyder himſelf will be inclined to peace now he finds himſelf diſappointed in his hopes of aſſiſtance from the French. We then might hope to bring the Marattas to terms, which it has appeared the offers from Bengal have not been able to effect; though, as we have already mentioned in our letter, dated the 6th March, General Goddard, in conſequence of our recommendation, ſent a copy of the articles directly from himſelf to the Miniſter, who had affected ignorance of their contents.

We have encloſed a copy of the anſwer the General received from the Miniſter, wherein he evidently alludes to, and acknowledges engagements with Hyder Ally, and in direct terms refuſes to accede to the offers.

We have advices, which we believe very authentic, of Hyder having ſuſtained a very material loſs by the blowing up of his magazine and powder works at Bednare, on the 2d or 3d of laſt month.

No. 376. B.

The Requeſts of the Nabob Wallah Jah from the Governor General.

1. Let a treaty be firmly eſtabliſhed between us, which may laſt for ever and be ſubject to no deviation.

2. I am hereditary Prince of the Carnatic, and of Balla Ghauts under Peanghaut, and am independent of every one, and I have entire right and authority over my country, my children, my family, my ſervants, and ſubjects, and have power in the political and domeſtic adminiſtration of my country. This ought to be altogether dependant on me, and let not my friends interfere in it.

3. As the Company and Engliſh nation are the protectors of my honour and government, they will act in thoſe points only where the advancement of my intereſts is concerned.

4. Ten battalions of well-diſciplined troops are ſtationed by me with the Company, and are paid by me; let them take nothing from me, except the pay of them, and let all the contingent expences, the batta for their marches, and the repairs of the forts, be by my conſent; and let the accounts of every three months be punctually delivered to me within the ſixth month: when peace ſhall be reſtored, I will diſcharge the amount regularly, and let the Governor and Council of Madras give me a full receipt, and in time of peace, let them aſſiſt me with thoſe ten battalions, that I may ſettle the country ſubject to me, and derive ſome advantage from the expence.

5. Many Polygars, notwithſtanding that they have met with the greateſt favour from me in time of peace, have, from their ambitious and rebellious views, joined my enemy Hyder Ally, and began open war; I can therefore never place any reliance upon them or look upon them as deſerving of favour. In this caſe, my ſubjects are to be kept in awe by the puniſhment of theſe people; for which aſſiſtance is neceſſary.

6. After peace and alliance is made between us and the Engliſh Company, the enemies, the ſecurity, and the dangers of both will be the ſame; that is to ſay, whoever of us ſuffers an injury it will be felt by both of us. I therefore wiſh that the Engliſh in India, or the King of Great Britain, would make a treaty of peace with the King of France, and let the peace and ſecurity of the Carnatic, and the rights of my Government, without the connection of any one, and my power to appoint a ſucceſſor in the Carnatic, be ſettled in a ſolid manner, and included in the treaty.

7. In the garriſons of my forts, Commandants and Paymaſters are ſent, who at the advice of their Dabpaſh's, with a view to profit, lend money to the Ryots at an exorbitant intereſt, and afterwards are preſſing for the money, and interfere in the Government, and aſſiſt one another, by which great injury is done to my ſubjects and to myſelf: let it be poſitively ordered, that without my permiſſion no one lend money to my ſubjects, and that for what is paſt as well as future the intereſt on all loans be 12 per cent. per annum, and that if any perſon ſhould act contrary to this, and ſhould diſtreſs the Ryots, I ſhall complain againſt him, and requeſt his removal: and the Governor and Council of Madras will remove him from his office, and appoint another perſon in his room.

8. My conſtant wiſh has been to diſcharge the money due to the troops ſtationed by the Company, and I have always exerted myſelf for this purpoſe; from the commencement of my connection I have paid very conſiderable ſums on this account, and on the day that Hyder invaded the Carnatic I owed the Governor and Council of Madras leſs than one lack of pagodas, which I was in hopes of diſcharging by receiving bills from the bankers in the country; when in the mean while the attack of our enemy began, and inſtead of paying the balance in money to the Company, provided in my country a greater amount than that in rice and bullocks and ſheep for the army, beſides the ſtores in my forts, of which there is a large ſupply in Trichinopoly, and a leſs quantity in Velore, &c. and what was in thoſe forts which our enemy has taken is in his poſſeſſion; had not my bad deſtiny produced many obſtacles, there is no doubt but at this time I ſhould not have been indebted one ſingle pagoda to the Company. Of ſeveral Talooks of the Carnatic, which are ſtill ſecure from our enemy, the collections are included in the accounts of the Company, but ſome Talooks are aſſigned to my creditors, and ſome I have received the Paiſhgall in advance; for whatever is collected from thoſe Mahls, let it be expended for the Company; but for the ſatisfaction of my creditors, my friends muſt be juſt; as ſoon as the enemy ſhall have left my country, let the collections of thoſe Talooks be given to my creditors in order to pay off their principals agreeable to my engagements with them.

9. For ſeveral reaſons, and from the invaſion of my enemy, which are not unknown to my friends, I am greatly diſtreſſed, and my ſubjects are not in a ſtate to ſuffer me to have any hopes from them. With my exertions and endeavours alone, it is difficult to adjuſt my concerns; it is neceſſary that my friends ſhould be juſt and favourable to me, and ſhould aſſiſt me in this manner, by giving into my hands, after the defeat of our enemy, the Talook of Herpah and Zurghaut, and ſeveral Mahls in Ballaghaut, belonging to Carnatic Peanghaut, which are in my country, and are my right; and I will maintain in my ſervice 5,000 well-diſciplined horſe for the collection of it.

10. The Talooks of Tanjore, which are my right, I, at a conſiderable expence, conformably to the rules and practice of Hindoſtan, took poſſeſſion of; in this my friends aſſiſted me, for which I returned them thanks; ſince that they have, at the ſole inſtigation of ſelf-intereſted people, taken it from me by force, which has brought great damage to me, my ſubjects, and creditors: to this time ſuch is the ſituation. Numbers of my creditors are Engliſhmen, which is not unknown to you, as I have repeatedly written to you. From that time my right has been given up to a Ryot of mine, but no advantage has accrued from it to the Company's concerns; but on the contrary, he has connected himſelf ſtrictly with Hyder Ally and the Marattas, and has refuſed to ſupply money and ſtores, but keeps all his money in Negapatam, a Dutch ſettlement. If my friends would act juſtly, and give the Talook to me, great advantage would be derived to the Company's and my affairs, and the views of our enemies would be counteracted: otherwiſe let the whole collections of Tanjore be appropriated to the payment of the Carnatic army, my public and private debts, and the expulſion of our enemy. Tanjore is a Talook of the Carnatic, and let a ſhare of it be aſſigned to my creditors, that they may be quieted and pacified in ſome degree till my friends in England ſhall have done me juſtice, and let the Governor General and Council, conformably to their juſtice and greatneſs, write about this matter, which is my right.

The Governor General and Council have the adminiſtration of the affairs of India; if the inquiry into this matter depends on the gentlemen in Europe, it is for the general advantage that they ſhould write about it. I am the friend of the Company: the great weight of debts, the mortgaging my jewels, and the ſale of them, have brought on me a diſgrace and diſtreſs which the Company never meant to come upon their old friend.

11. Beſides the expences of the Company, the pay of my troops, the native bankers, my creditors, the Hindoo and Muſſulmen ſecurities, I am indebted about 70 lacks of pagodas to European creditors, both old and new; and people living under the protection of the Company; reflect on the payment of ſuch large ſums. I am plunged into a ſea of diſtreſs. Except from the aſſiſtance of my friends, I can ſee no releaſe from this heavy load, that having eſcaped from ſuch anxiety might apply myſelf to the cultivation of the country and the protection of the Ryots. I therefore beg your advice and ſentiments on this point, which I requeſt you to give in ſuch a manner as no injury may ariſe to my concerns and reputation, no detriment to my creditors, and no loſs to the Company.

Replies from the Honourable the Governor General and Council to the Requeſts of the Nabob Wallah Jah.

1 A temporary treaty ſhall be made, ſubject to the reviſion and approbation of the Company, and it is hoped this may ſerve as the baſis of another treaty, to be concluded under the orders and inſtructions of the Company, and even with the ſanction of the Engliſh Parliament, which may endure for ever, and rendered ſo binding, that it ſhall not be in the power of any individual to break it, or to depart from it. Appendix. No. 376. E.

2. The right and authority which the Nabob poſſeſſes over his country, his children, his family, his ſervants, and ſubjects, in all the political and domeſtic adminiſtration of his country, we will maintain and ſupport.

3. Certainly.

4. Both the pay of theſe troops and their batta and contingent expences, and even the repairs of the forts, if any repairs are neceſſary, ought undoubtedly to be charged to the Nabob's account, becauſe theſe are expences incurred for his own immediate ſervice; and in the time of war muſt depend upon the Commander in Chief of the forces, under the cuſtomary regulations, and reſtrictions. The remainder of this article is very proper; but it ſeems ſtrange to us that a claim ſhould be made of this kind, or any doubts implied concerning it.

5. The Nabob is the maſter of his own country, and the diſtributer of juſtice to his own ſubjects. This is ſo clear that it appears as if ſomething more was meant than is expreſſed in the propoſition.

6. In whatever treaty ſhall be concluded between the Nabob and the Company, it will of courſe be ſtipulated, that the friends or enemies of either party ſhould be held as equally the friends or enemies of the other, and their intereſt, their ſafety, and their danger the ſame. Such has been the implied condition of the alliance hitherto ſubſiſting between the Nabob and the Company, although unſupported by any written engagements. Reſpecting the latter claim of this article, we are informed by Aſſam Cawn, the Nabob's Dewan, that the Nabob poſſeſſes letters from the Company, the King's Miniſter, and the King himſelf, on the ſubject of his will; and he has produced copies of thoſe from the King and from the Company, which all expreſs a clear acknowledgment of the Nabob's right to appoint a ſucceſſor to the Government of the Carnatic. It is therefore unneceſſary, and would be unbecoming in this Government to make any proviſion, even in a temporary treaty for ſuch event, which we hope is far diſtant. Such acknowledgments are equivalent to treaties, and of the higheſt poſſible authority; and muſt be binding on all the ſervants of the Company, and on all the King's ſubjects.

7. We are greatly afflicted that any occaſion ſhould have been afforded for ſuch complaints as are ſtated in this article; they are no leſs repugnant to juſtice, than injurious to the Engliſh reputation. We are willing to engage on the part of the Engliſh Company, and of all their dependants, that no one under their authority ſhall be permitted to lend money to any of the Nabob's ſubjects for the time to come: that it ſhall be prohibited in public orders. And it is equitable, that if any perſon ſhall act contrary to this prohibition, or ſhall oppreſs the Ryots, the Nabob ſhall have a right to require his removal: and that the Governor and Council of Madras ſhall be bound in ſuch requiſition to remove him, and to bring him to a public trial, that he may ſuffer ſuch ſentence as ſhall be due to the degree of the offence, if it ſhall be eſtabliſhed againſt him. But as we conceive that it will be often difficult in caſes of this nature to obtain ſuch evidence of the facts as the ſtrict forms of our military laws require, and muſt in every caſe render the Nabob popularly obnoxious, by ſtanding forth as he neceſſarily muſt, in the character of a proſecutor, againſt the ſervants of the Company, to whom he ought never to be known but by acts of benevolence; and as the appointment to military commands in his country is intended for his ſole benefit and the ſupport of his Government and intereſts; we proceed yet further to declare, that the Nabob has a juſt claim to object to the appointment of any

any perſon of whom he ſhall diſapprove, to any command in his country, or to the continuance of any perſon in ſuch command, againſt whom he ſhall have cauſe of ſufficient validity for his own conviction to object; and that in every ſuch caſe the Governor and Council ought to conform to his opinions: but the invariable application of this rule can only be admitted in a time of peace. In a ſtate of actual war it might be productive of dangerous conſequences, and the principle on which it is conſtructed muſt be therefore in ſuch a ſeaſon left to the equity of the Governor and Council, and the diſcretion of the Commander in Chief of the forces.

8. This is juſt. Let the Nabob conſent and engage to aſſign all the revenues of his country during the war, without any exception, to the Company, for the actual ſupport of the war. Let the collections and their aſſignments be made by his own Aumils, in conjunction with perſons appointed by the Preſident and Council of Fort Saint George, and inveſted with an authority from him to receive from the Aumils all the money which ſhall be collected, and to intercept and ſeize all ſums of money which the Aumils or others ſhall attempt to ſecrete from the diſtricts under their juriſdiction, that the whole may be applied and excluſively appropriated to the ſervice of the war, excepting ſuch ſums as the Nabob ſhall require to be paid immediately to himſelf for his and the neceſſary diſburſements of his country: that he will remove and puniſh ſuch of his Aumils as ſhall attempt to elude this regulation; and that the perſons as above mentioned appointed to receive the revenues, as the pledge of their integrity ſhall be required to ſwear that they will be true to the truſt repoſed in them, and that they will neither receive nor permit to be taken, either directly or indirectly, any portion of the revenues but ſuch as they ſhall bring to a public account. That of ſuch Talooks as have been aſſigned to the Nabob's creditors, the nett ſums of the collections ſhall be received into the Company's treaſury for the ſervice of the war, as above provided, but carried to the credit of the collective head of the Nabob's creditors, to whom they have been aſſigned, to be hereafter diſtributed amongſt them according to their reſpective claims. By this arrangement the reſources of the Carnatic will be applied, as they ought to be, to its immediate defence and preſervation, and the Nabob's faith and the rights of the creditors will be ſecured: and this is agreeable to the requeſt which the creditors themſelves have formerly made.

9. The recovery of the Carnatic from the hands of the enemy muſt be our firſt object; that of its dependencies will be ſecond: but it will reſt upon our ability. It cannot be made a fixed article of a treaty, the purpoſe for which the propoſed annexations of Curkapah and Zeer Ghaut Gutti, and the ſeveral mahals in Balaghaut, which belong to Carnatic Payen-ghaut, is profeſſed to be intended, is equally neceſſary for the ſervice of the Nabob and of the Company: and the future ſecurity of their common intereſts; and therefore muſt be equally the deſire of both.

10. This Government has no authority to inquire into the reciprocal claims of the Nabob and the Rajah of Tanjore; theſe are before a higher and a competent tribunal. We can only require that as the Zemindary of Tanjore is a member of the ſoubah or province of Carnatic, its reſources ſhall in like manner be primarily, and at this time of common danger, be excluſively applied to the maintenance of the forces employed in the defence and preſervation of the whole: that the revenues be taken in aſſignment and put under a commiſſion, ſimilar to that propoſed for the reſt of the Carnatic, and received and applied in the ſame manner, and for the ſame purpoſes. This requiſition has been partly made, and ſhall be repeated in the above terms to the Preſident and Council at Fort Saint George; but it will reſt with them to conform to it, or by rejecting it to take the reſponſibility of it upon themſelves.

11. Our advice is this, that a new adjuſtment be made of all the Nabob's debts; contracted with Britiſh ſubjects, without any diſtinction of old debts; of thoſe of a more recent kind, called his conſolidated debts; or of others newly contracted, but not yet brought to any public account or adjuſtment: that the intereſt upon the whole and each debt ſhall be allowed and added to the original debt, to the 25th November 1781, and thenceforward ſhall ceaſe: that from ſuch debts as have been transferred from the original proprietors, by purchaſe or otherwiſe, a deduction ſhall be made of 25 per cent. from the whole amount: and the remainder be the ſum for which the Nabob ſhall be finally debited: that the adjuſtment being made in this manner, the ſum adjuſted to be reſpectively due to each creditor, ſhall be brought to his ſeparate credit: that Company's bonds, with the uſual intereſt, ſhall be granted to each who ſhall be entitled to a ſhare in the ſums received on account of the aſſigned revenues in the proportion of his reſpective debt: and in like manner to the creditors for advances made on the ſecurity of the public revenue for the ſums brought to their account; and that it ſhall be left to the Nabob, with the concurrence of the Preſident and Council of Fort Saint George, and the ſanction of the Governor General and Council, to appropriate ſuch a portion of the revenues after the concluſion of the war, or any period of it, which ſhall admit of ſuch an application of them, as an aſſignment for the annual payment of the debt, until the whole ſhall be diſcharged: that this plan is recommended, both to the Nabob, the Preſident and Council of Fort Saint George and the creditors, and will be ſubmitted to the Company in the firſt advices to them from the Preſidency.

If an agreement ſhall take place according to the above-mentioned plan, it will be neceſſary, both for the purpoſe of rendering it effectual, and for preventing the like diſtreſſes from falling on the Nabob and Individuals in future, that the Nabob ſhall ſolemnly engage that he will never hereafter borrow money from the Company's ſervants, or any other Britiſh ſubjects; that the moſt public notice ſhall be given, that no loans to the Nabob, or bonds accepted upon ſuch loans, ſhall be valid, or the loans recoverable by any influence or interference of the Company or its repreſentatives: and the Governor General and Council will engage on their part, for themſelves, the Company, and their repreſentatives, that no authority of the Company, or of the Preſidency of Fort Saint George, ſhall be employed for the recovery of any debts ſo contracted.

Extract of Letter from the Governor General and Council at Fort William, in their Public Department, to the Court of Directors; dated 14th January 1780.

Par. 44. The drafts made upon us by General Goddard ſince his arrival at Surat, have amounted to Sicca Rupees 32,49,090. 7. 1. beſides which, we have ſupplied him by bills 5 lacks, in ſpecie by the Britannia 8 lacks, and by the Beſborough 2 lacks.

45. The great diſadvantage ſuffered by the Company in the low rate of exchange obtained by General Goddard for his bills, ſome of which were drawn at 93, and none higher than 95 Surat rupees, for 100 Calcutta Siccas, induced us to put a ſtop to his power of drawing, and to adopt the remittance of bullion, as a preſent mode of ſupply, which may enable us to bring back the exchange ſomewhat nearer to its original ſtandard.

46. The united demands upon us from Bombay, General Goddard, and the different offices here, for the neceſſary charges of our own eſtabliſhments, added to the total loſs of 5 lacks in the Stafford, have ſo far dried up our immediate reſources, that we have been obliged to refuſe any further compliance with the application of the Preſidency of Fort Saint George for caſh, and to excuſe ourſelves from ſending the balance, being 5 lacks, which remained to complete the ſupply of 15 lacks, promiſed to them in March laſt.

Extract of Circular Letter from the Committee of Secrecy to Bengal, Fort Saint George, and Bombay; dated the 24th March 1780.

YOU have been informed by our Secret Committee of the deſigns of the enemy to attempt the capture of our ſettlements. You will be vigilant to guard againſt ſurprize, and communicate theſe particulars to the Commander in Chief of His Majeſty's ſhips in India, and to every other Preſident and Council, ſo ſoon as poſſible. The French expect to be joined by the Marattas or Hyder Ally, at or near Callicut, who are ſaid to be impatient for their arrival. Bombay is probably their object. We moſt earneſtly deſire that peace may be ſpeedily concluded with the Marattas, on the terms of excluding the French from that ſide of India; and that our friendſhip and connection with Hyder Ally may be ſtrengthened as much and as ſpeedily as poſſible, on the ſame terms.

Circular Letter from the Secret Committee of the Court of Directors to the following Preſidencies; Bengal, Fort Saint George, Bombay, and China.

Encloſed we tranſmit for your particular information copy of His Majeſty's order in Council, dated the 17th of April inſtant, declaring that the ſubjects of the United Provinces are henceforward to be conſidered upon the ſame footing with thoſe of other neutral States, not privileged by treaty; and ſuſpending proviſionally, and till further order, all the particular ſtipulations reſpecting the freedom of navigation and commerce, in time of war, of the ſubjects of the States General, contained in the ſeveral treaties now ſubſiſting between His Majeſty and the Republic.

But although the ſituation of the affairs of this country is rendered thus critical reſpecting the States General; and although that Republic, by their failure in the execution of their part in the ſeveral treaties with Great Britain, have juſtly forfeited, and by his Majeſty's proclamation are declared to have forfeited, all particular rights and privileges which they were entitled to under the ſaid treaties; yet, His Majeſty ſtill conſiders them as in a ſtate of amity with Great Britain, only reduced by their own conduct to the ſituation of a neutral State, not privileged by treaty.

Upon this ground we caution you to avoid becoming aggreſſors in any act of hoſtility againſt the ſubjects of the Republic in India, and direct, that your conduct be ſuch only as ſhall tend to the preſervation of that good underſtanding which ſtill ſubſiſts between the two countries.

But at the ſame time that we recommend to you the moſt ſcrupulous attention to avoid any offence or act of aggreſſion whatever againſt the ſubjects or poſſeſſions of the Republic, you will moſt vigilantly guard againſt any conſequences which may eventually ariſe from the meaſures which His Majeſty has been under the neceſſity of adopting. We do not mean, however, that you ſhall take any other ſteps, in conſequence of this ſuggeſtion, but ſuch as ſhall be warranted by that line of prudence and caution which the ſecurity of the Company's poſſeſſions and property ſhall fully juſtify, and of which the States General ſhall have no well-grounded reaſon of complaint.

APPENDIX, No. 380.

Extract of general Letter to Bengal, dated 2d February 1781.

Par. 35. OUR Select Committee at Bombay have tranſmitted us a copy of the treaty which General Goddard has concluded with Futty Sing. By a letter from our ſaid Committee, dated the 16th of March 1780, we were led to hope for a favourable and ſpeedy concluſion to a negociation which had then been opened with Madjee Scindia; and although the event has proved otherwiſe, yet as Scindia has ſince experienced the ſuperiority of our arms, we think it probable that he may again be induced to offer or accept reaſonable terms. If not, we have little doubt of his being ſoon compelled thereto by the force employed on that ſervice, under ſo active and able an officer as General Goddard. Appendix. No. 380.

36. In the before mentioned letter, we find our Select Committee of Bombay had repreſented to General Goddard the importance of obtaining poſſeſſion of Baſſein, and offered it as their opinion, that no other object could claim a preference to the General's attention, or bring the campaign to a more honourable and advantageous concluſion; they alſo flattered themſelves, that General Goddard having been reinforced with troops from Madras, would be able to protect effectually our poſſeſſions in Guzerat, and to undertake the ſiege of Baſſein; and if this plan of operations has been purſued, we hope it has been attended with the deſired ſucceſs.

37. It ſeems to be the opinion of our ſaid Committee (provided no efforts would be made by the French to retrieve their affairs in India) that the views of the Company, after eſtabliſhing ourſelves at Baſſein and ſecuring our ſhare of the Guzerat country, ſhould be merely defenſive.

38. No material objection to this plan occurs to us at preſent, provided due care be taken that our European enemies are prevented from regaining their influence, and precluded from ſettling in the Maratta dominions. It would however be ſtill more eligible if proviſion could be made for reimburſing the heavy charges incurred by the war; but if this be found impracticable, we think a relaxation in the demand for indemnification, would be more prudent than further prolongation of the war on that account.

39. We obſerve that when you firſt reſolved to ſend military aſſiſtance to Bombay, you underſtood the plan of operation to be confined merely to the objects of ſecurity to the Engliſh poſſeſſions in India, and to the excluſion of the natural enemies of the Britiſh Government, from any influence or connection with the Marattas, and you made it an expreſs condition of your concurrence, that our ſervants at Bombay ſhould withdraw their forces ſo ſoon as the end required and defined ſhould be accompliſhed.

40. Theſe ſentiments are conſonant to our own ideas, agreeable to the general tenor of our repeated orders and inſtructions, and conſiſtent with the intereſt of the Company. And although the want of ſucceſs in the Bombay expedition might render it neceſſary to carry your views further * than were firſt intended, and the honour of the Company, which had been deeply wounded by the diſgraceful convention of Worgaum, called for the ſtrongeſt exertions, as well to reſtore and preſerve the reputation of our arms, as to reduce the enemy to the neceſſity of liſtening to reaſonable terms of accommodation; yet, as we truſt theſe ends have been anſwered, and as the French are alſo expelled from India, we enjoin you to convince the Marattas, and all the native Powers around you, that our troops ſhall not be employed againſt our neighbours, unleſs they become the aggreſſors; and that we utterly diſavow all ideas of diſturbing the public tranquillity for the ſake of conqueſt.

41. Hoping therefore that our arms have continued ſucceſsful, that the acquired countries in the Guzerat province are properly ſecured, and that Baſſein is in our poſſeſſion, the reſtoration of peace becomes an object of our moſt earneſt deſire; and it will give us inexpreſſible ſatisfaction to find it eſtabliſhed upon a footing ſo advantageous to the Company. 42. The

* Powers to conclude a treaty with Futty Sing were not given to General Goddard till December 1779, which was nearly 11 months after the convention of Worgaum.

Appendix. No. 381.

42. The open and avowed predilection of the Court of Poonah in favour of French agents, was the only ground upon which we countenanced hoſtilities againſt the Marattas. Upon the removal of European influence we repeat our moſt anxious ſolicitude to have a ſpeedy termination put to the war; and as conqueſt is by no means our object, we deſire no other benefit from the late ſucceſs of our arms, than a full compliance with the ſtipulations of the treaty of Poorunder, and the ceſſion of Baſſein, as a neceſſary appendage to Salſette.

43. In order therefore to manifeſt to the ruling Powers of Poonah the ſincerity of our diſpoſition to be at peace upon honourable terms, we ſhall have no objection, on the above conditions, to reſtore the Guzerat countries, provided the ſafety and honour of Futty Sing be effectually ſecured, unleſs better terms have been or can be ſoon and eaſily obtained.

44. But if, contrary to our expectations, unfortunate circumſtances ſhall have rendered it impoſſible to make peace with the Marattas on the above conditions; and if ſupporting the war ſhall be found impracticable, without reducing our inveſtments, and depriving us of thoſe aids which Bengal has uſually furniſhed to our China trade; in ſuch caſe a ſpeedy accommodation with the Marattas will be neceſſary upon the beſt terms poſſible, taking care that the faith and honour of the Company be in all reſpects inviolably preſerved, and that effectual proviſion be made for the ſecurity of our poſſeſſions.

45. Our Select Committee entertained hopes that their views in point of territory might be eſtabliſhed in a few months; they therefore propoſed ſtating their ſentiments on the ſubject to you, and alſo reſpecting the great importance of reducing the charges of the war to more moderate bounds than could be expected whilſt the troops of other Preſidencies are ſerving with thoſe of Bombay; and to theſe important objects you will not fail to pay early attention. Indeed we aſſure ourſelves that the reduction of expence will appear to you ſo abſolutely neceſſary, that every ſtep will be taken which ſhall have a tendency to bring it within the moſt moderate bounds.

46. You will have been informed, that the forts of Perſick and Bellapore have been ſurprized by detachments from Bombay; that a conſiderable quantity of grain had been thereby obtained, of which they were in great want; and that a ſource of future ſupply is opened, which in the preſent ſtate of affairs appears of the utmoſt conſequence.

47. It is with pleaſure we remark, that although our ſervants at Bombay ſeem in ſome degree hurt by the independent powers granted by you to General Goddard, the moſt perfect harmony has nevertheleſs ſubſiſted between the General and our Select Committee at Bombay; and from this circumſtance, and their manifeſt diſpoſition to concur heartily in future operations, we venture to draw the moſt favourable concluſion.

48. It is impoſſible at this diſtance, and without more recent information before us, to be more particular reſpecting the ſituation of our affairs on the weſtern ſide of India. We truſt every thing in your power has been done to render the iſſue of the war adequate to the vaſt expence incurred; the ſafety of our poſſeſſions has we hope been effected, and there ſeems no doubt of the reputation of our arms having been fully reſtored, by the ſpirited, judicious, and very gallant conduct of General Goddard, and the army under his command.

APPENDIX, No. 381.

Bengal, Political, } Letter from the Court of Directors to the Governor General and Council at Fort William, in Bengal; dated 11th April 1781.

Par. 1. IN our letter of the 2d February laſt, we gave you our ſentiments and inſtructions on the poſture of affairs on the weſtern ſide of India, ſo far as we were able from the advices then before us. Since that period, we have received a letter from our Select Committee at Bombay, dated the 25th of July 1780, and are thereby informed, that though the laſt campaign had not produced deciſive advantages, the ſuperiority of our arms had been evinced in the moſt honourable and ſtriking manner; and it will afford us infinite ſatisfaction, if the conſequences have a tendency to haſten the concluſion of a ſafe and honourable peace.

2. It is with concern we acquaint you, that by an intercepted extract of a gazette from the Iſle of France, information is received of Hyder Ally having in July laſt croſſed the Gauts, through the paſs of Changama, entered the Carnatic with a large army, defeated a detachment under the command of Colonels Baillie and Fletcher, and gained other advantages. The action is ſaid to have happened the 10th of September.

3. We have no official information from Fort Saint George later than the 3d of April: by advices of that date we are acquainted, that the Nizam had, in the ſtrongeſt terms, recommended to Bazalet Jung, to give the Guntoor circar at rent to Hyder Ally; that Hyder had actually invaded Bazalet Jung's country, in order to force a compliance, and threatened entire conqueſt, if Bazalet Jung ſhould heſitate to renounce his engagements with the Engliſh; that Bazalet Jung (obliged to ſubmit to neceſſity) had deſired the march of our troops to be ſtopped, and poſſeſſion of the country to be reſtored to him: that our Select Committee at Fort Saint George had readily agreed to the former, but declined complying with the latter propoſition. It alſo appears that a ſpecial meſſenger had been ſent by the Select Committee to Hyder's Court; but that Hyder was not deſirous of their friendſhip, nor did he treat Mr. George Gray, their meſſenger on that occaſion, with reſpect or civility.

4. From the above particulars, we conclude it poſſible that Hyder may have entered the Carnatic, and commenced hoſtilities with a view to diſtreſs Mahomed Ally Khan, who had been put in poſſeſſion of the Guntoor circar, and to compel him to relinquiſh ſuch poſſeſſion.

5. In our laſt advices we expreſſed our expectation that your conciliatory letter to Hyder, of the 17th of February 1780, would be productive of ſalutary effects; we would ſtill entertain the hope of your having been able to ſettle matters amicably with him; and in ſuch caſe direct that you renew the aſſurances given of our deſire to be on terms of cordial friendſhip; but under preſent circumſtances we can preſcribe no poſitive rules for your conduct in this reſpect.

6. If Hyder has really invaded the Carnatic, though the French accounts before us are probably much exaggerated, ſuch an event muſt nevertheleſs have produced great and immediate diſtreſs; and in ſuch caſe it will require your inſtant and powerful exertion to recover affairs from diſorder in that quarter. We have no doubt of your zeal and ability, and rely with confidence upon your beſt endeavours being immediately exerted for that purpoſe.

7. We alſo aſſure ourſelves, that harmony and unanimity in this inſtance will guide your councils, and give vigour and diſpatch to your proceedings; we particularly enjoin it; and the more confidently expect it, becauſe it does not appear to us that you have differed in ſentiment concerning thoſe tranſactions on the coaſt, which we fear have been the immediate cauſe of troubles in the Carnatic.

8. We have no doubt but Hyder Ally is in cloſe connection with the French: his conduct reſpecting Mahie, and on other occaſions, affords the cleareſt proof of his attachment to that nation. The French ſeem to have no other probable means of regaining conſequence and advantage in India, but by means of Hyder; nor can we be of opinion that Hyder would venture to attack our poſſeſſions, unleſs aſſured of ſpeedy and powerful ſupport from France. One object unites the French with Hyder: if the Engliſh are depreſſed on the coaſt, the French gain their purpoſe, and Hyder becomes irreſiſtible in the Carnatic; all the country Powers, from Cape Comorin to the Kiſtnah, muſt fall a prey to his ambition; even the Decan would be at his mercy; the northern circars be loſt to the Company; and our troops, without the means of ſubſiſtence, might be compelled to take ſhelter within the walls of Fort Saint George.

9. It would be very deſirable, but perhaps not practicable, to detach Hyder from the Marattas, if a league offenſive and defenſive has really been formed between them; but we apprehend it would be leſs difficult to prevail upon the Marattas to quit their connection with Hyder: the alliance, on their part, is unnatural, except againſt the Engliſh, with whom their cauſe of quarrel is temporary. If Hyder's force be now troubleſome, it may ſoon become dangerous; and if he has invaded the country with ſucceſs, we fear there will be no bounds to his ambition, nor ſafety but in his reduction.

10. If you ſhould find this to be the caſe, and a ſeparate peace with the Marattas can be made, which on any terms is preferable to the alternative of maintaining a war againſt the combined force of Hyder and his dependants united with the Marattas, you may then be at liberty to draw down General Goddard's army from the northward, and, by well-judged and vigorous exertions, make ſuch impreſſions upon Hyder's territories, as may reduce him to reaſon, and compel him to quit the Carnatic, in order to provide for the defence of his own capital, and thus pave the way to an equitable and permanent peace.

11. Theſe are our preſent ideas, if war with Hyder ſhall be found utterly unavoidable: but not knowing what events may have happened, we muſt leave it to your diſcretion on the ſpot, to determine how far they are to be adopted, as conſiſtent with ſound policy, and practicable in the execution; and we muſt alſo add, that a ſafe and immediate peace, both with Hyder and the Marattas, is to be your primary object.

12. In order, to the utmoſt of our power, to afford ſpeedy aſſiſtance to our ſettlement of Fort Saint George, we have applied to His Majeſty for a preſent reinforcement of troops and ſhips of war; and we have the ſatisfaction to acquaint you that his Majeſty has been graciouſly pleaſed to grant us an immediate reinforcement of 1,000 Britiſh troops for that purpoſe, which we expect to ſail for India by the middle of next month. Meaſures will alſo be taken to furniſh ſuch additional ſtrength, both naval and military, as the exigency of affairs will permit.

13. We have reſolved, in conſideration of the critical ſituation of the Company's affairs on the coaſt, to take off the ſuſpenſion of Brigadier General James Stuart, and to avail ourſelves, in the preſent criſis of the ſervices of ſo able and experienced an officer, by reſtoring him to his rank in the Company's ſervice at Fort Saint George, next below General Munro.

14. In regard to the political affairs of your own Preſidency, we are extremely ſorry to find that the Vizier's country has ſuffered ſo much from drought and other circumſtances, as to render it difficult to draw from thence the reſources which your neceſſities require.

15. We truſt Mr. Briſtow, who concluded the treaty with Auſuph-ul-Dowlah in June 1775, would arrive in Bengal ſoon after the date of your laſt conſultations; and as, in conſequence of our orders, he would alſo proceed immediately to the Vizier's Court, we entertain the moſt favourable expectations of his being able to conciliate the mind of the Vizier, and to aſſiſt him effectually in arranging and reſtoring his finances to a more flouriſhing condition.

16. We notice the repugnance with which you agree to enforce a requiſition for more than the amount of the ſtipulated ſubſidy; and we can eaſily conceive, that in all ſuch caſes, if the Nabob comply, it muſt be from a principle of fear, and with great reluctance. And for theſe reaſons, added to our former obſervations on the ſubject, we particularly renew our injunction, that every effort be uſed to reſtore and eſtabliſh peace with all your neighbours, on terms of the moſt perfect moderation, in order to be able to abridge your own inſupportable charges, and to relieve your friends and allies from additional expences incurred on account of the war; and alſo, that you may be able to exert your whole force againſt the national enemies, if the continuance of European troubles ſhall render it neceſſary. Appendix No. 382.

We are,

London, 11th April 1780. Your affectionate friends,

(Signed) W. Devaynes, L. Sulivan, Jn° Woodhouſe, Jn° Michie, Wm James, John Roberts, Fran' Baring, Ja' Moffatt, Tho' Cheap, L. Darell, Jun., J. Stables, Jn° Townſon, W. G. Freeman, John Harriſon, Cha' Boddam.

Extract of circular Letter to the Governor General and Council at Bengal, to the Select Committee at Bombay, and to the Select Committee at Fort Saint George; dated the 11th April 1781.

By the Court's letter of this date, you will be informed of the line of conduct to be obſerved reſpecting Hyder Ally Khan, if matters cannot be finally adjuſted without proceeding to extremities. We therefore enjoin you to loſe no time in preparing for the attack of Mangalore, and from that ſide of India, for the reduction of Hyder's capital in the Myſore country, as the ſureſt means of forcing him to accept terms of accommodation ſafe and honourable for the Company.

And as we truſt matters with the Marattas will be ſettled, and peace reſtored between them and the Company immediately upon the receipt of the Court's preſent orders, if not done before, we conclude that the troops under General Goddard will be totally at liberty to act againſt Hyder; and, with ſuch other force as may be brought to co-operate, be ſufficient for every ſervice that ſhall be found neceſſary.

APPENDIX, No. 382.

Extract of general Letter from the Court of Directors to the Governor General and Council of Bengal; dated the 31ſt May 1781.

Par. 1. OUR laſt letters were dated the 11th of April, by which you are adviſed of the information then before us, reſpecting the irruption of Hyder Ally into the Carnatic, and our ſentiments on that alarming event.

2. By the Trial ſchooner we received, the 16th ultimo, ſeveral packets from our Governor General and Council, and from the late Select Committee of Fort Saint George, confirming the accounts before received of the invaſion of the Carnatic by the troops of Hyder Ally Khan, with letters dated as follows, viz.

ment; the retreat of the army under General Munro, and the future ſucceſs of the enemy, are events which have occaſioned univerſal conſternation and aſtoniſhment; and we now inform you, that a Select Committee of Secrecy is appointed by Parliament to inquire into the cauſes of the preſent war that ſubſiſts in the Carnatic, and into the preſent ſtate of our poſſeſſions in thoſe parts; alſo to make their obſervations thereon, and to report the ſame to the Honourable the Houſe of Commons.

4. At the earneſt requeſt of the Company, in the preſent alarming criſis, his Majeſty has been moſt graciouſly pleaſed to order that one thouſand regular troops, and two hundred recruits for the 73d regiment, ſhall embark on the ſhips now under diſpatch for India. The particulars of their embarkation, and other neceſſary circumſtances, will be communicated to you by James Moffatt and Lionel Darell, Eſquires, who are now at Portſmouth to ſuperintend and regulate the ſaid embarkation.

5. Reſpecting further ſuccours to be ſent to our ſettlements, and ſuch information and advice as require temporary ſecrecy, you will be addreſſed by Laurence Sulivan, Eſquire, our Chairman, and Sir William James, Baronet, our Deputy Chairman, who have been appointed a Committee of Secrecy, with like powers to thoſe veſted in the Chairman and Deputy Chairman, as adviſed in the Court's letter of the 11th of January 1781, and all orders and inſtructions given by our ſaid Chairman and Deputy Chairman relative to naval or military operations, muſt be obeyed in the ſame manner as though they were ſigned by thirteen or more of the Court of Directors.

6. We much approve and applaud the attention paid by our Governor General and Council to the Company's affairs on the coaſt of Coromandel: the inſtant relief propoſed by the Governor General; his requiſition to Sir Eyre Coote to proceed and take upon himſelf the command of the army on the coaſt; the terms and manner in which the requiſition was made; the General's ready acceptance of a ſervice, big with difficulty and danger; and the concurrence of the other members of Council in the wiſe and active meaſures propoſed on that moſt important occaſion, do them much honour. From their future exertions, and the hearty co-operation of our other ſettlements, we hope the ſcene in the Carnatic has been, or ſoon will be, reverſed.

Extract of general Letter from the Court of Directors to the Governor General and Council of Bengal; dated 31ſt May 1781.

Par. 7. A few days ſince, we received a letter from our Select Committee of Bombay, dated the 11th of January 1781, by which we are informed of the reduction of Baſſein, with very little loſs, by the army under the command of General Goddard. The conduct of our ſaid Committee appears to have been judicious, and the behaviour of the troops highly ſatisfactory. In regard to the General, we have already given our ſentiments reſpecting the meritorious ſervices of that good and gallant officer, and we are exceedingly happy in the preſent opportunity of repeating thoſe ſentiments, and in teſtifying, as we now do, that we have the greateſt dependance upon his zeal and ability if warlike operations be ſtill unavoidable; and that he will contribute to the utmoſt of his power towards removing every obſtacle to a juſt, ſpeedy, and honourable peace.

8. As the fall of Baſſein was an event expected by our Governor General and Council, and by our Select Committee of Bombay, we hope, according to their own ideas, and agreeable to the tenor of our inſtructions of the 2d of February, that upon giving up other diſtricts lately obtained to the Marattas, Baſſein may have been preſerved to the Company; but we are nevertheleſs clearly of opinion, that if peace could not be re-eſtabliſhed with the Marattas without giving up Baſſein, and if their aſſiſtance in repelling the incurſions of Hyder Ally could be obtained by the ſacrifice of that fortreſs, in ſuch caſe Baſſein ſhould be forthwith reſtored. And indeed the ſtate of affairs at Fort Saint George by the laſt advices, is ſo very different from what we had reaſon to expect when we wrote the before-mentioned letter, that if peace be purchaſed by the reſtitution of Baſſein, and of other conqueſts made from the Marattas, Salſette and Caranja excepted, we are convinced that the abſolute neceſſity of the meaſure muſt have been evident, before it would be adopted, and in ſuch caſe it will have our approbation.

9. Our advices from Ganjam ſtate the apprehenſions which naturally aroſe upon the arrival of an army in that quarter from the Rajah of Berar. We have noticed the ſentiments and proceedings of our Governor General and Council reſpecting the deſigns of Moodajee Booſla, and particularly the examination of his Vackeel before the Board at Calcutta; and we hope it will prove, that the Rajah has not entertained unfavourable deſigns againſt the Company, but that it is his real deſire and intention to act the part of a mediator between the Company and the Marattas.

10. We remark with peculiar ſatisfaction, that our Governor General and Council intend to obtain a proper proviſion for the ſupport of Ragoba during his life. We earneſtly hope this point will have been duly attended to and properly ſecured, in caſe pacific arrangements may have taken place before the receipt of theſe our inſtructions.

11. For the moſt obvious reaſons we forbear at preſent to enter upon the further conſideration of the occurrences of your Preſidency in detail; we expect before the diſpatch of the October fleet to be in poſſeſſion of more recent advices, and ſhall not fail to give ſuch orders and inſtructions as ſhall then be neceſſary. In the mean time, we have the moſt perfect reliance upon your wiſdom, zeal, and watchful attention, to promote the welfare of the Company, and to guard againſt and render abortive all deſigns formed by the enemies of Britain to the prejudice of our intereſt in India.

Extracts of circular Letter from the Committee of Secrecy to the Governor General and Council at Bengal, and to the Preſidents and Select Committees of Bombay and Fort Saint George; dated 31ſt May 1781.

The Powers delegated to the late Chairman and Deputy Chairman, as adviſed in the Court's letter of the 5th July 1780, having been renewed and veſted in us, we addreſs you as a Committee of Secrecy accordingly.

By the Trial ſchooner we have received packets from our Governor General and Council, and from the late Select Committee of Fort Saint George, adviſing us of the invaſion of the Carnatic by Hyder Ally. The immediate cauſe of the war; the unprepared ſtate of the late Government of Fort Saint George to reſiſt or repel the invader; the ſevere loſs ſuſtained by the defeat and deſtruction of Colonel Baillie's detachment; the retreat of the army under General Munro; and the future ſucceſs of the enemy, are events which have occaſioned univerſal conſternation and aſtoniſhment.

As we write in cypher, we enter into no detail by this diſpatch. We however inform you, that a parliamentary inquiry into the cauſe or cauſes of the late misfortunes on the coaſt has taken place at the requiſition of Adminiſtration.

We exceedingly approve and applaud the ready attention paid by our Governor General and Council to the Company's affairs on the coaſt of Coromandel. The inſtant relief afforded, and wiſe meaſures adopted at that moſt alarming criſis, do them much honour. From their future exertions, and the co-operation of our other ſettlements, we hope the ſcene in the Carnatic will ſoon be reverſed.

The principal deſign of this letter is to inform you what what succours may be expected from hence, in addition to those already sent to India.

You will always remember, that our first and grand object is peace with the country Powers of India, upon safe and honourable terms. Our Governor General and Council must take the lead in all negociations, and direct or authorize the plan of operation for all our settlements; and all their instructions and requisitions must be obeyed.

We rely upon your hearty co-operation in giving effect to every measure adopted for restoring the public tranquillity, and for re-establishing the Company's affairs on a solid foundation, and shall write you more at large by the first sea conveyance.

APPENDIX, No. 383.

Letters from the Court of Directors.

Our President and Select Committee at Bombay.

1. YOUR secret advices of the 31st December and 16th March were received over-land in cypher. Transcripts were also received by the Hawke; and likewise your letter of the 30th April 1780, which arrived here the 21st instant.

2. For your further information, we transmit you a copy of that part of our letter to our Governor General and Council, which relates to the war carrying on against the Marattas; you will consider this letter in the same point of view as though the subject matter had been specially addressed to Bombay; and co-operate so far as depends upon you, in every measure that shall have a tendency to facilitate the restoration of peace, which you will find strongly inculcated in our letter to Bengal.

Par. 1. By the enclosed copy of our letter of this date, to our Governor General and Council at Bengal, you will be informed of the very alarming intelligence received by an intercepted packet from the Isle of France, respecting the invasion of the Carnatic by Hyder Ally Khan: to that letter we have stated our ideas on the posture of affairs on the coast, and on the general line of policy, which we apprehend it may be necessary to adopt, for curbing the ambition of Hyder, and restoring and securing peace to the Carnatic.

2. It is impossible for us in the present conjuncture to give decisive orders upon a subject of so great importance, of which we have no official information; the Appendix general outline given is upon the known attachment of Hyder to the French, and upon a supposition also, that he has actually commenced hostilities by invading our possessions, or those of our old and faithful ally the Nabob of Arcot. 380, 383.

3. You will observe by the general tendency of our instructions to Bengal, that our grand object is peace; and as our Governor General and Council must of course take the lead if negociation be necessary, so must they also direct the plan of joint operation for all our Presidencies, if war shall be unavoidable; and it is our order, that all their requisitions be, to the utmost of your ability, implicitly obeyed.

4. We have no doubt of your ready concurrence in such measures as the Governor General and Council shall deem necessary for the public welfare, and we rely upon your hearty co-operation with our other Presidencies, in giving effect to every plan formed, or to be formed, for restoring the public tranquillity, and for establishing a permanent peace with the country Powers in India.

5. You will learn, from our letter to Bengal, the steps taken for affording speedy assistance to our settlement at Fort Saint George.

6. We have resolved, in consideration of the critical situation of the Company's affairs on the coast, to take off the suspension of Brigadier General James Stuart, and to avail ourselves in the present crisis of the services of so able and experienced an officer, by restoring him to his rank in the Company's service at Fort Saint George, next below General Munro.

Par. 1. By a short letter of the 11th of April, you were informed of the intelligence received by an intercepted packet, concerning the invasion of the Carnatic by Hyder Ally Khan.

2. Our said letter was accompanied by copy of our letter of like date, to our Governor General and Council, at Fort William, containing our sentiments relative to the general line of policy proper to be observed according to the information then before us, and directing your hearty co-operation with our Governor General and Council, in giving effect to every plan formed, or to be formed, for restoring the public tranquillity, and for establishing a permanent peace with the country Powers in India.

3. Since that period we have received by the Trial schooner, a very full and circumstantial account of all the disasters which have happened on the coast of Coromandel.

4. We have also received your letter, dated 11th January 1781, which brings us the agreeable and important advice of Bassein having been conquered, and of other proceedings on that side of India.

5. Being uncertain what may be the particular posture of affairs when the present dispatches shall reach India, we have again adopted the mode observed by the

6. We have no doubt of your zeal and activity in contributing to the reſtoration of a ſpeedy, ſafe, and honourable peace, and ſhall only direct, that all inſtructions given, and requiſitions made by our Governor General and Council, for the accompliſhment of this deſirable purpoſe, be duly obſerved and carried into execution.

APPENDIX, No. 384.

Letter from Court of Directors to Ragoba, dated 19th June 1781.

To Mẽu Rajah Ragoonaut Row.

Illuſtrious Sir,

YOUR letter addreſſed to the Eaſt India Company, which appears to have been wrote ſo long ago as the 24th day of November 1778, was delivered to us, the Court of Directors of the ſaid Company, upon the 7th day of February 1781, by Hermunt Row and Monaker Parſee; and the contents have been duly underſtood and conſidered.

In ſeveral letters to our principal ſervants in India, we have manifeſted the warmeſt attachment to your perſon, and attention to your intereſt; and it is with pleaſure we embrace the preſent opportunity of aſſuring you, that our regard for your welfare can ſuffer no diminution.

As all circumſtances reſpecting your ſituation are well known to our Governor General and Council, and as they are inveſted with full powers to adjuſt differences, and finally to conclude ſuch treaties as ſhall be deemed proper with the Princes of Indoſtan, it is unneceſſary for us to enter upon the ſeveral particulars contained in your letter; but we ſhall tranſmit a copy thereof to our ſaid Governor General and Council by the firſt opportunity, for their information.

As the flames of war have been rekindled and ſpread wide ſince the date of writing your letter, and as events, during a ſtate of warfare, cannot be foreſeen; we are not able, at this diſtance of time and place, to ſay how far it may be in the power of our Governor General and Council to gratify your expectations; but we have the particular ſatisfaction to find, by the laſt advices to us, that they expreſs the ſtrongeſt deſire of obtaining a proper reſolution for you, and we earneſtly hope it will in all reſpects be ſuitable to your dignity.

In teſtimony of the ſincerity of our profeſſions, we hereunto affix our Great Seal in the City of London, this nineteenth day of June, in the year of our Lord one thouſand ſeven hundred and eighty-one.

APPENDIX, No 385.

Extract of a Letter from the Committee of Secrecy to the Governor General and Council at Fort William in Bengal, and to the Preſidents and Select Committees at Fort Saint George and Bombay; dated the 11th December 1781.

ADVICES from Bombay and Bufſorah give us reaſon to hope, that the wiſe and ſpirited meaſures adopted by our Governor General and Council, and the ſpeedy ſuccour ſent, have produced the moſt favourable effects on the coaſt of Coromandel, which entitles them to our repeated and warmeſt approbation. The ſucceſs of General Goddard againſt Baſſein is alſo an event which adds much to the honour of that invaluable officer, and of the troops under his command; we ſhall be exceedingly happy if the reſult has been peace with the Marattas.

A ſafe and ſpeedy peace with all Indian Powers is our primary object: this muſt never be forgotten. No ſtep muſt be taken, but ſuch as have a direct tendency to accompliſh this deſirable object.

France continues vigorous preparations for India. Be well on your guard. The welfare of your country, and perhaps the exiſtence of the Company, depend upon your vigilance, ability, activity, and prudence.

END OF THE SIXTH REPORT.

COPIES

COPIES of Two NARRATIVES from The GOVERNOR GENERAL to EDWARD WHELER, Esquire; relative to the AFFAIR at BENARES; and a Copy of a Letter from Bengal, in the Secret Department.

COPY of a Narrative from the Governor General to Edward Wheler, Esquire, relative to the Affair at Benares; dated the 13th August 1781.

The Honourable Edward Wheler, Esquire, &c. &c. &c.
Fort William.

Sir,

I ARRIVED at Benares on the 14th instant.—My transactions with the Rajah being of a most important nature to the present and future interests of the Company, I have determined to inform you of them without delay, in the order in which they have occurred.

The first step which I judged it necessary to take, as the ground on which my future proceedings with the Rajah were to be conducted, was to recapitulate in writing the several instances of his conduct, which for some time past have repeatedly drawn upon him the severe reprehensions of the Board; and to demand a clear and satisfactory explanation.—This paper I sent to the Rajah by the hands of Mr. Markham, who was directed to require an immediate answer.

In the evening his answer arrived. The following are copies of both.

"To Rajah Cheyt Sing,

"It is about sixteen months since Lolah Sedasund, "your Buxey and confidential servant, came to Calcutta, "charged with an express commission and authority to "make excuses for your past conduct, and to give me "assurances, confirmed by oath, of your future submission to my advice, and the orders of my Government. "As a test of your sincerity, I required your immediate "and unreserved acquiescence in the demand, which at "the same time, was made to you, in the name of the "Governor General and Council, of the subsidy of five "lacks of rupees for the expences of the war.

"With this demand you ostensibly complied, in your "answer to my letter; and the Buxey promised me verbally in your name, and on terms so strong as amounted "to the fullest assurances that there should be no delay "in the payment. Relying on this agreement and promise, I gave orders to Mr. Fowke, who was then Resident at this place, to receive the money, and remit it "to Colonel Cumac for the pay of the army, which had "been ordered to march towards the province of Mahoba; "and I made no other provision for it, such was my "confidence in your faith: but you deceived me; and, "after having made the full payment of a few rupees, "either consulting the temper of the times, or conforming to a premeditated design, you by shifts and pre"vasications protracted the business, until the army, for whose "service it was intended, was reduced to the last state of "distress. Many hundreds deserted; and, had an enemy "at that time appeared against them, their total defeat would have been inevitable.

"In all this time daily applications were made to you "by the Resident, and I wrote repeated letters to you; "but you paid no regard to either.

"Besides this, I accuse you in the name of the Governor General and Council, by letters and orders to "Mr. Fowke to repeat the requisition in person, that you "should furnish a body of horse to assist and act with "the armies of the Company; and when Mr. Markham "succeeded Mr. Fowke, I gave him orders to repeat the "demands; which he did accordingly, with frequent "and almost daily importunity, limiting the number to "1,500, and afterwards to 1,000. To this demand "you returned evasive answers; nor to this hour have "you contributed a single horseman.

"I pass over other instances of your conduct, in which, "through the means of your secret agents, you have en"deavoured to excite disorders in the Government on "which you depend; and your neglect of the duty "which you owe to it and to the subjects of this Zemindary, by suffering the daily perpetration of rob"beries and murders, even in the streets of the city of "Benares itself, to the great and public scandal of the "English name, and in violation of one of the conditions "on which you receive the confirmation of this Zemindari. But, as the two foregoing instances amount to "a direct charge of disaffection and infidelity to the Go"vernment on which you depend, and happened at a "time in which it was your duty most especially to have "exerted yourself in the support of its interests, I have "therefore judged it proper to state them to you thus "fully in writing, and to require your answer to them. "And this I expect immediately."

ANSWER.

"I received your letter delivered to me by Mr. Markham, and I have understood every particular of its contents. Sir, after the arrival of Saith Ally Buxey, I observed all the orders which you sent me; and I received the letter which the deceased Sheik brought me, informing me that every suspicion was now completely removed from your mind, and that I might confide you as formerly sensitive to me. But I have not experienced from you the same generosity as formerly. I sent you repeatedly letters, representing to your consideration my unhappy circumstances; but you never honoured me with any reply. For this reason I sent my Buxey Sadanund to your presence, enjoining him "to represent to you the firmness of my obedience and "attachment; to lay before you the particulars of my "situation; and to learn the disposition of your mind "towards me. He arrived accordingly in your presence, "and represented every thing in a proper manner. I "have never deviated in the smallest degree from those "professions; and the benefactions and civilities with "which you have honoured me, have given me the "greatest satisfaction; and I have considered you as "the source from which I derive the fulfilment of all "my wishes and desires. It is my firm hope, that I may "be always favoured with your directions in the manner "I complied, with the utmost readiness, with the order "you sent me for the payment of five lacks of rupees on "account of the war;—I sent first one lack of rupees, "with an answer to your letter; afterwards, having paid "to Mr. Fowke, the sum of one lack and seventy thousand rupees, I sent a letter requesting a further allow"ance of time to enable me to make some preparations. "To this I received no reply—it being the second day. "Notwithstanding this, I was not a moment inactive "in this concern, and as soon as my Buxey arrived, I "paid immediately the remaining part of the sum. The "remitting of this money you may rest depend upon "me: if any delay happened in this kind, I could not "help it. Besides the payment of the money, the re-

"mittance

"mittance of it also to the army had rested with me, a "delay of this kind should not have happened. I have "enclosed in this letter a paper respecting the particular "sums which have been advanced, with their dates.

"With respect to the horse, you desired me, in your "letter, to inform you of what number I could afford to "station with you. I sent you a particular account of "all that were in my service, amounting to one thousand "three hundred horse, of which several were stationed "at distant places; but I received no answer to this. "Mr. Markham delivered me an order to prepare a "thousand horse. In compliance with your wishes I "collected five hundred horse, and a substitute for the "remainder, five hundred Burkundazes, of which I sent "you information; and I told Mr. Markham that they "were ready to go to whatever place they should be sent. "No answer, however, came from you on this head, and "I remained astonished at the cause of it. Repeatedly "I asked Mr. Markham about an answer to my letter "about the horse; but he told me, that he did not "know the reason of no answer having been sent. I re-"mained astonished.—With respect to the Sepoys, I re-"ceived first an order to station two of my companies, "which I did. I was then desired to give a tunkhaw for "the payment of the Sepoys, and likewise to pay the "Captain; which has been done every month.

"Excepting Alaulah Beg, who remains with you, and "his attendants, none of my people, either dependents "or servants, or others in any shape connected with me, "have ever gone to Calcutta. My enemies, with a "view to my ruin, have made false representations to "you. Now that, happily for me, you have yourself ar-"rived at this place, you will be able to ascertain all the "circumstances relative to the horse, to my people going "to Calcutta, and the dates of the receipts of the parti-"cular sums above-mentioned; you will then know whe-"ther I have amused you with a false representation, or "made a just report to you.

"I have given my Aumils most particular injunctions, "and have taken a penalty bond from them, that they "shall keep no thieves in their districts. What power "have they to act otherwise? But if ever a robbery or "murder is committed in the country, I have been care-"ful to impale or otherwise punish the culprit. If a "person having committed a delinquency should escape "to some other place, so as to elude all discovery, in that "case I am helpless; but to the utmost of my power I "endeavour to fulfil your orders. I have never swerved "in the smallest degree from my duty to you. It re-"mains for you to decide on all these matters. I am in "every case your slave. What was just I have repre-"sented to you. May your prosperity increase!

"Account of Five Lacks of Rupees advanced for the "Expence of the War.

"1st Shabaun	- -	100,000
"29th Ramzaun	- -	170,000
"7th Showal	- -	130,000
"18th Showal	- -	100,000
		500,000"

This answer you will perceive to be not only unsatisfactory in substance, but offensive in style, and less a vindication of himself than a recrimination upon me. It expresses no concern for the causes of complaint contained in my letter, or desire to atone for them, nor the smallest intention to pursue a different line of conduct. An answer couched nearly in terms of defiance, to requisitions of so serious a nature, I could not but consider as a strong indication of that spirit of independency which the Rajah has for some years past assumed, and of which indeed I had early observed other manifest symptoms, both before, and from the instant of my arrival here.

Under these alarming appearances of the Rajah's conduct and disposition, I conceived myself indispensably obliged to form some immediate and decisive plan for obviating their consequence, and for the preservation of the Company's rights and interests in this Zemindary. To have left him in the full exercise of powers, which he had notoriously abused, and which it was to be apprehended he would employ to the most dangerous purposes, was totally inconsistent with the maxims of justice and prudence. To divest him entirely of the Zemindary, though justifiable on the grounds stated above, would be attended with an appearance of severity, and might have furnished grounds for constructions unfavourable to the credit of our Government, and to my own reputation, from the natural influence which every act of rigour, exercised in the persons of men who stand in elevated stations, is apt to impress on the minds of those who are too remote from the scene of action to judge, by any evidence but of the direct facts themselves, of their motives or propriety.

Thus circumstanced, and attentive to these opposite considerations, I had drawn the following plan for my future proceedings.

I first directed the Resident to repair to the Rajah, who resided at his house, situated on this side of the river, at the distance of about two miles, and gave him the following instructions:

"Benares, 15th August 1781, 10 at night.

"To Mr. William Markham, Resident at Benares.

"Sir,

"It is my order, that you proceed early to-morrow "morning to the house of Rajah Cheyt Sing, with your "usual guard, and put him in arrest. You will require "his immediate submission, informing him, that you "act under orders given you by me; and in case of re-"fusal, you will wait the arrival of two companies of "Sepoys belonging to Major Popham's detachments who "are directed to follow and assist you in the execution of "this service. Having secured the Rajah, you will keep "him in your custody until further orders.

"I am,

"Sir,

"Your most obedient servant,

(Signed) "Warren Hastings."

On the next morning Mr. Markham went, according to his foregoing instructions, and was followed by two companies of grenadier Sepoys belonging to Major Popham's detachment. The Rajah quietly submitted to the arrest; and Mr. Markham returned to me with the following letter from the Rajah, leaving him under the charge of Lieutenants Stalker, Scott, and Symes. For the particulars which passed at this interview, I refer you to the following report, which Mr. Markham delivered to me on his return.

Letter from the Rajah.

"At this time Mr. William Markham being come to "me, has informed me that your Highness's orders are, "that I should remain under a guard. My protector, "I before represented to you, on board your pinnace, "that I was the servant of the Honourable Sirkar, and "was ready from my heart and soul. Whatever may be "your pleasure, do it with your own hands. I am "your slave; what occasion can there be for this "guard?"

"Benares, 16th August 1781.

"To the Honourable Warren Hastings, Esquire, Go-"vernor General, &c. &c. &c.

"Honourable Sir,

"I this morning, in obedience to your orders of last "night, proceeded with a few of my orderlies, accom-"panied

" panied by Lieutenant Stalker, to Shewwallah Gaut, " the preſent reſidence of Rajah Cheyt Sing, and ac- " quainted him, it was your pleaſure he ſhould conſider " himſelf in arreſt; that he ſhould order his people to " behave in a quiet and orderly manner, for that any " attempt to reſcue him would be attended with his " own deſtruction. The Rajah ſubmitted quietly to " the arreſt; and aſſured me, that whatever were your " orders, he was ready implicitly to obey: he hoped " that you would allow him a ſubſiſtence; but as for " his Zemindary, his forts, and treaſure, he was ready " to lay them at your feet, and his life, if required. He " expreſſed himſelf much hurt at the ignominy, which " he affirmed muſt be the conſequence of his confine- " ment, and intreated me to return to you with the " foregoing ſubmiſſion, hoping that you would make " allowances for his youth and inexperience, and, in " conſideration of his father's name, releaſe him from " his confinement as ſoon as he ſhould prove the ſin- " cerity of his offers, and himſelf deſerving of your com- " paſſion and forgiveneſs.

" Near a quarter of an hour after this converſation, " Lieutenant Scott arrived with the two grenadier com- " panies of Major Popham's regiment, to whoſe and " Lieutenant Stalker's care I left the Rajah, having given " them the following inſtructions:—That they ſhould " diſarm every ſervant of the Rajah's—that they ſhould " allow him any ſuch eight or ten Kiſſmutgars, for the " attendance of his perſon, as he ſhould approve of;— " that theſe men ſhould be ſhewn to the Sepoys, leſt " any deceit ſhould be practiſed; but that they might " indulge him in any requeſt conſiſtent with the ſecurity " of his perſon.

" I am now returned to acquaint you with my pro- " ceedings, and to receive any further inſtructions, if " you think it neceſſary.

" I have the honour to be,
" Honourable Sir,
" Your moſt obedient
" humble ſervant,
" William Markham."

As the Rajah in the above letter had deſired that Mr. Markham might be ſent back to him, I was preparing inſtructions for that purpoſe, when I received another letter from the Rajah, of which the following is a tranſlation:

Letter from the Rajah.

" I am the ſervant of the Sirkar, and am ready from " my heart and ſoul in the performance of your orders. " —My honour was beſtowed on me by your Highneſs; " it depends on you alone to take away, or not take " away, the country out of my hands. In caſe my " honour is not left me, how ſhall I be equal to the " buſineſs of the Sirkar? Whoever, with his hands in " a ſupplicating poſture, is ready with his life and pro- " perty, what neceſſity can there be for him to be dealt " with in this way?"

From the apparent deſpondency in which theſe letters were written, I thought it neceſſary to give the Rajah ſome encouragement; and accordingly wrote him the following anſwer:

Letter to the Rajah.

" I have received your two arzies by the hand of Mr. " Markham, and underſtand their contents.—That gen- " tleman will wait upon you in the afternoon, and ex- " plain all particulars to you.—Set your mind at reſt, " and do not conceive any terror or apprehenſion."

To this I received the following reply:

Letter from the Rajah.

" Your gracious letter has been received, and has " made me acquainted with your commands. You " order that Mr. William Markham will come to me; " that I muſt not ſuffer any apprehenſion to diſtreſs " me, but remain at eaſe in my mind.—My protector, " wherever you ſpread your ſhadow over my head, I " am entirely free from concern and apprehenſion; " and whatever you, who are my maſter, ſhall as ſuch " determine, will be right."

At this time I had prepared Mr. Markham's ſecond inſtructions; but before he could ſet out with them, intelligence came that large bodies of armed men had croſſed the river from Ramnagur, and had proceeded to the Rajah's houſe. What follows is a ſcene of ſuch horror, that it is with the greateſt reluctance I ſubmit to the painful duty of relating it: The guard placed over the Rajah conſiſted of the two companies of grenadier Sepoys, as above-mentioned, from Major Popham's detachment, and commanded by the Officers already named, who were ſtationed in an incloſed ſquare, which ſurrounded the apartment where the Rajah was. The Reſident's guard had returned with him. It now appeared that theſe troops had taken no ammunition with them: Major Popham ſent another company of Sepoys, under an Officer, with ammunition, to reinforce and ſupport the firſt party. When the latter arrived at the Rajah's houſe, they found it ſurrounded, and all the avenues blockaded by a multitude of armed men, who oppoſed their paſſage. The minds of this tumultuous aſſembly becoming ſoon inflamed, ſome of them began to fire upon the Sepoys within the ſquare; and immediately, as if this had been the concerted ſignal, the whole multitude ruſhed in, and made an inſtantaneous and fierce attack upon the Sepoys, who, wanting their accuſtomed means of defence, were capable of making but a feeble reſiſtance, and fell an eaſy ſacrifice to the ſuperior numbers of the aſſailants, who cut almoſt every man of this unfortunate party to pieces. The Officers, it is ſuppoſed, were the firſt victims to their fury; but not until they had, by aſtoniſhing efforts of bravery, and undiſmayed amidſt the imminent danger which ſurrounded them, involved a much ſuperior number of their enemies in their fate. In this general report of them all accounts concur, though varying in circumſtances: I yield to my own feelings in beſtowing this juſt, but unavailing tribute, to theſe unhappy gentlemen. In the midſt of this confuſion, the Rajah found means to eſcape through a wicket which opened to the river; and the banks being exceedingly ſteep in that place, he let himſelf down by turbans tied together, into a boat which was waiting for him, and conveyed him to the oppoſite ſhore: thoſe who had effected his eſcape, followed him acroſs the river, in the ſame tumultuous manner in which they had aſſembled, leaving the party of our Sepoys which had laſt arrived, in the poſſeſſion of the houſe.

On the firſt intelligence of this commotion, I had directed Major Popham to repair immediately to his camp, which was about two miles from the Reſident's, and at the ſame diſtance from the Rajah's houſe; and to march inſtantly with the remainder of his detachment to the ſupport of the party. This order was executed with all poſſible expedition; but Major Popham arrived too late, and had the mortification to be a ſpectator of the effects of a maſſacre which he could neither prevent nor revenge —He returned to me immediately, and made the following report:

Report of Major Popham.

" Conſequent to an order for the detachment under " my command to proceed to the ſupport of the grena- " dier companies under Lieutenant Stalker, I carried it " with as much expedition as poſſible to Adjet Sing's " palace, which I found to be entirely evacuated by the " Rajah's people, who were already landed on the op- " poſite ſide of the river.

" Of the two companies commanded by Lieutenant

" Stalker very few remained alive, and the majority of " theſe appeared to be ſeverely wounded. The bo- " dies of Lieutenants Stalker, Scott, and Simes, were ly- " ing within a ſmall diſtance of each other, ſhockingly " mangled, and without any ſigns of life.

" It may be neceſſary to obſerve, that Lieutenant " Burrell was diſpatched with one company of Sepoys " upon the firſt rumour of the Rajah's coercive inten- " tions, but the fate of the companies which preced- " him was decided prior to his being able to enter the " palace. There were, however, ſome of the Rajah's " people whom he effectually cleared it of. In his at- " tack he met with ſome loſs.

" My utmoſt endeavours have hitherto proved inſuf- " ficient to procure an exact detail of the killed and " wounded in this unfortunate tranſaction.

" I thought it neceſſary to leave a company with a " ſubaltern in the palace.

" Benares, " William Popham,
" 16th Auguſt 1781. " Major."

I cannot learn with certainty what is become of the Rajah, but the prevailing report is, that he fled from Rumnagur, his uſual reſidence on the other ſide of the river, in the middle of the night, and proceeded with his Zenana and effects to Lutteefgur, a ſtrong fort of his, ſituated about ten miles from Chunar. He was accompanied by Sujan Sing his brother, and Mungar Sing a relation and ſon by adoption of Rajah Bulwant Sing. He has alſo had the precaution to take with him Rana Golabhooer the widow of Rajah Bulwant Sing his father, her ſon-in-law Durbijey Sing, and his two ſons her grandſons.

In them he poſſeſſes every member of his family who can have any plea to diſpute with him the right of inheritance from his father Rajah Bulwant Sing, if that were ever a queſtion. His right to the Zemindary being derived excluſively from Sunnuds which his father never poſſeſſed, but which were firſt granted to Cheyt Sing by the late Vizier Sujah ul Dowla, through the influence of our Government, in the year 1773, and ſince repeated by ſimilar grants from our Government, when the ſovereignty was ceded to the Company by the preſent Nabob Aſoph ul Dowla.

I have made choice of Baboo Oojaun Sing, who held the office of Dewan during ſeveral years of the life of Rajah Bulwant Sing, for a conſiderable period ſince the acceſſion of the preſent Rajah, to adminiſter the revenues and government of this country, in the quality of Naib, until it can be determined to whom the Zemindary may legally belong, and who may be in a capacity to receive it.

To this effect I have cauſed a proclamation to be made through the city of Benares, and have notified it by circular perwannas to all the Zemindars and Aumils of the Zemindary.

To enforce the execution of theſe acts, to maintain tranquillity and order in the country, and protect the inhabitants, I have ordered one battalion of Sepoys from Chunargur, the remainder of Major Popham's detachment from Mirzapoor, and a regiment of Sepoys from Dinapoor, to march immediately to Benares.

The detail of theſe proceedings ſhall be tranſmitted to you in a ſubſequent letter. I do not expect they will detain me here much beyond the time I had preſcribed to myſelf, which was about ſeven or eight days.

I have the honour to be,
With the greateſt eſteem,
Sir,
Your moſt obedient
humble ſervant,

P. S. The delay occaſioned in copying this letter, from its great length, has afforded me an opportunity of contradicting the latter part of it; and I have now the ſatisfaction to add, that Ranny Colabkooer, together with her ſon-in-law Durbejey Sing, and his two ſons, are ſafe at Benares.

I have this morning received a viſit from Durbejey Sing, and his eldeſt ſon Mejep Narain.

COPY of the Second Narrative from the Governor General to Edward Wheler, Eſquire, relative to the Affair at Benares, dated 29th September 1781.

To Edward Wheler, Eſquire.

Sir,

I HAVE had the honour to inform you in various and ſucceſſive letters of my tranſactions, and of the occurrences which have befallen me ſince my departure from Calcutta, and eſpecially ſince my arrival at this place on the 14th of laſt month. It is my intention to employ the firſt hours of my leiſure in drawing up a detailed narrative of the latter for your information; in the mean time I ſhall continue to adviſe you, from time to time, of ſuch circumſtances of moment as occur in the courſe of daily buſineſs, both for your information, and for the means of obtaining your ſentiments upon them for my aſſiſtance and guidance. I deem it a misfortune, that not one of your letters, written with the knowledge of the late troubles, have reached me, and I much fear that many of mine may have miſcarried; for which reaſon, I ſhall cauſe to be tranſcribed copies of all written ſince the 16th of laſt month, and ſhall tranſmit them to you.

Leſt my letters, adviſing you of our late ſucceſſes, ſhould have been intercepted, I think it proper to repeat, in this the ſubſtance of them.

The arrival of the detachment from Caunpore, under Major Crabb, of the 10th inſtant, and of Major Roberts on the 13th, enabled Major Popham to take the field with a conſiderable force.

It was publicly expected that his firſt attempt would be made upon Ramnagour; but ſuch information having been given of the ſtate of the two fortreſſes of Lutteefpoor and Patula, as ſeemed to promiſe the certain and immediate reduction of thoſe places; he accordingly formed his army into two detachments, one commanded by Major Crabb, conſiſting of the firſt battalion of the ſixth regiment, the ſeventh regiment, the batalion of the Nabob's body guard, commanded by Lieutenant Polhill, with 6 ſix pounders, and one 5½ inch howitzer; and the other under his own command, conſiſting of the nineteenth, thirtieth, and twenty-fifth regiments, two companies of European infantry, the corps of rangers, and about thirty artillery, with 6 ſix pounders, two 8¼ inch howitzers, and an 8 inch mortar. The firſt detachment marched on the night of the 15th, by a large circuit, through almoſt impracticable ways: but the ſpirit of the Officers and men ſurmounted every difficulty. In places where the guns could not be drawn by bullocks, the Sepoys lifted them up the rocks; and at length, on the morning of the 20th, they arrived at the heights lying behind and above the fort of Lutteefpoor, at a place called Lora, which commands a paſs deſcending to Lutteefpoor, and reputed inacceſſible againſt oppoſition, but from above. The profound ſecrecy with which this expedition was undertaken, and to which the ſecurity of the enemy, in a region ſo unfrequented, not a little contributed, prevented any oppoſition to our troops in the different parts of their route. Their firſt movement only, but neither their ſtrength nor deſtination was known till their very near approach,

At Lora they met a body of 2,000 of the enemy, which which they defeated and diſperſed with little loſs on our ſide, but on theirs of 200 men killed on the ſpot.—The next morning they took poſſeſſion of the paſs, and of the fort of Lutteefpoor, which they found evacuated.

In the mean time Major Popham marched with his part of the forces on the morning of the 16th to Patecta, a place of conſideration in itſelf, being a fortified ſtone houſe within a very high rampart, and a ditch of great depth, and the town which is of great extent ſurrounded by intrenchments.—Theſe being all obſcured from obſervation by trees and thick buſhes, he judged it not adviſable to attempt an immediate aſſault upon the place, which fortunately proved the cauſe of a concurrent ſucceſs in both enterprizes, almoſt in the ſame inſtant of time; for in the morning of the 20th he ſtormed and took Patecta, at the ſame time defeated and diſperſing two bodies of the enemy that made an attempt on his camp. And on the ſame day, and on the ſame hour, Major Crabb fought and gained the battle of Lora, which was the immediate and eventual cauſe of the capture of Lutteefpoor.

The news of theſe combined ſucceſſes alarmed the Rajah to ſuch a degree, that he inſtantly fled by a diſtant route over the hills from Lutteefpoor, which till that time had been his capital reſidence, regaining the road of Bidjeygur, the only direct way to it being through the paſs above-mentioned.

The conſternation of his followers was ſo great, and its contagion ſo rapid, that in a few hours the fort or palace of Ramnagur, and the fortreſs of Suttuſgur, were wholly abandoned and evacuated.

Major Balfour marched on the 22d, and took poſſeſſion of Ramnagur.

On the morning of the 25th I parted from the Nabob, who ſet out on that afternoon on his return to his capital. It is but juſtice to the Nabob to declare, that on the firſt intelligence of theſe troubles, notwithſtanding my repeated and preſſing injunctions to return to Lucnow, he proſecuted his march to Benares, with only a few companies of Sepoys and 100 horſe at that time attending him, and has in every other inſtance given the ſtrongeſt proofs of his fidelity and attachment. In the evening I departed from Chunar, and on the next morning arrived at Ramnagur. My ſtay there being unneceſſary, and it having been repreſented to me that my preſence at Benares would be a means of quieting the minds of its inhabitants, I accordingly returned hither yeſterday morning, and had the happineſs to find the city reſtored to a ſtate of perfect order and tranquillity.

I have iſſued proclamations offering pardon to all who ſhall quietly return to their obedience, excepting the perſons of Cheyt Sing and his brother Sujan Sing, whom their late rebellious conduct and their rancour manifeſted to our nation, in the deliberate murder of many of our ſoldiers, and even unarmed paſſengers who had the misfortune to fall into their hands, have precluded from every title to lenity.

The perſons ſtanding next in the line of inheritance of the Zemindary, were Ranny Goolaub Kaower the widow of Rajah Balwunt Sing, their daughter married to Bauboo Durbijey Sing, and Bauboo Meyipnarain their grandſon by the two latter. By the concurrence of the two firſt parties, and in conſequence of a written acknowledgment made by the Ranny of the right of her grandſon Mayipnarain, I have nominated him to the ſucceſſion of the Rauge, and have appointed the morning of to-morrow for his inveſtiture.

I have forborne any particular comments in this place, reſerving them, where they will be more properly introduced, for my more detailed narrative. Yet I cannot ſuppreſs, without a violence to my own feelings, the teſtimony which is due eſpecially from me to the unexampled zeal and public ſpirit of all our Officers, and the wonderful activity with which their qualities were diſplayed on the late occaſion. I have already acknowledged the early exertions which were made by Colonel Blair during my former ſhort and calamitous reſidence at Benares. Of Major Popham I cannot ſay ſufficient to expreſs my ſenſe of his ſervices. Though my letters were every where intercepted, Colonel Morgan, with a deciſion and ſolicitude that reflect equal credit upon his character, detached Major Crabb, with his party, to my aſſiſtance. On the firſt and inſtant rumour of my ſituation, Colonel Sir John Cumming, with the like alacrity, obeyed the order of his march to Cawnpore; as did Colonel Ahmuty in the immediate diſpatch of Major Crawford, and the troop of cavalry. The ſame ſpirit animated every Officer of every corps, and infuſed itſelf into the men under their command, with an effect ſo far exceeding the common occurrences of human affairs, that in the complete ſpace of one month, this great and valuable province, which had been unexpectedly and wholly loſt, was in ſubſtance wholly recovered to the Britiſh empire.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your moſt obedient
humble ſervant,

LETTER from Bengal, in the Secret Department.

To the Honourable the Court of Directors for Affairs of the Honourable United Company of Merchants of England trading to the Eaſt Indies.

Honourable Sirs,

1. WE avail ourſelves of the departure of His Majeſty's ſloop the Nymph, for the coaſt, to addreſs you this letter; and we have requeſted Sir Edward Hughes to forward it by the firſt proper conveyance.

2. In a ſhort time we propoſe to diſpatch the Swallow packet direct for England: by her we ſhall have the honour of communicating to you the fulleſt information regarding your affairs. We hope we are not too ſanguine in expecting to tranſmit to you then very ſatisfactory advices, and ſuch as may effectually relieve you from the anxiety neceſſarily created by the accounts which you muſt have lately received from this country.

3. On the 29th of laſt month Mr. Macpherſon arrived at the Preſidency, and next day took his ſeat at the Board.

4. Your Governor General has been for ſome time back in the upper provinces; his preſence was neceſſary there to effect meaſures, which ſhall be explained to you at large by the firſt ſafe opportunity, and which we doubt not will meet with your fulleſt approbation.

5. It is with pleaſure we inform you, that the dangers to which he was expoſed at Benares, on the 16th of Auguſt, have been happily counteracted; and that your intereſts in that province are now ſecured upon a ſolid and permanent footing.

6. For the particulars of the commotions at Benares, we beg to refer you to the narrative of the Governor General, which comes down to the 18th of Auguſt, and which we encloſe for your peruſal, though it was only drawn up haſtily by him, for the immediate ſatisfaction of the Board. We have had advices from him as late as the firſt of this month, when all was quiet at Benares; the new Rajah, the grandſon of Bulwan Sing, having been inveſted in his office; while Cheit Sing, in juſt return for his cruelty and rebellion, was at ſome diſtance from Beechy Ghur, helpleſs and unattended.

7. By the laſt advices from the Governor General, we have the ſincere ſatisfaction to underſtand, that Madajee dajee Scindia had made offers for a ſeparate treaty and peace, which were accepted by the Governor General, who accordingly wiſhed to have a meeting with that chief; an event which, if it takes place, will probably lead to an immediate and general peace with all the Maratta Governments.

8. At all events, we wiſh you to reſt aſſured, that we are determined, without loſs of time, to accompliſh this neceſſary and moſt important object; nor can any one be more ſolicitous to effect it than the Governor General. Meaſures have been already adopted, which open the way to this event, and which place your intentions and directions in the faireſt and moſt honourable light to all the Powers of India. That harmony now reigns in your councils upon this ſide of India, which muſt be no leſs ſatisfactory to you, than ſerviceable to the operations of your Government, either in negociation or war.

9. Your preſent Adminiſtration of Fort Saint George enters fully into the views, and co-operates heartily with the wiſhes, of this Government; and we beg you to be aſſured, that if there is a power of legal or actual compulſion in our hands, no ſeparate or ambitious views of the Preſidency of Bombay ſhall be permitted to fruſtrate our determination to conclude a peace with the Marattas.

10. The relinquiſhment, if not formal ceſſion, of all the territories wreſted during the preſent war from the Marrattas, is not to be put in competition with the impending fate of the Carnatic, and the boundleſs expence of maintaining ſuch conqueſts.

11. The termination of the Maratta war muſt be the commencement of ſuch an attack upon Hyder Ally's poſſeſſions along the Malabar coaſt, as muſt ſoon recal that bold invader from the Carnatic; enable us to conclude a general peace with the native Powers; and turn our arms with efficacy againſt our European enemies.

12. Unfortunate as thoſe miſmanagements have been, which left the Carnatic a prey to attack, and puſhed our arms upon the ſide of Bombay beyond the wiſhes of this Government, an experience may be gained from our diſaſters, which the prudence and ability of your leading ſervants, ſupported by your own well-weighed and decided authority, may yet turn to the perfect ſecurity of the intereſts of Great Britain in India.—If the conteſts in which we are engaged with the country Powers have not been ſucceſsful, they have opened to us a perfect knowledge of the dominions, policy, faculties, force, and views of thoſe reſpective Powers.

13. If we have not benefitted as uſual by our ſuperior diſcipline, we have aſcertained the cauſes, and have learned the remedy which we ought to apply.

14. If our expences abroad have been immenſe, the peace of theſe provinces has been ſecured, and the economy neceſſary in future is preſſed upon us by neceſſity.

15. If there has been an error in the extent of our ambition, the limits of it are now preſcribed—peace, moderation, juſtice, and the ſtricteſt attention to cultivate the returns of commerce, ought to follow; and ſhall, we truſt, be the conſequences of the military career that has been run by Britain in India.

16. But let it not be forgot, that amidſt all the miſmanagement of your different ſervants in India, and even in our preſent ſituation, two of the moſt important effects have been produced.

17. Our European competitors have been decidedly and we truſt irretrievably counteracted, and ſuch an impreſſion of our power has been made upon the country States, that if we act with them but upon the common principles of juſtice, they will not readily connect themſelves with our enemies, nor venture, unprovoked, to diſturb us in future.

18. As for our own parts, as your ſervants, we moſt ſolemnly pledge ourſelves to you and to our country, that to the utmoſt of our ability we ſhall endeavour to manage your affairs upon the principles of maintaining your faith inviolate to your allies and dependents; of defending effectually the dominions we poſſeſs, unambitious of extending them; of cultivating a general ſyſtem of confidence with the country Princes; and of retrenching every poſſible expence, and cheriſhing that induſtry in manufacture and cultivation which conſtitute the chief value of remote dominions to any State.

19. Theſe we conſider to be your own objects, and ſuch are the great lines of conduct which from the general ſpirit of your orders you have ever wiſhed your ruling ſervants to purſue.

20. But, Gentlemen, much depends upon your hearty concurrence and ſupport, unmixed with the influence of any prejudice, to enable your ſervants here to execute thoſe deſirable and great public purpoſes—And if ever there was a criſis, when the affairs of theſe diſtant dominions, blended as they are with the general proſperity of our country, calls upon the duty, ſpeaks to the affection, and appeals to the honour of thoſe who hold ſuch great truſts from the public, this is the criſis: we ſay no more upon this ſubject than that we feel its emergency, and that it is not only with the zeal of good ſervants, but with the grateful ſenſibility of good citizens, that we wiſh to diſcharge our duty.

21. Your Governor General has convinced us, that his utmoſt ambition is to unite with us moſt cordially in carrying on the public ſervice; it is from his experience, great knowledge, zeal, and ability, acting in harmony with our beſt endeavours, that we hope not only to reſtore your affairs to proſperity, but to eſtabliſh that proſperity upon a permanent and regular arrangement.

22. Our firſt care ſhall be to draw out with him a regular ſyſtem, upon which we may perfectly agree, to conduct your affairs in their two great branches of politics and commerce; a work which has never yet been formally adopted by your Adminiſtration, and afterwards ſubmitted to your approbation from the united voice of this Government; a work which is abſolutely as neceſſary in the guidance of great and various political affairs, as a plan of order is eſſential in the arrangement of the common tranſactions of life.

23. It has been for the want of ſuch a work or ſyſtem, that oppoſite intereſts have been purſued in your different Preſidencies, and that meaſures change with the adminiſtration of different men.

24. We ſhall be able to ſend you by the ſhips of this ſeaſon, an inveſtment to the amount of upwards of one crore of rupees; we are reſolved at every hazard of diſburſement to ſupply regularly this great ſource of the Company's ſupport. Sooner than it ſhould not be ſupplied, we would cheerfully forego our own allowances; and after giving ſuch an example to your ſervants, retrench every poſſible advantage they could ſpare. With the advances for the inveſtment, the productive induſtry of theſe provinces would ceaſe; without induſtry, cultivation would ſtop; which would ſpeedily end in the ruin and depopulation of the country. Our object in dwelling ſo forcibly upon ſo obvious a concern of your intereſt is, that it may ſtand in an equally ſtrong light, not only to your conſideration, but to that of the State at large, in every poſſible change of the public management.

25. Fortunately for the other Preſidencies, cultivation was never in higher perfection or more productive than it is at preſent in this country; there is likewiſe a proſpect of great increaſe, with more eaſe to the natives, from the preſent mode of collecting the revenue. In every new arrangement the ſatisfaction and ſecurity of the natives muſt be firſt conſidered; it is upon their happineſs a wiſe government will ever endeavour to eſtabliſh its proſperity. And whatever line the iſſue of war may leave as the boundary of our territories over all India, upon the eſtabliſhment of general peace, policy, if not juſtice, directs that our chief frontiers ſhould be occupied by allies, who have an intereſt in ſtanding between us and the incurſions of enemies. and who ſhould be taught to feel that their arms were neceſſary only againſt thoſe enemies, and not againſt our ambition.

26. You will be pleaſed to obſerve, Gentlemen, that in this letter, expoſed to the various accidents of conveyance in time of war, we have given you only our general ideas; wiſhing to have a full communication of your ſentiments in return. We avoid entering into the particular detail of your affairs till the return of the Governor General and we diſpatch one of your packets. You muſt have more recent, and, we hope, more favourable intelligence from the coaſt, and even from Bombay, than any we can convey relating to thoſe Preſidencies. We truſt much to the good and able management of my Lord Macartney, and the gallant activity of Sir Eyre Coote; and we hope the repreſentations that have been ſent to the Government of Bombay, will recall them from their viſionary views of raiſing new armies, and embracing a more extenſive ſyſtem of war.

27. But whatever may be the ſucceſs of our arms upon thoſe coaſts, we are unalterably bent upon one ſyſtem of conduct, to yield what we can with ſecurity and honour to obtain peace, and to turn every poſſible ſucceſs to confirm it after it is adopted; we ſhall then be enabled to diſcharge gradually thoſe debts which war, when it is even ſucceſsful, muſt create, but which with its duration muſt accumulate very rapidly amidſt any ill ſucceſs.

We have the honour to be,
Honourable Sirs,
Your moſt faithful
humble ſervants,
Edwd Wheler,
John M'Pherſon.

Fort William,
October 16th, 1781.

P. S. Since writing the above, and juſt as we were ſealing it, we have received information, though not officially, of the ſucceſs of your arms under General Sir Eyre Coote, againſt the main army of Hyder Ally, on the plains of Arcot, on the 27th of laſt month. We have every reaſon to believe the information true; and, in the fulneſs of our joy at ſuch an event, we cannot cloſe this diſpatch without indulging in the moſt liberal congratulations with our country on the repeated and moſt diſtinguiſhed national ſervices of Lieutenant General Sir Eyre Coote.

The importance of the ſervice which he has thus rendered to Great Britain, can only be equalled by the gallantry with which, amidſt the ſtorms of the monſoon, and in a very bad ſtate of health, he flew from the tranquillity of his official duty here, in October laſt; and both by his example as a ſoldier, and able conduct as a General, began what we hope he has now completed, the relief of the Carnatic. A member of this Board had an opportunity, in his way hither, to witneſs perſonally the many uncommon difficulties againſt which Sir Eyre Coote had to ſtruggle to effect this great and brilliant ſervice; and he has no heſitation in ſaying, that he is perſuaded no Officer but one of General Sir Eyre Coote's attention to the native troops, and wonderful perſeverance, under ill health and every military diſtreſs, could have conducted himſelf ſo patiently and completely to the overthrow of the enemy.

My Lord Macartney's aſſiduity, zeal, and exertion were equally conſpicuous, in collecting and forwarding ſupplies for the army.

We have, without the loſs of a moment, tranſmitted this news to the Governor General, and veſted him with full powers to turn it to the public advantage, in finiſhing a peace with the Marrattas, and completing the relief of the Carnatic, by directing the Preſidency of Bombay and General Goddard to raiſe enemies to Hyder in his own dominions. From Benares to Bombay letters may paſs in 28 or 30 days.
